A round table discussion on "Which Union Is Fairer to the Negro: AFL or CIO?" is featured in the June issue of Negro Digest. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Willard S. Townsend, pres., Transport Service Employes, and Ferdinand Smith, sec., Natl. Maritime Union, present the CIO's case.

The AFL position is given by Pres. William Green and Dr. D. G. Garland, Negro organizer in the South.

"In all the history of the American labor movement," states Pres. Murray, "no union can match the sterling record of the CIO in battling racial discrimination."

Contrasting the CIO and the AFL policy on race discrimination, Murray asserts that unlike the AFL, not a single CIO union bars Negroes from membership, or sanctions Jim Crow locals, but on the other hand, Negro trade union leaders hold high office in most CIO unions.

"The enemies of the Negro are the enemies of the CIO," he declares.

Mr. Townsend explains that Negroes do not expect or want special treatment in the labor movement, but only their democratic rights, and this is what they get in the CIO, which offers them "an equal opportunity to assume their responsibilities and obligations as organized working men and women."

EXPLORES PAC: Shirlen Cook, 16-year-old student at Harper High School in Chicago, won first prize in the Senior Scholastic current events award for his factual study of the CIO Political Action Committee, made during the 1944 election campaign.

"The goal I had in mind when I started this project was to get facts on PAC and thus be able to form an opinion that I could feel was based on something more than prejudice," young Cook says in his prize-winning article, "Exploring the PAC."

"After weeks of collecting, reading and studying all the material—pro and con—I felt ready to make a decision. I was in favor of the PAC and its program . . ."

Shirlen Cook found the answers given by adults when questioned about PAC "very disappointing and alarming," because they showed "that the public is sorely lacking in information and knowledge needed to be a useful citizen."

He has some good sensible advice to give these adults. To the man, for instance, who said, "Politics is dirty, so let's stay out of it till it's cleaned up," Cook replies:

"All this fellow needs is a good talk with his wife. She could tell him that nothing was ever 'cleaned up' by talking about it and 'staying out of it'."

Shirlen Cook's article is printed in the May 21 issue of Senior Scholastic, address, 220 East 42 St., New York 17, N. Y. It's worth reading.

Help Needed In Cutback Unemployment

CIO President Murray has asked full CIO and community support for President Truman's proposed emergency unemployment compensation.

The Truman plan, sent to Congress with a request for speedy action last week, calls for benefits up to $25 weekly for 26 weeks. It includes millions of workers not now covered by any kind of social security—Federal workers, maritime workers and others.

As The Guide went to press, there was still no bill to carry out this plan offered in the House Ways and Means Committee, where it must originate since it requires Federal funds.

Rep. Doughton, chairman of this Committee, is reported as having said that he doesn't think such a plan is needed. But it is hoped the Administration will persuade him to carry the fight.

Have you wired your Representative—and your Senators too—urging them to work for speedy action on Truman's proposal?

Restore FEPC Funds

The House Appropriations Committee, headed by Rep. Clarence Cannon (D. Mo.) this week refused to give the present Fair Employment Practice Committee any money to carry on after June 30.

Unless this action is reversed, this means that the FEPC will go out of business the end of the month. The money was denied with the alibi that a bill to make FEPC permanent is pending (S 101, HR 2232).

As Pres. Murray pointed out in a letter to Rep. Cannon, this is a "cruel hoax" since HR 2232 is still stalled in the House Rules Committee and S 101 is threatened with a filibuster in the Senate.

President Truman has also asked the House Rules Committee to give HR 2232 a rule in order to get the bill on the floor. Wires should go to Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.) chairman of the Rules Committee, and to your own Representative supporting Truman's request.

Wire your Representative and Rep. Cannon to restore the appropriation in the Committee and wire your two Senators and President Truman to use their influence to get it restored. The amount is $599,000, and has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

World Trade in Senate June 19

Following the victory for the reciprocal trade agreements act in the House last week, the Senate bill (HR 3240) is expected to come to a vote the week of June 18-25.

The same GOP opposition that met the bill in the House came out in the open in the Senate Finance Committee, where hearings ended this week.

It's been met head-on by CIO witnesses, headed by Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey, who was generally conceded the winner in a bout with Taft (R., O.) on the issue.

Taft's line was the old GOP one to the effect that renewal of the act would destroy U. S. industry while building up foreign industry, and why should we do that.

Carey answered by telling Taft that the objective of the reciprocal agreements was to remove barriers to U. S. industrial expansion by cutting world tariffs, and cited industries that have survived and flourished in eleven years of their operation.

Taft then tried the line about U. S. employers moving their plants to foreign countries, because they were being "ruined" by lowering tariffs.

Carey answered that one by pointing out that many such plants were moved before reciprocal trade because high tariffs here led to reprisals abroad, and industries had to move to get to their markets.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Price Control. (SJ Res. 30)	Renews price control act expiring June 30.	Senate debate starts June 6.	If vote not taken; wire your Senators to oppose all amendments.
FEPC (S 101; HR 2232) and appropriation.	Bills make FEPC permanent U. S. agency. Appropriation needed to carry on present FEPC past June 30.	House Appropriations Committee killed $599,000 for present FEPC asked by FDR, Budget Bureau, CIO. Bills for permanent FEPC have been stalled in House Rules Committee.	Wire your Representative and your two Senators to work for restoring full funds for present FEPC, early passage of bills.
Polltax repeal, (HR 7)	Gives chance to vote to 10 million Americans.	House debate and vote set for June 12. After that to Senate Judiciary Committee, (Sen. McCarran, D. Nev., chairman). Two years of hearings have already been held on HR 7, by this Committee.	Wire McCarran and your own two Senators pointing out that new hearings are not needed; urging quick report and no filibuster on floor.
School lunches (HR 3370)	Gives one good meal a day to about 25 per cent of the nation's schoolchildren.	Reported out of House Agriculture Committee (Rep. Flannagan, D., Va., chairman) with funds cut from $100,000,000 to $50,000,000 and no safeguards against discrimination. Next to Senate Agriculture Committee.	Ask your Representative to work for full appropriation; write your Senators also.
'Limitations' (HR 2788)	Sponsored by Rep. Gwynne (R. Ia.); outlaws workers' claims under Wage Hour and other protective laws six months after the injury arises.	Hearings set for June 11 in House Judiciary Committee, Rep. Sumners (D. Tex.) chairman.	Write Sumners and your own Representative to oppose as denial of protection given by Congress.
NLRB funds.	As passed by House, includes Frey rider, $400,000 cut in funds to enforce Wagner Act.	Now in Senate Appropriations sub-Committee, headed by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) Note: we were wrong last week in listing Sen. McKellar as chairman.	Wire Senators to restore cut in funds, eliminate Frey rider, oppose all others.

Coming Up—Issues to Watch

WAR CRIMINALS: The King (D. Cal.) resolution (H Con Res 39) calling for punishment of war criminals despite legalistic red tape now being used to protect men like Goering, Schacht et al is stalled in the Senate, where a subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee has had it for over a month.

Sen. Scott Lucas (D. Ill.) heads this subcommittee. Foreign nations are watching this bill closely as a gauge of U. S. policy toward Nazi and Japanese criminals.

"Neutral" countries like Switzerland and Sweden, and the newly anti-Axis Argentina—where Nazis could and do hide out—are especially interested. Their legations keep calling the capitol to check on the bill's status.

"LIMITATIONS": Rep. Gwynne (R. Ia.) has a bill (HR 2788) that puts a six months' statute of limitations on workers' claims under the wage hour act. This means that no one could collect back pay from a chiselling employer six months after the dirty work was done, and would end effective enforcement of the act.

Gwynne's bill has government officials worried. Not only would it kill the wage hour act, but it would also stop effective crackdowns on wealthy tax dodgers and a host of other law evaders by putting the same six months' limit on enforcement.

It is up in the House Judiciary Committee this week.

* * *

BRETTON WOODS: Following the House vote this week, the bill (HR 2211) to put the U. S. into the world trade and finance agreement made at Bretton Woods goes to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Before the final House vote, an attempt by Rep. Jessie Sumner (R., Chicago Tribune) to mutilate it was beaten by the rather decisive majority of 120 to 18. The House passed the bill 345 to 18.

The same GOP enemies of postwar prosperity will be gunning for the bill in the Senate, where Taft (R., O.) is their leader.

SMITH SMEAR: Rep. Howard W. Smith's (D. Va.) smear committee is gearing up for a new witch-hunt against the Wagner Act and against government employes who try to enforce it and other labor laws that will put all previous witch-hunts in the shade.

GUIDEPOSTS . . . watch for an equal pay for equal work bill soon . . . it's the answer to the phony equal rights amendment . . . civil service needs a Congressional investigation of its tactics in persecuting alleged "subversives" in government jobs . . . will get one soon . . . child care centers are still much needed in war production centers, industry says. . . .

CUTBACK CASUALTY

Frisco Meet Pledges Jobs, Social Gains

By FEDERATED PRESS

A MAJOR part of the task before the United Nations Conference on Intl. Organization was successfully achieved this week at San Francisco with unanimous agreement by the 50 nations on the blueprint for the economic and social council.

Importance of the council's role in the world security organization is undisputed by any of the delegates here, who recognize that it is idle to talk of preserving world peace without hitting at the basic causes of war. The council is on a par with the security council, the general assembly and the world court.

Aims of the council are:

"1. Higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development.

" Solutions of international economic, social, health and other related problems; international cultural and educational cooperation.

"3. Universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, language, religion or sex."

The delicate problem of the role of the Intl. Labor Organization in the council was skirted by not naming specific organizations.

This was a defeat for the British, who wanted the ILO specifically mentioned as an organ of the economic and social council. Opposition to inclusion of the ILO was based on the fact that it is a tripartite organization, not exclusively a workers' organization, and that it does not include either the Soviet Union or the CIO.

Solution or a highly controversial question—the role of the proposed World Federation of Trade Unions—was seen in a provision authorizing the council to consult "with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within the competence of the council." This clearly would include such organizations as the AFL, CIO and WFTU.

Carey Says World Labor Movement Basic to Peace

"THE ECONOMIC and social council of the new United Nations organization will not be able to function effectively without the advice of the World Trade Union movement," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told a meeting of friends and associates who filled the boardroom at CIO headquarters Thursday night, despite a 90-degree temperature.

"The importance of the council," Carey declared, "is that it exists to remove the causes of war, but it cannot function if there are no non-governmental organizations such as the World Trade Union Conference telling it what the people want."

"To exert an even greater influence for the continued peace of the world," Carey continued, "the WTUC is seeking representation in a consultative capacity not only on the council but also in the United Nations organization as a whole."

Turning to U. S. participation in UNCIO, Carey pointed out that CIO took the active leadership among the consultants to the U. S. delegation, representing 42 organizations.

Carey himself acted as spokesman for the U. S. consultants in asking that experts, consisting of labor, industry and agricultural representatives, be consultants to social and economic conference of UNCIO.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATION last week honored CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who believes that old fashioned teaching ideas should be dumped in the waste basket. With Murray, l., as he received an honorary doctor of laws degree at Howard University, Washington, D. C., was Dean of Law William Hastie.

Supreme Court Rule Kills Phoney Law

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

THE long struggle initiated by the CIO over two years ago in conjunction with the AFL to combat the many anti-labor statutes enacted by state legislatures under the guidance of the Christian-Americans culminated in a great victory for labor when the U. S. Supreme Court June 11 struck down the Florida anti-labor statute as being unconstitutional.

The Florida statute provided that a business agent of a labor union could not act as such unless he first obtained a license which he could obtain only after showing that he was a citizen of the U. S. for more than 10 years, had not been convicted of a felony, and was a person of good moral character. An agency of the state was authorized to pass upon all applications for licenses and could deny any if it so chose.

A particular business agent and a labor union in Florida refused either to file applications for a license or its financial accounts. As a result the state secured an injunction, enjoining the business agent and the union from functioning in any way.

The U. S. Supreme Court held that the Natl. Labor Relations Act provided to workers the full freedom of choice in the selection of bargaining representatives and complete freedom to a labor union designated by the workers to engage in collective bargaining. The court therefore concluded that no statute can prescribe conditions which must first be observed before the rights granted by the federal law could be enjoyed.

This represents a tremendous victory for organized labor. The decision of the court makes it clear to all states that they are not free, in the face of the Wagner Act, to enact legislation designed to deprive American workers of their fundamental right to organize, to be free in the designation of their collective bargaining representatives and to engage in collective bargaining with their employers.

In a companion suit testing the Alabama anti-labor law, the Supreme Court simply held that it was not clear as to exactly how the state courts would interpret this law and therefore the Supreme Court could not determine whether the application of the law would conflict with the Wagner Act.

In a third case a majority of the Supreme Court handed down a decision under the Railway Labor Act which may seriously threaten established collective bargaining practices. The decision holds that where certain employes, members of a certified labor union, have a back money claim against the employer, the union may not settle this claim unless it has specific authorization to do so from the employes involved.

The CIO in conjunction with other labor organizations will endeavor to obtain a reconsideration of this decision or at least to have it confined to an interpretation of the Railway Labor Act so that that its implications will not carry over to other industries covered by the Wagner Act.

A Federal Circuit Court of Appeals has just issued a significant decision holding that the Montgomery-Ward properties are subject to the War Labor Disputes Act. The court ruled that "production" within the meaning of the Labor Disputes Act includes distribution by a mail-order house and therefore holds the government seizure lawful.

The court's decision realistically points out that the Ward facilities cannot be excepted from the War Labor Disputes Act in view of the fact that the Act was passed "on the assumption that this was, and is, an all-out war."

CIO Blasts Peacetime Draft

A FLAT stand against legislation now establishing peacetime conscription was taken by CIO this week, in testimony presented for Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas and by Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative director.

Both Thomas and Cowan told the House Select Committee on Postwar Military Policy that estimates of the cost of peacetime conscription run as high as $4 billion a year, and that the U. S. could make a far greater contribution to world progress by guaranteeing a stable economy and decent standard of living at home than by spending huge sums on armament and military training.

"I think," he quoted Thomas as saying, "that the only possible excuse for universal peacetime conscription is the threat of immediate or inevitable acts of aggression against us by enemy nations. The only nations in the world whom we know to be our enemies today are either already defeated or about to be defeated. Certainly, unless we intend to accuse one of our allies of treachery in this moment of victory, there is no immediate threat of aggression."

Thomas declared that peacetime conscription "would be a threat to the free and democratic functioning of trade unions."

"We do not see how such a system could have any military effectiveness at all, unless those who have completed their training are subject to periodic recalls to active duty for refresher training and use in emergencies, real or imagined," he said.

"We of labor do not see how any effective guarantees or safeguards could be set up that would prevent the use of those provisions against the legitimate and democratic activities of organized labor and its members."

Cowan declared that the greatest contribution that the nation can make toward world peace is the achievement of full employment.

"We believe," he said, "that the accomplishment of such an end will do more to insure world peace than the building up of our armed might.

"We believe peacetime military training by the U. S. concerns all of the nations of the world. It seems to us that such action at this time by the U. S. would be equivalent to shouting from the house-tops, 'We do not believe it is possible to create a world free from war. So watch out for us.'"

Cowan warned that if Congress passed conscription legislation, money which should go into homes, clothing and food would go into armaments, that taxes would rise, living standards would decline, tensions would increase and reaction would set in.

"Our democratic institutions would receive severe shocks from the unbalance of our economy," he said. "And the dangers from within might exceed the dangers from without."

Philadelphia Story: 'Buy Now Or Move Out'

That is the growing attitude of the landlords in Philadelphia, a study by the Phila. Housing Assn., shows. It lends support to the plea for a real housing program for Philadelphia as expressed by Henry Block, president of the Philadelphia Industrial Union Council, at a meeting of the Philadelphia Housing Authority.

He contrasted Philadelphia, where the authority has asked for from $25 to $30 millions of Federal funds for housing in the three years after the war, to Chicago which has applied for $270 million, and New York City which has requested $132 million in addition to New York State subsidies which it has already secured.

Speed Reconversion, Hike Pay, CIO Urges

By FRED d'AVILA

THE CIO stepped up to bat this week with a concrete program guaranteed to help Discharged Dan and War Worker William keep working —and eating—as industry reconverts to peacetime production.

Meanwhile, from over the nation came disturbing reports of more cutbacks, and of inadequate planning and lack of legislation to forestall unemployment, making possible an eventual deflationary impact on the country's economy that might cause real depression.

Vitally concerned about the problem, with nine unions and their millions of members immediately affected, CIO's President Murray this week summoned executive officers and vice-presidents to Washington.

Out of the meeting came an action program, immediately presented to War Mobilization Director Vinson. Said CIO:

CIO Program

1. Congress should pass now the emergency unemployment compensation requested by President Truman, providing federal supplementary unemployment compensation payments to war workers of a minimum of $25 a week for 26 weeks, and also compensation for federal, merchant marine and other employes not now covered by law.

2. The President should immediately revise the national wage policy, allowing the WLB to make adjustments that are necessary and which will not substantially affect the cost of living.

3. The WPB, consistent with maximum war production, should take all necessary steps to speed reconversion.

4. Employers should bargain with unions to establish the security of an annual wage.

New York City: 5,000 reported laid off in small war plants. Predict 125,000 will be unemployed in three months, 350,000 by end of year. $200 million cutback has wiped out backlog work of many plants. Hours and wages cut, people dipping into savings. Some jobs offered—at lower pay.

Buffalo, N. Y.: Bell Aircraft to be cut from peak of 16,000 to 6,000 by July.

Detroit: 25,000 estimated unemployed, with Ford's Willow Run bomber plant cut from peak of 58,000 to about 4,000 workers.

Indiana: 5,000 laid off at Allison's; South Bend Studebaker lays off 3,000. Hours being cut.

Fort Worth, Tex.: 5,000 aircraft workers laid off.

Wichita, Kans.: 6,000 aircraft workers expected to lose jobs shortly.

Kansas City, Mo.: Cutbacks have caused some layoffs, but War Manpower Commission estimates that manpower needs will absorb them.

San Diego, Calif.: 11,000 aircraft workers laid off, mostly women, with other jobs open, but mostly for men.

Hardest hit — or to be hit — of CIO unions are: Auto, Steel, Shipyard, UE, Federal Workers, Mine-Mill, Farm Equipment, Furniture and Architects & Engineers.

To a lesser extent, Clothing, Shoe, Textile and Maritime unions are expected to be affected—with Rubber a poor last as far as reconversion problems are concerned. Troubles of the latter group are expected to develop only if there is mass unemployment.

UAW: Worst sore spots Willow Run and Bell Aircraft, with airframe industry particularly affected, mostly on West Coast Airframe peak employment was 936,000, estimated at 600,000 now, expected to drop to 460,000 or less by March. Bound to be rising unemployment until more sheet steel available. Unemployment won't be prevented even if industry can make 215,000 cars this year. People taking lower paid jobs.

Steel: Not much affected yet. Hard to predict future. Data being gathered as a result of letter sent by President Murray requesting complete information on future prospects, current cutbacks. See more jobs provided by cut in work week.

CIO Job Parley

State CIO Councils will hold a conference on reconversion, full production and employment at CIO headquarters, Washington, D. C., June 28-30, IUC Director John Brophy said this week.

Declaring that "I need not emphasize the deep significance of these issues to the well being and indeed the very life of organized labor, and to the welfare of the country at large," Brophy said that "it is of extreme importance that each State Council plan to be represented."

Shipyard Layoff

Shipyard: 10,000 laid off in Mobile. Other smaller cuts in Portland, Me., Wilmington, Dela., and Jacksonville, Fla. Program calls for big Navy and world's biggest merchant fleet. See possibility of manufacturing prefabricated housing, structural steel fabrication, construction of oil refineries and other "tailor made" jobs requiring heavy machinery. Otherwise industry may drop to pre-war employment levels.

UE: Cutbacks to release 20,000 employed by prime contractors, 20,000 more workers of sub-contractors. Have contracts with 50 government-owned plants employing 55,000. Trying to insure post-war utilization of them. Workers taking lower paid jobs—drops from $1.50 to 80 cents an hour reported.

Federal Workers: 6,000 to be cut in New York City by June 30. No big layoffs expected now, however. Two-thirds of federal employment is for duration and six months. Will be rehiring as well as firing. Union urging Civil Service Commission to transfer workers rather than fire them, give preference also to World War II veterans. Backing pay raise legislation, and bill (S594-HR2255) to set up seniority system.

All these unions are supporting CIO's wage and jobs policy programs, calling for the fullest enlistment of community and management support to insure quick reconversion and full employment. Of vital importance are reports from locals to central union offices, which may be able to help clear material needs through Washington.

Meanwhile, in a letter sent to the 14 CIO unions most immediately affected by reconversion problem—25% cut due. Four thouproblems, President Murray pointed out detailed steps by which they can help to guarantee jobs, and gave them a list of questions and facts for action to use in approaching employers, local officials, Congressmen and business associations.

Legislative Aid

In Washington, legislative aid to full employment was noticeably dim, with the full employment bill (S380) scheduled for hearings soon but for action after Labor Day. No action has been taken on President Truman's unemployment compensation recommendation nor on a proposal to provide transportation costs for displaced war workers who want to return to previous places of employment. One of the biggest job projects suggested—the Missouri Valley Authority—still is without approval.

Shaping up in government circles was a conflict of opinion as to how the crisis should be handled, with CIO giving all-out backing to the stand taken by War Mobilization Director Vinson in support of the Full Employment Bill (S380) scheduled for Senate hearings shortly. Said Vinson:

"Business management . . . has a great opportunity and a great challenge to help create these steady incomes, and to actuate demand by expanding their businesses, offering better goods and services at attractive prices. Labor and agriculture through their efforts to increase production per man-hour can contribute importantly to higher incomes and a higher standard of living.

"But history shows us that business, labor and agriculture cannot in themselves assure the maintenance of high levels of production and employment. The government, acting on behalf of all the people, must assume this responsibility and take measures broad enough to meet the issues.

"Only by looking at the economy as a whole, and adopting national economic policies which will actively promote and encourage the expansion of business and the maintenance of markets and consumer spending can we hope to achieve full employment."

In contrast to this, WPB Chairman Krug has said that "it is necessary to get rid of regulations and production limitations as quickly as possible. . . ."

ONE OF MILLIONS who will be bothered by the problem of regular eating is this pretty ex-worker from Henry Ford's Willow Run bomber plant, caught with thousands of others in the cutback tide.

Keep 'Em Down, Says CIO on Prices

CONGRESS heard from CIO, its auxiliaries and a couple of dozen consumers organizations this week on the bread and margarine issue uppermost in everybody's mind—price control.

Led by Secretary James B. Carey, CIO sent three typical rank and file workers to the House Banking and Currency Committee to testify for renewal of the price control act, deletion of the inflationary Wherry amendment passed in the Senate, and full funds for OPA enforcement.

Following the testimony, more than 150 CIO members attended a meeting of the newly revived Congress Committee to Protect the Consumer along with representatives from about 24 other broad groups to tell the 45 Congressmen who belong to it what they thought. They were introduced by UE Representative Clifford T. McAvoy.

Carey, who has tangled with the cold and wealthy Republican Senator from Ohio before, told the House Committee that Senator Taft's plan for "controlled inflation" is simply "inflation with an adjective in front of it" and added: "We, ladies and gentlemen, do not want any kind of inflation—not any part of it."

We don't want it, he said, first because many workers are being laid off and are out of work. Second, we don't want it because many of our neighbors are service dependents who live solely on fixed allowances, and third, we want to hang on to our war bonds and get the full return from them—which we won't get if we have inflation.

Discussing the Wherry (R. Neb) amendment, which would require fixing farm prices on the basis of individual farm production costs (there are six million farms in the U. S., all with varying costs), Carey said: "This is a plan to destroy price control. Where do you think prices will go while OPA is engaged in this gigantic and impossible job of rewriting all its regulations?"

Meeting with the Congress Committee to Protect the Consumer, headed by Reps. Holifield (D. Cal.) and Woodhouse (D. Conn.), the consumers and voters from back home drew a vivid picture of hardships they would face if inflation came.

"Even without inflation," said Mrs. Sam Goldman, whose husband is a sergeant in France, "wives of servicemen are having trouble getting along on allotments. Removing price control will lower the morale not only of wives but also of their fighting husbands."

Don Montgomery, consumer counsel for the UAW-CIO and chairman of the CIO Cost of Living Committee, charged that phoney NAM "economists" were trying to trick workers and consumers into supporting their bust-price-control line.

Eleanor Fowler, for the CIO Auxiliaries, presented two grocery baskets, one marked "1920—$1.34" and the other "1945—$1.34." The 1920 one held only five pounds of sugar; the 1945 model had the sugar plus two quarts of milk, 12 eggs (where did she get them? a Congressman asked), a loaf of bread, cereal and 12 oranges. The moral was that we had no price control in 1920.

Let's Hope the Chain Holds!

A Minimum Program

The CIO is taking national leadership in warning the country of the economic dislocation and suffering into which we are rapidly heading, and in demanding immediate and concrete steps to cope with the situation.

The CIO executive officers and vice presidents have held a special meeting to mobilize the whole membership behind the campaign launched by President Murray.

The brutal facts are that cutback unemployment is increasing by leaps and bounds and weekly wages are decreasing (due to less overtime, downgrading, etc.), while living costs and industrial profits continue to soar.

Yet no national policy has yet been adopted by the administration and Congress to maintain the workers' purchasing power in such a way as to provide relief and to assure full production and full employment after the war.

(1) Adoption by Congress of President Truman's proposals for emergency unemployment benefits of at least $25 a week for 26 weeks for all workers rendered jobless during reconversion, including federal, maritime and other workers not now covered by the law.

(2) Leeway for unions to negotiate necessary wage increases, through revision of the national wage policy and a grant of authority to the War Labor Board to approve increases that will not substantially affect living costs.

(3) Resumption of civilian production to be assured by the WPB in plants where war orders have been cut back or cancelled.

These steps, along with progress toward guaranteed annual wages, are minimum requirements for this transition period. Labor and all other progressive community groups should be activized at once to campaign for their adoption.

A Year-Around Income

The CIO has long pointed out that working people have to live and eat and support their families the whole year around, yet most of them have assurance of the necessary income for this only by the hour or the day, while they are actually employed.

The need for a minimum guaranteed annual wage for all workers is becoming acutely felt as we head into cutback layoffs and all the other insecurities of a reconversion period.

It is also becoming an increasingly necessary measure to maintain the regular purchasing power on which the welfare of the general community depends, and on which we must base our hopes and plans for an expanding economy of full production and full employment.

That is why the CIO is campaigning for security of employment on an annual basis as one of the most important issues before the American people today, and is urging all employers to recognize their responsibility by embodying this principle in their collective bargaining agreements with the unions.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

SELDOM have so many been thwarted so much by so few as in the case of the polltax and FEPC.

These glaring examples of minority rule will throw some light on how the wishes of the majority are denied satisfaction on other issues as well.

They may even lend encouragement to those who fear the country is not ready for labor's reasonable demands, by showing how rotten and flimsy is the dam that blocks the river of progress.

Both the Republican and Democratic parties acknowledged the popularity of Roosevelt's stand against racial discrimination in employment by favoring continuation of the work of the Fair Employment Practice Committee.

So it might have been assumed that if anything was safe in this Congress it was FEPC.

Instead, a stubborn minority has so far been able to block and endanger a program which the great majority of Congress is pledged to support.

The anti-FEPC minority of polltax Democrats has been able to do this by preventing a democratic vote.

It has prevailed on the Appropriations Committee to deny funds to the present FEPC on the grounds that legislation for a permanent FEPC is pending.

At the same time the polltaxers on the Rules Committee have prevented the bill for a permanent FEPC from being reported out.

By themselves, the small minority of polltax Democrats could not indefinitely obstruct the will of the majority of Congress. But there is evidence of at least passive collusion on the part of tory Republicans.

For, at the time of writing, only 10 Republicans have signed the discharge petition which is the only means of getting a bill before Congress when it is blocked by the Rules Committee.

This is shown by the fact that the House has for the third time passed the anti-polltax bill, this time by a vote of 251 to 105.

Each time this bill has passed the House before, it has been blocked in the Senate, not by an open vote which all admit would pass it there too, but by a minority filibuster.

In this, too, the Democratic polltax minority has had its way only through the collusion of other Democrats and Republicans who claim to oppose the polltax.

For if all the declared anti-polltaxers would vote for cloture, they could easily squelch a filibuster.

To pass the anti-polltax and FEPC bills, therefore, it is only necessary to get the declared supporters of both measures to live up to their election pledges and insist on action which they know is desired by the great majority of the voters.

Any fair test of public opinion will reveal an overwhelming demand for continued price control to keep down living costs and prevent inflation.

The tactics of the inflationist minority therefore are not to make a frontal assault, which they would lose, but to attack the administration of OPA and cut its funds; and to try to pass amendments to guarantee higher profits to various interests.

The profit interests of a minority have taken precedence over the human interests of the majority also in reconversion legislation.

The last Congress guaranteed "normal" profits to business for two years after the war and passed other measures for its relief when war orders are curtailed.

But at the same time it refused any relief to war workers who are the worst sufferers from the same cutbacks.

Now that President Truman has again asked action for emergency unemployment benefits, the opposition tactics are apparently to stall and delay as long as possible their next attempt to defy the popular will.

The whole program of the CIO corresponds closely to the wishes and needs of the great majority of the American people.

What is needed is simply to mobilize this popular support in such a way as to overwhelm the opposition of the reactionary minority.

We are many; they are few—and let us never forget it.

Rules Out Super Job Seniority

THE Selective Service Act "makes no reference by express or implied language that a veteran shall be given super-seniority," Arbitrator Frank Harris has already ruled in the case of Abraham Fishgold, Brooklyn, N. Y., World War II veteran who is seeking job reinstatement in Federal court after he was laid off because another worker had greater seniority.

The Sullivan Dry Dock & Repair Co. of Brooklyn, where Fishgold was employed, has a contract with Local 13, CIO Shipbuilding Workers, which incorporated the provisions of the Selective Service Act that veterans be reinstated to their old jobs with the same seniority rights they would have had they remained on the job.

The referee ruled that the application of super-seniority, which would entitle a veteran to remain on a job irrespective of the seniority of others in the plant, would deny factories the use of highly skilled personnel during the reconversion period, deprive non-veterans of rights they had earned, arouse antagonism, and be contrary to our democratic tradition of fair play.

Labor Unity Pays Off

LABOR political unity paid off in Minneapolis this week. CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and other liberal forces not only elected Hubert H. Humphrey, Jr., as mayor, but won a city council majority.

Labor-indorsed candidates for the school board also carried with a decisive majority, according to Federated Press.

Among the victories was that of Mrs. Nellie Stone, first Negro to be elected to a city office in Minneapolis. Mrs. Stone, who is vice-president of an AFL Hotel & Restaurant local, was named to the library board.

Extra 'P' (For Phoney)

Along with the "People's League to Raise 10-cent Subway Fares to a Dime" comes this week the People's Political Action Committee (no relation to CIO's, we assure you).

Its sponsor, who bared his breast to the press in Washington, is one James D. Zurcher, who supported the little man who lost the last election.

Key to Zurcher and his announced anti-labor policies is the fact that he appeared last Fall as spokesman for the People's Committee to Defend Life Insurance and Savings (which defended insurance company profits) and that he intimated that he still heads the organization with a rather imposing list of bankers and industrialists as colleagues.

Credit One Assist

Credit for an assist in helping to burn up Japan went to CIO and AFL unionists this week from the War Dept., which announced that about 100,000 organized workers are helping to manufacture the new "goop" and other fire bombs that are making it hot for Hirohito.

The 10-pound "goop" bombs spout fire-making jelly that oozes over the target like lava erupting from a volcano. "Goop" is a mixture of magnesium and asphalt.

Murray on Bonds

"Our workers know the value of War Bonds for future security both for the individual and for maintaining the nation's economic security," CIO Pres. Murray said this weekend in a nationwide Seventh War Loan talk over Mutual stations.

"The stability which comes from substantial holdings of War Bonds by a great number of our citizens can and should be an important factor in developing our program for 60 million jobs in the postwar period," Murray declared.

Workers Honored

Honors to 38 more war workers—many of them from CIO—were awarded this week by WPB for suggestions which helped to boost production.

Safety Dividends

Safety pays dividends. Ten thousand man-days of work on critically needed paper products for the war were saved as a result of an intensive campaign to reduce accidents, the Dept. of Labor reported.

Presentation of $25,000 to the Greater N. Y. Fund's 1945 campaign from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers through the program of the CIO War Chest has swelled labor's contribution thus far to well over $500,000.

CIO Radio Roundup

The time: 1:15 p.m. EWT, every Sunday, starting July 8, for 13 weeks. The network: NBC. The program: America United. The sponsor: CIO.

The latest No. 1 listening bet will feature an extemporaneous, give-and-take discussion on vital subjects affecting your eating habits, the kind of house you live in, and the sort of education you can afford for your kids. It's a snappy 15-miunte show. Mark it up on your calendar!

It'll be "Buy Bonds" night at 9:30 p.m. EWT June 22 over Blue stations, with CIO plugging on the home front to help furnish materials for the lads who still have a big job to do in the Pacific. You'll like the half hour show.

* * *

Look for an important wage policy speech, probably over a nationwide hookup, by CIO President Murray in the near future. And please see that it gets a plug in your local newspapers.

Watch for another 13-week series of CIO shows over CBS. the first series January through March was a whopping success.

Right on the ball out on the Pacific Coast is CBS with a program this weekend out of Portland on "What Can be Done About Postwar Unemployment?" However, aside from a rather negative title, it is too bad that CBS' press handout listed no labor speaker—only representatives of government, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, the Natl. Committee on Economic Development, and "a fourth speaker, to be announced." Hope he was a labor man!

"Wish my Daddy was home to wear it!"

THAT'S a wish your mother shares with you, little lady. She knows, however, that your Daddy still has to finish the job which took him so far away from you.

But you may be sure he is counting on you and mother to keep things at home just as he left them—his civilian clothes brushed and fresh—the pup healthy and frisky—a smile on your lips and a song in your hearts.

And remember, there's one thing the Daddy you're lonesome for would especially like to have someone tell him soon in a letter. It's that everyone in your neighborhood really did something handsome this time in buying War Bonds.

Yes, we can all make it easier—mentally as well as physically—for our men and women in uniform, if we prove to them now, with extra War Bonds, that we're with them every step of the last hard miles that lie ahead.

Let's make this mighty Seventh War Loan Drive our finest effort. It's our golden opportunity to show our valiant, hard-hitting fighters that we're really worthy of what they're doing for us.

WELCOME HOME: Dwight D. Eisenhower, America's nearest approach to a "people's general," was due back in the States this week, with Capital City residents lining up first to pat him on the back. Late photo shows him shooting the breeze with Tech. Sgt. William Carpenter, ammunition handler from Nashville, in France.

1—You're the one who starts a bill on its way through Congress when you write your Congressman telling him what you want done. Here Rep. Cochran (D. Mo.) studies a pile of letters.

2—Another way a bill gets started is by personal visits by the voters to the Congressman in his office. This is one of the best ways of getting action from him.

3—Once the bill is decided on and written, usually by a Congressional drafting service that puts the desired points into legal language, it goes into the hopper by the Speaker's desk in the House of Representatives.

7—On an important issue, Committee members turn out in force at the hearings. Here the House Banking and Currency Committee listens to a discussion of the vital Bretton Woods bill.

8—After a bill is reported out by the Committee, it goes to the House Rules unit for a rule setting time and duration of debate; sometimes reactionaries delay it.

9—A technical step is the enrolling room, where changes, deletions, etc., made in Committee are put into the bill. Each line is numbered to make for easier reference in the debate that may occur on the floor.

HOW A BILL GOES THROU

11—In the Senate, the bill has to go through much the same Committee process. This gives interested voters a second chance to get their point across, such as New York's Mayor LaGuardia here. Much CIO legislative work is done in Senate Committees, where President Murray, Legislative Director Nathan Cowan and other CIO leaders and officials frequently appear to testify.

12—Frequently the Senate version of the bill differs fr Committee, which meets to smooth out the differenc what they think should be done, by urging them to stand by a Work on the Conference Committee is thus a key job, and it

—Next step is to give the bill a number, which is done by the bill clerk. House bills have the initials HR, Senate bills S. It helps to know the number when writing your Congressman about bills.

5—The bill now goes to a Committee, where its success or failure is often decided in open or secret hearings. CIO witnesses appear to tell the Committee what they think of the measure.

10—The House of Representatives finally gets the measure for debate and a vote. Though this is the most publicized step in the bill's progress toward enactment into law, it is not always the most decisive. CIO members have learned the need for action in all Committee stages, long before the measure reaches the House floor. After debate and vote in the House, the bill then goes to the Senate side.

REVISING WAGE POLICY

The CIO through Pres. Murray is leading the fight to revise the "Little Steel Formula." Wages must be increased. President Truman should immediately revise the national wage policy and confer the necessary authority on the War Labor Board to make wage adjustments as may be necessary.

Cut-backs are taking place and will continue to take place, resulting in unemployment. The effect of this will be brought to the attention of all our people in the very near future. Collective bargaining must be restored in its fullest sense and substantial wage increases obtained and approved.

From a Soldier

Here is what a soldier thinks of this column in writing to the Servicemen's Edition of the CIO News.

"It seems that me—as one who has been overseas (in Assam, India) for 20 months—that there is one thing missing in the Servicemen's Edition. As a former representative of the State, County and Municipal Workers, and at times assigned to other groups, I have looked in vain for news of a personal nature concerning the progress that various large CIO Internationals have made. I'm speaking of articles of the nature of Allan Haywood's column that, as a civilian, I used to devour in each issue.

"I'd personally like to know what the heck is happening in organizational drives in the States. How about including a column like Haywood writes for us guys who especially look for that material?" (Signed Pfc. Ed Greenbaum, Assam, India.)

Let's assure Pfc. Greenbaum and many other CIO members in the armed forces that the Victory column will continue and report many new elections won.

Monty Ward Gets Back-Pay Jitters

The anti-labor Montgomery Ward management had a bad case of deadline jitters this week as thousands of the firm's employes in Chicago and five other cities moved a step nearer toward securing $1,342,000 due them in back pay, and the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes advanced a step toward a contract that will probably include maintenance of membership and dues checkoff clauses.

Cause for the jitters was a 2-1 federal circuit court of appeals decision which upset a lower court ruling that seizure of Ward property by the government was illegal. The higher court held that the firm operates an essential business.

Cheering the decision in New York were Union Pres. Samuel Wolchok and Natl. Director Irving Abramson of the Ward Organizing Committee, who said the decision cleared the way for putting into immedate effect the Natl. War Labor Board directives defied by Sewell L. Avery, chairman of Ward's board of directors.

"Had the efficiency of the WLB been allowed to break down," Wolchok and Abramson said, "our entire wartime economy would have been endangered. This decision will restore the country's faith in the sovereignty of government."

Meanwhile, Ward attorneys immediately filed with the circuit court a motion asking delay, particularly in payment of back wages, until the case can finally be decided by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Raise Pending For 15,000 Longshoremen

A recommendation for a retroactive pay increase that will mean quite a chunk of dough for 15,000 West Coast CIO longshoremen if approved by the Natl. War Labor Board was made this week by a tripartite panel.

The panel recommended a general wage increase of 5c an hour under the Little Steel formula, retroactive to Oct. 1, and vacation privileges, but denied demands of the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union for an increase in the hourly rate from $1.10 to the $1.25 rate prevailing on the Atlantic Coast, where time and a half is not paid until after eight hours. West Coast longshoremen since 1934 have been receiving time and a half after six hours, the panel pointed out.

Arthur E. Phillips, labor member of the panel, who is executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee and a labor member of the Natl. WLB War Shipping panel, dissented on the wage recommendation, holding that the increase should not be kept within the restrictions of the Little Steel formula.

The parties are negotiating a new agreement to replace one signed Dec. 20, 1940, which was terminated by the union last September, but has been continued in effect pending completion of a new one.

Students' Group Visits CIO

A group of students from the United Christian Youth Movement visited Natl. CIO headquarters last week as guests of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research. They came from eastern and midwestern schools and colleges on a three-day visit to Washington to see Congress and other government agencies at work.

At the request of Kermit Eby, director of Education & Research, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey explained the CIO's program, which he said was both "simple and practical."

The CIO is concerned not only in getting our own people more of the "good things of life," Carey told the students, but is also interested in the welfare of people in all parts of the world.

"As you improve the wages and working conditions of other peoples of the world, you increase the opportunities of America's workers," he said.

Questions from the floor showed the students to be particularly interested in how the CIO goes about "cracking the pattern of the racial problem." Carey answered by explaining how the CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination functions when specific issues come up.

WPB Defies Davis Order

After two clothing manufacturing concerns defied the will of their employes for two years and the orders of the War Labor Board for 10 months, the War Production Board appears to be doing nothing to enforce the WLB non-compliance orders against the mills.

The concerns are the McLaren Sportswear Co., Philipsburg, Pa., and the Standard Trouser Co., Buckhannon, W. Va., where the workers two years ago chose the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers to represent them in negotiations which broke down.

A 10-months' defiance of WLB orders led Stabilization Director Davis to issue an order to the WPB to cancel "all outstanding priorities and allocations" and the Army to end contracts. The Army complied promptly, but two weeks ago a spokesman for WPB Chairman Krug said that agency was investigating the situation.

Under the Davis order, the deadline for WPB to tell him that it had obeyed the directive was last Wednesday, but on Thursday the word from WPB was that the investigation would not be completed before June 20.

Camel Workers Pay Boosted In New Pact

Wage increases totaling about $600,000 a year will go to workers who make Camel cigarettes at the big R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., under a contract announced by the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers. It covers some 12,000 workers.

The increases, subject to WLB approval, include a boost in the minimum wage to 55c an hour, with an automatic increase to 58c after six months; a 4c night differential, and adjustments in different wage classifications involving 8,000 employes.

Also included in the agreement are improved seniority, job security and a grievance procedure which gives the union the right to send representatives into the plants to investigate grievances. Shop stewards are given top seniority and will be permitted to wear their union insignia.

ACA Makes Novel Move

The CIO American Communications Assn. has asked the War Shipping Administration to extend wage increases won by the ACA-CIO to all marine radio officers regardless of affiliation, the union announced in a circular issued this week.

In April the War Labor Board settled a dispute brought before it by the ACA by ordering 65 freight ship companies on the East, West and Gulf coasts to increase the chief radio officer's pay from $175 to $187.50 a month.

Blame Krug For Shoe Scarcity

Four CIO unions in a wire to War Production Board Chairman Krug charged him with responsibility for the waste of enough pigskin to increase rationed shoes 40 per cent in a very short time. This waste can be averted, the unions asserted, if WPB will require the tanning of pigskins and their manufacture into shoes.

The unions, which skin, tan, fabricate and sell leather, charged the bulk of pigskin is being "ground up for glue or fertilizer, or left on the meat and sold to consumers at food prices."

The wire was signed by Pres. Lewis J. Clark of the Packing House Workers; Pres. Ben Gold of the Fur and Leather Workers; Pres. Frank R. McGrath of the United Shoe Workers, and Pres. Samuel Wolchok of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes.

Hosiery Union's Wage Policy

Elimination of the southern freight rate differential presents a major argument in favor of doing away with the southern wage differential, states the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

The union plants point out that elimination by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the freight differential which worked to the economic disadvantage of the South, calls for a change in the Government's wage policy as it involves the lower pay rate of the southern worker.

The union's point of view on this was communicated to President Truman, to the War Labor Board Chairman and the Economic Stabilizer by the Federation's president, Alexander McKeown.

CIO Drive To Free Ernest Fox Succeeds

Ernest Fox, German-American CIO leader of Seattle, who was ordered interned in April, 1942, as a "potentially dangerous enemy alien" has been released on parole by the Dept. of Justice. He is a member of the National Maritime Union.

Both the National CIO and West Coast CIO affiliates, in addition to his own union, waged a continuous fight for his release. A resolution declaring he "has been done a great injustice" and demanding his release was passed at the last National CIO convention.

On the West Coast, the California CIO Council took a leading part in the campaign to free Fox, setting up a defense committee headed by CIO State Pres. James G. Thimmes, and pointing out that the Pacific Northwest CIO leader had an excellent record as a loyal American and a trusted trade unionist.

Fox's anti-fascist record, which began long before America went to war, included the organization of demonstrations against shipment of war material to Japan.

Industry Gives Lesson On Letters To Congress

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxilaries

The longer I stay in Washington the more I am impressed with the urgent importance of letters from home to our Congressmen and Senators.

We've had some vivid illustrations lately of the effectiveness of letter writing campaigns. You saw the overwhelming vote for Bretton Woods in the House. There isn't any question that the vote was due to the fact that Congressmen were convinced that the voters in their districts wanted the Bretton Woods agreements ratified as a keystone of international peace.

Reciprocal trade is another story. It passed the House, to be sure, but the Senate Finance Committee has reported it unfavorably. CIO delegations in the last few days have seen a number of Senators. One New England Senator told them he had received 13,000 letters and postcards against trade agreements, only 3,000 for.

Another showed them a letter from a trade association instructing local manufacturers to put up posters in the plants and tell the workers to write their Senators opposing the bill because its passage would lose them their jobs.

The result of that campaign and others has been a volume of mail overwhelmingly against trade agreements and there is very real danger of a defeat in the Senate for the administration's policy of building world trade.

WOMAN'S OPPORTUNITY

Women can do a wonderful job on this letter-writing end of legislative work if we can just bring home to them how much is now at stake in Congress. I wish every CIO woman could have heard Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.) speak to the representatives of 12 women's organizations who met with the Congresswomen last week on price control at the invitation of the CIO.

She pointed out the world implications of inflation here, which might well result from the weakening of the price control act, and which would probably result in another world depression. She stressed the weakening of American leadership in Asia and Africa which is bound to follow a defeat for the Fair Employment Practices Committee.

AMERICA'S CHANCE

How can we expect those countries to look to American democracy as their hope if our democracy denies equality of job opportunity to minorities? Finally Mrs. Douglas challenged us, as women, to see that the things we know must be done for the welfare of our nation and the peace of the world are done.

We left convinced that if all of us make up our minds to secure Congressional action on certain issues, we can succeed. But it means a lot a hard work and immediate action.

Our aim should be to set up letter-writing committees of women in each community. Each member of the committee should pledge herself to at least one letter a week to her Congressman and each Senator. They should cooperate to plan good letters to Congressmen explaining their reasons for supporting certain bills. But each letter must be individually worded. Form letters have little weight.

Auxiliaries' No. 1 Aim—Reconversion

All-out support for the CIO's reconversion program, including President Murray's proposal for a 20% increase in base pay rates and for adequate unemployment insurance for all workers, is the first item on the immediate program of action adopted by the National Board of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO at its meeting in Washington this week.

A national "learn your community" program in which all auxiliaries will be urged to participate so that they can work effectively for better living conditions, health and recreation facilities in their own communities is the second item in the program for the next three months adopted by the Auxiliary Executive Board.

EUROPE SHORT OF FOOD

An urgent plea for a national campaign to inform Americans of the critical food shortage in Europe was unanimously adopted in a resolution addressed to the federal government which also urged that Herbert Hoover have no part in determining American food policies.

A resolution on World Security also adopted by the Board stressed the importance of building friendship and understanding among the great nations of the world as the "best guarantee of lasting peace"; expressed concern over the anti-Soviet stories and speeches recently featured in the press and hailed the gains made in building understanding among the peoples of the world through the World Trade Union Conference.

The importance of upward revision of wage rates and enactment of special unemployment insurance provisions for the reconversion period was embodied in another resolution.

Road to Tomorrow Is Unpaved

A stirring appeal to workers in the South to join the union movement is made in a beautifully illustrated pamphlet, "For Your Children, Too," just published by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, 506 Presbyterian Bldg., Nashville 3, Tenn. "Tomorrow's world—the world of our children—will depend in large measure on our protection of the rights of labor organizations and on our cooperation with these organizations in pursuit of our common goals," states the pamphlet. The toddler above is from the back cover.

CIO Summer Schools

Textile Union Schedules Five Regional Institutes

More than 200 local union leaders of the CIO Textile Workers Union will participate in the fourth annual intensive summer institute program being conducted by the union's national educational department, according to Larry Rogin, TWUA education-director. Five one-week institutes have already been scheduled, with the possibility that there will be a sixth, he said, if the interest already shown in registration continues.

The first of the sessions will be at the University of Wisconsin, School for Workers, June 17-23. Two successive one-week institutes for New England locals will be held at Textile Lodge, Webster, Mass, July 1-15.

There will be a Southern institute at the University of North Carolina, August 5-11, and another in the East, August 19-25, at the Hudson Shore Labor School. If the demand justifies it, a second institute will be organized in the South.

While the institute programs vary in accordance with local needs, the effort is to give the worker-students an understanding of the basic problems of the labor movement while helping them meet their immediate situations.

This year's courses will include trade union history, postwar problems, local union problems, collective bargaining, public speaking and parliamentary law.

There will be speakers from government and labor agencies, and specialized training for those who want it.

The program is far too heavy to permit the institutes to be described as "vacation schools," yet there is always an opportunity for fun and recreation. The TWUA believes that this helps to build the kind of union morale that makes the institutes high spots in the lives of those who attend them.

Cost of the institutes is met jointly by the national and local unions, the locals meeting such costs as lost wages and travel.

The summer program is the yearly climax of the work of the TWUA educational department. During the remainder of the year emphasis is placed on local steward training programs, which are much more elementary than the kind of training which can be given at a resident school.

This is one of a series on the summer school program of CIO International Unions. Previously the United Auto Workers and the Office & Professional Workers' summer schools have been described. Next week's article will be on the Food & Tobacco Workers' schools.

Kids' Health Vital; More Aid Is Urged

THE immediate expansion of health, welfare, education and other protective services offered to children is the recommendation of the National Commission on Children in Wartime, created by the U. S. Labor Dept.

A program presented by Secy. of Labor Frances Perkins to Congress this week calls for:

1. Adequate medical care and health services.
2. Family insurance against loss of income from unemployment, disability, old age, and death.
3. The widest kind of educational opportunities.

"We cannot and must not let another generation of youngsters grow to adulthood and find again that four out of every ten of our men have physical and mental handicaps, as Selective Service found among the men drafted for service in this war," Miss Perkins said.

She recommended that:

1. Federal funds for grants to state health departments for maternal and child health, now amounting to less than six million dollars a year, should be raised by $50 million.
2. Federal support to State crippled children's agencies, which now is less than four million dollars a year, should be increased by $25 million.

A major increase in annual appropriations to State welfare departments is also called for.

Skimming The CIO Press

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

HUMOR: Union papers are pretty short on humorous items, so our eye was caught at once by a page of comic drawings in the June issue of Steel Labor, USA-CIO official organ, poking fun at or patting on the back, various types of union members. They are drawn by Leo Snyder, member of Jones & Laughlin, Local 1272.

There's the guy who works only when the boss is looking; the sour-puss who's always griping; the nosey member, forever in trouble; the all-around jolly fellow whom everybody likes and the loves-the-boss type who doesn't like unions and thinks he might own the business some day.

Humor and education are mixed in a double-page feature in Voice, the Marine Cooks & Steward's Association paper, explaining the duties of MCS ship delegates, which are plenty heavy. They range from keeping a record of all beefs, how they are handled and what settlement was reached, to carrying out education programs and calling meetings.

The Shipyard Worker had a lively piece on a serious subject in the May 28 issue, which hits a high mark for humor in labor papers. Written by James Higgins of the union's national educational department, the full-page feature —"Honey, Meet Wagner, Murray & Dingell"—tells quite a few facts about a valuable piece of legislation, against an entertaining background of a Sunday with the family. Its good.

One CIO union paper that is quite a veteran in the field of humor is The Guild Reporter, semi-monthly news sheet of the American Newspaper Guild. The column headed, "Caught on the Run" in the June 8 issue, has an amusing story about some legal jargon involving a Guild dispute case which is boiled down to "We wuz robbed."

A comic strip that can more than hold its own with those in the city dailies, is "Soogie," printed regularly in the Pilot, National Maritime Union weekly. Seamen Soogie's funny adventures have something of the melancholy of Yank's Sad Sack in them.

Even Beyond Life

Men with family responsibilities are more fully realizing with each passing day that their obligations to their dependents reach far beyond their own life span.

Widows and children need shelter, clothing and food just as much after the death of a provider as they do during his life.

The sound way to make certain that they will have such necessities, even if their provider's income is lost to them through such a misfortune, is to acquire life insurance for as much as is possible.

Cuts In Funds For U. S. War, Labor Agencies

Cuts in appropriations for U. S. war and labor agencies threaten to end their usefulness to the war, to the unions and industry unless they are restored. Here's a list to date:

NLRB: $400,000 cut in House Appropriations Committee for NLRB has already made the Board suspend field activities, freeze scheduled elections, plan to lay off 140 employes.

Ask your Senators to restore the cut, reject all riders on funds.

WAR LABOR BOARD: Rep. Lea (D. Cal.) has a rider on WLB funds adopted by the House prohibiting WLB from handling cases involving food processing workers, thus depriving over 1,000,000 war workers of WLB aid in settling disputes.

Ask your Senators to reject this rider as dangerous to the war effort.

FEPC: The House killed a $599,000 appropriation to carry the present FEPC past June 30, on the false grounds that permanent legislation is pending. Permanent bill cannot possibly be passed before June 30.

Ask your Senators to restore the full appropriation.

In addition, the House has cut $1,100,000 from Labor Dept. research funds for studies on wage rates and employment, plus a mean cut in funds ($74,000) for child health and crippled children's programs.

Cutting appropriations and putting riders on them is an underhanded way of killing an agency and crippling the laws it administers. Point this out to your Senators.

For Congress Raise

CIO is for a raise in compensation for Congressmen, President Murray said this week in a letter to Senate President McKellar (D. Tenn.) and House Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.)

"Any fair analysis of the work of Congress and the duties and responsibilities of its members indicates that their present compensation is indeed inadequate," he said.

"I therefore heartily endorse legislation providing substantial adjustment in the compensation of members of Congress. This issue is of such importance that it should not be made the subject of partisan politics.

"Our democratic institutions can only be made effective if responsible and efficient representatives are available for public service.

"Compensation for elected officials should be adequate to enlist the services of the best equipped and enable them to discharge their responsibilities in an efficient manner."

GOP Threatens Inflation

Quick and sustained action on the House version of the price control renewal act (SJ Res 30) is needed to head off the inflationary chaos threatened by the Senate - passed Wherry (R. Neb). amendment.

Briefly, the Wherry amendment would require OPA to junk its present food price control, set farm prices on the basis of costs in each of six million U. S. farms.

Even more serious threat to price control is another GOP plan, publicly announced by Leader Joe Martin (R. Mass.) to hold extension to only six months. This would produce the greatest wave of hoarding in history, due to fear of price rises, would multiply black markets, wreck all plans for orderly reconversion.

Farmers, labor and business (except the NAM) are against it. The Natl. Farmers Union, the Grange and the Farmers Union, as well as the CIO and the Chamber of Commerce have opposed it. Even some Republicans are afraid of its effects.

The inside story is that the GOP leadership doesn't expect to pass the Wherry amendment, but to get a compromise that will hike already high prices and add to already inflated profits.

Wire your Representative to work and vote against the Wherry and all other amendments, and to support full $180,000,000 appropriation for OPA enforcement. Urge 12 months extension as absolute minimum.

CIO Hits WLB Rider

Sharp CIO protest against the House-passed rider on the WLB appropriation was expressed by Legislative Director Nathan Cowan in a letter to all Senators this week.

"This rider withdraws food processing workers from the jurisdiction of the War Labor Board," Cowan said, thus putting about 1,000,000 workers outside the entire stabilization program.

"It is a repudiation of the federal commitment to provide an agency with authority to settle labor disputes upon the adoption of labor's no-strike pledge.

"Our nation's food production can ill afford to bear the strain created by a removal of the industry from the jurisdiction of the WLB. The possibility that strikes engendered by this rider will spread to other areas is too dangerous to tolerate."

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

Price Control. (SJ Res. 30)	Renews price control act for one year.	Senate has put Wherry rider in that wrecks control, makes enforcement impossible. Now in House Banking & Currency Committee.	Wire Representative to reject Wherry and all other amendments or riders on the appropriation. Urge support for full $180,000,000 funds to keep OPA.
FEPC (S 101; HR 2232) and appropriation.	Makes FEPC permanent U. S. agency; carries on present FEPC past June 30.	House Appropriations Committee killed $599,000 fund for present FEPC; House Rules Committee has denied HR 2232 a chance to reach debate; Discharge Petition 12 has only 125 signatures, needs 218.	Wire your Senators to support funds for present FEPC; oppose threatened filibuster; wire Representative to restore funds, sign DP 12.
NLRB funds.	As passed by House, has Frey rider and $400,000 cut. As result, NLRB has had to freeze all elections, leave field staff unpaid.	In Senate Appropriations sub-Committee, Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) chairman.	Wire Senators to restore funds, eliminate Frey and other riders.
War Labor Board funds.	House Appropriations Committee has rider prohibiting use of WLB funds on cases of food processing workers.	Senate Appropriations sub-Committee, Sen. McKellar (D. Tenn.) chairman.	Wire Senators to kill rider, restore WLB process to 1,000,000 workers.
Polltax repeal. (HR 7)	Restores vote to 10,000,000 U. S. citizens.	Passed House by 223 to 95. Now to Senate, where filibuster threatens.	Write Senators to urge quick report, cloture and end filibuster, early passage.

Coming Up-- Issues To Watch

UNEMPLOYMENT: President Truman's proposal for unemployment payments up to $25 a week for 26 weeks will be put into a bill in the House Ways and Means Committee probably this week.

The plan has CIO support, and the bill is expected to include transportation allowances for war workers as well as coverage for marine and Federal government workers.

JOBS FOR ALL: Hearings on S 380 will begin as soon as the Senate Banking and Currency Committee finishes hearings on the Bretton Woods world trade agreement bill (S 540), probably around June 30.

S 380 requires the government to make up an annual "budget" of jobs needed for full employment, help private industry provide them, fill in the gaps with public works.

SCHOOL LUNCH: the House bill (HR 3370) for a permanent school lunch program will probably go through in its compromise form, with a 50% cut in the original $100,000,000 fund.

Strategy will be to get a better bill out of the Senate, where it goes for hearings in the Agriculture Committee. Letters to Senators now, urging $100,000,000 fund, no discrimination against Negro or other minority kids, will help.

SEAMEN'S RIGHTS: both Senate and House versions of the Seamen's Bill (S 1128, HR 2346) are ready for action.

The bill provides unemployment compensation, insurance and other benefits that other workers have but are denied to merchant seamen—6,000 of whom have been killed in action.

WORLD TRADE: Senate Republicans led by Taft are trying to wreck the reciprocal trade agreements renewal act, using the old bogey of tariff cuts "destroying" U. S. industries.

They've cut the heart out of the bill in denying the administration power to make further reductions of 50% in U. S. tariffs in return for similar concessions from other countries.

The bill now goes to a House-Senate conference. Wire your Representative to stand firm by the bill as passed in the House, without changes.

What You'll Get to Eat On If You Lose Your Job

NEWS of current and impending cutbacks has thrown into sharp relief the question of what American workers will get to eat on if they lose their jobs. This week The CIO NEWS, with cooperation of the U. S. Social Security Board, presents facts which show the startling inadequacy of state unemployment compensation benefits and the need to provide a federal guarantee of at least $25 a week for 26 weeks for all workers — including 13 million employes of the federal government, of the maritime industry and of small firms who are not "covered."

State unemployment benefits range from a low minimum of $2 a week in Alabama to a high maximum of $28 a week in Connecticut and Michigan.

In 24 states the maximum benefits allowed are $18 weekly or less. The proposal for at least $25 a week backed by the CIO probably would affect the maximums but not the minimums, according to the SSB, which pointed out, however, that most workers who have been receiving better than peacetime wages during the war probably would be entitled to maximum compensation.

Here's a lineup on some minimum and maximum state benefits:

1. A jobless worker in Alabama may receive only $2 a week; in Arkansas, Missouri and Montana unemployment benefits may be as small as $3 a week. In Michigan the minimum benefits are $4.81 a week, and in 18 states the minimums are only $5 a week.

2. Minimum duration of payments in Missouri and Wisconsin is one week; in Arkansas four weeks; in Iowa, Kansas, Virginia and Oklahoma six weeks, and in Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts and Nevada seven weeks or slightly more.

Wisconsin's law is comparatively good, however, because a worker may receive compensation if he has held a job for only 14 weeks.

3. In only two states, Connecticut and Michigan, an unemployed man with dependency allowances may receive as much as $28 a week—but for not longer than 20 weeks. Washington is the only state where he will get $25 a week for 26 weeks, and there the eligibility requirements have been raised.

There are glaring variations in state laws. For example, over a 26-week period a worker in N. Y. may receive the minimum of $10—a total of $260—which is greater than the total maximum payments in nine southern and western states.

The nine states are: Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, Colorado, New Mexico and Montana, each paying a maximum of $15 for 16 weeks; Arkansas, $15 for 15 weeks, and Arizona and Mississippi, $15 for 14 weeks.

However, variation is not a sectional matter. Washington's maximum is $25 for 26 weeks, while in neighboring Montana it is only $15 for 16 weeks. Rhode Island pays a top of $18 for 20¼ weeks, Connecticut $28 for 20 weeks. Louisiana's maximum is $18 for 20 weeks, while Mississippi trails with $15 for 14 weeks.

Missouri, which pays a minmum of $3 for one week is in the running for one of the "worst" states, but its maximum of $18 for 16 weeks is relatively high. Alabama's minimum is $2 for 10 weeks, but it pays a maximum of $15 for 20 weeks. Wisconsin's low is $8 for one week, but its top is really good, $20 for 23 weeks.

Best states as far as maximums go are Connecticut, Michigan and Washington, with Illinois, New Jersey, New York and Maryland as runners-up, all of them paying $20 or more for 26 weeks.

The effect of inadequate unemployment compensation on the war was sharply pointed up by CIO Executive Officers, who said:

"Full war production for the war against Japan is still of the utmost importance for our fighting forces. Yet we tolerate a situation which threatens to impair the morale and productive efficiency of the workers. At the same time, we ignore the basic need of maintaining the purchasing power of wage earners to assure an expanding postwar economy of full production and full employment.

"Congress should immediately enact the necessary emergency legislation, requested by President Truman, to provide federal supplementary unemployment compensation payments to war workers rendered unemployed during the reconversion period so that a minimum of $25 per week for 26 weeks be provided. In addition, unemployment compensation should be made available to all federal employees, members of the merchant marine, and all other groups not now covered by existing law."

Reconversion - Your Job And How to Help Keep It

AS goes reconversion now, so goes our future. It's the duty of every wage-earner to understand why we must have immediate increases in our basic wage rates, secure the take-home pay, and keep prices from rising again during this reconversion period. It is important for every worker to know that job security for himself spells security for the nation; and unemployment spells disaster.

Though we still have the war in the Pacific to win, we are already face to face with cutbacks in certain war industries. It is our responsibility to prevent the cutbacks from creating chronic unemployment.

As President Murray pointed out to the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion:

"Cut-backs are under way, workers have been laid off, and the reconversion period has begun. A formulation of wage policy to meet this condition is not a problem of the future but an immediate necessity so that workers may be able to buy enough and so that employers will be able to estimate both labor costs and consumer demand."

1. WE ASK THAT THE PRESIdent should allow the War Labor Board to increase all basic wage rates by 20% and and up to 17 cents an hour. This must be done now because of three things:

The cost of living has gone up since wages were frozen;

The output per worker has greatly increased since wages were frozen;

When war ends we will go back to a shorter work-week and we must not allow the purchasing power of workers to shrink.

"Flood control? Not for me!"

NO. 1 Problem Today Is—Jobs During Reconversion. What CIO's Doing About It Is Simply and Graphically Told in the Latest Pamphlet of CIO's Political Action Committee. Excerpts from the Pamphlet Are Printed Here.

And for the protection of the workers and the good of the nation, we must establish 65 cents as the minimum hourly wage.

2. WHEN CUTBACKS COME, AND we return to a shorter work-week, the pay workers receive must be adjusted upwards so that their take-home pay is no less than now. This must be done to protetct the workers' standard of living, which in millions of cases is already dangerously low. Also, a sudden cut-back in purchasing power of about 20% of workers' income would start the snowball of depression rolling down a steep mountainside to the depths of a depression greater than we ever suffered.

3. WE MUST KEEP PRICES FROM going up. And at the same time we must see to it that the quality of goods does not go down.

We must retain the OPA to keep a ceiling on prices. And we must add to price control, quality grading.

4. WE SHALL NEED AN IMproved United States Employment Service to help to transfer workers to the right jobs.

5. WE MUST DEMAND OF CONgress to pass immediate emergency legislation to increase and improve our Unemployment Compensation. We ask that all workers not now covered by Unemployment Compensation Insurance should be covered, including farm and domestic labor. We ask that Unemployment Compensation should be raised to allow a minimum of $25-a-week for 26 weeks in any year of unemployment.

6. WE MUST ALSO PLAN AND approve state and federal public works projects in such a way that as soon as the number of unemployed reaches a given size, these projects are started to absorb all the unemployed.

But we demand that only useful projects should be planned on a national, regional, state and local basis. The Missouri Valley Authority is a good regional example.

7. THE CIO WAS THE FIRST TO recognize that to achieve full production and full employment from now on, we must plan.

Labor is . . . represented on the Advisory Board to the Director of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion. But we need more than that.

We ask that the Advisory Board, the President and Congress move for the establishment of a National Production Council, consisting of representatives of labor, industry, agriculture, returned veterans, management and government. It should be the duty of this Council to work with Industry Councils of each mass production industry. The National Production Council should be held responsible for piloting the nation through the dangerous shoals of reconversion and bring us safely to a lasting prosperity.

"That in every town and city where there are CIO Local Unions there be arranged 'Victory Visits' to the mayors, city managers, municipal councils and boards of commissioners. These 'Victory Visits' will be for the purpose of asking: 'Where will the people of this community, now doing war work, find employment when military orders are cancelled?' "

Find out at once whether there is a Community Planning Committee in your community. If there isn't, join with other workers to demand that one be established at once.

There is plenty of room for political action to help realize our program.

Here's What You Can Do:

1. Ask your Congressman what he is going to do to protect the wage-earners in his congressional district against unemployment, and their children against want.

2. Ask your Governor and Mayor and their Councils what they are planning in local public works.

3. Ask your employer how soon he will make up his mind to get together with his workers and chart plans for employment; increases in basic wage rates; and for severance pay to workers who must be released.

4. Ask your local union leaders how you can help them in the drive to awaken your community to the urgent reconversion problems and to keep the purchasing power of the people at a high level.

5. Write or wire your Senators and your Congressman that you want them to support: continued price control; the Wagner-Murray-Dingall (Social Security) Bill; the Fair Employment Practice Committee; the appropriations for useful public works; the Murray Full-Employment Bill.

"Darling, if CIO's reconversion plan goes through, and if we get assurance of adequate take-home pay along with real price control—will you marry me?"

"I can't find it anywhere in Emily Post's etiquette book, but I just know this is the right time for me to ask for 65 cents an hour!"

CIO this week sharply criticized the proposed Federal Industrial Relations Act as "a bill to enslave labor" (see President Murray's statement —this page). Good keys to the purpose of the bill are background facts on men supporting it.

When the bill was introduced, its sponsors, Sens. Hatch (D. N. M.), Ball (R. Minn.), and Burton (R. O.) had a press conference. Sen. Burton was asked if they had consulted labor or management people in drawing up the bill.

"Absolutely not," the Senator replied. "We wanted only unbiased people, so we didn't talk with either labor or management — especially management. We picked out a strictly nonpartisan committee and asked them to give us their best and most impartial advice."

Here's the committee—and the connections of its members—that the firm of Burton, Hall and Hatch picked out on the basis of strict impartiality.

Chas. B. Rugg, corporation lawyer of Boston, Mass. Contributed $500 to Republican Party campaign fund in 1944.

Kirk Smith, corporation lawyer of Providence, R. I., director of Hight St. Bank and Trust Co., also of four laundry companies.

George W. Alger, corporation lawyer of New York; counsel, Sheffield Farms (big dairy monopoly); author of amendments to labor and child labor laws.

Samuel Fels, president, Fels and Co. (soap); president, Paschall Oxygen Co.; has reputation of being one of the most paternalistic of all employers.

George Sjoselius, Asst. Attorney-General of Minnesota, in charge of enforcement of notorious Minnesota state labor relations act, friend of ex-Gov. Stassen and Sen. Ball; Republican small shot.

Donald R. Richberg, corporation laywer, counsel for big newspapers; author of anti-labor series of articles for Scripps- Howard; resisted use of Sec. 7a of NRA for collectice bargaining, has since consistently tried to undermine the Wagner Act.

No Small Potatoes

WAR WAS PROFITABLE for American industry. The OPA this week reported that businessmen earned more from 1942 to 1944 than ever before in peace or war. Above: Profits before income taxes, durng a typical peacetime period and in two war years.

Bridges Victory Hailed by Murray

By C. W. FOWLER

THE 11-year fight of an elected labor leader to stay in the country of his own choosing ended in victory this week, with the 5-3 decision of the U. S. Supreme Court dismissing deportation charges against Harry Bridges, president of the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union and California Regional CIO Director.

The decision, which upset outgoing Attorney General Biddle's order to deport Harry Bridges, was marked by a strong concurring opinion from Justice Frank Murphy, declaring:

"The record in this case will stand forever as a monument to man's intolerance of man. Seldom if ever in the history of this nation has there been such a concentrated and relentless crusade to deport an individual because he dared to exercise the freedom that belongs to him as a human being and that is guaranteed to him by the Constitution."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray said the decision "is a victory for the principle of free collective bargaining. Harry Bridges is the elected officer of a responsible union of the CIO. As such, he was chosen by the members of his union to represent them in their dealings with their employers.

"The decision thus upholds the right of free people in this country to choose their own collective bargaining agents without fear of interference from any source."

Two of the three dissents—Chief Justice Stone and Justice Roberts—were no surprise, since they usually take an attitude opposed to the liberal side. Justice Frankfurter, the third dissenter, was a surprise to those who remember his former reputation as a liberal.

Commenting on the Murphy opinion, CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, who argued the case before the Court, said: "Mr. Justice Murphy's concurring opinion will undoubtedly stand forever as a monument to man's understanding of the true nature of our historic Bill of Rights."

The majority opinion, given by Justice Douglas, was signed by Justices Black, Reed and Rutledge, as well as being reinforced by the stronger concurring opinion of Murphy. It was pitched primarily on the question of "affiliation" to a party or group advocating the overthrow of the government by force and violence.

HARRY BRIDGES

Bridges, contrary to the evidence of Harry Lundeberg, head of the AFL's Seafarer's Union and an admitted enemy, was not "affiliated" to the Communist Party, the majority said, and therefore should not be punished with "as great a hardship" as deportation.

Murphy's opinion went much further than the general majority of the Court. Knocking down Biddle's contention that the Bill of Rights does not apply to aliens, Murphy said he could not agree "that the framers of the Constitution meant to make such a hollow mockery of human freedom."

"Our concern in this case does not halt with the fate of Harry Bridges, an alien whose constitutional rights have been grossly violated," Murphy added.

"The liberties of the 3,500,000 other aliens in this nation are also at stake. Many of these aliens, like many of our forebearers, were driven from their original homelands by bigoted authorities who denied the existence of freedom and tolerance.

"The Bill of Rights belongs to them as well as to all citizens."

CIO President Murray this week labeled the proposed Federal Industrial Relations Act as a "bald-faced attempt to destroy labor unions" and "a bill to enslave labor." Full text of his remarks follows:

The bill drafted by Donald Richberg and proposed by three senators is called "The Federal Industrial Relations Act." This is a misnomer. The bill should be properly called "a bill to enslave labor."

First, the proposed bill tears the heart out of the Wagner Act, the Magna Carta of labor. Under the guise of affording equality of protection to employers, the rights now guaranteed to workers by the Wagner Act are practically eliminated.

In addition, full opportunity is afforded to employers to interfere and hamper efforts of workers to organize and engage in collective bargaining, through interminable proceedings which may be initiated by employers.

Second, while employes are authorized to take any unilateral action they may desire, disputes arising therefrom are subjected to long drawn out proceedings before one tribunal after another and ending up in compulsory arbitration. In the meantime, labor can do nothing to protect itself against the most arbitrary and destructive actions of the employers.

Thus, the constitutional and fundamental rights of free men to organize into unions to exercise their freedom of speech and assembly, and to refrain from working if they so desire in order to remain free are destroyed.

Failure on the part of any labor unions to meet all of the technicalities set forth in this complicated measure would permit the various tribunals to designate them as pariahs without any rights or any protection for their members against the provocative or destructive acts by employers.

Third, the bill sets aside the protection which labor now has under the Norris-La Guardia Act, thereby subjecting labor unions to the horrible abuse of Federal Court injunctions.

Also complete latitude is expressly given to employers to initiate suits against labor unions for any alleged violations of the many so-called duties and obligations imposed upon labor under the bill. This single opportunity would be sufficient to destroy labor unions through constant harrassment in courts and the depletion of union treasuries through such litigations.

Fourth, though ostensibly drafted by a committee without any so-called connections or prejudices against either organized labor or employer, it is interesting to note that most of the members of the drafting committee are either employers or attorneys with a full complement of large corporations as clients.

Of all the measures ever introduced in Congress addressed to the problem of industrial relations, this is unquestionably the most bald-faced attempt to destroy labor unions and nullify the basic constitutional rights of workers which, only after long years of struggle have finally been recognized.

Fight to Save FEPC Hits Home Stretch

THE fight to save the Fair Employment Practice Committee went into the final stretch as The CIO NEWS went to press this week, with the Senate set to debate an Appropriations Committee recommendation to restore the $599,000 fund killed by the House.

Wiring to all Senators, CIO Pres. Murray told them that the American people expect both the Democratic and Republican parties to live up to their pre-election pledges on FEPC.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, testifying before the Senate Appropriations Committee, told the members that CIO expected FEPC to be carried past June 30, when present funds run out, and looked to passage of the two bills.

In New York, John Brophy, a member of FEPC, added his plea "as a citizen and a labor man" for prompt passage of both appropriations and the permanent legislation.

The White House, from which President Truman has asked for a permanent FEPC, released the annual report of FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross, which in itself was a powerful argument for continuing the agency.

Eighty-one percent of discrimination cases were against Negroes, Ross found, nine percent against Jews, and 10 percent against foreign born, mostly Mexicans.

Private industry was responsible for 69.4% of the cases, government agencies 24.5% and labor unions 6.1%. These labor unions, incidentally, are AFL, since the CIO does not permit discrimination.

Says Eisenhower

Quote of the week, "The German general staff must be utterly destroyed. We must find the war criminals; we can't let any of the guilty escape. That's the only way to teach them that crime does not pay." The speaker was Genl. Dwight D. Eisenhower, just returned from Europe.

Bill to Enslave Labor

The opening shot of one of the worst anti-labor legislative campaigns ever to be launched in Congress and the press has just been fired.

The so-called "Federal Industrial Relations Act" introduced by Senators Burton, Ball and Hatch would destroy most of labor's hard-won rights. It has been dubbed by CIO President Murray "a bill to enslave labor."

He points out that it would "tear the heart out of the Wagner Act;" authorize unilateral action by employers against unions; establish compulsory arbitration; set aside the protections of the Norris-LaGuardia Act against anti-labor injunctions; lay unions open to constant harrassment in the courts, and infringe on the constitutional rights of freedom to organize, freedom of speech and assembly and freedom to refrain from working.

The farcical pretense that this is a "program for industrial peace" prepared by persons unconnected with either industry or labor is exposed by the fact that the drafting committee was chiefly made up of employers and corporation attorneys.

It is deplorable that the interests behind this measure could not even wait for the war to be over before launching their vicious campaign to destroy labor's rights.

But at the same time it is just as well that labor should be forewarned that it will again be subjected to anti-union campaigns similar to those that followed the last war.

In mobilizing all its strength to defeat this measure, labor will be forcefully reminded that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and that even the strongest union organization is not safe if its members don't organize politically as well as industrially.

Streamlining Congress

While various proposals for "streamlining Congress" are under consideration by a Congressional committee, special attention should be given to ending the seniority rule at present governing committee appointments.

Under this rule, the most influential committees are packed with members whose only qualification is that they have been longer in Congress than their fellow-members.

This leads to the exclusion of Congressmen who may have outstanding qualifications for the work of a particular committee.

It also means that the composition of the committees does not reflect the changes of public opinion registered by the turnover at each election.

But worst of all, the seniority rule virtually insures committee control by those Congressmen who are elected by the smallest number of voters—namely the representatives from polltax states.

Because all but a well-to-do minority are disfranchised by the polltax, it is comparatively easy for reactionary Congressmen from these states to be re-elected again and again. And, in fact, most of the members of Congress with greatest seniority are polltax Congressmen of this stripe.

To do a real job of "streamlining Congress" therefore, one of the first essentials is to do away with the polltax, so that the citizens of the polltax states may have an opportunity to elect representatives who really reflect their sentiments—and thus remove the dead-hand of the senior polltaxers who now exercise such undue influence in Congress.

The anti-polltax bill has been passed by the House and is now before the Senate. Urge your Senators to pass it without delay and to squelch any attempted filibuster.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

SHIRLEY is a standing, running and jumping example of some of the freedoms which the Supreme Court has recently been upholding.

In exercising her freedom of speech, she will talk back to anyone or anything—including an occasional spirited argument over the telephone with that mysterious YEHUDI (on our dial) who phonographically repeats the weather forecast again and again.

But she also helps her elders to appreciate the embarrassment of those press monopolists whose efforts to freeze out competitors have just been rebuked by the Court in its Associated Press decision.

Having left her fifth birthday behind, Shirley has reached the awkward age (awkward, that is, for others) when she knows the meaning of "lie" but not the meaning of such alibis as "harmless prevarication," "exaggeration," or "innocent deception."

Taking to heart the lectures she has received on the virtues of truthfulness, she now checks statements against facts with all the zeal of a good reporter.

It is useless to plead "extenuating circumstances," "poetic license" or the like. That's only meaningless doubletalk to Shirley.

So there are only two courses open to embarrassed adults. Either they can infringe her right of free speech by trying to shut her up; or they must be so careful of the accuracy of their statements in her presence as not to lay themselves open.

Confronted with similar embarrassment from new and competing newspapers, some of the big publishers have preferred the first course, rather than the more arduous course of improving their accuracy, fairness and reader-appeal to meet competition.

Among the obstacles thrown in the way of the Chicago Sun, for instance, when it rose to challenge the Chicago Tribune, was denial of the Associated Press service.

AP denial of service to papers which compete with existing AP members was denounced by the Boston CIO convention as typifying "the trend toward monopolization of the press by existing daily newspapers and their allied commercial interests" and as "a direct menace to a free press."

The Supreme Court has now held this practice to be an illegal combination in restraint of trade.

It declared that our constitutional freedom of press "rests on the assumption that the widest possible dissemination of information from diverse and antagonistic sources is esesntial to the welfare of the public, that a free press is a condition of a free society.

"Freedom to publish is guaranteed by the constitution," it said, "but freedom to combine to keep others from publishing is not."

Of course, the AP decision covers only one minor angle of press freedom, and the roots of monopoly go much deeper.

The greatest restrictions on this freedom come not from government interference, which is at a minimum in the United States, but from the effective monopoly created by the high costs of launching metropolitan dailies.

Newspaper-chain owners like Hearst, Howard, Gannett and other wealthy publishers enjoy a virtual monopoly of press freedom to propagandize.

To say that anyone who doesn't like their output can stop reading it or start a paper of his own, is like telling a penniless worker that if he doesn't like his job, he is free to quit or to open a factory of his own.

We can't do without news, any more than a worker can do without wages. And as to starting a daily paper that can compete effectively, the costs are such as to deny this opportunity to all but millionaire interests.

For labor, this monopoly of press freedom by the wealthy few means that when the interests of labor and capital are deemed to conflict, the big business press will line up on the anti-labor side and promote the propaganda campaigns of employing interests with which it has a natural economic affinity.

But labor can draw a little comfort from the Supreme Court decision, which makes it easier for new papers to compete with existing dailies and keep some check on their fairness and accuracy.

It Happened This Week

NAM Slush Fund

The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers spent nearly $2 million in 1944 to advance the cause of its members. High on the list of expenditures were Washinngton lobbying activities and "education" of the NAM members in union-busting techniques. Details of the NAM program, which included a campaign to rid industry of government controls, were contained in the organization's annual report.

The NAM spent thousands of dollars in manipulation of newspapers, radio, movies, school, church, women's clubs and farm groups to get across its "free enterprise" line and "the soundness of management's position on current issues and management's good faith and good motives."

Wage Boost Plug

A sign that the Truman administration is thinking in terms of possible wage boosts was the plug this week of Director of Economic Stabilization William H. Davis for raising the Wage-Hour Law Minimum from 40 to 50 cents an hour. Davis also urged increases up to a 65 cents minimum for some special industries, including textile.

The recommendations were made at a conference of Textile labor and industry officials, and government representatives—first of its kind to draw together top men from all three divisions of responsibility.

Davis, in his comments, seconded demands of the CIO Textile Workers Union, which were presented by Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi and by Solomon Barkin and John Edelman, respectively research director and legislative representative.

Embarrassed Weir

Pain in the neck to Ernest T. Weir, CIO-hating steel boss, was an indictment this week which accused his Weirton Steel Co. of using $80,000 worth of air conditioning equipment for an exclusive company bar rather than for the company hospital.

A 26-count indictment returned this week by the grand jury at Elkins, W. Va. said that the firm obtained War Production Board authority for use of the scarce equipment—in the hospital.

The jury also charged that the company used $78,000 worth of lumber, copper alloy plumbing and shower-doors to build a second floor and a service bar in the exclusive Williams Country Club, frequented by top Weirton officials.

"We have our eye on the 1946 elections with the view of preventing a repetition of the 1942 elections, when only 28 million voters went to the polls, with the result that many reactionary Congressmen were elected. If this small turnout is repeated in 1946, we will lose 40 progressive Congressmen and eight progressive Senators. We cannot possibly risk that disaster. We must see to it that we get a maximum turnout of between 40 and 50 million voters in 1946."

That comment, by Vice-Chairman C. B. Baldwin of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee, accompanied a statement this week that NCPAC will launch an organizational drive in 19 cities

State Laws Affecting Workers—1945 Roundup

By FRED ROSS

WITH all but seven of 44 state legislative sessions ended as The CIO NEWS went to press this week, the picture of their accomplishments was spotty. It clearly demonstrated, however, that labor must pay attention to local as well as national politics to avoid unfair restrictive legislation.

Reactionary interests got onto the statute books in Maine, New Mexico and Colorado laws virtually preventing workers from collecting compensation for occupational diseases they are likely to contract in those states.

In Colorado, Maryland, Minnesota, North Carolina and North Dakota the time to put in claims for wages was cut by legislatures, according to a survey compiled from information furnished by the Bureau of Labor Standards of the Labor Dept., and the CIO Industrial Union Council Dept., headed by John Brophy.

Apparently having failed to hear of the CIO-AFL-U.S. Chamber of Commerce Charter for industrial cooperation, the Mobile Chamber of Commerce applied pressure on the Alabama Senate judiciary committee, killing a measure to put calculations figuring unemployment compensation for shipyard workers on the same basis as that for other workers.

CAA Rides Again

In South Dakota the fascist-minded Christian American Assn. had the legislature not only enact a law outlawing the union shop, but also a measure which will allow the voters to decide whether they want to add such a regulation to the constitution.

In Texas the Christian Americans joined with Fight for Free Enterprise, reported to be a tool for Publisher Frank E. Gannett's notorious Committee for Constitutional Government, in a futile attempt during the closing weeks of the session to pass an anti-union shop measure.

During the final days and weeks the legislators remain in session in Alabama, Florida, Illinois, Massachusetts, Missouri, Ohio and Wisconsin the CIO and other progressive forces should be on their guard to protect the interests of the workers.

Sample of the type of legislation to watch for is a new Colorado law which provides that a worker disabled by an occupational disease must wait three times as long for his compensation as one hurt in an accident. A Maine law "forgot" silicosis but remembered several other diseases that rarely plague Maine workers.

Occupational disease laws passed in Colorado and New Mexico say that "disablement" means physical incapacity "to perform any work for remuneration or profit." A man in a wheel-chair can sell magazines, shoe strings or apples "for remuneration or profit."

Tough on Worker

The Colorado law states: "The burden of proof shall be upon the claimant to establish each and every fact by competent medical evidence," which means evidence acceptable in court. The Colorado law denies the worker the right to leave the State without special permission from the compensation commission. At the employer's "reasonable request" the commission shall order a disabled employe who has left the state even with the commission's permission to return "at his own expense" for further examination.

The picture is not all dark. The bright spots include the 11 states enacting laws encouraging employers to hire injured war and production front veterans, the seven states where occupational disease laws were improved, the 17 states where compensation benefits were increased, and the nine states where compensation coverage was extended.

Iowa boosted the limitation on wage claims under Federal laws from six months to two years.

Bona-fide State FEPC's were set up in New Jersey and New York. Indiana and Utah provided for studies of discriminatory employment practices.

Attempts to set up an FEPC program in California were defeated through a series of parliamentary maneuvers and delays.

Although 18 bills to set up State labor boards, patterned after the National Labor Relations Act, were introduced in nine states, it was only in Connecticut that such a bill became the law.

A United Front

What can be accomplished when a united front is forged to press for the passage of legislation is shown by the successful efforts to pass second injury fund bills in Arizona, Colorado, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Washington and Wyoming.

In these states, the Assn. of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions, consisting of State officials, veterans organizations and insurance companies joined forces with the CIO and the AFL to pass these measures, which provide that where an employe had been previously injured and is hurt again, the employer need only pay compensation for the second injury. The employe, on the other hand, will be paid compensation resulting from the combined injuries.

Also on the bright side of the picture are the Rhode Island law providing for minimum wages for men, and the New Jersey statute setting up decent housing conditions for camps of migrant workers.

A partial resume of laws enacted follows (compensation referred to is for injuries):

Arizona—Second injury fund, compensation coverage extended.

California—Compensation benefits increased.

Colorado—Second injury fund. BAD: New occupational disease law, limiting time for starting wage claims under the Federal Labor Standards Act to one year (ordinary limit is six years).

Connecticut — Little Wagner Act establishes three-man Board of Labor Relations, exempts persons subject to the Natl. Labor Relations Act and the Federal Railway Labor Act, guarantees the rights of employes as listed in the Wagner Act and sets up additional safeguards for labor.

2nd Injury Fund

Delaware—Second injury fund, law increases compensation benefits.

Georgia—Law increasing compensation benefits.

Idaho—Improved occupational disease law.

Indiana—Improved occupational disease law, compensation benefits increased, law provides for study of discriminatory practices.

Iowa—Second injury fund, laws increasing compensation benefits and extending coverage; repealed a six months' statute of limitation to claims under Federal statutes and established a two-year limit.

Kansas—Second injury fund.

Maine—BAD: New occupational disease law.

Maryland—Second injury fund, improved occupational disease law; act increasing compensation benefits and coverage.

Montana — Improved occupational disease law; compensation benefit coverage extended.

Michigan—Law extending compensation coverage.

Minnesota — Laws increasing compensation benefits and coverage. BAD: Limits wage claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act to two years.

New Jersey—Compensation benefits increased, discriminatory employment practices outlawed and agency set up to enforce the act.

New York—Compensation benefits increased, discriminatory employment practices outlawed and agency set up to enforce act.

New Mexico—BAD: New occupational disease law.

North Carolina—Improved occupational disease law, compensation coverage extended. BAD: Claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act limited to three years.

North Dakota — Compensation benefits increased.

More Compensation

Oklahoma — Laws increasing compensation benefits and coverage.

Oregon — Second injury fund, compensation benefits increased.

South Dakota—BAD: Right-to-work law outlawing union shops, law providing for election to decide whether right-to-work amendment shall be added to state constitution.

Tennessee—Second injury fund.

Utah — Improved occupational disease law; act increasing weekly compensation benefits but ending lifetime payments.

Virginia—Increased occupational disease benefits.

Washington — Second injury fund.

West Virginia—Increased compensation benefits.

Wyoming—Second injury fund, laws increasing compensation benefits and coverage.

Hits Gag Rules In Congress

Congressmen dress in current styles, the plumbing on Capitol Hill is modern, but Congressional rules are still back in the stage-coach days, Ted Silvey, speaking for the Natl. Planning Assn., told the "Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress" this week.

"The seniority rule is one of the greatest evils to be abolished, since it tends to entrench in the operation of Congress those who do not reflect current changes of public opinion," he said.

1 Mrs. Maurice Pumphrey is taking her son, Clifford, age three-and-a-half, to the Outpatient Service of Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, D. C. Her husband is a Sergeant with the paratroops. He was in France, and has been overseas for 16 months. Walter Reed, like all Army General Hospitals, has a free service available to the civilian dependents of all Army personnel.

2 Mrs. Pumphrey awaits her turn in the pediatrics division of the Outpatient Service. The hospital has every modern facility open to the families of servicemen. Mrs. Pumphrey has another boy, aged four-and-a-half. Both children are cared for by a neighbor while she works. Here she makes the acquaintance of another serviceman's wife and child in the hospital waiting room.

STORY BY HELEN KAY

5 These are the babies of Army personnel, from privates to generals. The Walter Reed General Hospital will take 100 babies a month—first come first served, and there's always a waiting list. The service is free to the wives of soldiers. Captain Casey of Public Relations said: "My wife had our baby there, and she's ready to go back." Wives of other Army men report that they too like Walter Reed service and will come back again.

3 Captain E. E. Barrett, doctor for the pediatrics service, examines Clifford. He found a bad throat and ear trouble. This was Clifford's first visit to the Outpatient Service. Captain Barrett has examined children with illnesses ranging from "just bumps" to strange and rare maladies. In civilian life he specialized in the practice of diseases of childhood. The kids like him.

6 Mrs. Elmyra Wright's husband is a corporal. He's been in the Army for five years. Mrs. Wright has come to take treatments herself. Her daughter, Janet, two years old, has been there at several other times too.

4 Sergeant Tralins fills Mrs. Pumphrey's prescription. All medicine is given free of charge to patients. A special pharmacy department in the Outpatient Service relieves the pressure on the general hospital department. Mrs. Pumphrey will come back again soon to have her son checked.

Free Medical Aid For Army Families

THE Walter Reed Hospital in Washington, D. C., like all Army General hospitals, has special free services for civilian dependents of Army personnel.

In the Outpatient Service clinics over 100,000 patients are handled yearly. Scattered over the country are other general hospitals, each one with modern, streamlined medical facilities at the disposal of servicemen's families.

All the facilities of a modern hospital, from the eye, ear, nose and throat clinic to the pediatric service and the section for prenatal care, to dermatology and orthopedic care, are available without cost. In addition all necessary prescriptions are filled at the Outpatient Service free. A worried mother can rush her child to the clinic and get immediate attention, if her child has bumped his head or if the injury is genuinely serious. The doctors are on call day and night. If the child must be hospitalized and is too young to leave alone, in frequent cases they allow the mother to be admitted as an attendant.

Captain E. E. Barrett, in charge of the pediatrics' section, comes from the Middle West, where he specialized in childhood diseases. He handles 45 children a day personally, and hears "a lot of squalling, too," he says.

Frank A. Hardesty, USA District Director, Houston, Texas, reports: Employes of Reed Roller Bit Co., Houston, one of the largest steel fabricating plants in the Southwest, voted for CIO, after a two-year struggle. This plant has been under the AFL for the past seven years.

W. H. Crawford, USA District Director, reports: Reynolds Fuze Plant, Milledgeville, Ga., CIO 715, against 672. USA Field Rep. R. E. Starnes did a very good job. Starnes has been jailed twice on an unconstitutional ordinance. He was brutally beaten on one occasion and his life threatened many times. His courage and determination in spite of all this is to be commended. We congratulate him on this splendid victory.

CIO Reg. Dir. J. B. Easton, Charleston, W. Va., reports: U. S. Rubber Plant Institute, CIO Rubber Workers 332, AFL 174, District 50, 48. URWA Field Rep. Robert Hill was in charge of the campaign assisted by the CIO Regional Office and staff.

I. L. DeShetler, CIO Reg. Dir., Kansas City, Mo., reports: C. C. Caldwell Optical Co., Kansas City, CIO certified as bargaining agent by a cross-check of cards resulting in an 8-to-0 count. Rep. Sam Grolmes of the Optical and Instrument Workers Org. Com. was in charge.

The writer had the pleasure of addressing a meeting of the Cleveland Industrial Council last week and had the honor of installing the elected officers. Pres. Richard Reisinger was presented with a plaque carved out of wood for his untiring efforts and success in bringing about a greater degree of unity in the affairs of the council.

CIO Officers Meeting

CIO National Officers and Vice Presidents at a meeting called by Pres. Murray June 13, adopted a program calling upon President Truman, Director of War Mobilization Vinson, Stabilization Director Wm. Davis and the public members of the Natl. War Labor Board, to immediately revise the national wage policy and confer upon the board the necessary authority to make wage adjustments. To continue the present policy would be unjust as profits have soared and prices have risen.

We call upon Congress to enact the recommendation of President Truman to provide federal supplementary unemployment compensation payments to war workers thrown out of jobs during the reconversion period to a minimum of $25 per week for 26 weeks, and to broaden the law to cover all federal employes, members of the merchant marine, and all other groups not now covered by existing law.

The conference also called upon the WPB to take necessary steps to assure resumption of production of civilian goods in those plants where cancellations and cutbacks of war contracts have occurred. It advocated the annual wage to insure a peaceful and expanding economy and to fulfill Franklin D. Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights—Freedom from Fear and Freedom from Want.

The conference urged employers to enter in good faith in collective bargaining with the unions to assure security of employment on an annual basis.

Full Employment Drive

CIO Regional Directors have been directed to contact International Union and Council representatives in their areas to immediately organize meetings of shop stewards, local union officers and other unionists as well as church and community groups, to get nation-wide support for these worthy and necessary objectives in order that our nation can come through the reconversion and post-war period, with full employment.

These are the most important matters confronting the CIO and the Nation and we strongly urge everyone to support the CIO Regional Director in his area to make this program a real success.

Pacific T & T Accused Of Backing Dummy Union

The Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co., Bell Telephone affiliate, and its wholly owned subsidiary, the Southern California Telephone Co., were charged this week by the CIO American Communications Assn. with maintaining a company union in violation of the Wagner Act.

The charge was filed with the regional office of the Natl. Labor Relations Board by William Burke, ACA Intl. representative.

In his complaint Burke declared that evidence in his possession proved that the newly formed Pacific Coast Telephone Workers Union "was organized in an attempt to evade similar charges filed eight months ago with the NLRB by the ACA-CIO in connection with PT&T's domination of the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers, Inc."

The Brotherhood and the new telephone union are both affiliates of the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers.

Larus Case Spotlights AFL's Policy on Negroes

The AFL's practice of Jim Crowing its Negro members into class B locals where they are deprived of their full union rights, is under attack in a case brought before the Natl. Labor Relations Board by the CIO Food, Tobacco, Agricultural & Allied Workers. Hearings on the charges started this week in Washington.

The case involves the formation by an AFL union of a separate local for Negro workers at the Larus & Brother tobacco plant in Richmond, Va. After preliminary hearings on the case last February, NLRB Trail Examiner Frank Bloom, recommended that certification of the AFL local be withdrawn unless the union notified the Negro workers that they were eligible for membership in the white local and cancelled the Negro local's charter.

The story of unionization at the Larus tobacco plant dates back to 1937 when, at the request of the AFL, the NLRB held an election based on two units—white and Negro. The AFL won bargaining rights for the white workers, and the Negroes voted for the CIO.

In March, 1944, a new election covering the entire plant was held at the request of the AFL. The AFL local won and was certified by the NLRB as the union for both Negro and white workers. Instead of including the Negroes in the regular local, the AFL set up a separate B local for the Negroes with its own officers and committees, which was not mentioned in the union contract.

The issue presented in the case is considered of great importance for the labor movement. A resolution supporting the FTA's fight was passed at the April 12 meeting of the Natl. CIO Executive Board. The NLRB's action in the case, the resolution stated, "will represent a vital test of the Wagner Act at a time when this country is engaged in a bitter struggle for democracy and against racial discrimination."

FTA Pres. Donald Henderson declared that "the fundamental principle of democracy in the trade unions is involved in the Larus case. The CIO firmly believes that you cannot exclude any group of workers from the benefits of collective bargaining without jeopardizing the rights of all workers."

On Full Employment

Shipyard Stewards Hear Green's Proposals

Proposals aimed at providing full employment for America's shipyard workers were presented this week by Pres. John Green of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D., Wis.) at a conference in Camden, N. J., of 600 shop stewards from Delaware river area shipyards.

Pres. Green called for joint action by government, labor and industry to provide maximum employment in the shipbuilding industry. The United States needs 25,000,000 tons of merchant shipping to have a healthy merchant marine fleet, he said.

"We believe in unrestricted free trade because that means a prosperous America. Therefore we will need new and modern ships to carry our goods across the seven seas."

Biemiller urged that labor, management and government cooperate in the postwar period to utilize all of the nation's resources in men and materials for peace as they have done during the war.

Richard Versch, member of the union's general executive board and chairman of its postwar planning committee, who presided at the meeting, said that workers are not so much interested in unemployment insurance as in jobs.

Now that the heyday of war production is over, he declared, union members must begin thinking not only of jobs for themselves, but also for returning servicemen.

Pres. Green called for a new national wage policy in his talk to the shop stewards, and disclosed that at a conference with William H. Davis, director of economic stabilization, which he had attended with a group of CIO leaders, Davis told that "the only way we can provide jobs is to make sure the purchasing power of the workers is not curtailed during the period of reconversion."

Business can well afford to pay wage increases to maintain take-home pay despite shrinking hours, out of their backlog of war profits, Green said Davis was told.

The union president called for community action in support of a full employment program, and urged the shop stewards to "let your congressmen know that you are out for a job—not for a $25 a week dole."

WLB Rulings On Tough Issues

Rulings on several knotty problems that bother union workers on the job were laid down in recent decisions of the Natl. War Labor Board.

One concerns the seniority rating of union officials, another forbids foremen to do work ordinarily performed by regular workmen, and a third gives an individual the right to present his grievance directly, but preserves the union's right to negotiate settlement of the grievance.

The ruling on seniority rating, made in a WLB decision involving the Fisher Scientific Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., and the United Scientific Workers, CIO Local Industrial Union 1323, granted top seniority in layoffs and rehirings to four union officials with the proviso that this clause should not contravene any of the provisions of the Selective Service Act. Industry members dissented.

In a case involving the Pangborn Corp., Hagerstown, Md., and the CIO United Auto Workers, which represents 500 production workers at the plant, the Board forbid foremen and other supervisors to do work ordinarily performed by regular workmen except to instruct workers or under emergency conditions.

The grievance procedure ruling was made in a majority opinion issued this week in connection with an interim directive order of the Board which settled 16 issues in dispute between Douglas Aircraft Co., Long Beach, Calif., and the CIO United Automobile Workers, representing some 14,250 employes.

In single prievance procedure, it preserves the right of the individual to present his grievance directly, but gives the union the right to negotiate settlement of the grievance.

Gets Harvard Fellowship

Richard S. Hamme, chairman of the CIO United Transport Service Employes' New England Council, has been granted a Julius Rosenwald fellowship to attend the trade union project at Harvard University. He will begin his study in the fall at the Littauer School of Public Administration.

Hamme, who is a member of the Greater Boston CIO Council and chairman of the Anti-Discrimination Committee, has actively supported the Fair Employment Practice Committee and has organized a successful drive in the Boston area for the Negro College Fund.

Alcoa Signs New Contract

A new contract covering 35,000 workers in 10 Alcoa plants has been signed between the Aluminum Co. of America and the CIO United Steelworkers.

The agreement with Alcoa was the first to be signed since the former Aluminum Workers of America merged with the CIO Steelworkers a year ago. It replaces an agreement which expired a year ago but remained in force pending settlement by the Natl. War Labor Board of a fight on 17 issues.

Terms of the new contract include increases of 4 cents to 6 cents hourly in shift differentials, right of the union to approve or reject any rate changes proposed by the company, and right of the union to investigate grievances inside the plants.

House Unit Is Apathetic To School Lunch Program

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

I called up the House Rules Committee this week to find out whether they had decided to bring HR 3370, the bill for a permanent school lunch program, before the House.

They told me that they had quite a debate about the bill, and that so many Congressmen wished to appear in opposition to it that the Committee had postponed action.

It seems almost incredible that after selective service has exposed the terrible health conditions among our youth, anyone should oppose a bill to give permanent Federal help to lunches in our schools.

FAULTY DIET COSTLY

Miss Catherine Lenroot, head of the Children's Bureau, spoke at a Youth Conservation Clearing House meeting this week. She gave a few figures about the health of our school children including the fact that 75 per cent have dental defects needing care. An adequate diet for our youngsters would prevent entirely a large proportion of those defects.

Fortunately there is no immediate crisis on school lunches. If Congress does not act on a permanent bill this month, the temporary program, which has been going on from year to year, will continue. An appropriation of $50,000,000 for school lunches—the same amount authorized for this year—has already been voted as part of the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Bill.

We need much more than continuation of the present program. Only about 5,000,000 children, at the peak, benefit by lunches now. There are more than 20,000,000 school children in our country.

Once there is permanent legislation for Federal aid to the program, many schools which have not been willing to make all the changes needed to put in a kitchen and cafeteria, will do so because of the assurance of continuing Federal aid. Moreover, under the provisions of the permanent bill, $15,000,000 would be available for grants-in-aid to states for assisting schools in buying equipment and in securing and training lunch room supervisors.

Unfortunately the permanent bill recommended by the House Agriculture Committee, HR 3370, limits the money available for food to $50,000,000 annually—just what is being spent now. The friends of the school lunch program would like to see at least $100,000,000 authorized.

Our best chance of increasing the appropriation, however, is in the Senate where several ardent champions of the program have already proposed the larger amount.

Our job now is to see that HR 3370 is brought before the House by the Rules Committee and that it is passed by a big majority with many Congressmen speaking of the importance of an increased appropriation. Let your Congressman hear how you feel on this today.

Kansas Beware

Frankly anti-union Fight for Free Enterprise, which crawled out from under a rock in Texas, has started to organize in Kansas, reports Federated press.

The organization is said to be plugging for state legislation outlawing organized labor and for a maximum wage of $5 a day.

Two More High Court Rulings Hit Discrimination, Uphold Union

Two more victories were chalked up for the people in last Monday's U. S. Supreme Court decisions, in addition to the Bridges deportation case and the anti-trust suit against the Associated Press (see Looking Ahead, editorial page).

The Court in a 5-4 decision held that a labor union may not be sued under the anti-trust law for refusal to work, even if that action destroys an employer's business. The case involved the AFL and Hunt's Motor Freight & Food Products Transport of Philadelphia.

In another ruling, the court held that N. Y. State's civil rights law anti-discrimination clause applies to unions. The case involved the AFL Railway Mail Assn., which attempted to prevent employment of Negroes.

HIYA! Students to the FTA Midwest summer school at Madison, Wis., like these from last year's session, will be arriving July 18, for a one week's leadership training course. Dr. A. D. Winespear, director, Abraham Lincoln School, welcomes them.

CIO Summer Schools

Food, Tobacco Workers Train Union Leaders

Plans are shaping up for four regional one-week trade union schools to be held this summer by the CIO Food, Tobacco, Agricultural & Allied Workers. Dates and places for two of the schools have already been set, with the other two to be announced later. Some 35 to 40 delegates from locals in the surrounding areas will attend each school.

From July 1-8, the school for the Northeast area will be held at Bechtelsville, Pa., at a camp near Philadelphia. From July 18-22, the Mid-West Leadership Training School will be held at the Abraham Lincoln Summer School on the University of Wisconsin campus.

The other two will be held at Memphis, Tenn., and Winston-Salem, N. C.

Five of the newly elected officers and shop stewards of the Quaker Oats Local in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, will be among the students attending the Midwest Leadership Training School in Wisconsin.

"This is no accident," says Connie Anderson, the union's education director. "It is an example of how the FTA local unions are using the leadership training schools to assist their officers in learning the know-how of unionism."

Discussion leaders at FTA schools will include the National Union's officers — Pres. Donald Henderson and Sec.-Treas. Harold Lane — Elizabeth Sasuly, Washington representative, and Miss Anderson.

At the Pennsylvania school, Jessica Rhine, War Labor Board representative for the union in the Philadelphia area, will lead the discussion on drawing up contracts.

Subjects to be taken up at the four schools include a brief history of the FTA and the CIO and functions of the FTA, covering the work of the National Office and the Regional Councils with special emphasis on local union activities.

The sessions end with discussions of government agencies, Federal legislation and postwar problems. From four to five hours a day are spent at classes and discussions. In the evenings, singing, outside speakers, skits, films and other amusements provide relaxation for the students.

Discussion outlines are given to the students to take home in loose-leaf note. "But much of the benefit of the school cannot be put into an outline," says Education Director Anderson. "Most valuable is the fact that for a solid week the local union leaders are together with national union officers and have an opportunity to discuss their problems at leisure with them.

"These schools contribute mightily to the local union leaders' understanding of the entire CIO program and to welding the union behind the job of building a strong, well functioning organization."

This is one of a series on the summer school programs of CIO International Unions. Previously schools of the United Auto Workers, the Office & Professional Workers and the Textile Workers Union have been described. Others will follow.

UAW School in South Discusses Postwar Jobs

The postwar plan of the CIO United Auto Workers for one million jobs in the automobile industry was the core of the second UAW summer school held last week at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn.

The union's proposal for full employment in contrast to industry's plans for limited production following V-J day, which would mean a 50 per cent reduction in jobs, were discussed in a class taught by Sigmund Diamond of the UAW Research Dept.

Both white and Negro UAW members from southern states attended the one-week school. Subjects include leadership training, taught by Noble Combs, Summer School director for the UAW Education Dept., and collective bargaining and the handling of grievances, led by UAW Regional Director T. J. Starling and Intl. Rep. E. L. Luter.

George Mitchell, southeastern PAC director, spoke on the local union political action program. Classes were planned by a council of students and staff, with a steering committee elected from the council working with the staff between meetings.

This Is No Job For a Timid Soul

It takes plenty of nerve to handle some of the jobs turned over to George L-P Weaver, the mild-mannered director of the CIO's Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination. Although this CIO trouble-shooter frequently suffers humiliation and threats of violence on his various trips about the country, he returns to CIO National headquarters unruffled by his experiences and gives his report in matter-of-fact terms with no bitterness in evidence.

Last week Weaver returned from a trip to Pasadena, Texas, near Houston, where a local of the CIO Oil Workers International Union was having difficulties over the job-upgrading of several Negroes and Mexicans at a Shell Oil refinery employing some 1800 workers, less than 200 of whom are Mexicans and Negroes.

A directive issued some time ago by the Fair Employment Practice Committee, following hearings held in Houston last December, had ordered the company to upgrade Negro and Mexican workers when they were eligible for vacancies that occurred.

The company claimed it had tried to comply on several occasions, but that "serious difficulties" arose because of opposition from the white workers. The union claimed that the company provoked the difficulties by the way the matter was settled.

This in brief was the problem that faced Weaver when he was sent down to see if he could help maintain the CIO's policy of no racial discrimination. But as on previous occasions when he has made trips south, Weaver's difficulties began even before he arrived at his destination.

Traveling by plane because of the urgency of the case, Weaver arrived at the Houston airport, about 14 miles from the city, at six in the morning, only to find that the driver of the car which meets the plane to transport passengers to Houston, would not permit him to ride. It was a company rule, he told Weaver, that Negroes were not allowed in the car.

Fortunately a Negro on a nearby delivery truck overheard the conversation, and offered to take Weaver to the city. When he finally got to the meeting called by a union conciliation committee where he was scheduled to speak, Weaver found part of the workers in a nasty frame of mind and unwilling to hear him. Some left the hall, but the rest calmed down and listened to him explain the CIO's opposition to racial discrimination.

The result of the meeting was that the committee agreed to attempt to uphold the CIO's position in favor of upgrading the Mexican and Negro workers within six months. Weaver said that J. J. Hickman, secretary-treasurer of the Shell Oil local, and J. C. Sanderson, chairman of the local's conciliation committee, both gave him splendid cooperation, and that he felt that with their aid the problem would be solved.

Ohio CIO Plans Summer School

A one-week summer school to be held by the Ohio CIO Council at Antioch College, Aug. 19-25, has been announced by George De Nucci, acting secy-treas. of the Council. The general plan calls for one-hour classes in the morning, panel discussions in the afternoon and speakers during the evening.

Minister to Aid Ohio CIO Council

How to make friends among liberal, church, school and other community groups is being given increasing attention these days by CIO unions. Labor is coming more and more to realize the importance of making the program of the trade union movement understood in the community so that all those concerned in advancing the welfare of the masses of the people may cooperate on common aims.

REV. ORVILLE C. JONES

Evidence of this is the recent appointment by the Ohio CIO Council of the Rev. Orville C. Jones, ordained Congregational minister and teacher at the Graduate School of Theology, Oberlin College, Ohio. Rev. Jones, who will be the Council's public relations representative to interpret the CIO to churches, farm groups and other organizations, comes to the Ohio Council with many years of previous experience in working with such groups. For 19 years he has served as a pastor of various churches in Ohio and South Dakota.

Rev. Jones' first hand introduction to the labor movement was during the CIO's struggle with the Little Steel companies in 1937-8, when he was pastor of a church in Youngstown and took a definite position in favor of unions.

A special interest of the CIO Council's new representative is the race problem. The CIO, he believes, "is doing the most significant job in America in breaking down discrimination."

Realistic Vs. Rosy Slant

Two different points of view on the subject of "Sixty Million Jobs" are presented by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. Ira Mosher of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers in the July issue of "This Month," a magazine published in New York by the Assn. for the Promotion of International Understanding.

To those who think America's industrial system could survive another period of mass unemployment, or that it would not be a bad thing to have five to ten million unemployed, president Murray says:

"Once you open the sluice gates of unemployment the deflationary flood will be uncontrollable; it will engulf our business, our industry, our country, and yes, our world as well."

The only postwar road America can safely take, Murray states, "is that of full production and full employment. Whether this is 60 million or 57.5 or 58.2, I leave to the statisticians to argue."

Mosher takes a very rosy view of the situation. "This big postwar possibility is not centered on the old depression query 'shall there be a job for every man?' but rather on the question of whether or not there will be a man for every job," he says.

Main Test UCIO Vote

With the work of the San Francisco conference on world security (United Nations Conference on International Organization, to give its long official title) the vote will come up soon in the Senate to ratify the UNCIO charter.

UNCIO has been a success—despite many blunders and despite the war that the Scripps-Howard and Hearst papers carried on against it.

Now comes the task of getting it past the Republicans in the Senate and their isolationist allies on the Democratic side. Sen. Vandenberg, who ran Stettinius at the conference and who with Nelson Rockefeller was responsible for getting Argentina in, was set to make a major speech in the Senate this week.

Watch Vandenberg's speech for the GOP line. Predictions in Washington are that he will plump for the charter as written. If he does, GOP Senators will vote for it. If Vandenberg quibbles on apparently "minor" points and hints that we should consider changing the charter here and there, the ratification will not be so easy.

Hits NLRB Cuts

Proposed cuts in funds for the Natl. Labor Relations Board amounting to $402,000 would force the NLRB to drop more than 20% of its employes, CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood said this week in testimony before the Senate Sub-Committee on Appropriations.

"If the Board's staff were cut about 20%, it would mean that there would be a period of one year in a complaint case from hearing to decision . . . even now the Board's funds are far short of its demands. As a result of present financial difficulties the Board has been forced to suspend hearings in 125 cases involving representation matters. It has been forced to suspend hearings in 39 cases involving complaints. It has been forced to stop even the holding of elections in almost 150 cases."

Turning to the Frey rider, which sanctifies company unions and collusive contracts, Haywood told the subcommittee: "The Frey rider revises and redrafts a statute passed by Congress. It frustrates employe choice, confuses established procedures and has no place in the statute. . . ."

The rider and the appropriation cut will be reported on by the sub-Committee early this week, and then sent to the Senate floor. After the Senate vote, they go to a House-Senate conference committee. There's still plenty of time to wire your Representative and both your Senators to oppose all NLRB cuts, all riders of any kind.

Motives Behind New Anti-Labor Drive

Real motives behind the new anti-labor drive in the Senate, with Sens. Hatch (D., N. M.), Burton (R., O.) and Ball (R., Minn.) stooging for a gang of rich lawyers and manufacturers are far from the state of purity ascribed to them in the newspapers.

The bill, which would supersede the Wagner Act, wipe out the NLRB and the War Labor Board and outlaw the closed shop, is also a wedge for other union-busting devices that reactionaries will attempt under its cover in Congress.

No one too seriously expects that the whole of the "B2H1" proposal will be completely enacted into law—least of all the shrewd corporation lawyers who drafted it. What is expected, and what was planned, is a new attack on the Wagner Act and all other labor legislation on the excuse that "abuses" must be remedied.

Anti-union employers, using a variety of front men in Congress and in the AFL, have tried to wreck the Wagner Act ever since it was passed 10 years ago. So far they've failed, because the CIO and every fair-minded person in the country (including the rank and file of the AFL) has mobilized to stop them.

A Few Recent Victories

RECIPROCAL TRADE: the GOP offensive against postwar jobs in world trade, led by Sen. Taft (R., O.) has broken down in the 47 to 33 vote to give the administration power to cut U. S. tariff barriers by 50% in return for concessions from other countries.

PRICE CONTROL: the victory here is not so complete, but CIO activity, united with organizations representing more than 25 million consumers, did succeed in blocking the Wherry (R., Neb.) amendment that would have taken the lid off food prices. The House Banking and Currency Committee report, while it did ask for more "flexible" (i. e., higher) OPA price rules, rejects the Wherry inflation move and asks for one-year price control renewal. The bill goes to the House floor this week, then to House-Senate conference.

APPROPRIATIONS: a notable victory for the rights of labor was won when the Senate sub-Committee on Appropriations rejected a rider exempting 1,500,000 food workers from War Labor Board jurisdiction. The rider, sparked by big food interests, would have been the first in a series of attempts to wreck all labor laws.

S 1171	Wipes out Wagner Act; outlaws closed shop; enforces compulsory arbitration.	Put in Senate hopper by Sens. Hatch (D. N. M.), Burton (R. O.) and Ball (R. Minn.); to Senate Labor Committee.	Wire your two Senators at once to oppose all such attempts to scuttle Wagner Act and other labor laws.
FEPC (S 101; HR 2232) and funds.	S 101, HR 2232 make FEPC permanent U. S. agency; funds carry on present FEPC past June 30.	HR 2232 still bottled up in polltax dominated House Rules Committee; funds for present FEPC voted by Senate Appropriations Committee; to Senate vote June 25, then to House again.	If funds not voted, wire Senators to support. Urge both Senators and Congressmen to support S 101, HR 2232.
Price control (SJ Res. 30)	Renews price control act for one year.	House Banking and Currency Committee reports ask renewal for one year, rejects GOP amendment that took lid off inflation.	Wire your Representative and Senators to support renewal for one year; no amendments; full $180,000,000 appropriation for OPA.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives vote to 10,000,000 U. S. citizens.	Passed House by 2 to 1 vote; now to Senate where filibuster is threatened.	Write Senators to support early vote; short hearings; no filibuster.
NLRB funds.	As passed by House, has Frey rider and $400,000 fund cut, crippling NLRB.	Senate Appropriations sub-Committee will vote early this week; then to Senate floor and back to House.	Wire Senators to support full funds for NLRB; no riders of any kind.

Coming Up—Issues to Watch

TAXES: House Ways and Means Committee has a neat little scheme cooking designed to save the rich boys and big corporations some more money. It's a plan by which they can anticipate the "carryback" on their taxes.

Last year's tax bill had a clause allowing corporations to "carry back" taxes if their postwar profits run below 1936-39 levels—no matter at what capacity their plants are operating. "Carry back" is simply a new name for tax refund, or tax steal, and of course applies only to corporations, not to workers.

Now the scheme is to let corporations anticipate this steal now, by "borrowing" the money they expect to get after the war from the government at six per cent interest.

Meanwhile the House Ways and Means Committee continues to ignore the emergency unemployment benefits asked by President Truman and supported by the CIO. Unemployed workers don't register with the Committee the way corporations do.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK: Rep. Savage (D. Wash.), a member of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America, on the subject of Fulton Lewis, Jr., Mutual's anti-labor, pro-fascist commentator: "Members have taken the floor today to defend Fulton Lewis, Jr., and his attack on the U. S. Army engineers who have done such a wonderful job in this war.

"That is only an example of the type of attacks that have been made on different groups of people in America who have been doing a good job in the war, and is destroying the confidence of the people in many groups who have been working and producing for the war effort.

"It is my opinion that in the radio field he stands the same as Westbrook Pegler does in the newspaper field. It was stated here that people have implicit faith in Fulton Lewis, Jr., but I am sure from my experience that the people at large do not have, and I think he is one of the most dishonest reporters the American people have on the radio."

DIRECT RESULTS: have come from President Murray's letter to Francis Biddle, urging a new trial for the seditionists who got a mistrial when Judge Eicher died. In a letter to President Murray last week, Biddle assured him that John Rogge, who tried the first batch, "has been for some time working on a plan which involves streamlining the presentation to the jury, eliminating some of the defendants, and generally shortening the time of the trial."

Biddle, the man who tried to deport Harry Bridges, ceases to be Attorney-General July 1. Please omit flowers.

SHIPS FOR PEACE

See Pages 6 and 7

TWO industries more than any others expanded to enormous proportions to meet our country's war time needs. They were aircraft and shipbuilding. Today these two are meeting the full impact of cutbacks.

How serious the problem is in these industries is seen by the figures. From 63,000 persons employed in shipbuilding ten years ago, the swollen wartime figure was 1,722,500. Must the shipbuilding industry remain a war baby?

The CIO News interviewed workers in the shipbuilding industry (see below). By overwhelming majority they want to stay. They want security for themselves and for the rest of America, because they know the two are bound together.

"It's "Ships for jobs and peace" with them.

Theodore A. Gall wants to stay at N. Y. Ship in Camden, N. J. He's a painter. "What I want and what I get are two different things. I think I'll get it in the neck. Our only hope is full employment." He just bought a farm for a sick kid.

Helen Gallagher is a girl grinder. She worked in a candy factory before she went to the shipyards. "I'd like to work here; it's more real than candy," she said. There is yardwide seniority regardless of sex. Her son is in the Navy.

Arthur Chapin was among the first of his race to come to the yards in 1942. Today he's a welder. He had been a field representative for the Pa. Dept. of Labor. "Fair employment is for each yard, and each department," he says.

Vernon J. Smith has worked in shipyards all his life. He's a riveter. "Hope to stay at New York Ship?" he was asked, "I expect to." He has sixteen years of seniority. But he doesn't want his kids to be riveters. "Too hard," he says.

3rd War Plans Cooking—Hillman

THE people must organize to combat powerful forces of reaction which are already setting the stage for a third World War, Sidney Hillman, honorary chairman of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee, warned last week in New York City.

Speaking at a dinner in honor of himself and Elmer A. Benson, new chairman of the NCPAC executive council, Hillman declared that American reactionaries are trying to make the victory over Nazism a hollow victory by "undermining and sapping away the unity of the United Nations—the peoples' greatest source of strength in their struggle for peace and freedom."

"Today," he said, "they concentrate on driving a wedge between our country and the Soviet Union. They assiduously sow the seeds of suspicion and distrust of our great ally. They try to dull our memory of Russia's priceless and heroic contribution to our common victory."

Warning that this campaign has not been "without effect," Hillman said: "It is the task of all progressive and peace-loving Americans to expose and defeat this campaign which has the Soviet Union as its immediate target but which threatens the very foundation on which we hope to erect an enduring peace, international cooperation for an economy of plenty and true democracy for all the peoples.

How'd You Like to Have $18,000 Bank Account?

IF industry and labor were actually meeting reconversion equally, every worker would have in his personal reconversion kitty the sum of $18,000. This fact was brought out at a conference of state industrial union council heads held this weekend in Washington to discuss the prospect of full production and employment for America, and to give blood and sinew to the campaign for attaining it.

John Brophy, director of CIO Councils, gave the four cornerstones of CIO full production policy, in opening the meetings: (1) a federal supplemental unemployment compensation plan such as suggested by President Truman; (2) an upward revision of the national wage policy; (3) proper steps toward reconversion where cutbacks occur, and (4) a guaranteed annual wage.

That industry has the means to weather the reconversion period and guarantee full production was brought out by Donald L. Montegomery, chairman of the CIO Cost of Living Committee.

He pointed out that industry "is well provided with social security benefits and war savings to carry over through the reconversion period from wartime goods to peacetime production with a guaranteed annual wage and maintenance of pre-war prices."

He pointed out that industry has:

"This combined figure of 23 billion dollars as a cushion for industry to absorb any shock due to reconversion is apparent when it is compared with the peacetime net income per year of $3.3 billion.

"Thus industry has as a backlog for reconversion seven years of net income. Further, if industry operates at a loss, it has an additional $25 to $27 billion to draw upon through the Treasury Dept.

"If the average wage earner were as well provided as the average industry, each wage earner would have in his own reconversion kitty $18,000—$7,200 in savings, $1,200 sent to him by the Treasury as his excess profits' tax refund, and $9,600 to draw upon in case he were operating at a loss."

Ted Silvey, chairman of the CIO Reconversion committee, pointed out that the production peak was hit in March 1945, with one million fewer workers than the previous year. Since then the employment and production peaks have been levelling off.

Unless action is taken soon economists expect beteween two and nine million unemployed by the end of 1945. "This will in itself be a dammed up backlog of purchasing power that must be released in order to attain full production," declared Silvey.

Advisory Committees in local unions should be set up on unemployment compensation rights, Silvey warned.

Filbert Lewis of the Delaware CIO Council told of shipyards, now converted to car repair, where the wage on ships had been $1.20 an hour, and the company was attempting to lower it to $1.06.

Other speakers handled the manifold aspects of full production. Mike Ross spoke on production and international cooperation, William G. Nicholas on Housing and Community Development. Other subjects were: Reconversion and race relations, veterans, public relations, labor laws, and political action.

Tips on What You Ought To Do If You Lose Your Job

TIPS on unemployment compensation rights are contained in a new pamphlet, First Aid in Layoffs, published in a national edition by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

Here are points to watch for in almost every state if you should lose your job:

"Go to the nearest public employment office as soon as you lose your job. Register for work and file a claim right away even if you are in doubt whether you are eligible for benefits. If you delay, you may lose benefits.

"You are not entitled to benefits if you do not register each week as being able and willing to work.

"You may lose some or all of your benefits if you quit your job voluntarily for personal reasons or for reasons not connected with the job, or if you are discharged for cause. The state laws on these matters differ widely.

"You may lose some or all of your benefits if you turn down a job.

"Know your rights, and if you find the job is unsuitable, be sure to explain your refusal in terms that will insofar as possible protect your benefit rights.

"The distance from the job, health, previous work history, and perhaps family circumstances are usually taken into account by state agencies in making rulings on whether refusal of a job means loss of benefits.

"The Federal Social Security Aca declares that you can turn down a job and still get benefits: (A) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor disputes; (B) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; (C) if as a condition of being employed the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign from or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization.

First Aid in Layoffs, National Edition. 100 for $1; 1,000 for $9; 5,000 for $35; 10,000 for $60. Order from CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl. N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

BATTLING FOR PRICE CONTROL: A leading part in the fight has been taken by the CIO Women's Auxiliaries. Here Pres. Faye Stephenson shows three Congresswomen how the OPA has kept prices down.—$1.34 in 1920 would buy only five pounds of sugar without price control, while the same amount now will buy five pounds of sugar, a dozen eggs, two quarts of milk, breakfast food and six oranges. L. to r.: Reps. Frances Bolton and Mary Norton, Mrs. Stephenson, and Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas.

CIO Does A Job

Penn. Congressmen Talk Price Control to Wives

TWENTY-FOUR out of Pennsylvania's 35 Congressmen are probably talking to their wives about price control this week as the result of a visit in Washington from one of the biggest and peppiest delegations that CIO has sent up to "the Hill" in the last few months.

More than 100 CIO union representatives crowded into a House conference room to tell their elected representatives of the need: 1. to maintain price control by granting OPA adequate funds; 2. to plan for reconversion now; 3. to raise wages 20 per cent to offset reductions due to cutbacks; 4. to pass a nation-wide unemployment compensation bill that will take up the slack while industry is changing to peacetime production.

The delegation was sparked by Legislative Director Robert K. Lamb of the CIO Steelworkers, who warned that the time to make sure that we have full production and full employment is in the next six months—not after cutbacks and unemployment have started the country on a downward spiral of deflation.

Delegates not only advised the Congressmen to go home and ask their wives about how prices have risen, but also told them of children's shoes selling at $4.85 a pair and of men's shorts costing $1.50.

They presented pay stubs of a skilled annealer in a steel foundry who got 102 hours work in a two-week period ending last April 29, earning $80.75 after all deductions. In a period ending June 10, he received only 72 hours work and $56.69—a nearly 30 per cent loss due to cutbacks. Similar pay checks dropped from $132.52 to $60.39, and from $94.98 to $67.23.

Delegates urged their Congressmen to sign a petition which is being circulated on the Hill asking President Truman to restore the authority of the Natl. War Labor Board to grant wage increases, not substantially affecting the cost of living, to aid in prosecution of the war, to eliminate substandard wages and to assure continued high purchasing power and full employment.

The Congressmen, who consisted of about an equal number of Democrats and Republicans, promised to meet with representatives of Philadelphia CIO unions to talk over reconversion planning.

Heading the delegation was Pres. John Phillips of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, which organized the meeting.

Auto Profits, Salaries Up

While thousands of auto and aircraft workers faced an uncertain job future, corporations' officers and the corporations themselves have been spooning in the gravy.

Reports this week from the CIO United Auto Workers Research Dept. showed that in 29 leading auto and parts companies comprising more than four-fifths of the industry comparison of 1941-44 profits with the 1936-39 average showed a 120.1 percent increase before taxes and a 20.6 percent increase after taxes.

Meanwhile, the U. S. Treasury Dept. released a report showing that auto industry executives were among the top brackets in salaries and other compensation received during the calendar year 1943, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944. The report, which is partially complete, listed almost 600 individuals receiving more than $75,000 in compensation from corporations—but thousands of others received that much or more in other forms such as interest or dividents.

Heading the list was General Motors' Pres. Charles E. Wilson with $459,041. Thirty-one other GM executives got more than $75,000 a year too.

Three Chrysler executives got more than $80,000 each and two Ford officials, C. B. Sorenson and B. J. Craig, received $230,000 and $119,543 respectively.

Battered But Intact, Wagner Act Has Tenth Birthday

By C. W. FOWLER

JULY 5—one day after Independence Day—the Wagner Labor Relations Act becomes 10 years old.

The 10th birthday of labor's magna carta comes at a time when the act is under strong attack, with the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill as the chief battering ram.

The Wagner Act has been under fire continuously since 1935, when the late "Liberty League" advised its employer clients not to obey it, since it was sure to be overruled by the Supreme Court.

To date the Wagner Act has withstood everything thrown against it. The Supreme Court first upheld the act in 1937, in the celebrated Morris Watson case. Since that time, the basic act has not been successfully challenged in the courts. Of 55 cases taken to the Supreme Court, Natl. Labor Relations Board orders have been upset in only two—less than four percent.

Following the failure of the court offensive, the attack shifted to Congress. The same employer interests that had advised flagrant disobedience of the law now tried to undermine it in Washington.

Though they called in every newspaper propaganda agency, every demagogue in and outside Congress, they've failed—to date.

What has been accomplished under the Wagner Act that has helped rally people to defend it so stoutly the last 10 years?

In 10 years the NLRB has handled over 74,000 cases involving the right to collective bargaining guaranteed by the act. More than 11,000 formal decisions have been issued, involving 2,600 unfair labor practice cases and 8,600 representation cases. More than 62,000 cases were handled without recourse to formal decisions or court action.

More than 2,000 company unions have been disbanded since 1935. About 300,000 fired workers have been reinstated. More than 30,000 workers have received almost $9,000,000 in back pay.

More than 24,000 elections were held, 72% of them by agreement with all parties. How well the workers responded in these elections is shown by the fact that six million out of seven million entitled to vote did vote—an 85% turnout.

CIO unions led the list of election victories, winning 9,500 to the AFL's 8,000. Unaffiliated unions won only 2,500, and "no union" was selected in 3,800 polls.

During this 10-year period, Congress has given the NLRB a yearly average of only $2,500,000 to administer the act. This includes both the peacetime years, and the war years—when the work of the Board was increased by the increase in union membership.

In this session, the House cut the appropriation by $40,000. This cut has just been restored in the Senate, and now has gone to a House-Senate conference for final action.

The House also put the "Frey rider" into the appropriation. Under it, the NLRB is forbidden to open a case in which a contract, no matter how collusive, has existed for three months.

Every frontal attack on the Wagner Act has failed so far. The best the enemies of collective bargaining have been able to do is to fasten the Frey rider on the appropriation, and to intimidate some members of the Board into acting against the real intent of the act.

The bare statistics help to explain why the CIO, the membership of the AFL and progressives generally have fought to keep the Wagner Act intact.

They should help rally support for the act now against the attempts of Senators Burton (R. O.), Ball (R. Minn.) and Hatch (D. N. M.) to wreck it through their fancy new Federal Industrial Relations bill—described by Philip Murray as:

". . . unquestionally the most bald-faced attempt to destroy labor unions and nullify the basic constitutional rights of workers which only after years of struggle have finally been recognized."

Polltaxers, Republicans Stall on FEPC Bill

AS The CIO NEWS went to press, the filibuster run by Senator Bilbo (D. Miss.) against the appropriation for the Fair Employment Practice Committee was going full blast, with many Republicans and polltax Democrats cheering on the sidelines.

The House rejected the Budget Bureau's request for a $599,000 appropriation to carry the present FEPC for another year. Deadline on appropriations is June 30. Without an appropriation, the FEPC folds up as of that date.

Meantime, the bills to make FEPC permanent (S 101 and HR 2232) are tied up in committee. The House Rules Committee has refused to give HR 2232 a chance to get to the floor for a vote. Bilbo and others in the Senate have openly threatened to filibuster S 101 to death if it ever hits the floor.

Repeated appeals by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, visits from delegations and editorials have failed to move such men as Bilbo. The only answer to them—unless in this instance they are curbed by other Senators—is to repeal the polltax.

A bill to do that (HR 7) has passed the House. It should come up in the Senate, the expected filibuster against it should be squelched—and then the voters of Mississippi and elsewhere can get rid of the Bilbos.

FCC Ruling Hits Radio Gag Policy; UAW Wins

A UNANIMOUS decision of the seven-man Federal Communications Commission this week took a hearty sock at the up-to-now effectively anti-labor code of the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters. The code has given many stations an excuse to refuse labor time on the air because union broadcasts were considered "controversial."

The decision involved the CIO United Auto Workers and Station WHKC at Columbus, Ohio. The FCC hearing was held and the decision was written by Commissioner Ray C. Wakefield.

The FCC, in approving WHKC's lately adopted policy of selling time for controversial broadcasts, took a sideswipe at NAB's code which says that no time shall be sold for the presentation of public controversial issues, with the exception of political broadcasts and the public forum type of programs. Commenting on this, the FCC said:

"The Commission is of the opinion that the operation of any station under the extreme principles that no time shall be sold for the discussion of controversial public issues and that only charitable organizations and certain commercial interests may solicit memberships is inconsistent with the concept of public interest."

The decision upheld WHKC's right to continue broadcasting after quoting verbatim from an agreemnt signed by the station with the UAW-CIO. This agreement, which was reached after WHKC had censored union scripts and denied the union time for paid broadcasts, provided that WKKC had censored union scripts on both paid and sustaining bases for discussion of issues of public importance, including controversial ones, and would allow dramatizations of them.

The station also agreed to allow non-profit organizations to purchase time for solicitation of membership (barred by the NAB code unless the soliciting organization is charitable or unless the solicitation is incidental to some commercial service like insurance).

WHKC also agreed not to censor scripts unless the station believed that the subject matter conflicted with some law. Commenting on this, the FCC pointed to "the duty of each station licensee to be sensitive to the problems of public concern in the community and to make sufficient time available, on a non-discriminatory basis, for full discussion thereof, without any type of censorship which would undertake to impose the views of the licensee upon the material to be broadcast."

CIO President Murray is "must listening" for all those interested in a guaranteed annual wage. He'll talk about it at 10:45 p. m. EWT Saturday, July 7, over CBS.

CIO's first America United show over NBC starts at 1:15 p. m. Sunday, July 8. Reconversion's the topic, and UAW-CIO Pres. R. J. Thomas and Ed Pritchard from the Office of War Mobilization are the speakers listed so far. Some hot discussion is expected. Are you listening?

Bare Nazi Plans for 3rd Try at World Conquest

GERMAN plans—and potential ability—to start a third world war were documented with cold and startling facts in a series of hearings before the Senate Kilgore Committee this week.

Starting with Bernard Baruch and going through with Asst. Secretary of State Will Clayton, Asst. Attorney General Wendell Berge, Foreign Economic Administrator Leo Crowley and others, the Senators heard testimony showing:

1. Germany's industrial capacity is 80 per cent undamaged, despite bombings, especially in the vital war industries of steel, oil and chemicals.

2. German technical laboratories—where the V-1 was perfected—are still functioning "largely uncontrolled" despite Allied occupation, and the technical personnel is still intact.

3. German economic penetration of other countries, through dummy corporations cartels, "neutral" holdings and the like, still exists as a potential base for war preparation.

4. Argentina is host to more than 100 Axis economic spearheads in the form of Nazi-controlled industrial and other enterprises. Despite promises of adopting democratic ways, the U. S. State Dept. says, Argentina is the principal Axis infection spot in this hemisphere.

All this testimony adds up to one thing, in the collective belief of the high officials who gave it—Germany is still able to plan and initiate wars of conquest.

Baruch, who advised Presidents Wilson and Roosevelt in two German wars, had this to say on the possibility of a third German assault on the world:

"No more important question will ever come before you than this one—of how to prevent the revival of Germany's war-making might . . . What is done with Germany . . . will affect profoundly the jobs and livelihood of everyone, everywhere, for none of the economic problems of the peace can be solved except in the light of German reparations policy and the measures taken to demilitarize Germany's traditional war economy."

Discounting talk of a "hard" or "soft" peace, Baruch said what is needed is a sure peace. For that, we must "break once and for all Germany's dominance of Europe."

Germany must make reparations in labor for damages done to occupied countries, including the Soviet Union, and the labor battalions must include "the principal war-makers, the Nazis, the Gestapo, the Junkers, the General Staff," etc.

Economic and living standards must be raised throughout Europe and the world, and we must see to it that barriers to expanded world trade are removed.

But above all, Germany must not be permitted to keep her existing war potential or to put it into operation for war again—as she did after 1918. Germany learned from her mistakes in 1918, while the Allies did not, Baruch declared.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

The following article, by the CIO General Counsel and his assistant, takes the place of Len De Caux's regular column, during his absence this week on vacation.

By LEE PRESSMAN and FRANK DONNER

THE recently proposed Ball-Burton-Hatch bill presents a threat to the rights of labor and to industrial freedom of the utmost gravity. Since the labor movement has come of age in America there has never been such a bold attempt to use the law as an instrument for waging war upon labor.

The Ball-Burton-Hatch bill is of grave concern not merely because it strips labor of many of its existing protections, but more importantly, because it creates a new system of vicious restrictions which would permanently cripple a free labor movement.

The bill rests upon two separate systems of restrictions. The first is a complicated, vicious and unworkable program for conciliation, waiting periods, cooling-off periods and compulsory arbitration.

There are five new anti-labor features which have been grafted on to the NLRA by this new bill:

(1) The regulation of labor unions and their activities;

(2) An attack upon the principle of majority rule;

(3) A destructive tampering with existing representation procedures for determining who is the collective bargaining representative;

(4) The removal of collective bargaining protections from millions of workers now covered by the NLRA and a resort to a phony "states' rights" system.

(5) The substitution of ambigious phrases for the well established terms now in the NLRA which will invite extensive litigation and promote delays.

We will discuss these five features in turn.

(1) The regulation of labor unions and their activities.

The first startling and destructive contribution of the bill is a system whereby labor organizations are to be subjected to the same prohibitions as employers. Thus it is made an unfair labor practice not only for an employer to interfere with or coerce his employes but for a union to interfere with or coerce an employer.

Likewise it is made an unfair labor practice for a union to give financial aid to an employer just as it is made an unfair labor practice for an employer to give financial aid to a labor organization. If labor organizations have ever caused industrial disputes by giving financial aid to employers, that's news to us. If labor organizations have ever sought to coerce an employer's choice of bargaining representatives we have never been aware of it.

It is quite clear that the drafters of this bill have invented a series of imaginary offenses by labor organizations and called them unfair labor practices so that a way could be cleared for flouting the constitutional rights of workers and regulating the internal affairs of their labor organizations.

This part of the law is like the well-known example of the law's imparitality when it decrees that "neither tramps nor millionaires may sleep on park benches."

There is a method to the madness of the drafters of this bill. By dreaming up imaginary offenses of labor organizations they afford employers a beautiful opportunity for hamstringing labor's legitimate activities. By making the act a "two-way street" the sponsors of this bill have invited all employers to bring specious charges against labor organizations for purposes of delay and of litigating false issues.

More importantly, this bill, in policing the conduct of labor organizations, virtually destroys the right to strike. This is evident from two new unfair labor practices which can only apply to labor organizations. One makes it an unfair labor practice to cease, interrupt or vary employment relationships in violation of an existing agreement or before other methods of conciliation and settlement have been exhausted.

What a sinister and vicious device this is! An employer could destroy a union and if the union attempted to retaliate, he could promptly bring charges of unfair labor practices. There are, of course, no substantial restraints upon the use of the employer's economic power. But let a union seek to defend itself and the act lands on it like a ton of bricks.

State Attacks on Rights of Labor

Throttling state laws threatens slow death for unions—unless they take a more active part in local politics. What state legislatures have done up to now is told here in excerpts from a report prepared by the CIO Legal Dept. for distribution to CIO Industrial Union Councils. It's "must" reading for all trade unionists.

State attacks upon the rights of labor organization have had four principal objects:

First, the regulation of internal union organization. This has been done through licensing and incorporation requirements, and detailed regulations of union dues, meetings and political contributions. This portion of the body of anti-union legislation is peculiarly the product of the Christian-American movement. This movement has shifted its appeals for regulation on the grounds of union violence and has now emerged with a full-dress program to regulate unions out of existence.

Second, the destruction of union contract security. Here again the leader in the attack is the Christian-American group and the battle cry is "the right to work." Just as the pretext of union violence served as the basis for the earlier Christian-American campaign, so the false issue of "the right to work" has become a new slogan of the union-baiters to destroy union security.

Third, the undermining of the constitutional right to strike. The most common pretext advanced for this legislation at this time is the alleged evil of the jurisdictional dispute.

This movement also seeks to make the validity of a strike conditional upon express authorizations of each member of the bargaining unit and upon a vote of three-quarters of those involved. The phony battle cry of this movement is "industrial peace." Its aim is to enslave the workers and to render unions powerless.

This same program is the basis for the infamous Ball-Burton-Hatch bill.

The final group of statutes directed against labor are those dealing with picketing, boycotting and other organizational activities. In this area the pretext has likewise been the alleged evil of the jurisdictional dispute.

Where the issue has been squarely presented to the state courts they have recognized that limitations on the right to strike and to picket because of the alleged unlawful purpose of the striking and picketing are interferences with constitutional rights of freedom of speech and freedom of assembly.

Many of the types of laws in the first group, that is, those dealing with internal union organization, are probably invalid under the recent decision of the Supreme Court in Hill v. Watson.

In contrast to the many anti-labor bills which have been currently added to the statute books, there are few or no amendments to existing labor relations laws to strength collective bargaining.

A number of bills restrictive of union activity have been killed. One such bill, a measure to extend to labor unions the prohibition on making political contributions, was killed in Massachusetts. Also killed was a Texas measure, a proposed right-to-work amendment to the constitution, voiding union security clauses in contracts and prohibiting the check-off of union fees or dues without the employe's consent.

Some gains have been made in checking discrimination based upon race. Along these lines Connecticut has recently established a State Board of Fair Employment Practices. Measures directed against discriminatory employment practices were also enacted in four additional states: New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Utah.

Price Control—How Your Men Voted

LAST week, the House took two key votes on amendments to the price control act. One of them was the Jenkins (R. O.) amendment, which would have taken price control of food out of the hands of OPA and put it into the Dept. of Agriculture. This would have junked the whole basis of food price control worked out by three years of OPA experience. The amendment was first passed, over Administration opposition, then rejected by 198 to 178 the following day.

We list the second of the two votes. A Yea vote, to uphold the Jenkins amendment, was a wrong vote. A Nay vote, to defeat it was a right vote.

The second amendment was by Rep. Dirksen (R. Ill.) which would have subjected all price regulations to court review, thus tying up control in endless litigation. This amendment was passed by 200 to 164, later eliminated in House-Senate conference committee. A Yea vote, to pass the amendment, was a wrong vote, and a Nay vote was right. NV means not voting.

The Jenkins amendment vote is listed first in the column, the Dirksen vote second.

Pro-Axis Argentina

Vigorous State Dept. action to compel Argentina to "carry out the promises that gained her a seat among the United Nations" was demanded by the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee this week, in a statement issued by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky.

In spite of repeated promises to eliminate Axis spearheads and to stop Fascist persecution of labor and of anti-Axis forces, the Argentine government has done neither, and is guilty "of perpetrating a colossal fraud on its own people and its neighbors," Potofsky said.

"According to highly reputable press reports, civil liberties and the democratic processes have not been restored and the release of political prisoners, if carried out at all, is proceeding unsatisfactorily and at a snail's pace."

Starvation Rations

Here's what the adult French workers were supposed to get by way of food rations last April, according to the French Information Service: meat, 1 lb. 1 oz.; fat, 10½ oz.; sugar, 1 lb. 1½ oz.; cheese, 2¾ oz.; coffee or coffee substitute, 5 oz. The total was intended to provide 1,620 calories a day. Without working, an adult can exist on 2,000 calories a day.

Actually, this was only the official ration. The real amount eaten has been much less—and only 10 per cent of the French can afford the black market. Food conditions now are worse than they were during the Nazi occupation.

Hard to Explain

Repeated news stories of appointment of Nazis as officials in German towns and cities are coming through the newspapers here. Latest report shows that a Max Drexl, attorney of Nazi big business, has been put in charge in a town called Rosenheim.

Despite protests by local residents, the American Military Government officer in charge has been keeping him in power. Meanwhile, non-Nazis are rigorously kept out of civic affairs.

A Nazi Once . . .

Although the French cement trust was able to deliver 390,000 tons of cement to the Nazis during the occupation, it is now trying to sabotage production for rebuilding France, the Building Workers Union has charged.

SHUT DOWN

Edwin George Krown is a machinist, 54 years old and has been working in shipyards all his life, except for 17 years between wars. He regards ships as his lifework. "Oh, this was a very busy place," he said. "There were five ways full of hulls. We worked 24 hours a day in three shifts. We delivered our last boat a week ago Saturday. Now the yard is closed down." Krown is working here from Friday to Friday, not knowing which is his last. "I guess this Friday will be my last," he says. His job is oiling the machinery; putting it away so it won't rust; pinning down the cranes, so the wind can't smash them. "I haven't the least idea what I'm going to do when I'm laid off here. We used to be so proud seeing our boats built, and launched."

The Penn-Jersey shipyard in Camden, New Jersey, is shut down. There are about 15 men, guards and machinists protecting and saving the machinery, guarding the property. At its height there were 2,200 men at work here, making submarine chasers, mine sweepers, cargo vessels. The last few ships were floating machine shops for the Army, nearly 300 feet long, and two mine sweepers. They averaged about one ship a month when they were going strong. In peacetime, Penn-Jersey was a small wooden yard, employing about 150 men in the construction of barges. The yard was enlarged three or four times, and could now carry about 400 people. What happened to the 2,200 who worked here at the employment height in 1943? About 50% didn't keep their union membership. They went to other industries, back to the farm, to the gas station, into the Army. About 25% actually transferred to other unions. Another 25% are holding onto their membership, hoping to be called back to jobs on the basis of their seniority when reconversion begins. The first layoffs came in August, 1944. Now Penn-Jersey's five ways are empty, its machinery idle. The small yards are among the first to be hit. By the end of 1945, all emergency orders sponsored by the Maritime Commission will be filled.

1 Herbert Williams worked at Penn-Jersey shipyards, Camden, N. J., as a carpenter. He was getting union-won pay of $1.20 an hour, was a steward, and treasurer of Local 56, CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, which had about 4,000 members in several small yards. On June 8, he was laid off. He was worried because of his five kids: Charles, Arthur, Clara, Herbert, Conrad.

2 Also he had just bought his home at 1148 Liberty St. in South Camden, having cashed in all his bonds for the down payment. He was in the midst of making essential repairs.

SHIPS FOR PEACE

Story by Helen Kay

Pictures by Franklyn Williamson

WILL the shipbuilding industry become a casualty of the peace?

The CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers say "no," not if they can help it. They have advanced a plan, for jobs in the shipbuilding industry, which advocates greater postwar trade, industrial development of backward nations to raise their purchasing power, merchant shipping of 20 to 25 million deadweight tons of first class efficiency, a 30-hour work week with 52 weeks work and a guaranteed annual wage, a first class modernized Navy, etc.

But the problem in the shipbuilding industry is made dramatic by two figures:

Ten years ago, the shipbuilding industry employed 63,000 persons.

In December of 1943, also the national wartime employment peak, the shipbuilding industry employed 1,722,500 workers, which included the federal Navy Yards' 326,000. It was America's second largest industry.

Since that time the trend has been downward. In April, 1945, the private shipyards were employing 945,000. By the end of the year the emergency construction program of the Maritime Commission will be concluded.

Already the industry has felt the results. Smaller shipyards in some cases have shut down completely like Penn-Jersey in Camden. Others, like Mathis in the same community which once employed 2,200, now employ 250.

The N. Y. Shipbuilding Corp., one of the big three in the industry, had a peak of 32,000 workers, now employs 20,000 and although still going strong on Navy orders, is faced with critical personnel shortages in certain highly skilled trades like electricians, wirers, and machinists, while laying off hull workers. In the last nine weeks, 1,000 hull workers were laid off at N. Y. Ship, while 20% were rehired in other departments. In the face of layoffs skilled men are afraid to take these jobs. They are concerned about their future. They feel they are the last to come, the first to go.

Local One at N. Y. Ship is questioning their membership about their future. The shipbuilding workers want security, and they want to stay on at N. Y. Ship.

Vernon J. Smith, 42, is a case in point. He has worked in the shipyards since he was 15 years old, has been at N. Y. Ship for 16 years. He came on as a passerboy, an apprentice who passes rivets to the riveter. Today he's a riveter. There are 19 others at the Yard. There were 43 at its peak. He gets $70 weekly. With deductions he takes home $59. He has two kids, Vernon 5, and Verna 14, and has been buying his own home. It cost $1,700. "Hope to stay at N. Y. Ship? I expect it," he shot back.

Helen Gallagher has a son in the Navy, so she came to work at N. Y. Ship. She is known as a girl grinder. Her basic pay is $47.84; her take-home pay $32. She used to be a chocolate coater in a candy factory, earning $25 a week. The girls grind the cable holds, the slate holds, and smooth them out to pull the cables through. There are 44 girl grinders at the Yard. In all about 2,500 women are working there. Until 1942, there were no women at N. Y. Ship. Helen would like to stay. "They never had women here before. I like the work, it's more real than candy."

Theodore A. Gall, a painter is 39. He gets $65 weekly, but finds there is a great deal of lost time due to illness. The painters, working with fumes and rust, have higher lost time than any other department. "What I want," he says, "and what I get are two different things. I think I'll get it in the neck. Our only hope is for our full employment plan to go through."

Arthur Chapin, is Negro, one of 3,200 at the yard. He was among the first of his race to come to the yards in 1942. He had been working as a field representative for the Pennsylvania Dept. of Labor and Industry. Today he's a welder. "This is my first time with a union. Prior to 1942 we were told we couldn't work here. Fair employment is not only for the country but for each yard, and contract."

The Union hopes that with the adoption of the points of their postwar plan, integrated as it is with the whole CIO full employment program, there will be employment for half a million workers in the shipbuilding industry.

They expect to get government cooperation to help set the industry on an even keel, for the government already has a big investment in that industry, and should save it.

As their blunt and outspoken President, John Green, said: "We intend to fight for our program, economically, through contract negotiations, and politically, through our law makers. I believe that we could plan a million and a quarter tons of shipping every year for the next 20 years, which will keep our 400,000 people in the industry. Coupled with that, of course, would be the repair end of the industry, the experimental part of a naval program."

They refuse to have the shipbuilding industry scuttled. They regard it as a people's investment. They see in ships an enrichment of our democratic life, and its extension to places abroad. They see in ships the backbone of world trade, and the goodwill ambassadors bringing the plenty from our factories to raise the living standards of the impoverished areas of the world. They see ships as an integral part of an overall plan for security, peace.

3 The War Manpower Commission sent him to Kensington, but they weren't hiring. He went on his own to RCA, a UE-CIO plant, and was hired as a carpenter at 99c an hour plus 5½c bonus. This was less than he had been getting. In fact a cutback in his weekly take home pay of nearly $8. "It's a lot when you have five kids to feed, and prices are what they are," he said.

4 All the kids got the mumps at once, too, except Charles. For their security, "I'm willing to work any place at anything, whichever will more or less stabilize my wages. At RCA they're laying off, too. I'm working in maintenance there, fixing up the plant for reconversion." He plans to maintain his union membership at Ship, where he has built up seniority, and so carry two CIO union cards.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO Vice-President and Director of Organization

George Craig, CIO Reg. Dir., Philadelphia, reports: Budd Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, UAW-CIO 2726, Independent 1645. This culminates a four year constant organization campaign. Congratulations to Al Fisher who was in charge of the drive and to George Hill, Jean Magill, Philip Kennedy, Jack Callahan and other CIO representatives who assisted with the drive, also to the CIO local unions who participated and assisted in the drive.

Reg. Dir. Paul E. Miley, UAW-CIO reports: Safety Grinder Co., Springfield, Ohio, 91½% of the employes voted for the CIO. Negotiations will start immediately under the direction of Intl. Rep. Austin L. Patton.

Robert W. Starnes, acting CIO regional director, New Orleans, reports: Todd-Johnson Yard, New Orleans, CIO 1925, AFL 191, neither 17. This victory paves the way for additional victories in shipyards in this area.

E. L. Sandefur, Reg. Dir. for the Carolinas, reports: At Chadwick-Hoskins plant, Charlotte, the CIO Textile Workers Union won an election by a good majority. Representative Jim Fullerton was in charge of this campaign. The FTA-CIO won an election in Buckeye Cotton Oil Co., Charlotte. Rep. DeBerry and Larsen were in charge.

Here's the FIRST VICTORY FOR CIO affiliation of the New York Utility Workers in the coming election among the Consolidated-Edison Employes in New York City.

Charles Ross in behalf of the IBEW applied for an injunction to restrain the union from taking a referendum, in an effort to prevent the employes of Consolidated-Edison from expressing their desires in a democratic manner. Judge Heck in New York City denied this application and the vote will now go on.

This is the same IBEW group that several years ago signed a contract for the outside work of the building trades and agreed they wouldn't organize the Consolidated-Edison employes. In other words they could remain unorganized and unprotected.

This is the same group that signed a back-door contract with the company and forced the workers into the IBEW. Later, they revolted and formed an independent union and are now seeking affiliation with the CIO.

This is also the group that wants to take the work away from what regularly belongs to the Consolidated-Edison employes, and to give them Class B membership in their union, denying them full citizenship, offering them a colonial status. The CIO, on the other hand, will provide for them a union of, for and by the Utility Workers, where every member is a full citizen of the union.

Mr. Ross of the IBEW, conniving with the company has written the company a letter and they replied, trying at this time to discourage the workers from joining a union of the CIO Consolidated-Edison employes.

The workers are not going to be fooled this time but will exercise their rights as free Americans. Coercion of the company and the IBEW will fail! Congratulations to the officers, committees and membership leading this fight for clean and effective unionism!

CIO Wins $600,000,000 Pay Hike For 1,500,000 Federal Workers

By Don Murray

INCREASES totaling $600,000,000 at the present level of employment will be enjoyed by almost 1,500,000 Government employes during the coming year as a result of the successful campaign by the CIO Federal Workers Union. In a year-long fight, the government union, aided by the national CIO, persuaded Congress to lift the base pay scale of Federal workers in line with the Little Steel Formula and to pay real time and one-half rates for overtime work.

The Federal Employes Pay Act of 1945, effective July 1, grants pay raises averaging 15.9% to the 1,221,000 employes subject to the Classification Act of 1923, as well as approval of time and one-half for overtime for these and an additional 250,000 workers. The increases total $736,000,000 at the present 48-hour workweek schedule, but it is anticipated that most departments will soon reduce hours to 44 per week.

Since UFWA began its campaign over a year ago, more than 300 UFWA delegations have visited Congressmen to ask for pay raises. In addition, more than 15,000 individual letters and telegrams were received by Congressmen from federal workers explaining the need for adequate pay raises and true time and one-half for overtime.

More than 60,000 signatures have been added to petitions during the drive, and more than half a million pieces of literature have been distributed, according to UFWA Pres. Eleanor Nelson.

The bill was strenuously fought in the House Civil Service subcommittee by Reps. E. H. Rees (R., Kans.), and C. W. Vursell (R., Ill.), and in the Senate Civil Service sub-committee by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D., Calif.). Rep. J. G. Fulton (R., Pa.), was conspicuous on the floor of the House in his opposition to the bill.

Active support was given by Sen. Sheridan Downey (D., Calif.), Chairman of the Civil Service Committee, and Sen. Langer (R., N. D.).

In the House all Democratic members of the sub-committee which considered the Federal Pay Bill had been aided by CIO-PAC in the last election. All favored the increases. They were H. M. Jackson (D., Wash.), George P. Miller (D., Calif.), and J. M. Combs (D., Texas), who defeated Martin Dies.

And They Sang and Wept in the Streets

Co. Union Citadel Goes CIO; Budd Workers Vote UAW 2-1

THE 5,000 workers of the Edward G. Budd auto plant in Philadelphia voted two to one last week for the CIO Auto Workers Union, climaxing a 12-year struggle for unionization.

Announcement of the decision set off wild rejoicings. "I saw a big husky man sit down and weep," said Al Fischer, regional UAW representative who led the organizing drive. "Men were kissing men, girls were kissing girls, and then they kissed each other. The day shift which quits at 4 hung around the polling booths, waiting for the decision, and when it came, it was a release. There were spontaneous celebrations right there in the street.

"They danced polkas, they sang songs, then they took a flag, and marched all around the Budd plant, and the workers on the second shift joined in the sing-from the windows."

First efforts at unionization were begun by the AFL in 1933. They failed. The CIO attempted to organize the plant in 1941 and again in 1942. They were also unsuccessful.

As a result of union activities, 600 union men were fired. The case went to the NLRB, and only two were ordered reinstated with back pay. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in February, 1944, the court refused to reconsider the NLRB decision.

There was no organization at Budd's when in 1944 the union once again attempted to organize the 15,000 employes. "We had to start from scratch," said Al Fischer, who began the drive 18 months ago.

So intense were the workers at Budd's for victory that workers who were on vacation traveled 100 to 150 miles to cast their votes.

CIO Wins Election at Todd Johnson

Marine & Shipbuilding Workers this week scored a 10 to 1 victory over the AFL Metal Trades Council in an NLRB election to decide the bargaining agent for workers at the Todd Johnson Drydocks, Inc. at New Orleans.

CIO won 1,925 votes, AFL 191. It was the third time the CIO and AFL met in an election contest at Todd. The CIO won both previous elections.

From the Labor Press

Salesladies Wanted

Details of a survey of pay and hours in N. Y. State's 177,000 retail stores, expose these conditions:

60% work between 40 and 48 hours a week.

One out of every five women averages less than 24 hours of work a week.

The Dept. of Labor said these are literally starvation wages. The cost of living last year of the working woman living as a member of a family in New York state was $31.61. "Four out of five women who worked 40 hours or more earned less than this amount," the survey revealed.

Alka Seltzer For Heartburn

Management raids on corporation treasuries have increased during the war, with salaries, bonuses and pensions skyrocketing even faster than swollen wartime profits.

Industrialist Gerard Swope, blasting the SEC rule requiring publication of the names of the three highest paid officers, maintains such publicity is "embarrassing", especially when large companies are located in "small communities where all people know each other. It only produces heartburning and envy, and impairs the morale of the organization and community."

Between 1941 and 1944, salaries of the three top Chrysler officers, K T. Keller, B. E. Hutchinson, and F. M. Zedar, increased from $100,950 to $126,150, from $90,900 to $114,250, from $85,450 to $108,300 respectively.

During the same period Mack Truck's three top men, E. C. Fink, E. E. Staniford, and J. E. Savacool, raised their "take" from $87,700, $47,700 and $40,640 to $102,620, $65,260 and $58,696 respectively.

WPB Stall Is Strike Baiting—CIO

War Production Board Chairman Krug was asked this week by representatives of the CIO and eight CIO unions to carry out the Government's share of a bargain made with unions when they signed the no-strike pledge. CIO representatives charged that the WPB's failure to act was virtually strike-baiting.

At a meeting with Krug they pointed out that WPB has failed to comply with a directive issued on May 23 by Stabilization Director Davis ordering WPB to cancel priorities of two garment firms that had defied War Labor Board orders.

To give labor some protection from chiseling firms after it had waived the right to strike, President Roosevelt issued the executive order under which the Office of Economic Stabilization was given power to direct the WPB and other governmental agencies to apply economic sanctions such as revocation of priorities.

The two concerns involved are McLaren Sportswear Co., Philipsburg, Pa., and the Standard Trouser Co., Buckhannon, W. Va., where two years ago the workers chose the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers to represent them in negotiations which subsequently broke down.

The WLB subsequently issued directives to the two firms, which for 9 months refused to obey them before the cases were referred to Davis.

Under the Davis' order the deadline given to the WPB for cancelling priorities was June 13. WPB has failed to comply.

Shipyard Workers Win New Pay Differential on Damaged Ships

THE urgency for quick repairs on damaged warships pressured the War Labor Board last week into relenting on a differential of 11.6% over the rates paid on new ship construction in 14 southern California yards.

Northern Pacific shipyards had been paying the differential for some time. The southern area employes have sought the same differential for several years. As early as last month the War Labor Board refused to extend the differential. It had also gone on record against it last year.

Approximately 7,000 workers will be affected by the orders which cover, among other firms, the Bethlehem Steel Corp. Shipbuilding Division and Todd Shipyards at San Pedro, both CIO yards.

WLB Chairman George W. Taylor declared: "The dominating consideration of the WLB in making this decision was the urgent necessity of seeing that ships are repaired and returned to the war in the Pacific with the maximum of speed and efficiency."

Furniture Workers Win

Two furniture companies went CIO in Martinsville, Va., last week. They were the Gravely Novelty Furniture by a 5-1 majority, and the Virginia Mirror Co., by 59-17. Both were organized by the CIO Furniture Workers.

What We Need for Reconversion

"The bare essentials for successful reconversion are not hard to name," the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO says in its current issue released today. "They revolve around the two critical facts of reconversion:

"Crisis 1: The 'dislocation' of millions of workers and soldiers—'dislocation' being a fancy name for being at loose ends, out of a job, having to move to find a job, changing type of work and pay, or any other upheaval in one's occupational and hence social and domestic life.

"Crisis 2: The sudden withdrawal of demand for over half the goods being produced today. We're producing some $200 billion worth of goods a year now. The government buys half and 'extraordinary' earnings—like overtime and wartime bonuses—account for an additional $15-$20 billion."

To meet this crisis, the Outlook calls for:

"1. A definite statement of a national wage policy in the reconversion period designed to maintain and increase workers' purchasing power.

"2. A program for setting prices on goods coming back into production which would protect consumers' purchasing power."

"3. A schedule for public works to provide employment and purchasing power in case free enterprise should fail to do so.

"4. A plan for orderly resumption of civilian production.

"5. A mechanism, such as that provided in the Murray-Wagner Full Employment bill."

Summer Holidays Win WLB Approval

Without waiting for approval of the Natl. War Labor Board, any employer of office, retail or white collar workers may give them a weekly full day or half-day holiday during the summer months.

Auto Industry Plot

Charges that some auto industry leaders are fostering strikes, are seeking to split veterans away from labor, and are attacking the Wagner Labor Relations Act were contained in a two-page article in the June 30 Nation Magazine, written by Irving Richter, legislative representative of the CIO United Auto Workers.

"The detailed documentation of these charges must await the Congressional investigation which UAW officials have demanded, but enough is already known to make the pattern clear," Richter wrote.

Let Congressmen Know It's Tough Sledding for You

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

There's a burning question in the minds of our American workers and their families. You could phrase it like this: "Unless we get the 20% increase in base wage rates CIO President Murray is urging, how are we going to pay for the food, clothing and shelter we must have."

It isn't an academic question, either. I had the privilege of hearing members of the Pennsylvania delegation who came to Washington this week on price control, talk to their Congressmen.

They brought up case after case like this, for instance. The vice-president of a Steelworkers local in the Philadelphia area has eight dependents. His take home pay for a forty-hour week is $32. He's desperate. They didn't make out too well when he had overtime pay. They can't get by now.

Or one from Scranton where the pay check of a man who did common labor ran $55 for two weeks. He had a family, too.

Congressmen need to know these things. That's what makes letters to Congressmen so terribly important. Women in the homes of workers can help in the campaign for the 20% increase.

WOMEN CAN HELP

CWA is urging every local auxiliary to arrange either an open meeting of the local, with all the women in the homes invited, or, if that isn't possible, an open meeting of the auxiliary.

The auxiliary can then work with the union on a campaign, to rouse the community and enlist the help of small businessmen to get rid of the Little Steel formula. They can get hundreds of letters giving the hard facts of how workers' families are living in to Congress. Even very good Congressmen need those letters.

'For Salvation of Everyone'

Humanity Before Profits

"WE believe sincerely that if industry will, in looking after its own interests, also regard the interests of the human race, all of us, including industry, stand a chance of being rescued from eventual economic disaster that will impose an economic system far more rigorous than any ever urged."

So spoke CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey this week at a meeting of the Natl. Postwar Conference, in New York City. The conference is composed of representatives of labor, industry, farm, veterans and other groups interested in working out a rational approach to the future.

Carey pointed out that those who talk about "making investments attractive" as a means of avoiding possible depression should remember 1929, when $15 billion in investments, safely stacked away in banks, failed to keep the country from the worst depression in its history.

Both Carey and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers urged the guaranteed annual wage as a partial solution to postwar employment problems.

McDonald pointed out that unless Congress takes at least minimum action to organize postwar production, "we will return to the old regimentation called unemployment."

"The industrialist who maintains that he has a right to keep his plants in idleness merely because its operation will not yield him a stated profit, occupies the same position as a man who might own huge storehouses of wheat in an area where human beings were starving to death," McDonald declared.

Union Essay Contest On Full Employment

An essay contest on the subject of "How to Utilize the Willow Run Bomber Plant for Full Employment" was announced this week by Ray J. Pilon, educational director of Willow Run Local 50, United Auto Workers.

A jury of civic, educational and union leaders will be judges for the contest. First prize will be $50 in cash and a trip to Washington with all expenses paid. Five other prizes of $50 each will also be awarded.

Aims of the contest are to bring forth ideas of value in putting special purpose plants like Willow Run to work producing for the postwar period, and to arouse public opinion to the realization that jobs are a major necessity now for returning veterans and for the tens of thousands of workers whose war production jobs are ending.

Essays submitted must not be more than 1,000 words in length and should contain ideas for providing employment for a large number of workers and for the production of useful articles. Essays may be submitted by anyone —contestants need not be members of Local 50, nor of the UAW.

Retail, Wholesale Union's Labor Institute Hears Wolchok at Closing Session

Pres. Samuel Wolchok of the CIO United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes of America gave the closing address at this year's session of the union's Labor Institute, held June 11-23 at the University of Wisconsin Summer School for Workers.

This is the fourth year the CIO International Union has held such an institute for the active workers of Midwestern and Southern locals. The 1945 session was attended by 69 students coming from Birmingham, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and other locals in the Midwest.

The program at the institute was directed by Ernest E. Schwartztrauber of the University of Wisconsin. A number of experts on various social problems of the day gave evening lectures in addition to the regular day classes.

Sports, bull sessions and social activities were blended with the study program to make the two weeks session both educational and entertaining.

A class in labor history was conducted by Don Schwartz, assistant to Dr. Perlman of the University of Wisconsin, well known authority on the history of the labor movement, and Leonard Levy, the union's executive vice president, taught organizational techniques. Norman G. Twist, intl. union representative, conducted a class on the international constitution.

This is the fourth in a series on the summer school programs of CIO international unions. Previously schools described were those of the United Auto Workers, Office & Profssional Workers, and Textile Workers Union.

New PAC Pamphlet Is About Reconversion

Second of the monthly series of pamphlets being published by the CIO Political Action Committee will be off the press this week. Entitled "The People's Program for Reconversion," the pamphlet is based upon CIO Pres. Philip Murray's 7-point reconversion program.

The program calls for teamwork between labor, management and government to prevent widespread unemployment during the postwar period by such steps as higher basic wages, stabilized take-home pay, price controls to prevent inflation, increased unemployment compensation, and the planning of useful public works.

A quarter of a million copies of the pamphlet will be distributed through CIO channels.

A foreword by Sidney Hillman, PAC chairman, urges trade unionists "to take particular note of what you can do to secure your job and your future and help in winning the peace as you are helping in the winning of the war."

The pamphlet, approved by the CIO editorial board, was written by Joseph Gaer, director of PAC publications, and was illustrated by Misha Richter.

White Collar School Meets

The study program of the Summer School for Office Workers which is meeting again this summer, on the campus of Lake Forest College, Illinois, will be centered on social and economic problems of special interest to white collar workers.

Members of the CIO Office & Profesional Workers and other white collar unions will be among the students from many parts of the country who will attend the school.

Education Group on Radio

A radio series interpreting labor's views on various community problems is the feature of the summer program of the Workers Education and Recreation Committee of Wilmington, Del.

The Committee is sponsored by unions affiliated with the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods, the YWCA and other progressive community groups.

The program will be broadcast over station WDEL beginning Saturday, June 30.

Summer Roundup

To begin with, the weather is getting hot in Washington around that time. The longed-for summer recess is approaching . . . but, like a beautiful mirage, it seems to recede at the same time.

The week before June 30 is perhaps one of the busiest times Congress has during the year. The government's fiscal year ends June 30, which means that funds for government agencies have to be voted to carry them on through the next year.

Some of the dirtiest work of the session is accomplished or attemped during this appropriation rush. It's the kind of dirty work that's hard to keep tabs on, too, because it's usually done in closed sessions of committees and subcommittees.

As the Washington Guide goes to press (June 28) this is the situation on appropriations for U. S. government agencies dealing with the war and with the general welfare:

FEPC: Sen. Bilbo's (D. Miss.) disgraceful filibuster was going on to prevent an appropriation of $599,000 or a compromise of $250,000 to carry on the FEPC past the deadline. At the same time, S 101 and HR 2232, bills to make FEPC permanent, are bottled up.

NLRB: The House cut $400,000 of NLRB's funds to administer the Wagner Act, put in the "Frey" rider that sanctifies company unions. The Senate Appropriations Committee has restored most of the cut, left the rider in. The bill is now in House-Senate conference.

WLB: The House put in the Lea (D. Cal.) amendment to the WLB appropriation barring use of funds in cases involving food processing workers. Plan was to exclude more than 1,000,000 workers from collective bargaining by extending the ban later to NLRB funds. The Senate has removed the ban, and the bill is now in conference.

WAR MANPOWER: The Senate, in providing funds for the War Manpower Commission, ordered the U. S. Employment Services (USES) turned back to the states.

The need is for a nationwide USES, since job placement is a national problem, not just a state or local one. Millions of workers will be moving across state lines looking for jobs in reconversion, will need a U. S.-wide employment service.

Washington Guide

The Payoff Is in the Vote

This week (July 2-9) the Senate starts work on the United Nations charter worked out over the past two months in San Francisco.

The official and newspaper talk in Washington is that ratification is a dead certainty. At the most pessimistic, 15 votes are conceded against it.

Last March the Washington Guide, on the basis of a careful study of past voting records and recorded statements, warned that only 46 Senators "were positively committed to supporting unity with the United Nations for postwar world security." Fifteen were considered doubtful, leaning to cooperation.

But the payoff on a prediction comes with the performance. Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), GOP leader on foreign policy, speaks on the charter this week. Sen. Wheeler (D., Mont.), has announced that he wants to postpone the vote until after the recess. Watch both these men closely this week and until the votes are in.

Price Control

As the Washington Guide went to press (June 28), this was the situation on price control:

The House Senate Conference Committee killed the Wherry amendment (guaranteeing a profit on every single food item); the Dirksen amendment (requiring court review of all OPA orders and modifying the amendment giving the Sec. of Agriculture review power over OPA.

At the same time, the House cut the requested $180,000,000 fund for OPA enforcement and put in the Taber rider, which prohibits OPA from using grades as a basis for pricing. (Which means you pay the same for low as for higher quality foods).

By June 28, almost one month after President Truman asked Congress to provide emergency unemployment benefits of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, no bill had been put into the Congressional hopper.

Yet the House Ways and Means Committee (headed by Rep. Doughton, D. N. C.) has found time to think about more tax gravy via the carry-back method for big corporations.

Cutbacks and layoffs are spreading all over the country. War workers, their wives and kids are desperately in need of some slight security against hunger which the Truman proposal would provide.

Wire your Congressman now to use all his influence to get a bill in motion. Urge him to work especially on members of the House Ways and Means Committee.

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

Ball, Burton Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; outlaws closed shop; imposes compulsory arbitration.	Senate Labor and Education Committee.	Write your Senators to oppose all such attacks on labor laws.
FEPC (S 101; HR 2232) and funds.	Bills make FEPC permanent U. S. agency; funds needed to carry present FEPC until bill is passed.	Sen. Bilbo (D. Miss.) filibustering funds; compromise on funds for 6 months reported (June 28) shaping up. Bills stalled in House Rules.	Watch daily papers on funds; keep urging passage of bills.
Price control (SJ Res. 30)	Renews price control act for one year.	House-Senate Conference (June 28) killed Dirksen court review amendment; killed Wherry inflationary move; modified "food czar" plan.	Watch daily papers for final action; write Senators and Representative either praising or criticizing their work on this bill.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Restores vote to 10,000,000 Americans.	Passed House by 2 to 1 vote; now to Senate where filibuster is threatened.	Write Senators to support early vote; no filibuster.
Wage petition	Not a bill; petition being signed by Congressmen asking Truman to order revision of present wage policy.	Being circulated by Congressmen. In charge of Rep. Forand (D. R. I.)	Ask your Congressmen to sign.

Coming Up--- Issues to Watch

MERCHANT SEAMEN: Cuts in the "war risk" bonus for merchant seamen mean a slash of 35% in their pay. Seamen have always been underpaid, a skilled AB (able bodied seaman) making about 40c an hour. "Bonus" brought their earnings up about $50 a week, out of which they had to maintain homes on shore, meet own expenses during layovers.

Seamen's pay cuts threaten all wage standards. Deadline for proposed cut is July 15.

MORE ON WAGES: One key to changing wage freeze is Congress. Rep. Aime Forand (D. R. I.) is in charge of a petition to Pres. Truman asking him to alter the national wage policy to permit upward revision.

Wire your Congressman to sign the petition, forward it with a letter to the White House.

Political action on this as on other issues begins in the communities.

Get in touch with local political leaders on the wage issue. If they get interested, so will Washington.

JOBS: Hearings are set to start fairly soon on S 380, the full employment blil. Newspaper editorials are already warming up for the attack on the whole idea of 60,000,000 jobs. Like plenty of other employers, newspaper publishers like to have lots of "surplus" labor around—it helps keep down wages.

* * *

'SECRETS' trial of six men accused of removing and using confidential and "secret" material from State Dept. files will get under way late this month. The N. Y. Newspaper Guild, CIO, has asked for a "bill of particulars" on the trial. Said the N. Y. Guild:

"We wish to go on record as stating that we are watching this case with acute interest in view of the civil liberties and press privileges involved; and that in our opinion not only the accused but the State Dept., and its policies are on trial."

GUIDEPOSTS . . . the Hudson County CIO Council has the right idea . . . they want their Senator, Albert W. Hawkes, brought back from Europe, where he's been busy as a beaver trying to promote a third World War . . . look for a big outburst of Senate attacks on the Soviet Union as the travelling statesmen, particularly men like Wheeler, Brewster, Hawkes, et al., return . . . Sen. Capehart (R., Ind.), is for FEPC "in principle" but he thinks it's a communist plot in private. . .

CONGRESS AND YOUR PAY CHECK—THE SCORE

PETITION TO PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN

WE, the members of the Congress of the United States, are gravely concerned with the increasing uneasiness and sense of insecurity developing among wage earners and other groups as expressed to us by our respective constituents.

Since V-E Day there have been necessary cancellations and cutbacks of war orders, but this has also brought unemployment which has every prospect of increasing.

In addition, a decline in overtime wage payments is occurring and the process of reconversion to production of civilian goods is accompanied by a tendency of present wage rate structures to be lowered. All this results in a loss of weekly wages and purchasing power. Precisely the reverse is necessary to assure an expanding post-war economy of full production and full employment through increased purchasing power.

In the report of the Public Members of the National War Labor Board, completed prior to V-E Day, regarding our national wage policy, it was made clear that with V-E Day new economic conditions would develop, such as described above, which would necessitate a drastic change in such wage policy.

We are now convinced that the economic developments, unless checked and reversed, will, with increasing severity, impose hardships and burdens upon the wage earners, threaten their morale and endanger the possibility of a peaceful transition during reconversion and a postwar economy of full production and full employment.

Our National Wage Policy must be changed to meet this situation.

We, therefore, submit that you, by Executive Order, should revise the national wage policy and restore the original authority of the National War Labor Board to approve or direct such wage adjustments as may be necessary and which will not substantially affect the cost of living:

(a) To aid in the effective prosecution of the war;

(b) To eliminate substandard wages; and

This is a memo to readers who have to spend $1.45 for what a dollar used to buy, who have basic wages that can't be boosted more than 15 per cent above the 1941 level under the Little Steel Formula, and who would like to do something about it.

On this page is printed a petition to President Truman. It started circulating among a few Congressmen who realized that workers need wage boosts to keep up with the cost of living AND that the country needs the raises too, if it is going to avoid a disastrous deflation and maybe a depression because workers' wages minus overtime won't buy enough of goods that are produced.

The petition urges President Truman to relax the Little Steel Formula so that the Natl. War Labor Board can grant legitimate wage increases that will not materially raise prices. It would be a good idea if you asked your Congressman if he has signed the petition, and in the letter you might enclose The CIO NEWS so that he will have the petition before him.

FEPC Still Stalled 16,000 Lose Jobs NLRB Jim Crow

ACTION on funds for the Fair Employment Practice Committee had come to a full circle stop as The CIO NEWS went to press this week.

Fought by the polltax Democrats and given only lukewarm support by most Republicans, the appropriation for the present FEPC had gone (July 6) to a point where the whole process of getting it passed in both House and Senate must be begun again.

Briefly, the tangled parliamentary situation was this: the War Agencies bill (in which FEPC funds were included) was sent back to the Senate by determined action of House liberals in raising points of order against it, which they did in order to force a vote on FEPC.

Earlier, the Senate had sent the war agencies bill over to the House minus any appropriation for FEPC. This was done on demand of filibuster leaders Bilbo (D., Miss.), and Eastland (D., Miss.). An attempted compromise to give FEPC $250,000 (half its regular appropriation) had failed.

One of the sharpest battles in recent Congressional history has been fought around this issue, with the CIO, the labor and liberal movement generally, and liberal Congressmen ranged against the polltaxers and apathetic Republicans on the other.

Republicans, in fact, have been quietly cheering at the exhibition, in which they simply stand by and watch the polltax Democrats sabotage an issue of key importance in the next elections.

16,000 Lose Jobs

Highlight of the week's reports on cutbacks was the notice that layoffs would start immediately at the U. S. Cartridge Co. in St. Louis, with 16,000 employes scheduled to be out of jobs by Oct. 1, when the plant will be completely shut down.

The CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers called on the U. S. Government to make plans for civilian utilization of the $100 million plant, which was put into operation at the end of 1941.

Meanwhile, the War Manpower Commission reported that 600,000 workers lost their jobs in munitions from March 15 to June 1, causing a drop in such employment of from 9 million to 8,400,000.

Most affected were: shipbuilding—185,000 workers; aircraft—230,000; and ordnance—110,000.

The WMC predicted that by June, 1946 unemployment will climb to 1,800,000 "although considerably higher levels of unemployment may occur for brief periods." In May the figure was 730,000.

Under the cutback program, munitions are scheduled to drop 17 per cent during the third quarter; 25 per cent by the end of 1945; and 33 per cent by the middle of 1946, the WMC said.

With the cost of living still rising, wage demands from CIO unions and opposition from big employers were sharpening.

The CIO United Auto Workers, General Motors Dept., charged that corporate wartime net profits, scheduled tax refunds to corporations, and "profit insurance" laws enacted by Congress are providing American industry with reserves equal to 15 years of normal, pre-war profits.

The UAW said that administration policies are discouraging business from planning speedy reconversion and maximum expansion by assuring rich profits at a low rate of production.

In the electrical industry, the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers took a full page in the UE NEWS for a statement of the General Executive Board, declaring that major employers, spearheaded by General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors, have rejected the union's postwar program.

"They rejected the union's proposals for stable union relationships after the war; they have appealed every case involving wages; they have rejected the union's proposals to issue a statement defining their plans affecting postwar wages; they have made deliberate attempts leading to the depression of living standards," the UE charged.

NLRB Jim Crow

President Philip Murray this week charged the Natl. Labor Relations Board with an "intent to sanction the practice of setting up 'Jim Crow' locals in unions."

Murray's charge grows out of three cases involving anti-Negro discrimination recently brought before the Board, including the Larus Bros. case involving the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers and a General Motors case involving the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

"In all three cases the simple issue is this," Murray wrote. "Shall a union be certified by your Board as the exclusive collective bargaining representative of a group of employes in the face of an admitted rule on the part of that union that it will not accept into full membership any Negroes who may be a part of such group of employes?"

In the Larus case, AFL Jim Crow policies put Negro workers in a class B local, while claiming certification for both Negro and white. In the GM case, the AFL union excluded Negro workers, while claiming it would represent "all" the employes involved. In both decisions, the NLRB has upheld these Jim Crow policies.

"In recent decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court, it was made abundantly clear that abominable practices of race discrimination are violations of basic constitutional rights," Murray wrote to the Board.

No Steel to Franco

Releasing controls now on any scarce materials, including steel, and placing them on the free market "will be detrimental to small businessmen, who cannot possibly meet the competition of wealthy buyers, and to workers and farmers who will be forced to go without essential goods until the market for luxury goods is sated," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said this week in a letter to Fred Vinson, director of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

Murray's letter was prompted by a report that 100,000 tons of steel rails are being prepared for shipment to Spain, and that a request has been made for an export license to ship them to Franco.

The Foreign Economic Administration late this week denied that the shipment was in progress.

"It is unnecessary for me to point out the need of our railroads for rails in order to meet the current tremendous transportation demands, to say nothing of the need for rails for rebuilding the transportation systems of our allies and the liberated countries," Murray wrote.

To Help Stop Rows

The U. S. Dept. of Labor this week submitted a plan—subject to approval of the CIO Auto Workers and the AFL Building Trades—to end jurisdictional disputes regarding construction work in auto plants.

The plan calls for setting up joint local committees wherever necessary, and for establishing a national committee to which disputes will be referred when they cannot be settled locally.

The national committee, under the proposal, would be staffed by an equal number of UAW-CIO and AFL representatives, and would be headed by a neutral person agreeable to both organizations.

Decisions of the national committee would be binding.

IUC Job Parley

"The wage question is and will continue to be the source of trouble in coming days," CIO President Philip Murray told state industrial CIO council heads meeting in Washington last week for a full production conference. Murray gave an off-the-record accountng of what the CIO has done to raise wage standards, and will do to continue the fight to break the steel formula.

"It is not revision of the Little Steel Formula—in fact the steel formula should be completely abolished, and labor organizations should be allowed the greatest amount of freedom through collective bargaining," he said.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey accused the NAM of retreating from full employment. "They are now discussing high levels of employment, and satisfactory levels," he said. "The CIO is concerned only with full employment to a great mass of our people."

Lamb urged that every Congressman be put to the test: Ask him:

1. Has he signed the petition to President Truman for general wage increases?
2. Is he supporting emergency unemployment compensation legislation?
3. Has he signed the permanent FEPC discharge petition?
4. Is he a sponsor of the Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill?

On the Air With CIO

The second big CIO America United program will feature a discussion of the annual wage, with Harold Ruttenberg, USA-CIO research director, and Allan Swim, Scripps Howard writer and president of the Memphis CIO Council, participating. Scheduled to help provide fireworks is a representative of business, Emerson P. Schmidt, director of economic research of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

NBC stations at 1:15 p.m. EWT every Sunday.

A big plug for CIO's recently concluded series over the Blue (now American) network is contained in a letted forwarded to CIO Publicity Director Len De Caux. Writer Irvin E. Good, chairman of the UE-CIO legislative committee at the Belmont Radio Corp. in Chicago, said:

"I always manage to get home on time and listen to the CIO-sponsored program. I cannot begin to tell you of a certain pride that I have in listening and knowing that the cause of progress, of the workers, of the CIO is continually moving forward . . ."

World News Roundup

Not So Anti-Nazi

News of Nazi penetration in Argentina continues to refute claims that the pro-fascist dictatorship is a "democracy" that were made at the time it was admitted to the United Nations at the UNCIO meeting in San Francisco.

According to Allied Labor News, Fritz Mandl, German munitions maker and early backer of Hitler, continues to live on a huge estate where he receives fascist visitors at all times unmolested. ALN also cites airplane landings at night on an estate owned by an Argentine-German society, and appearance of German officers in remote Patagonia, also on German-owned land.

Credit to Camacho

Credit for the refusal of UNCIO to admit Franco Spain goes to Mexico's President Camacho, according to Luis Quintanilla, Mexican UNCIO delegate who took the floor against Franco's admission.

Meanwhile, thousands of anti-fascist Spaniards, who fought Hitler in the underground of France and other European countries, are being allowed to starve in concentration camps by Allied Military Government authorities. They cannot return to Spain, where they would be shot.

Who's Guilty?

War guilt trials are now set for mid-summer, in London. Best Washington predictions are that some of the top Nazi thugs will be convicted. Thousands of German industrialists, "scientists" (like the inventors of V bombs), junkers, aristocrats, etc., will go scot free. Their business connections in Europe and this country are too good to let them be punished or even brought to trial.

These are the men who brought Nazism to power, and the men who are now planning World War III.

De-Nazifying Note

UE-CIO Local 1225 wants Germany to be forbidden to make optical products after this war. Without optical instruments, cameras, etc., war is impossible. In addition, Local 1225 points out, German dominance in the optical cartel was a serious threat to U. S. armament in 1941, before we could build up our own industry.

Collier's Plugs Annual Wage

The guaranteed annual wage got a big plug in this week's Collier's Magazine. Pointing to Procter & Gamble, Nunn-Bush Shoe and Hormel Packing as the three outstanding practitioners of the annual wage, the editorial says:

"Admittedly, the problem is a complex one, because so many industries experience wide seasonal fluctuations in volume of orders, or cyclical fluctuations, or both. But these problems have been solved by these three well-known companies, and by an impressive number of less prominent ones in various lines.

"Given determination and cooperation on the part of both management and labor, guaranteed annual wages seem feasible for many a company, large or small."

TO HELP PUT 'FULL' BEFORE EMPLOYMENT

By PHILIP MURRAY

ARE wages abnormally high in the United States? No. The overwhelming majority of workers in this country today are not making high wages. Most of them, according to the government's own figures, are having difficulty making ends meet—even with overtime work and other temporary means of increasing their income through increased labor.

As we study the statistics, as we relate them to the cost of living, and as we compare them to profits, we find a vastly different picture from the optimistic one so frequently painted in the newspapers and even in official pronouncements.

THE basic wage structure used in this country during wartime is the Little Steel formula. Under this formula, increases in the basic wage were held to 15 percent of the amount earned in 1941.

The theory on which this rigid Little Steel formula was applied apparently contemplated an increase in the cost of living which would not exceed 15 percent. I use the word "apparently" advisedly, because as every housewife knows, the increase in the cost of living has greatly exceeded 15 percent.

In fact, the so-called Cost of Living Index of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics now admits that the cost of living has increased by almost 30 percent since 1941. Careful studies by the CIO show that the actual increase is 45 percent.

It may be said that workers have been able to make up this difference through overtime pay, due to the longer hours they have been working in the war industries. But in crowded war industry centers, the rise in the cost of living has frequently exceeded the 45 per cent figure found by the CIO.

PHILIP MURRAY

PRESIDENT MURRAY took the CIO's wage and full employment program to the nation July 7, in a country-wide broadcast over CBS stations. "We of the CIO," he said, "submit this program to you in the interests not only of the 55 million workers who have made so great a contribution to the winning of the war, but also in the interest of the entire nation." Excerpts from his speech are printed on this page.

ADDED to the cuts in take-home pay due to loss of overtime is the spreading shadow of layoffs, in which the worker's income is entirely removed. Layoffs are occurring so rapidly in some war industries that it is impossible to give a figure one day that will hold up until the next, but here are a few recent estimates:

In the aircraft industry, about 300,000. In shipbuilding, about 40,000. In electrical manufacturing, about 40,000. Many more scores of thousands are expected to be laid off due to cuts in artillery shell production, small arms and the like.

Contrary to a general impression, these workers who are laid off do not have sizable savings to tide them over a period of unemployment. The billions of dollars in what are called savings are not held by workers or other low income groups. For the most part, these accumulations or reserves are held by banks, insurance firms, large corporations, or wealthy individuals.

NOW let us turn briefly to the other side of the picture of the national income of our country—the profit side. According to charts prepared and published by the United States Government, through the Office of Price Administration, profits before taxes of nearly 2,000 large industrial corporations between 1936 and 1943 were:

For the 1936 to 1939 average—two billion, 577 million dollars.

For 1942, which was the period of large scale conversion to war production, average profits were seven billion, 443 million dollars.

For 1943, which was a period of all-out war production, the figure rose to eight billion, 842 million dollars.

In other words, profits have almost quadrupled during the years since 1939, when the war broke out in Europe.

Industry has large reserves to tide it over any difficulties after war production ceases. According to recent estimates, these reserves amount to some 23 billion dollars in cash and other assets, plus an arrangement under the tax laws which will cause the United States Treasury to pay out additional billions in tax carrybacks in case industry should run at a loss.

NOW, what does the CIO propose should be done to meet the critical situation that faces our country in this period of the continuing war against Japan and of approaching reconversion to a peacetime economy?

First, let me emphasize that CIO proposals for lifting the national income do not benefit workers alone. Everyone—farmers, merchants, professional people, as well of course as housewives—benefits when the wage structure is kept at stable and relatively high levels.

It is impossible to have a sound economy without at the same time providing a sound wage structure. The greatest market for American goods is in America. The experience of past economic depressions has proved this fact over and over again. The economic disasters of the twenties and the thirties began with cuts in wages and living standard and their resulting unemployment. No one, surely, wants to see a repetition of those economic and social disasters after this war.

The President of the U. S., the Congress and the responsible government agencies should immediately change the national wage policy from its present frozen condition to one which would:

First: grant necessary wage raises to aid in the effective prosecution of the war, and which will not and need not raise the cost of living.

Second: eliminate all sub-standard wages, such as now exist for millions of American workers, in industry, in agriculture and in white collar work.

Third: ensure, through these means and through orderly, planned reconversion to peacetime production, a continued high level of purchasing power for the maintenance of full production and full employment.

As an immediate step to ward off current threats of economic depression, Congress should not recess until it has passed President Truman's request for emergency unemployment benefits of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks for unemployed workers.

Finally, we urge security of employment on an annual basis, through application of the system of guaranteed annual wages, to all workers. No more effective means could be found for assuring freedom from fear and freedom from want, which is the essence of Franklin Delano Roosevelt's historic Economic Bill of Rights.

"The workers are piggish, dear. They aren't satisfied with victory. They want jobs, too."

Fiddling While Rome Burns

The filibustering and finagling against equal job opportunities for all Americans, which has disgraced Congress in recent weeks, makes Nero a piker.

He fiddled while Rome burned. But the reactionary clique which has been trying to destroy the Fair Employment Practice Committee by fair means or foul is doing its fiddling while half the world is aflame with war and while the welfare of American working people is being grossly neglected by Congress.

Cutbacks and layoffs are increasing daily. Take-home pay is being slashed by the elimination of overtime, and by downgrading, transfers and other reconversion factors that depress the whole wage structure.

Profit interests have been carefully protected by Congress, through a guarantee of "normal profits" through tax refunds for two years after the war. This, despite the fact that industrial profits have increased nearly four times since the war began in Europe, and reserves of $23 billion have been accumulated to cushion the profit-takers in the reconversion period.

But America's war workers have no such cushion to fall back on. Their savings are small or non-existent, and the present layoffs and cuts in take-home pay threaten to deprive them of the necessities of life.

The total figures of accumulated "savings" of which we hear so much are held by banks, insurance firms, large corporations or wealthy individuals, as CIO President Murray points out.

How close to the ragged edge are most workers, even with fulltime war employment, overtime and several members of the family working, is illustrated by a recent case study made by the United Steelworkers of America of the income and expenditures of steelworkers in Braddock, Rankin and North Braddock, Pa., during January, 1945.

This shows that the income of the average Braddock family amounted to $56.60 a week after taxes, while its weekly expenditures on living essentials amounted to $57.01.

If this family had had to depend solely on the earnings of the steelworker ($45.92 after taxes), it would have had a deficit of $11.09.

The only way the average Braddock family was able to get by and break approximately even was by supplementing the steelworker's wage with earnings of other members of the family, by taking in roomers, etc.

In other words, any cut whatever in the total income of such typical working class families means actual suffering, reduction of living standards below present low levels, and denial of the barest necessities.

Yet we are still cursed with a Little Steel formula that freezes wages and prevents increases to meet higher living costs and to maintain take-home pay. And Congress has hardly started the wheels turning to act on the emergency benefits of $25 a week for 26 weeks for which President Truman has called.

Meanwhile a willful minority is wasting the time of Congress filibustering against the American principle of equal job opportunities through the FEPC, which both major parties endorsed in the last elections.

On the credit side, however, is the present activity of progressive members of Congress in circulating a petition for revision of the national wage policy to permit wage adjustments which will not substantially affect the cost of living, and to eliminate substandard wages.

Congress has a clear duty to the American people to bring its influence to bear for immediate wage adjustments, to squelch the anti-FEPC filibuster, and to enact the special unemployment benefits to meet the present emergency before it recesses.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

The following article, by the CIO General Counsel and his assistant, is the second on the anti-labor provisions of the proposed Federal Industrial Relations law, which would virtualy destroy the right to strike.

By LEE PRESSMAN and FRANK DONNER

EVEN more offensive is a second "unfair labor practice" applicable only to unions. This second provision makes it illegal to interfere with the functioning of management "by interrupting, disorganizing or delaying the performance of work by employes in order to compel the immediate adjustment of alleged grievances, or to compel other managerial actions or to prevent the enforcement of managerial directions or policies, or otherwise to hamper or embarrass an employer, his representatives or supervisory employes in exercising the normal and reasonable authority of management which is the essential to the fulfillment of management obligations to consumers, investors and workers, whose welfare depends upon the continuous, reliable and efficient production of goods and services."

This pious section not only makes a mockery of the right to strike but it is difficult to see how an employe could even express casual and spontaneous resentment against an employer without running afoul of the law.

Every time an employe—or his bargaining representative protested to an employer or a foreman over arbitrary conduct, an employer could file charges under the act.

Under this section an employer can always prevent any union action by a claim that it was an interference with management's prerogatives. Thus if a union claimed that there should be nine men on a furnace crew instead of seven and protested to the employer, that protest would be condemned by the statute as an unfair labor practice by the union.

This section states that even the mildest form of protest about so-called management prerogatives is unlawful. No grievance can legitimately arise under this section to protest against the speed up, against technological displacement of workers, against an employer's disregard of the safety of his men.

Three other portions of the bill do an equally effective job on labor organizations but in a more subtle way. One provision makes it illegal for a union to discriminate against an employer. This is a polite way of tearing from the hands of workers the weapon of the boycott.

This provision again opens up the grim picture of enormous financial recoveries by employers against labor organizations as in the Danbury Hatters case and invites employers to impoverish unions by suits for huge damages suffered because of boycotts.

Equally destructive is a provision in the bill which forbids employes inducing their fellows to join a labor organization by giving preferential treatment to members. A union, for example, under this section could not hold out the advantage of an insurance plan to non-members.

Along the same lines it is made an unfair labor practice for a union to refuse to meet with an employer whenever an employer requests a conference. Under this provision the following could readily occur:

A union engages in negotiations with an employer. Convinced that the employer is stalling it decides to call a strike.

An employer could convert the strike into an illegal act by the simple device of requesting a conference. Even if the union knew that a conference was futile it would nevertheless be required to permit the employer to stall some more or else be in violation of the law.

The drafters of this bill to enslave labor did not forget to put teeth into it. To this end the bill amends the NLRA, which authorizes the reinstatement of employes with back pay, and instead permits the Board to award damages to employers.

The section is also so broadly written that under it the Board would have no trouble in, for example, denying a union bargaining rights if it violated any of the oppressive provisions directed against unions. Moreover, the new crimes which this bill invents on the part of labor organizations can readily be punished not only by damages and the loss of bargaining rights but also by injunction.

talk war and the waging of peace on the new NBC program "AMERICA UNITED"

• For the first time in history, the facilities of a national radio network have been made available at a regular period each week to major labor, agricultural and business organizations for co-operative programs—discussions of important objectives concerning you and your status under the war and post-war economy.

Result: throughout 1945, leaders representing the Big Three of the home-front participate in a significant NBC public service program, America United.

Leaders of the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange and the United States Chamber of Commerce choose subjects and programs broadcast every week.

Each of these groups carries tremendous responsibility for supplying the war effort. Each sponsors vital economic plans and philosophies. NBC welcomes this opportunity to aid these organizations in promoting increased co-operation—in providing greater enlightenment to millions of Americans.

1 The Bernard Pollingers of New York City are off for their Saturday morning shopping trip. Bernard, a member of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, has just taken the baby carriage out of the store, where it is usually parked; Shirley has brought down five-month-old Martin. Melvin is six years old.

2 They live at 4036 Third Ave., Bronx, N. Y., under the Third Ave. "L." They pay $36 a month for a tiny three-room apartment. "This whole section is nothing but a slum," says Bernard. "But it's the best we can get for our money. We need a lot more space but just can't afford it."

4 "We can't manage our emergencies," explains Shirley. "We had to go into debt for the baby. How I manage to pay $17 monthly to the Personal Finance Corp., I don't know. Sometimes I sit and think: How do I do it?"

5 Melvin sleeps on the sofa in the living room because the family's income isn't big enough for another bedroom. He can't go to bed until 10 at night when the whole family retires. Melvin skipped from 1a to 2a, but asked to be put back. "My head was going to explode," he explained. He wants to be a doctor.

6 Bernard pays his monthly installment at the Finance Co. "It used to be a question of counting pennies," he said, "but we can't do that any more, they're meaningless. Three or $4 at the grocery doesn't do a thing. We just get along by borrowing and trying to pay back out of next week's pay."

nard had to cancel his 10% deductions for bonds. "I was just hing them in any way," he said. He cashed one in, now, to pay or's bills. "I have two left, and we'll need them for winter clothes. needs a coat, and so does the boy. Thing's are always coming up."

8 Presto Recording Corp. has won the Army and Navy E. They made radar parts and Signal Corps equipment. All employes were given a dinner-dance by the Company in honor of the occasion at New York's Astor Hotel. Bernard is telling his fellow workers from Local 430, CIO Electrical & Radio Workers that this will be the first time he and his wife could go out together since their big boy was born. "My mother is going to stay with the boys," he says. There are 325 employed at Presto. Two layoffs reduced the employment roll from 365; now they're cutting hours as war orders are ended.

Story by Helen Kay

Pictures by Al Puhn

"Where can we cut next?" asks Shirley, the wife of Bernard Pollinger, young electrical worker at the Presto Recording Corp., where hours were cut back from 55 to 50, eliminating work on Saturday with its time and a half. The net loss for the Pollingers is $8.25 weekly, or as Shirley puts it on a monthly basis: "Why it's my rent and my laundry they've taken, since they took Bernard's Saturdays away."

But it is more than that. The Pollinger budget hasn't been balanced during the whole of the war. What with prices eating into their food money, and emergencies eating up their bonds, the Pollinger's are headed toward reconversion with no savings, no bonds, nearly $300 worth of debts, and a cut operating budget.

Bernard works 50 hours a week, and with time and a half for overtime, he earns $60.50. His base is $1.10 an hour, a high from the 65c hourly rate he started with three years ago. Local 430 of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has a contract which has steadily ungraded workers during the last three years. The base is $44 for a 40-hour work week.

Bernard's present salary is above the general average for industrial manufacturing. After deductions he takes home $54.70. Shirley allows him $10 for his breakfast, lunches, carfares, union dues, and incidentals. She spends $28 weekly on food and milk for the children. She puts $13 aside for rent, gas and electricity; $1 goes for hospitalization and insurance; $4 to repay a loan. That leaves them with a minus $1.30, without counting clothing, medical expenses or recreation.

"Why just in the last few months we had $55 worth of Doctor's bills, not counting the new baby," explained Bernard. "I had to have new glasses. I was suffering from eye strain and before we could determine the cause of my headaches, it cost me $25. The boy had a badly abscessed ear this spring. So bad in fact it was nearly a mastoid, and that cost $30.

"It's impossible to save anything on my present salary. I was getting bonds through the 10% plan, but I cut that out as soon as my hours were cut back. In fact, I was only cashing in the bonds anyway. You can't count pennies anymore, they're meaningless. Why you go down to the grocery store with three or four dollars and it doesn't do a thing."

The Pollinger's owe a relative $35. They had to borrow $250 at the Personal Finance Corp. to pay for the new baby. They are paying this off at the rate of $17 monthly, and will continue to pay through 1946. They've cashed in all their bonds, except two $50 ones, which they expect they'll have to use for winter clothes. "I don't have a coat," explained Shirley.

"Regardless of what he's earned, prices remaining the same and higher, we just can't have a budget. We find things always coming up. We pay $36 a month for this apartment. We are very crowded, four of us in three rooms. The baby sleeps with us, and the boy sleeps in the living room. He can never get to bed before 10 o'clock at night. We really need more space, but where can we get it? We can't pay more rent; we must pay less.

"How do I do it? Sometimes I sit all by myself and I think, how do I pay out on what he makes? But that's the way we go along, borrowing here and paying there."

The Paper Workers Organizing Committee held a staff and education meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, last week. Speakers were Kermit Eby, director, CIO Research and Education Department; President R. J. Thomas of the UAW-CIO and Vice President of the CIO; Helen Blanchard, Organizing Director, CIO Women's Auxiliaries; G. Geo. DeNucci, CIO Regional Director in Columbus and Secretary, Ohio CIO Council; Delmond Garst, CIO Member on NWLB; Ted Silvey, chairman, CIO Reconversion Committee; Walter Tagg, Director, Region 8, NLRB, and others.

The conference dealt with the many problems of concern to the members of the PWOC-CIO, as well as CIO members in general. The officers of the organization reported on administrative bookkeeping, organizing, publicity, and other matters.

URWA Pres. S. H. Dalrymple and the writer addressed a banquet attended by many representatives of CIO and its affiliates and others. The meeting was proclaimed a huge success.

We are receiving many favorable reports from our regional directors on conferences they have called of international representatives and heads of Councils for the purpose of activizing our membership and the public in support of the CIO's program for: (1) revision of the Little Steel Formula; (2) support for President Truman's message to Congress on unemployment insurance; (3) a guaranteed annual wage. All these objectives are in the interest of the war effort and an economy based upon jobs for all.

Express your opinions on these subjects by writing or wiring the President of the United States, Fred Vinson, Director of War Mobilization; William H. Davis, Director of Economic Stabilization, and public members of the NWLB.

Keep up the good work—Keep up the campaigns to organize the unorganized. The Nation needs the CIO!

Guild Re-Elects Murray

Pres. Milton Murray and Exec. Vice-Pres. Sam B. Eubanks were re-elected without opposition at the recent annual convention of the American Newspaper Guild held at St. Paul, Minn. Number of delegates was limited to 50, due to wartime travel restrictions.

A contest for the office of secretary-treasurer between William Rodgers, incumbent, and Charles Whipple of Boston, will be decided by a referendum.

Delegates went on record as opposed to the Ball-Burton-Hatch labor legislation bill, but voted down resolutions sponsored by the New York local urging that the United States break relations with Spain and Argentina, and calling on Pres. Truman to follow the foreign policy of the late Pres. Roosevelt.

A resolution calling for a renewal of the no-strike pledge was tabled on a roll call vote, 200 to 84.

NMU Parley Acts On Big Job Ahead

By LEO HUBERMAN

Setting their sights on "the big job ahead," delegates to the Fifth Biennial Convention of the National Maritime Union held this week in New York, reaffirmed unanimously their no-strike pledge until "the final defeat of Japan" and outlined a vigorous program for winning an adequate wage to stave off a sharp cut in wages as a result of a scheduled bonus cut July 15.

Some 300 delegates, representing 90,000 CIO Seamen, who have "kept 'em sailing" throughout the course of the war without a single ship delay, declared their desire to make their full contribution to speedy victory, while devising every method, "short of strike," to achieve a proper wage.

Voting a program that would utilize every avenue of public expression, demonstrations, delegations, political action, public appeals, and publicity, first hand evidence was given to the delegates that the American public would fully back up its Merchant Seamen in their efforts to win a decent living wage.

Reporting on action taken in Washington a few days prior to the convention, the NMU negotiating committee revealed that 75 Congressmen and 10 Senators, including Senate and House majority leaders, had signed a petition calling upon Pres. Truman to stop the bonus cut until the War Labor Board acts upon the union's case.

The committee also succeeded in drastically cutting WLB red tape, shortening the time that will be taken to handle the case by two-thirds. NMU is asking for the establishment of the WLB minimum for Merchant Seaman. The case will go direct to the full Board, without wasting time in panel hearings.

Warm praise was paid to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and General Counsel Lee Pressman for the aid given to the NMU efforts.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, a CIO vice-president, stressed the importance of the union's wage program being linked up with similar campaigns by all other CIO unions. Guest speakers at the convention included CIO-PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman, Coast Guard Admiral R. R. Waesche and Sec.-Treas., Saul Mills of the New York CIO council.

Hillman, who was voted an honorary membership in NMU, which he termed "one of the proudest moments of his life," highlighted the need of labor's political action on the community level in 1945 and the need of "more than a little better than this" in the decisive 1946 Congressional elections.

The convention also denounced Sen. Bilbo for his disgraceful filibuster against an FEPC, urged full participation in the World Trade Union movement and full mobilization of the country behind the World Security Charter.

Packinghouse Union

A $30,000,000 back pay award, involving some 125,000 members of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers employed by the Morrell and Big Four meat packing companies, Armour, Swift, Cudahy and Wilson, has been cleared by the Office of Economic Stabilization, and is to be put into effect immediately.

The pay adjustment was made on the basis of "fringe" issues, involving time spent changing clothes, furnishing of clothes and tools, etc., as well as the elimination of intra-plant and inter-plant inequalities. It is retroactive in most cases to Aug. 11, 1943.

Paper Workers

Plans for speeding up the organizing drive in the paper industry and a demand for revision of the national wage policy were made by the Paper Workers Organizing Committee at an executive board meeting and two-day staff conference held in Cleveland, June 28-30. Area conferences will be held later.

This was the first such conference to be held by PWOC. It was attended by PWOC staff members, CIO regional directors and representatives and national CIO leaders. CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, who is the PWOC's chairman, presided at the conference and was also featured speaker at a banquet attended by local CIO leaders, ministers, educators and government representatives.

Other banquet speakers included Pres. R. J. Thomas, United Auto Workers; Pres. Sherman Dalrymple, Rubber Workers; PWOC Director Walter Smethurst and Asst. Director Frank Grasso. PWOC Sec. - Treas. Harry D. Sayre was toastmaster.

Kermit Eby, National CIO director of education and research, in a speech at the conference said that the CIO is the greatest educational and moral force in the country. G. George De Nucci, secretary of the Ohio CIO Council, spoke on state legislation and public relations and Helen Blanchard, organization director for the CIO Women's Auxiliaries, talked on women in industry.

Ted Silvey, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, spoke on veterans' problems and Nat Goldfinger, PWOC editor, led a discussion on the role of the PWOC paper.

Longshoremen

The Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union has "a key part to play in the program of speeding victory in the Pacific," the ILWU executive board declared in a resolution on support of the war effort passed at a three-day meeting held last week in Seattle.

"Now even more than in past months must we make positive that in no part of any operation where our members are engaged can we allow any act or policy of ours adversely to affect the flow of men and supplies to the remaining war fronts," the board stated.

The resolution reaffirmed the union's wartime no-strike pledge and its determination to work with our government, our Army and Navy, and our employers to find constructive solutions to production and manpower problems, and to strain existing supply facilities to the utmost in the interest of the war effort."

The union will work with those American employers who "uphold the right of organized labor to exist as a part of American democracy," but will fight those "who seek to undermine labor and take away its gains" with all the weapons at its command, the resolution declared.

Furriers

Three top officials of the New York Furriers Joint Council who ran for re-election unopposed on a rank-and-file slate were overwhelmingly elected last week. They are Irving Potash, manager, who received 6,157 votes; Joseph Winogradsky, asst. manager, 5,379 votes; and Harry Begoon, secretary-treasurer, 5,346 votes.

The 15 business agents also elected were likewise endorsed by the Rank-and-File Furriers. Jack Schneider headed the slate with a vote of 5,083. With the exception of two, the business agents were all incumbents. Morris Breecher and Sol Oaklander were the newly elected agents.

The winning candidates were endorsed by several hundred shop chairmen and ran on the record of the administration for the past ten years, since unity was achieved in the Furriers' Union, states the N. Y. Joint Council.

Set-Back For Avery

U. S. Army authorities operating Montgomery Ward properties have notified the CIO's Montgomery Ward Organizing Committee that Natl. War Labor Board directives including payment of back wages that will total $1,342,000 have been put into effect.

The Army has also placed in operation dues checkoff and maintenance of union membership on behalf of the CIO United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes. Plants affected are in Chicago, Detroit, Denver and Jamaica, L. I.

The action, announced by Maj. Gen. Joseph W. Byron, War Dept. representative now conducting the business, followed refusal of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals to grant the company an injunction staying execution of the directives pending appeal of Sewell Avery, company president, to the U. S. Supreme Court from the June 8 decision upholding government seizure of the plants.

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

AUXILIARY representatives came to Washington with five of the state delegations that visited Congressmen and Senators on price control during June. They made a real impression, too.

Five UAW-CIO Auxiliary members came in from Michigan and heard Catherine Gelles, their national secretary-treasurer, testify at the House Banking and Currency Committee hearings. The men in the delegation thought that what these had to say was so important that they called on them to speak first when they all met together with the Michigan Congressmen.

Elizabeth Thomas of UE represented the auxiliaries in the big Ohio delegation. Olive McKissock from Shipyard Auxiliary Local 1 spoke for the housewives when New Jersey delegates called on Representative Wolverton. A representative of the new Transport Auxiliary to Local 101 was one of the New Yorkers who jammed the House Labor Committee Room the day the Committee to Protect the Consumer was revived.

Five Philadelphia auxiliary women—three from NMU and two from the Federal Workers—came with over 100 delegates from Pennsylvania. They brought petitions with 5000 signatures which Janice Shaeffer of the Federal Workers presented at the meeting with the entire Pennsylvania Congressional delegation.

Janice has written me something about how she felt when they left Washington. She says:

"As we were boarding our train to go home, we passed by a hospital train loaded with wounded. The boys were smiling and waving. We smiled and waved, even though our hearts were heavy with sadness for them. I wondered about my husband, who is in Germany, and our son, who today reached the age of three.

"But I did not say goodbye to Washington. I hope to return. Today I've read that Price Control is being extended for another year. But I know there is much more legislation upon which we must act. And now I know what all of us women can and must do, if we want that new world for our children and ourselves."

Janice is right. The fight to extend the price control act is over for the moment but there are many other issues on which we must work.

The House of Representatives will probably recess soon. Then we won't need to worry about the train fare to Washington to see our Congressmen. We can organize delegations to see them at home. And there is no more important job for a CIO auxiliary than to help its members get acquainted with the Congressman who represents them so that they can tell him week after week, at home or in Washington, what they expect of him.

Where Bond $'s Go

For the Iwo Jima attack, the investment in the naval forces initially engaged was: Ships, $5,600,000,000; aircraft, supplies, equipment and personnel, $700,000,000; total, $6,300,000,000, which is more than double the total expenditures of the U. S. Navy in World War I. These figures are supplied by the Navy to show the need for extra war bond buying.

Pamphlet Review

Tell Your Troubles To a CIO Counsellor

Interest in Union Counselling, the CIO's new service set up to aid union members with troublesome outside-the-plant problems, is spreading rapidly. What this counselling system is, how it started, and how it works, is described in an illustrated pamphlet issued by the National CIO War Relief Committee.

Some of the problems tackled under the Union Counselling program are housing, child-care, legal assistance, emergency relief, unemployment compensation and old-age assistance, medical care, veterans' rights under the GI Bill, priorities and other difficulties workers meet in their daily lives.

First step in the functioning of the program is a training class for selected rank-and-file workers to prepare key members in the shops as official CIO counsellors. These trained counsellors operate on the job much as union shop stewards do except that they handle out-plant problems instead of job grievances or questions to be taken up with plant-management. They receive no salary.

The CIO union counselling program is sponsored by the National CIO War Relief Committee in cooperation with the Department of Education & Research and the Industrial Union Council Department of the National CIO.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a foreward endorsing the Union Counselling program, says: "CIO service to its members cannot stop at the plant gate—either now when it is our obligation to lift the burden of hardships imposed by wartime living or later when it will be our responsibility to help CIO members meet the changing life of peace-time. The sooner we develop the union counselling program, the better able will we be to give workers and their families their rightful place in the full life of their communities."

John Brophy, director of Industrial Union Councils, through whose department the program functions, states: "Union counselling will be increasingly important as our servicemen return and need help in getting mustering-out pay, pensions, retraining, and rehabilitation—and as our own members must meet the changing living conditions which will accompany reconversion from war to peace employment."

Union counselling can't pull a rabbit out of a hat, or achieve miracles overnight, warns the pamphlet.

Labor Education

Michigan, Ohio CIO Schools Offer Summer Courses

Two summer schools sponsored by CIO State Councils are scheduled to open August 12. The Michigan CIO Council's Leadership Training Institute will be held at Camp Chief Noonday, Hatsings, Mich., Aug. 12-Sept. 9, and the Ohio CIO Council Summer School will be at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, Aug. 12-18.

The four-week institute in Michigan is being run by the Michigan CIO Council Education Dept. in cooperation with experienced labor educators. Joseph Kowalski, education consultant for the State Council, is director of the Institute.

"This year with cutbacks and unemployment facing all our local unions," states the Education Dept., "the need for responsible trained union leaders on all levels is imperative."

Courses scheduled for the Leadership Training Institute include: Union Counselling and Labor Journalism, Aug. 12-18.

Labor Union Administration and Political Action, Labor Laws and Legislation, Sept. 2-8.

In addition a special course in Teacher Training in Workers Education will be conducted each week, together with courses in public speaking, Parliamentary Law and Labor History.

Other special courses such as the Role of the Ladies Auxiliary and Consumers Economics will also be given for the wives of students if requested.

Camp Chief Noonday where the Michigan CIO Institute will be held is located on 4,000 acres of beautiful, rolling, hilly ground with a beach and swimming facilities at the camp site. It is owned by the State Dept. of Conservation.

OHIO SCHOOL

The summer school of the Ohio CIO Council will have exclusive use of the Antioch College dormitory and the run of the campus for its one-week session. CIO and PAC leaders throughout the state are invited to attend. As the number who can be accommodated is limited, the Ohio Council urges those who wish to enroll to get their applications in as soon as possible. Deadline is July 30.

The cost for the week is $35 per person, which includes room and board and use of the recreation facilities. Many CIO locals and councils are selecting students to go to the school, paying them for lost time.

Join World Labor Group, Urges AFL Official

A ringing challenge to the American Federation of Labor to end its "ostrich policy and join hands with the workers of the rest of the world" is sounded in a pamphlet issued by the District 6 Council, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators & Paperhangers, an AFL affiliate.

"The AFL and One World of Labor," written by Courtney Ward, secretary-treasurer of the Council, is the report of an observer at the World Trade Union Conference held in London last February, made to his union.

"After what I saw in London, I am convinced that the newly formed World Federation of Trade Unions is both a necessary and a desirable organization," Ward writes.

"I am further convinced that the AFL will eventually agree with this view and affiliate with the new body. I can see no other way for the Federation to make itself effectively felt in the international councils of the labor movement and exercise its proper influence over the great events that are today shaping a new world."

Heartily endorsing the program drawn up at the World Labor Conference which he says contains things every American worker wants, Ward declares that he fails "to see how the AFL Executive Council can oppose any part of it."

Resolutions passed by AFL unions make "a pile of documentary evidence as tall as a mountain," says Ward, "that whatever the attitude of the Executive Council, the membership of the AFL is overwhelmingly in favor of international labor cooperation."

Ward urges AFL members to get their locals and councils to go on record for AFL participation in the World Trade Union Federation meeting to be held in Paris next September, "If you feel, as we do, that we must end this ostrich policy and join hands with the workers of the rest of the world."

Unfinished Business

For the past three weeks or more, Congress has been in a great tearing rush to finish up the most pressing of its business and get home for a summer vacation.

Thus we hear talk in Washington of holding a quick debate and vote on the UNCIO charter, cleaning up the last of the appropriations tangles, and scramming out of a hot capital back to a cooler and pleasanter constituency.

If Congress does this, there'll be quite a list of items on the unfinished business agenda that its members should be asked about when they do get home.

Chief on this list is FEPC. As the Washington Guide is written, funds to carry on the present FEPC were still being denied in a House-Senate runaround—by means of filibuster in the Senate and sabotage in the House Rules Committee. Meantime, bills to make FEPC permanent are kept locked up in both houses.

Ask your man when he gets home what he did on FEPC, why the filibuster was permitted, why the House Rules were allowed to block the people's will against discrimination.

Then ask your man (not forgetting that you have two Senators as well as one Representative) why the stall on emergency unemployment compensation. This measure, proposed by President Truman and backed by CIO, would provide some cushion (up to $25 for 26 weeks) against climbing unemployment.

To date (July 6) nothing has been done on this issue—no bill has been put in the hopper. The snag is said to be the attitude of Chairman Doughton (D. N. C.) of the House Ways and Means Committee. Doughton is one of the Administration's key men in the House.

Then there's the matter of the Lea rider on the War Labor Board appropriation bill, which in turn is part of the war agencies fund bill.

The Lea rider sets a dangerous precedent in denying WLB help to 1,500,000 food processing workers. If retained, it would promote strikes, interrupt food production. The precedent could be extended to cover other workers.

The Lea rider, in fact, was tried in the NLRB appropriation, but was beaten back there. It will be tried again.

On NLRB funds, Congress cut over $200,000 from the final appropriation. Original House cut was $400,000. The Senate and House conference restored $189,000, which still leaves a serious slash in the total of $3,000,000 for enforcement of the Wagner Act.

Congress's mid-summer record on S 380, the full employment bill, is totally negative. Though the bill is in, no hearings have been held yet.

Similarly, there's been no progress on amendments to the Social Security Act introduced by Sens. Wagner (D. N. Y.) and Murray (D. Mont.) and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.).

CIO has been supporting these amendments since they were first discussed over a year ago.

Progress on the Missouri Valley Authority project (S 555) has been almost as slow. By a series of parliamentary maneuvers, opponents of the MVA plan for postwar jobs and farm lands got the bill routed to three Senate Committees, one of which (Commerce) has already given it an adverse report.

Ask your two Senators—and your Representatives — what they've been doing to help this postwar employment plan along.

* * *

And so on. This is not the complete list of unfinished business facing Congress at recess time. It's enough, however, to put on your question list when you welcome your elected representatives back home.

Record Votes

Despite the long list of unfinished business on the Congressional agenda printed in the adjoining column, Congress has voted on a number of important issues during the session now heading into a summer recess.

Here are three record votes that you might check with your Congressman when he comes home.

While you're checking, remember that the record vote, though a key to your man's action on the final test, is not the whole story.

Also to be considered are his actions on committees, his attitude towards amendments, riders, etc., that don't always reach the floor where a record vote is possible, his speeches, reception of delegations, and the like.

PRICE CONTROL: Two strategic House record votes were taken on renewal of the price control act. One was on the Jenkins (R. O.) amendment (taking food price control from OPA), the other on the Dirksen (R. Ill.) court review plan. (See CIO NEWS of July 2.

RECIPROCAL TRADE: Key House record vote on renewal of the reciprocal agreements renewal act was on a motion by Rep. Knutson (R. Minn.) to recommit — which would have killed the bill. See CIO NEWS of June 4.

These are three key record votes. Watch for others that may come up between now and the recess — CIO NEWS will carry them.

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Ball, Burton, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; outlaws closed shop; imposes compulsory arbitration.	Senate Labor and Education Committee; anti-labor agitation for quick hearings and vote.	Urge your Senators to oppose all such attacks on labor laws.
FEPC (S 101; HR 2232) and funds.	Bills make FEPC permanent; funds needed to carry on present FEPC.	Funds in House-Senate runaround. Bills stalled in both House and Senate.	Watch daily papers; keep wiring support of bills and funds.
Bretton Woods (S 540)	Aids postwar jobs by stabilizing world currency, helping reconstruction.	Passed House; reported out of Senate Banking Currency; action likely this week.	Watch daily papers; wire Senators if floor fight develops.
Missouri Valley Authority. (S 555, HR 2203)	Provides flood, erosion control, new farms, jobs in nine states; helps postwar jobs in all U. S.	Senate Irrigation & Reclamation Committee.	Urge favorable report; early action to stem unemployment.
Lea rider to WLB funds.	Removes WLB jurisdiction from 1,500,000 food processing workers. Promotes strikes, cuts food production. Principle can be extended to all other workers.	Passed once, then rejected, now in again. Seesaw between House and Senate.	Wire Representative and Senators to reject.

Coming Up— Issues to Watch

BRETTON WOODS: Having lost out in the House, anti-United Nations leaders are taking the fight against the Bretton Woods world trade agreement to the Senate.

Heard before the Banking and Currency Committee were such men as Merwin K. Hart, pro-fascist of New York. Hart's opposition is simple—he regards the whole thing as a "Soviet plot."

More subtle are the big bankers, who pleaded for delay on consideration of the International Fund aspect of the agreement.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) will lead the fight on the floor.

* * *

DIES NOT DEAD: Though Martin Dies is politically dead, his spirit lives on in Congress. Rep. Rankin (D. Miss.) has announced a new witch hunt directed at Hollywood, where he says there's a subversive conspiracy of worldwide dimensions.

Rankin, one of the shrewdest men in Congress, is perfectly aware, of course, that no conspiracy exists in Hollywood or anywhere else. But he's also aware that Hollywood makes good newspaper copy.

And the newspapers, who used to piously denounce Dies for his methods (but never for his motives), will oblige Rankin with all the publicity he wants.

JOBS FOR ALL: There'll be no action this summer on S 380, the jobs for all bill. Hearings may start, but will be only a formal opening, with real discussion waiting until the fall.

Meanwhile, unemployment is increasing rapidly, with 60,000 out of jobs in Detroit today. According to Labor Research Assn., total unemployed may reach eight to 10 million by late 1946 or early 1947.

PRICE CONTROL PAYOFF: Price control through OPA, even with all its weaknesses, has saved taxpayers about $80 billion they would otherwise have paid in inflated war costs. Lack of control in World War I added $13.5 billion to taxpayers' burden.

Price control pays off. Remember this the next time the Republicans organize an all out offensive against it.

Five thousand merchant seamen have given their lives to help win the war. This week Admiral Emory S. Land, U. S. War Shipping Administrator, helped Director of Economic Stabilization William H. Davis torpedo thousands of others. At issue was a cut in seamen's wages. Land OKed and Davis refused to review a slash in wartime bonuses, taking effect July 15.

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union had asked for delay, pending War Labor Board consideration of a wage boost request. NMU members, many of them veterans of bombing and torpedoings, and their wives picketed WSA offices throughout the nation, as (below) in Washington, D. C.

They pointed out that an able seaman gets only 42 cents an hour while a shoreside rigger gets $1.11; a ship's carpenter gets 47 cents an hour while a shoreside carpenter gets $1.17; and a ship's messman gets 36 cents an hour while a shoreside dishwasher gets 63 cents. They will ask the WLB, at public hearings scheduled for July 19 and 20, for a minimum 55-cents-an-hour wage—$37.40 for a 56-hour week with time and a half for overtime after 40 hours.

Vet Snubbed By Rankin, Arrested

REP. JOHN E. RANKIN wrote the first chapter of a Mississippi Edition of Emily Post this week. The peppery, white-haired, 63-year-old polltax Congressman, whose face looks somewhat like a crab apple, not only refused to listen to a World War II veteran but had him arrested and accused him of being "insane." The veteran simply wanted to talk to Rankin about pending legislation.

The recipient of such courtesy from a man who has held grimly on through 13 terms of Congress was Reuben Schafer, 41-09 12th St., Long Island City, N. Y. Schafer, who has been honorably discharged from the infantry, served three and a half years in the Army and participated in the invasion of Oran and Tunisia.

Schafer wanted to talk to Rankin, who heads the House Veterans Committee, about legislation which would exempt veterans from union shop contracts and would in effect encourage employers to pit them against union members.

He waited two hours to try to make a statement to the committee, but was given the brush-off by a secretary, on Rankin's orders. Then he attempted to talk to the polltaxer when Rankin emerged from the committee room. He was told to "get out of here—this is private property."

"I'm taking care of veterans' legislation, not you," barked Rankin, in answer to Schafer's request for a polite conversation on the issue.

When Schafer replied that this was America and that pushing people around like that was OK only in Nazi Germany, Rankin called the cops, and told them to "take this man away—he's insane."

Willow Run---What to Do With It

UAW-CIO Local 50 has a plan. The fabulously expensive Willow Run bomber plant can be used for the nation's military deployment problem, for railroad equipment and housing. It answers Henry Ford's statement that Willow Run can be considered expendable.

The plan was drafted by Walter P. Ruther, vice president of the union who declared that use of former wartime facilities under the proposal would provide a minimum of six million jobs.

Using mass production techniques, Willow Run, integrated with government - owned war plants, can:

Turn out rolling stock which will make posible the speedy deployment of our armed forces from the European to the Pacific Theatres of War.

Produce sufficient rolling stock to modernize completely the nation's railroads, and sharply reduce freight costs (the new rolling stock would be made largely of aluminum, thus permitting greater supplies of steel for the reconverting automobile industry and other civilian industries).

Produce modern and durable homes, fully equipped with current improvements at a cost of approximately $3,000 per home.

Mr. Rankin, Please Note

THE first B-29 crewman to receive the Congressional Medal of Honor is Staff Sgt. Henry Eugene Erwin of Bessemer, Ala., member of the CIO United Steelworkers. The nation's highest award was presented at Northington Genl. Hospital, in Tuscaloosa, Ala., with the sergeant's commanding officer and fellow crewmen, whose lives he saved, looking on.

In a roaring Superfortress Bomber high over Japan, radio operator Erwin was assigned the extra duty of dropping phosphorus smoke bombs.

One of the bombs proved faulty, exploded, and shot back into the plane, striking Erwin in the face. Smoke from the burning bomb obscured the pilot's vision. The plane went into a dive.

STAFF SGT. ERWIN
Wins Highest Honor

In a split-second decision, Erwin grasped the burning bomb between his foream and body, stumbled forward to the smoke-filled pilot's compartment, located a window and threw the bomb out. By then Sergeant Erwin's body was completely aflame, and he fell back upon the floor.

The smoke cleared just in time. The pilot pulled the plane out of its dive at 300 feet, and returned to his base without further trouble.

The 24-year-old airman was returned to this country on May 10. He is recovering from severe burns.

FEPC Wins $250,000 Vote Compromise

A week-long struggle to preserve the Fair Employment Practice Committee from its polltax enemies ended this week with a compromise giving the agency $250,000 to last until June, 1946.

This represented a retreat from the original $500,000 asked by the Budget Bureau, but a real victory over the earlier scheme to kill the entire agency and a later plan to give it $250,000 to wind up work.

As the situation stands now, the House by a non-record vote of 188 to 116 defeated the amendment by Rep. Colmer (D., Miss.) to kill the agency. As The CIO NEWS went to press, this action was set for endorsement in a House-Senate conference.

Strategy of the pro-FEPC forces, led by Reps. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.), George Bender (R., O.) and Emmanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), was to make points of order against other war agency appropriations included in the over-all funds bill with FEPC until its appropriation was restored.

One of the chief threats to success in the FEPC issue was absenteeism by pro-FEPC Congressmen, particularly those from nearby New York, Pennsylvania and other industrial states. This was overcome, however, in time for the vote of July 12. Republican leadership, though officially on record for FEPC, did not play too active a part in the fight.

Jobless Pay Bill Up; Action Needed Now

AFTER almost two months since President Truman's first request, a bill (HR 3736) was put in the hopper this week providing for unemployment compensation of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks. It was sent to the House Ways and Means Committee, whose chairman is Rep. Doughton (D., N. C.).

Under the mechanism of the bill, states will have to agree to accept Federal payment to make up the difference between their maximum benefits and the $25 figure set by Truman and endorsed by the CIO. Merchant seamen and officers and Federal workers are included in the bill.

The bill also has a clause holding up its operation until the total of unemployed has reached 600,000.

This clause, it was pointed out, may actually mean that up to three million people will be unemployed before they start getting compensation, since it calls for a minimum of 600,000 "compensible" unemployed — i.e., 600,000 workers who have applied and been cleared for unemployment benefits. According to social security experts, the ratio of total unemployed to compensible unemployed is frequently as high as five to one.

The bill has no provision for transport allowances and no allowances for dependents. It also fails to touch many state regulations that disqualify unemployed workers, including discharge for "disorderly conduct," refusal to take jobs at lower pay, and the like.

FLIGHT OFFICER HENRY VIELLETTE, 22 years old, is smiling, because he just received a check for $415 from co-workers of his father, Henry Veillette, Sr., at Rhodes Manufacturing, Hartford. In peace, young Henry was a member of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at Colt Firearms, Hartford. In war, he was a Mustang pilot flying reconnaissance over Germany. His legs were burned off to the knees in a crash landing, when his plane was riddled by flak from German anti-aircraft guns, and was attacked by three Nazi fighters ten miles from his field.

Job to Do!

"'The average GI has no hate against labor, but he sure as---- is plenty confused." That comment came this week from Belgium via Pfc. Parios N. "Pete" Fleezanis, former business agent of Local 43, CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, in Baltimore, Md.

He warned that the CIO has a tremendous job to do in telling returning servicemen of the organization's contribution toward victory.

We Think It's 'Lousy' Too!

Frankest official statement so far on the inadequate job done by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics in reporting the cost of living rise came this week from the outfit's big boss, Sec. of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach.

He was quoted as telling several labor leaders, including CIO Pres. Philip Murray, that the statistical work of the BLS is "lousy, too academic and not realistic enough."

On the Air With CIO

A hot discusion on the Ball-and-Chain Federal Industrial Relations Act will be heard over Mutual stations from 9:30 to 10:15 P.M., EWT Tuesday, July 17, with Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey carrying the ball for CIO.

He'll be supported on the American Forum of the Air program by Frank Fenton, AFL national director of organization. Opponents will be Sen. Joseph H. Ball—one of the Congressmen who introduced the bill, and Donald Richberg, of NRA days, who is one of the master minds behind this piece of anti-labor legislation.

* * *

The next CIO America United show over NBC at 1:15 p.m. EWT Sunday will feature veterans' problems. Speakers will be Ted Silvey, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, a representative of some veterans' organization, and a Congressman.

Start MVA Drive

The word "flood" is deeply implanted in the minds of millions of citizens who live along the Missouri River. This week representatives of hundreds of thousands of them did something about it.

More than 150 people from every state in the Missouri Valley except Wyoming met at Omaha, Nebr., to form a Regional Committee for a Missouri Valley Authority, aimed not only at controlling floods but also at providing irrigation and electric power.

Representatives of CIO, AFL, farm and business organizations pledged support for a drive to obtain a million signatures on a petition to Congress to establish an MVA, which, it is estimated, will provide a total of 10 million jobs.

The St. Louis Mayor's Committee sent a delegation to Washington to see what could be done about loosening controls for civilian production in St. Louis where cutbacks on primary war contracts will affect 45,000 workers by fall. Here, the CIO delegation (l. to r.), J. W. McConnell, Oscar Ehrhardt and Robert Logsden are making the rounds of government officials and Congressmen.

At Representative John R. Sullivan's office, above, they are assured that he will go all-out in the fight for adequate unemployment compensation. At Undersecretary of War Patterson's they are assured that six of the eight buildings of the U. S. Cartridge Plant will be used for files and records of army personnel. This would bring between six and eight thousand federal jobs.

Mr. St. Louis Comes to Washington

THE alarming rate at which cutbacks have been hitting the St. Louis area, without immediate evidence of plans for peacetime conversion, brought representatives of the CIO, AFL and Chamber of Commerce to Washington this week.

At issue was the announced shut-down of the U. S. Cartridge plant in St. Louis, employing 16,000 workers. The St. Louis Mayor's Labor-Management Committee sent a joint delegation to Washington to press for action in releasing the plant for civilian production.

The entire delegation saw Undersecretary of War Patterson and were reassured that the War Dept. had plans for using six of the main buildings as a central office for records and files for personnel records of soldiers. This work would employ between six and eight thousand persons. Two buildings would be left for industrial operation.

The delegation also received assurances that building materials would be released in the fall which would permit construction of industrial plants to employ another 8,000.

The CIO delegates were: Pres. Robert B. Logsdon of the St. Louis CIO Council, Council Sec. Oscar Ehrhardt and J. W. McConnell, president of Local 825 of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. They visited their Congressmen, and secured pledges of support for federal-guaranteed unemployment compensation benefits of $25 for 26 weeks, to tide workers over the reconversion period.

The delegation grew out of the Mayor's Labor-Management Committee which was formed a year and a half ago when the first cutbacks hit St. Louis. This committee is composed of three representatives each from the CIO, AFL, industry and the mayor's office.

By Fall 45,000 workers on primary contracts in the St. Louis area are expected to lose their war jobs. The effect on secondary contracts is estimated to be about 100,000.

A city-wide CIO meeting of 600 shop stewards met at the end of June to plan a program to meet this cutback threat. They formulated a program for a $300,000,000 building program for the city of St. Louis. In addition the Mayor proposed a $67-million-dollar one.

Pay Checks Catch Up With John L. Lewis' Publicity; Headlines Won't Buy Hamburgers

By FRED d'AVILA

To his right, slightly behind, sits one K. C. Adams, publicity agent. He has just tossed an adding machine into the fifth row center and has started to pound a typewriter.

ADAMS: YOU tell 'em, JOHN, YOU tell 'em.

ADAMS (tearing paper out of Lewis' hand and dashing off stage, right): WUXTRY! WUXTRY! Read all about the big sensation! JOHN L. LEWIS wins miners $1.50 a day wage increase. JOHN L. WUXTRY. JOHN. L. WUXTRY! WUXTRY! WUXTRY!

LEWIS (disturbed, but hungry): Where? Where?

LEWIS (pertrubed): Who are you?

LEWIS (duet with Adams): $1.50 a day. JOHN L. LEWIS. $1.50 a day. JOHN L. LEWIS. $1.50 a day! JOHN L. LEWIS!

And it's darned serious business for a lot of members of John L. Lewis' Mine Workers Union who have discovered, the hard way, that glittering $1.50 a day increases from the last contract are just a lot of baloney—sliced down in some cases to as little as 10 to 14 cents a day.

The whole story hit the street this week in STEEL LABOR, official publication of the CIO United Steelworkers, which decided that the public should know the truth as two members of the Mine Workers see it reflected in their pay checks.

Demchak said that members of the local found that their raises amounted to 10 to 14 cents a day and that his own increase for April was just $3.50 for 22 days' work—less than 16 cents a day.

"This pay day we were given our retroactive pays, and I was very much surprised to find an extra $3.50 in my pay envelope—this being a full retroactive pay for one month's work. If anyone can show me how a raise of $1.50 per day will show a total of $3.50 extra for a month's work, I'll be quite pleased."

STEEL LABOR also printed some interesting figures which showed that Lewis strikes in three years since Pearl Harbor got the soft coal miners an increase of only 13 cents an hour in average hourly earnings, while during the same period the CIO Steelworkers under Philip Murray won 28.1 cents an hour—without strikes. Here are the figures:

	Dec., 1941	Dec., 1944	Gain
Hourly Earnings
Coal	$1.057	$1.187	$.13
Steel	.983	1.264*	.281
Weekly Earnings
Coal	$33.47	$50.39	$16.92
Steel	39.26	59.33*	20.07
Hours
Coal	32	43.1	11.1
Steel	40	47.	7.

STEEL LABOR also pointed out that iron ore miners in the Steelworkers Union and the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union won portal to portal pay for travel time in a legal fight, without time lost in strikes. The pay was retroactive to 1938, following a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in 1944.

Lewis rejected legal means, and as a result a lot of miners had hungry bellies during the 1943 strikes. And then when they finaly did get portal to portal pay, they got $40 each as "compensation" for the years they should have got it since 1938!

It all adds up to a comment made recently by Drew Pearson, well-known Washington Merry-Go-Round columnist, who said:

"With all the bluster of John L. Lewis—plus his strikes—he has not won so much in actual benefits for his union as Phil Murray, who stuck strictly to the no-strike pledge and used government machinery."

And, as THE VOICE would say, "It's darned embarrassing, isn't it, John?"

Another Atrocity Victim

Labors' Stake in World Charter

By PHILIP MURRAY, President of CIO

The CIO wholeheartedly supports the San Francisco Charter of the United Nations.

It is fortunate that we have the opportunity to pass upon this Charter while we are engaged in the bloody struggle against Japanese militarism. Under these circumstances the burning desire of the American people to secure a lasting peace will not permit a repetition of our experience following the last World War.

Reservations or limitations of any description to the United Nations Charter must be understood as simply an attempt to defeat its enactment. To this there can be but one answer—the early and overwhelming approval of the Charter by the Senate of the United States.

The enduring peace—for which the people of the world now yearn—will not be realized unless such unity continues, based upon the military power and political solidarity of the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union—not merely in words or expressions of pious hopes—but in concrete action.

This must be the watchword in the administration of the United Nations Charter. Unanimity and mutual trust among the Great Powers will be the foundation upon which the world can proceed to solve the problems which now confront us.

The Charter repeatedly emphasizes that for the creation of peaceful and friendly relations among nations attention must be given to the promotion of higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development. The Economic and Social Council, established by the Charter, is charged with the responsibility of taking necessary steps to accomplish these purposes.

With these objectives the CIO is in complete sympathy.

It is, however, unfortunate that the representatives of the world organized labor movement were not given recognition at the San Francisco Conference and afforded the opportunity in a consultative capacity to express the viewpoint of labor and participate in the forging of the Charter of world peace.

This error cannot be repeated without disastrous consequences, in the work of the United Nations Organizations.

World peace and friendly relations among nations to be enduring must be based not only on agreements among governments but upon the friendship, understanding and common effort of the great mass of their people.

The World Trade Union Federation—representing over 60 million workers throughout the world—must be afforded the opportunity of participating in the work of the Economic and Social Council. In this manner the common people through their spokesmen—the leaders of organized labor—will be assured an effective voice in the formulation of policies which shall so vitally and directly affect them.

Organized labor has a penetrating understanding of the desires and hopes of the common people on all social and economic problems. Their contribution to the work of the Social and Economic Council through direct participation would be immeasurable.

Labor unions recognize their present heavy responsibilities. They have been in the forefront in the struggle for unity, victory, peace and progress. They are anxious and must be permitted to participate in the councils of the International Security Organization in order that the common people may play their proper role in forging the New World.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

EITHER they can't count in Congress, or Rep. John Rankin is a majority all by himself, or a minority is more than a majority, or democracy means the rule of the few—or something. Its all very confusing.

When Rankin, as chairman of the House veterans' committee, reported favorably a union-smashing bill by a small minority of his committee, that was a "majority report."

But when a majority of his committee signed a report disapproving Rankin's bill, theirs was called a "minority report."

* * *

For Rankin that's nothing. He and the other poll-taxers are so used to being the tail that wags the dog, that when they refuse to budge they paralyze the rest of Congress.

Rankin is only one member of the Un-American Committee, and not even the chairman. But just as did Martin Dies, he makes a noise like the whole committee, whether the other members like it or not.

Of course, Rankin has had lots of experience in confusing minorities with majorities. He works on the principle, "the majority, that's me."

The majority of the citizens where he comes from are denied the right to vote by the highest poll tax in the country. So he is regularly elected by a tiny minority. Yet he claims to be the majority choice.

* * *

But why pick on Rankin? He is only one drip in the puddle, one jerk in the spasm that convulses Congress.

In the polltax states, only 19% of the citizens of voting age actually vote, as compared with 62% in the rest of the country.

The 79 polltax members of Congress are elected by only 2,757,514 voters, out of a total Congressional vote of more than 45 million. One-fifth of the Congress is elected by less than one-fifteenth of the voters.

Yet this minority, the least representative of the Representatives, repeatedly rule Congress as if they were the majority.

* * *

It has held up the business of Congress for weeks in order to kill the FEPC, to whose support a majority of Congress is committed.

And repeatedly it has blocked or sabotaged progressive legislation through its stranglehold on important committees.

* * *

All of which shows we still have a long way to go to win democratic rights for all Americans and to make Congress truly reflect the democratic will of the people.

Similarly, although working people are supposed to have the same rights to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness as all other Americans, labor still has a long pull to win equality of consideration.

* * *

In industry, for instance, the worker is accorded less consideration than is either capital or plant.

When a factory is built and money borrowed to start business, a firm reckons plant, machinery and interest as fixed costs which it must meet the year around. Executives and administrative staff are also hired on a yearly basis.

The workers are about the only element in production whose upkeep is not regarded as a continuing obligation. They are taken on or laid off at shortest notice, and paid only for the time they are actually producing, without regard to their need for a living the year around.

Profits have been allowed to increase many times more than wages. Yet in reconversion, first thought has been given to protecting profit interests in termination of contracts, in tax refunds to guarantee "normal profits" after the war, etc.

Congress acts eagerly and speedily on any measure to advance business interests.

Labor, on the other hand, already suffering from cutbacks and reduced take-home pay, still has no relief from the wage freeze, and Congress delays endlessly to give it the least protection through emergency unemployment benefits.

These are a few reasons why we need a CIO and a PAC to fight constantly for American democracy and equality.

Nazis Still 'Biting Dogs,' Is Senate Group's Warning

By C. W. FOWLER

THE military defeat of Germany does not mean that Germany can never again make war on her neighbors. Germany today is, in fact, "better prepared to implement her plot for world conquest than she was at the end of World War I." That was the conclusion announced this week by the Kilgore Committee of the U. S. Senate.

WHAT NAZIS HAVE LEFT

1. Germany has the world's third strongest industrial economy.

2. Germany has tremendous industrial recuperative power, demonstrated repeatedly in the past 50 years.

3. Germany has a strong network of international connections through cartels, industrialists and pro-fascist elements in other countries, especially in Britain and the U. S.

4. Germany has a large, highly skilled and utterly unscrupulous corps of technicians, scientists, engineers and trained personnel necesary to a policy of world conquest.

Despite Allied bombings, less than 20 per cent of Germany's industrial capacity was destroyed—as shown not only by the Kilgore report but by testimony of leading U. S. government officials.

And above all, Germany has the will to conquer and the technique of organization, the "know-how" of preparing the political, economic and military bases for conquest, the committee stated.

At the present time, Germany is playing a repetition of the role she played after 1918—the role of the prostrate, helpless subject of the conqueror's will. The role is being re-played for precisely the same reason it was played after World War I—as a cover-up for preparations for another try at world conquest.

"SCIENCE OF AGGRESSION"

The report declared that the "science of aggression" which Germany has perfected over generations "rest on a series of major deceptions"—"(a) that the war of aggression is the product of a few Nazi fanatics; (b) that the German economy is a normal civilian economy and should be maintained as such; (c) that the entire network of relationships between German cartels and monopolies of other countries is essential to the conduct of international trade and industrial progress; (d) that German science and German scientists are an instrument of human progress, and (e) that the Allies have less to fear from Germany than they have to fear from one another."

To head off another war of German aggression, certain to come if Germany is permitted to keep her industry, her techniques and her international financial connections, the Kilgore Committee report recommends application of the Yalta conference formula, which said:

"It is our inflexible purpose to destroy German militarism and nazism and to insure that Germany will never again be able to disturb the peace of the world. We are determined to disarm and disband all German armed forces; break up for all time the German General Staff . . . eliminate or control all German industry that could be used for military production . . . bring all war criminals to just and swift punishment and exact reparation, and . . . wipe out the Nazi party . . ."

It's Round 2 in PAC's Battle

THE CIO Political Action Committee went into round two of its educational battle this week.

PAC, which proved a one-round whirlwind against reaction last Fall, outlined in Washington a new educational program. CIO Pres. Philip Murray and PAC Chairman Sydney Hillman said PAC will plug for:

1. Revision upward of the national wage policy.

2. A minimum 65-cents-an-hour wage, by amendment of the Wage-Hour law.

3. Supplementary federal unemployment compensation benefits to provide for workers whose state allowances are insufficient and for others who are not covered by state laws.

4. An adequate FEPC appropriation.

5. The Murray-Patman full employment bill and the Wagner-Murray-Dingell social security bill.

6. Prompt approval of the San Francisco Charter and the Bretton Woods agreement.

"PAC," Murray and Hillman said, "recognizes that while the overwhelming victory won by the democratic forces in the 1944 national election represented a serious setback for the forces of reaction, those forces have not been routed.

"On the contrary, and particularly with the defeat of Hitler and the assurance of military victory over Japan, those forces have sharpened their attacks against labor and the people."

Murray and Hillman said that PAC will continue full support for President Truman's course as charted by FDR, with the clear understanding that PAC will continue to function independently, and will be responsible solely to the CIO membership.

The Ball and Chain Bill

The most serious legislative attack on labor unions since the war started is the Ball-Burton-Hatch Federal Industrial Relations Act. What would happen to labor if this proposal were made law is told by CIO General Counsel Pressman and his Assistant in the following article, third of a series.

By LEE PRESSMAN AND FRANK DONNER

THE proposed Federal Industrial Relations Bill has no concern with whether collective bargaining should be workable and launches an irresponsible attack upon the principle of majority rule and exclusive representation.

If 75% of the employes voted for a union in an election it still could not execute a union shop contract unless they were also members of the organization. Moreover, if at any time the union's membership dropped below 75% of the employes the union shop or maintenance of membership would automatically become illegal.

In order to make sure that obtaining a union shop will not be an easy matter, the bill proposes a number of further obstacles.

1. It requires that a union shop agreement be ratified by 60% of all the employes covered in a vote cast by secret ballot.

2. It provides that all existing employes or new employes be admitted to the union on the same terms as those enjoyed by at least a majority of the existing membership.

3. It provides that no member be deprived of his membership except on written charges and after a fair hearing.

These provisions (1) impose such burdens and qualifications upon the union shop so as virtually to outlaw it; (2) invite employers to make all sorts of technical objections to the union shop even where the union has satisfied all requirements; and (3) make the government a czar over the internal operations of the union.

Tucked away in another portion of the bill is an equally destructive attack upon the majority rule principle. This is a provision that any individual employe or group of employes shall have the right individually or as a group to adjust with the management any grievance independently and without the presence of any other person.

The Labor Board, labor experts, and the courts have all recognized that collective bargaining and the adjustment of grievances is founded upon the fact that only the economic strength of the collective bargaining representative can cope with the economic power of the employer, that the individual employe is helpless in dealing with his employer, that adjustments between the employer and individual employes can only be sham and one-sided.

The present bill would permit a parasitic form of individual bargaining whereby the strength of the union is sapped through individual dealing on the part of single employes or groups of employes.

This bold invitation to the employer to undercut the authority of the bargaining agent, which is contained in this bill, is no accident. It is thoroughly consistent with the entire structure and purpose of the bill.

Donald Richberg, the guiding spirit of this bill, is a long-standing enemy of the principle of majority rule and exclusive representation. It was Richberg who during the NRA days worked night and day to construe and apply Section 7(a) of the NRA so as to reject the principle of majority rule and exclusive representation.

At that time Richberg's efforts were rebuked and resisted by labor authorities who condemned his ideas as unworkable. They are even more unworkable and destructive today.

AFL Meets on WTUC

Called by Courtney Ward, the one AFL man who went to London to observe the World Trade Union Conference, a meeting of AFL officials will be held in Cleveland July 21 to discuss means of affiliating to the new world labor unit.

"Because of the position of the AFL, isolating itself from world labor participation, the AFL will become the only principal labor organization not represented in the new world federation," Ward said.

OK's Prisoner Use

Its OK with the French trade unions (CGT) for Nazi prisoners of war to earn their keep and their pardon by working for it, according to Allied Labor News.

Conditions are that Nazi labor would be used only where French labor is not available and would cost the employers the same as French workers. Extra money, above that paid the Nazis under the Geneva convention rules, would be put in a fund to aid French prisoners of the Nazis, whose work would be supervised by a commission with unionists serving on it.

French Losses

French railway workers were hit hard by the Nazi occupation, and they fought back, too. More than 3,500 were killed by Allied air raids, 15,000 were wounded, and 309 executed by the Germans. This last figure is conclusive proof that the railway workers played their full part in sabotaging the Nazi occupation forces.

Reports from Franco Spain show that railway workers there are doing their part to break the fascist regime. Entire freight cars loaded with goods disappear almost daily, according to an anti-Franco refugee recently out of the country.

Argentine Test

Some pretty brave men—trade unionists—are going to test the sincerity of Argentina's official protests of democracy. According to ALN, seven union leaders are planning to return from exile and face the risk of imprisonment and torture from Argentina's current fascist leaders. Before leaving Montevideo, Uruguay (Argentina's democratic neighbor), they sent thanks to Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Latin-American Committee for its interest "in the problems of Argentine democracy and labor."

Workers' Vacations

Vacations for Soviet workers have been resumed, the Soviet Information Bureau says in a cable to The CIO NEWS. All vacations were stopped when the Germans attacked in June, 1941, and are being taken again now after four years of war.

German fury was especially strong against workers' vacation resorts, maintained by the Soviet trade unions. More than 90 were destroyed in the Ukraine alone, including elaborate hospitals and sanitariums.

FOR PEA

The San Francisco Charter

By C. W. FOWLER

THE CIO, speaking through Philip Murray, has given its complete backing to the charter of the United Nations now before the Senate for ratification.

The CIO, as a matter of fact, started working for the kind of international unity that produced the charter long before the meeting in San Francisco last April. Now that the charter is completed to the satisfaction of every delegate, the CIO is urging every Senator to cast his vote for the United Nations and against poverty, fascism and a new world war.

What manner of document is this United Nations charter that it calls forth such enthusiastic support from the free people of the world? What basis is there for the almost univ confidence that this time the p loving nations have managed to something that will work?

The charter of the United Na aims to do these things, stated i preamble:

"We, the people of the Un Nations, determined to save succ ing generations from the scourg war . . . to establish condi under which justice and respect the obligations . . . to reaffirm f in fundamental human rights . . . . promote social progress better standards of life in la freedom . . . practice tolerance live together in peace . . . ins that armed force shall not be save in the common interest .

Wreckers at Work—A D

By JOHN R. IRVING

THE first test of United Nations' cooperation for lasting peace was passed with flying colors at the San Francisco Conference.

This realization must have been a great shock to a majority of editorial and news writers, and must have surprised the many readers who followed the progress of the conference through most daily papers.

For a close survey of the manner in which five typical U. S. dailies handled this story reveals a deliberate attempt on the part of four of them to disunite the United Nations. The newspapers were:

The Chicago Daily Tribune (McCormick-Patterson), the Journal-American (Hearst), the N. Y. World-Telegram (Scripps-Howard), the N. Y. Times, and an independent paper, the Philadelphia Record.

The technique used by the press in its attempt to break the unity of the United Nations was:

1. To magnify and feature every rift and difference that occurred in the conference, thereby creating an atmosphere of chaos and conflict.

2. To inject in the news stories, either directly or through innuendo, an element of doubt as to the success of the conference.

3. To direct most attacks against the Soviet Union.

Consider the facts: On May 6, the Soviet Union announced the arrest of 16 Poles on charges of sabotage. No other single story of the entire conference was given as much prominence or as much space.

On May 6, the N. Y. Times devoted 72 inches to the release, and on May 7, 8, and 9, 45¾ inches, not counting the blazing front page headlines. The Chicago Daily Tribune gave it 40 inches on May 6 and 48 inches on May 7, 8, and 9, also with front page streamer headlines.

Compare this with coverage of the big story on June 8 that agreement among the Big 4 was reached on the veto question. This event may be considered the turning point in the writing of the charter, and perhaps the turning point in the peace of the world. Yet the N. Y. Times devoted 33 inches to it; the Chicago Daily Tribune 34½ inches—far less than the space given to the arrest of the Poles.

There were numerous differences which did exist at this important conference. One would expect to find them there. But instead of objective analysis, almost every one was played up as a fight of the Soviet Union against all the other nations represented at the conference.

The seating of Argentina as a mem

Asst. U. S. Secretary of State Nelson Rockefeller, credited with getting fascist Argentina admitted to the United Nations, does some hurried huddling with then Secretary of State Stettinius.

GOP Delegate Harold Stassen leans forward to make—or take—a point from V. M. Molotov, Foreign Commisar of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and leader of his delegation to the San Francisco meeting. The man on the right is an interpreter.

CE AFTER VICTORY

The machinery set-up is not complex. It consists of four basic units: 1) a General Assembly; 2) a Security Council of 11 members; 3) an Economic and Social Council and 4) an International Court of Justice.

The General Assembly determines broad policy, fixes the budget, supervises the work of the economic council, the court and other units. On major issues, such as recommendations on keeping the peace, election of Security Council delegates, and the like, the vote must be by a two-thirds majority.

The Security Council is the key unit in the whole setup. Its job is to enforce peace, to see to it that aggression does not start—and if it does start, to use United Nations military force to crush it.

The United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, China and France are permanent members of the Security Council. Six non-permanent members are elected for two-year terms. Any one of the members of the Council possesses a veto power which it can use to prevent action against itself or another nation.

The Economic and Social Council is aimed at the roots of war—economic and social backwardness and lack of development. Its job is to promote higher standards of living, to help in the development of backward countries and areas, to promote world health, and to protect human rights and basic freedoms.

Finally, the International Court of Justice will function as the World Court functioned under the League of Nations—but without the weaknesses that prevented the old League and Court from doing anything to prevent the arming of fascist nations and the outbreak of aggresive war.

The charter is obviously not perfect. The admission of fascist Argentina to the United Nations Organization was a serious blow to democracy and a threat to world peace. The refusal to do anything of a real nature for oppressed colonial peoples was an evasion of another critical problem.

Most serious omission of all, which Philip Murray, the CIO and the World Trade Union Conference fought at the time, was the failure to call the working people of the world into consultation. The representatives of 60 million workers from 40 countries were meeting in Oakland while the UNCIO delegates were meeting across the bay in San Francisco. They offered their services and their help to the United Nations. But the influence of Sen. Vandenberg (R. Mich.) and Britain's Anthony Eden kept them out—despite the urgings of Pres. Murray and the direct appeal of the Soviet delegation, led by Molotov.

An overwhelming Senate vote is expected for the charter, probably this week. Only a handful of diehards will vote against it—"isolationism" is unpopular and dangerous nowadays.

Ratifying the charter does not solve the problem of keeping the peace. No document or organization can keep the peace unless the big powers—the U. S., the U. S. S. R. and Britain—want to see it kept.

That, as the World Trade Union Conference has pointed out, is a job for every worker in every country of the world—and a job in which he has his whole personal, political and economic security at stake.

Daily Press Hatchet Job ber of the United Nations was one source of conflict. The N. Y. Times on May 30 spoke of Molotov's motion to delay consideration of the Argentina question for several days as a move to "disrupt the session."

Of the five papers studied only the Philadelphia Record on April 30 referred to Argentina as a Fascist country—but a "reformed Fascist" country—and refrained from attacking the Soviet Union on the issue: "Argentina, reformed Fascist of the Western World, today was granted a seat in the world security conference, but the struggle over its admission split the Big 4 wide open."

The element of doubt—doubt as to the success of the conference and doubt as to the intentions of the Big 4—was skillfully created in the reader's mind through the use of subtly worded headlines and well - placed 'editorialized' news stories. (Here an exception must be made of the Philadelphia Record, for throughout the conference, with few exceptions, this paper succeeded in maintaining objectivity.)

The press, on the other hand, ignored or ridiculed the World Trade Union Conference, which met at San Francisco at the same time to draft a constitution for a permanent world organization of labor.

This conference wielded together trade union movements of 44 countries including 60 million workers and including organized workers of the Soviet Union.

The unity there was evidently not news for the commercial press. The N. Y. Times account of the labor conference on May 6 was typical of the general attitude of the press on this subject: "With the AFL unrepresented, trade union leaders, assertedly acting for some 60 million workers in 35 countries, made public today in summarized form the tentative draft of a constitution for what they described as a single, all-inclusive powerful and fully democratic world organization of labor."

Subsequent events of the conference proved the press to be utterly false in its evaluation and understanding. The acceptance by the Big 4 of the human and historic instrument for peace, the United Nations Charter, is proof that the United Nations were willing to compromise their differences. But the bias and the skepticism promoted by the press during the early phases of the conference cannot be dismissed lightly.

The press tried to create cynicism, instead of faith. It gave encouragement to fascists and disrupters. But, fortunately, it did not completely succeed in poisoning the minds of the people, who are working for peace and for unity, and are looking forward to an immediate ratification of the charter.

A. B. Martin, Director, United Railroad Workers, CIO, reports a splendid victory on the Sante Fe RR among the maintenance-of-way groups. This victory was won after a vicious campaign was carried on against the Union by both the company and the AFL. The vote was 6,100 for the CIO and 5,200 for the AFL.

This is a good omen for the coming election among the shop crafts on the Pennsylvania Railroad to be held during the early part of August. Congratulations to all participating in this splendid victory.

CIO Wins Big Rail Vote

The CIO United Railroad Workers this week won the Mediation Board election held among maintenance of way and miscellaneous groups on the Sante Fe Railroad. The vote for CIO was 6,100; 5,200 voted AFL and 522 votes were void. Some 13,000 workers were eligible.

Women's Special Interest In FEPC

By ELEANOR FOWLER

Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

WOMEN have a special interst in the fight for continuation of the Fair Employment Practices Committee. Women have always suffered from discrimination in employment, and although the work of the FEPC does not deal directly with those discriminations, the pattern of fair employment practices, which it seeks to establish for minority groups, benefits women workers.

American women have always recognized their community of interest with the oppressed. The movement for recognition of women's rights in this country grew out of the participation of women in the struggle for the abolition of slavery.

Sarah and Angelina Grimke, young South Carolina women, who freed their slaves in the 1830's and came north to preach abolition, were among the first American women to speak in public. When the Massachusetts legislature in 1838 invited Angelina to speak to a committee considering anti-slavery petitions, it was the first time a woman had been heard in Boston State House.

Eight American women went as delegates to the first World Anti-Slavery Convention in London in 1840. A stormy opening session resulted in refusal of the Convention to seat them because they were women.

This discrimination led Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, two of the women present, to call the first Women's Right Convention which met in Seneca Falls, New York, in 1848.

Frederick Douglass, one of the great leaders on Negro emancipation, was present at that convention. He joined in urging passage of the only resolution which aroused any real controversy, one proposed by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, which declared that it "is the duty of the women of the country to secure to themselves the sacred right of the franchise." Asking for the vote seemed a very bold step to many of those present but the resolution was adopted by a narrow margin.

Today our Constitution guarantees the right to vote to all American citizens regardless of sex or race. But many discriminations which affect women, Negroes and other minority groups of our citizens still prevail.

The time is ripe to end those discriminations. One of the purposes which the nations signatory to the United Nations Charter are pledged to achieve is "Universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion."

$3,000,000 A Year Won By Textile

Putting an additional $3,000,000 a year into workers' pay envelopes, a new contract has been negotiated by the CIO Textile Workers Union and the American Woolen Co., it was announced by Emil Rieve, the union's president.

The agreement will run until February 1, 1946, and covers 24,000 workers in 20 of the American Woolen chain's 24 mills in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York and Kentucky.

- Premium pay, giving workers $600,000 more a year.
- Second week's vacation, giving them $650,000 more a year.
- A 60c an hour minimum wage.
- Group insurance paid by the company, costing about $900,000 a year.
- Wage brackets for specific job classifications, which will give another $650,000 a year.

20TH CENTURY WORK GLOVES

1 It was just for a day, but it was fun. On Saturday night at six o'clock 150 women auto workers, by arrangement of their UAW-CIO recreation department and women's bureau, drove 40 miles from Detroit to the YWCA Camp Talahi for talks and fun. If the postman would have been handy they would have written a postcard, saying "Having a wonderful time." Irene Hrit of Local 314, at the top of the diving board, or Frankie Gregan of Local 7, on the second step, or Vern Willie of Local 817, or Jennie Wiejowski of Local 946, would all vouch for that. They went two week-ends in June, and plan for more.

2 It cost $5, including meals and bus transportation. The girls swam, fished, walked, sang, picnicked, did just about everything that can be done "under the sun." And they talked. Mostly their talk was about their future in the auto industry. About jobs for all and jobs for women. At 6 o'clock on Sunday they again went back home, refreshed from their athletics. The Union is planning to have regular weekly outings to such camp sites. Clatie White of Local 7 gets her bait properly hooked by Olga Mader of the Union's recreation department. She's arranging these weekends, and a series of other recreational activities.

3 The most popular sport of the weekend was boating on the lake. In the evenings they sang, and picnicked before an open fire. The girls did KP.

4 Ping pong champions were Harriet Phillips and Irene Smigielski of Local 174. The girls felt refreshed and ready for their work in the war plants.

Labor Education

FE Schedules Six Area Schools

Six district schools of one and two weeks' duration will be conducted this summer and fall by the CIO Farm Equipment & Metal Workers. Drawing on the experience they gained last year, when a 30-day national training school climaxed the union's educational program, the farm equipment workers have decided to decentralize the full-time school program in order to make wider participation possible.

The first district school will be held in Auburn, N. Y., beginning August 15. A two-week school will be held in Chicago the last two weeks in September. Other schools will be held in October and November.

Wage policy, economic and political action to meet the reconversion and postwar problems of workers will dominate the schools' curricula. Although the farm equipment industry has no serious reconversion problem, and is still suffering from a newspaper shortage, FE officials pointed out that wage problems and other advances by farm equipment workers must be considered in relation to the problems of all industrial workers.

Labor economics, the history and policies of CIO, and the struggle for a union in the farm equipment industry will be taught, in addition to such staples in workers education as parliamentary procedure and public speaking.

FE schools are expected to place a great stress upon the working of local union executive boards and the buildnig of the steward body.

"We try to orient our courses and our instruction on the basis of the concrete organizational problems facing our students in a given district," FE editor and educational director Edwin Schonfeld explained.

"The aim of our educational program is to assist the districts in the solution of problems and in the strengthening of the organization through the training of personnel," he said.

The object of the schools is to increase the participation in the union's affairs of all levels of local leadership."

Hoisery Union Mixes Fun and Learning

Mixing education and recreation in a country place out of town even if for only short doses can go a long way in stimulating and developing local union leadership. The American Federation of Hosiery Workers have recently had successful experiences with weekend institutes of this type, states William L. Rafsky, AFHW Education and Research director.

Designed to develop leadership in the newer local unions, the institutes provided instruction for small groups of busy union officials who could only devote a weekend to these activities. Seventeen members from four local branches in the Philadelphia area attended the first of these institutes June 2 and 3 at the Pendle Hill School, near Philadelphia.

Instruction was provided in parliamentary procedure, public speaking, how to run an active local, techniques of bargaining. In addition, those attending heard a lecture on inflation in the postwar period. Use was made of the Pendle Hill School staff as well as union officials.

A War Labor Board representative, William Simkin, who was a former impartial chairman for the hosiery industry explained WLB policy and answered questions on its procedure.

A similar program was followed at the Highlander Folk School in Tennessee June 23 and 24, when 22 hosiery workers from the Chattanooga area spent a weekend at this beautiful country place atop the Cumberland Mountains. The students learned about parliamentary law and the handling of grievances by acting through a union meeting and by actually arguing grievances. A cross discussion of local union problems under guidance of the union's Educational Director proved to be a good way to exchange experiences and provide ideas on how to improve local branch operations.

Community singing and folk dancing were featured at both places. In connection with a session on the handling of grievances, the UAW-CIO slide film, "The Saga 666," was shown.

Although a weekend does not provide sufficient time for learning much, a lively program can stimulate the leaders to do a better job and to give them just enough in terms of tools to do that job.

The Hosiery Federation believes it has done just that and is planning to hold other weekend institutes.

Two are scheduled for August and a third will be held at Highlander on September 15-16.

Famous Negroes

Short biographies of some well known Negroes in different periods of history are told in simple language in an illustrated book, "Our Negro Brother," by Edith H. Mayer. It is published by Shady Hill Press, 17 East 96th St., New York City.

The book was written as an answer to the many requests from teachers and parents for a book for children of elementary school age which would help further racial understanding.

"History has been unfair in the things that it has not told about the Negro," says an introduction by Anne Coolidge.

"It has been unfair in the things that it has let people think about the Negro.

"In this book we tell a few stories everybody should know.

"We tell a few of the things about the Negro which, too often, have been left out of the history books."

Book Review

Story of Lumberjack And The Fight for Unionism

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

The spirit of Paul Bunyan, legendary superman of the forests, whose amazing exploits were spun out of the imagination of countless lumberjacks, still haunts the lumber camps of America here and there, in spite of modern industrialization.

Many changes have taken place in the industry since the days of the early logging camps so often romanticized with their "womanless, homeless, voteless" workers in fiction, but the modern lumberjack still tends to be a distinctive type.

The story of these changes and what they have meant to the workers in the industry is told by Vernon Jensen in "Lumber and Labor," latest in the series of "Labor in Twentieth Century America."

The book is of great interest not only to the CIO's Intl. Woodworkers of America but to the CIO as a whole, for it is one of the few recent books which treats of the development of a CIO international in detail against the background of a careful study of the industry concerned.

"Without a knowledge of its structure, regional developments and characteristics, processes, living conditions and labor force, and not least, its economic problems," Vernon writes, "the history of labor in the lumber industry cannot be fully understood or appreciated."

Lumber has been and still is one of America's great industries. In addition to the half million workers employed in the lumber industry proper for the past 50 years, the wood-using and wood processing industries have employed another half million. In terms of employment, it was dominant in at least nine states before the war, and ranked second in ten others. The war has altered these relationships only slightly, Jenson says.

MAJOR REGIONS

There are four major lumber regions, each of which was at one time a leading producer. As described by Jensen these are:

The pine forests of the Lake States have produced much of the "romance" that has grown up in connection with lumbering.

The Southern Pine region, the most sprawling of all, extends through nearly all of the coastal plain and rolling hill areas from Virginia southward.

The fourth major region is in the West, and consists of a number of sub-regions including the one running through both Washington and Oregon west of the Cascade Range. This sub-region, which has the best stand of fir timber the world has ever known, is known as the Douglas Fir region.

The South and the West have been the great producers for a number of years, and are strong competitors for the same market. "As may be expected," Jensen says, "the economic problems arising from intense competition in the industry center primarily in these two great producing regions."

UNIONIZATION

After taking up in detail the economic conditions and special problems of each of these four major regions, Jensen begins his story of labor organization, tracing it from attempts at unionization in the West in the 1890's to the formation of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers in 1937. The internal conflicts and jurisdictional disputes with the AFL which mark the story of the IWA since its formation are described to throw "into relief some of the difficult problems of union leadership," Jensen says.

"Philosophical and tactical differences threw men and groups at variance with each other. Painful lessons have had to be learned, and competent leaders should profit in the future from the errors of the past," he states.

Lumber and Labor by Vernon H. Jensen, Farrar & Rinehart, Inc., New York. The Intl. Woodworkers, 314 S. W. Ninth Ave., Portland 5, Ore., offers the book at a special price of $1.80 a copy in the U. S. and $2 in Canada to members of the union.

Advice for Wounded Veterans

Assurance to wounded servicemen that in most instances their earning capacity need not be impaired even by serious disability, is given in a pamphlet, Straight Talk for Disabled Veterans, just published by the Public Affairs Committee.

"The fellow who would have made good with all of his body intact can make good despite the most severe body losses," writes Edna Yost, who prepared the pamphlet in collaboration with Dr. Lillian M. Gibreth.

The authors describe a number of actual instances out of tens of thousands that could be cited to prove that men bearing all kinds of physical losses can achieve economic independence and build for themselves lives that are satisfying and happy.

Disabled men are warned, however, that success does not come without great effort. They are urged to cooperate with their physicians and nurses in activities designed to overcome the effects of their injuries, and to get the best possible training for their future jobs.

By law the disabled veteran is guaranteed an opportunity to prepare for work in which he will not find himself at an economic disadvantage. But the law is not going to be of much help unless the veterans themselves take some responsibility for discovering and training for the kind of work they are capable of doing.

By ARTHUR WHITE

A radio commentator who has laid many an egg in his "predictions" concerning the war, questioned a radio columnist: "My critics say that I'm not as fit for radio as I was for the lecture platform. What do you think?" . . . Quipped the columnist: Radio is wonderful for you. Where else can you reach millions who can't reach you?"

SNOOPS AND SNOOPS . . . USO artists will visit hospitals throughout the European Theatre of Operations, sketching wounded GIs. Servicemen receive the original portrait signed by the artist, and photostats are mailed to friends and families, all gratis. . . .

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . Nazi officers wondered what had become of Hitler. After a long search, Goebbels finally found Der Fuehrer in a Berlin cellar, calmly reading a book. . . . Amazed at this, Goebbels exclaimed: "What! You reading Mein Kampf!" . . . "Yes," answered Adolf, "I wanted to see how it ends."

A forman who had had some 300 factory hands under him was drafted. He became a captain in due time, but couldn't get into the habit of calling the GIs in his company "men." Instead, he referred to them as my "hands." One day, he turned in a report of some local action to the Commanding Officer. The paper read: "The Captain is pleased to report that he had the good fortune to have only one of his hands shot through the nose."

LABOR LAURELS . . . The N. Y. Newspaper Guild's "Free Speech Forum" which throws light into the dark corners of the labor-management scene. A radio show that rates a network spot . . . Howard Fast's "Freedom Road," a novel that makes the Reconstruction Period after the Civil War come alive.

CREAM OF WIT . . . Jack London: "A bone to a dog is not charity. Charity is the bone shared with the dog, when you're as hungry as the dog!" . . . Woodrow Wilson: "Friendship is the only cement that will ever hold the world together!" . . . Wilson Mizner: "Many a live wire would be a dead one without his connections."

Victory for The FEPC

The successful compromise on the FEPC, in which the agency gets $250,000 without a death sentence clause, was the result of hard work, good planning, and able leadership in the House.

The hard work was done in Washington and in the field, where thousands of people poured wires and letters into their Congressmen demanding continuation of FEPC.

The good planning and strategy came from a group in the House led by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.), who is also the leader of the fight for repeal of the polltax.

Public pressure was so strong that even the polltaxers in the Senate like Bilbo and Eastland were finally shut up, though not until they had done plenty of damage to the Senate and to national morale by their filibustering.

The same public pressure that forced this week's acceptable compromise on the FEPC must be applied to HR 7, the polltax repeal bill, now and throughout the summer recess.

Repeal of the polltax will be the answer to the Bilbos and the Eastlands. It will prevent such disgraceful performances as that of the last two or three weeks from occurring in the future.

The Rankin Season

Rankin is actually one of the most diabolically clever men in the Congress, who hides a cool sense of strategy under a mask of loud-mouthed Negro-baiting, labor-baiting and general virulence against everything progressive.

His scheme to divide veterans and workers through the current bill to exempt the former from the provisions of union shop contracts is a case in point. It was introduced in a typical Rankin manner—toward the end of a session—when many liberal Congressmen are absentees. It was put in with much show of concern for the veterans, and it was slipped through Rankin's committee without hearings or endorsement by his fellow members.

Actually, the bill would do as much harm to veterans as it is meant to do to unions. The returning veteran needs union protection as much as the war worker does. Yet, under the falseface of protecting the veteran, Rankin is able to make a propaganda point against unions that the daily press is quick to take up and exploit.

Washington Guide

Charter Vote Not Whole Story

There seems to be no question that the Senate will vote an overwhelming two-thirds majority for the United Nations charter within the next week or so.

Even the most bitter-end opponents of United Nations cooperation concede that six votes will probably be all that are cast against ratification.

In brief, what we used to call "isolationism" has gone out of fashion. The people's demand for an end to Fascism and to the kind of international policies that bred Fascism has made "isolationism" a horrid and outmoded word.

Actually, isolationism has always been a misleading word. Men like Hearst, McCormick, Luce, duPont and their stooges in Congress were never real isolationists, but rather imperialists, who wanted America to rule the world with a rod of iron and without consulting any other nation.

Accordingly, they were dead against the anti-Axis alliance of the U. S., Britain and the Soviet Union. They were against Bretton Woods and reciprocal trade and UNCIO.

They were afraid to come out openly with their opposition, because they knew how strong the people's feelings were—so they tried the trick of innocent looking but actually dangerous amendments to every United Nations agreement that the U. S. entered into.

This week, two Republican Senators, Millikin of Colorado, and Bushfield, duPont's South Dakota agent, have been clamoring for amendments to the UNCIO charter. They don't expect to get them passed, any more than Taft (R., O.) expected to get his amendments to the Bretton Woods agreement accepted.

But they do have a purpose in putting them forward, and that purpose is to poison the air of international cooperation. Every possible avenue of hatred and suspicion of our allies, especially the Soviet Union, is opened up and explored, with the eager help of the daily newspapers.

This is the role assigned to comparatively insignificant men like Sens. Bushfield and Millikin. Bigger GOP shots like Vandenberg (R., Mich.) are assigned the public role of supporting United Nations cooperation and voting for the charter.

Vandenberg, the Senate's leading "convert" from isolationism and the GOP's foreign policy mouthpiece, fought for admission of Fascist Argentina and for exclusion of world labor at UNCIO in San Francisco, but on Capitol Hill he emerges as the fierce defender of the charter as written.

The charter will receive an almost unanimous vote in the Senate. The CIO, along with other progressive organizations, can take most of the credit for it. The CIO and its allies will have to keep on working after the charter is ratified to see to it that nothing is allowed to sabotage United Nations cooperation now and for the rest of time.

Rankin	Attempts to split veterans and unions by exempting vets from union shop requirements. Useful in breaking strikes.	Railroaded by Rankin (D. Miss.) thru Veterans Committee. Later majority report condemned it.	Tell your Representative to stay away from this one and anything resembling it.
Benefits (HR 3736)	Pays up to $25 a week for 26 weeks to war workers, including merchant marine, Federal employes not now covered by unemployment insurance.	Hearings stalled in House Ways and Means Committee by Chmn. Doughton (D. N.C.). Bill may be offered in Senate this week.	Wire your two Senators and your Representative: tell them to pass HR 3736 with some improvements, take no recess until they've acted.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives 10 million U.S. citizens the chance to vote. Will retire Congressmen like Rankin, Bilbo et al to private life.	Passed House 2 to 1. Now stalled in Senate Judiciary subcommittee.	Urge your own Senators and Sen. Hatch (D., N.M.) as subcommittee chairman to report out and pass at once.
Ball, Burton, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; outlaws closed shop, kills collective bargaining. Sponsored by Scripps-Howard press, using Ball et al as dupes.	Senate Labor Committee; anti-labor newspapers agitating for quick hearings and vote.	Urge your Senators and Representative to oppose all such attempts to kill the Wagner Act.

Coming Up— Issues to Watch

TAXES: the Natl. Lawyers Guild has issued a program calling for help for workers in postwar taxation. The program, much like the CIO 1944 convention resolution on taxes, calls for carry-back privileges for war workers similar to those given industry, higher exemptions, repeal of the "victory tax," etc.

Meantime, the Doughton bill giving still more relief to corporations has passed the House, while Doughton's Ways and Means Committee refuses to take action on emergency unemployment benefits.

The trouble on taxes is just beginning. Unless CIO members wake up, we'll see one of the biggest tax steals in history in next year's bill. So far, there's no sign that CIO members are even thinking about taxes.

* * *

CUTS: cuts in merchant seamen's wages, now being protested by the CIO's Natl. Maritime Union, are a matter for Congress to think about, even if the immediate issue may not seem to concern them.

Seventy - seven Representatives signed a petition to Pres. Truman protesting the cut. More are signing or going to sign the general wage petition now being circulated.

The merchant seamen are the first to feel the wage cutting lash. The rest of us will follow—unless we stop the thing in its tracks.

Tell your Congressman to sign the petition now, to do everything in his power to halt the wage cut drive before we have an economic crisis on our hands.

PLEASE COPY: other cities can follow New York's example in making sure that GI's get their ballots in time for the 1945 mayoralty elections.

CIO and American Labor Party work in the election last year resulted in more than 600,000 soldier vote applications, despite Gov. Dewey's frantic efforts to stop them.

WAGE FLOOR: amendments to the Wage Hour Act raising the current 40c an hour wage floor to 65c will be offered in House and Senate before the summer recess begins.

Over 10 million U. S. workers get less than 65c an hour, live under substandard conditions. They offer no market for U. S. industrial products, are a constant threat to higher wages elsewhere.

THE PICTURE below was taken when workers at Ford's Willow Run bomber plant numbered 40,000. Today the plant is shut down. A sample CIO United Auto Workers Union survey showed this week that of 40,000 employes, 52.6% were women, 47.4% were men, and 27.6% had come from other states.

When the sample was taken 74.8% had no other jobs; 11.5% had new jobs; 13.7% were returning to their old jobs. Most of them want to come back to Willow Run—in fact 75.3%; 15.8% were undecided. Only 8.9% didn't wish to return.

With cutbacks hitting war industries, six times as many claims were filed with the Michigan unemployment compensation division in June, 1945, as were filed in June, 1944. In the country as a whole, workers receiving unemployment benefits numbered 168,996 July 7. There were 87,161 last April.

Unemployment figures were 1,080,000 in June, 1945. Economists expect a rise during the next few months unless government speeds reconversion to peacetime production, simultaneously with production for VJ Day.

'Vet' Congressmen Hit Rankin Bill, Urge GI-Labor Unity

By MELVIN PRICE and WILLIAM J. GREEN, Jr.

IN THE rehabilitation of the veterans of this war, close cooperation between labor and veterans' groups is an absolute necessity. We must not permit ourselves, whatever our interest, to become embroiled in a campaign of self-aggrandisement. We feel that there is a community of interest between veterans and labor and that if this communion is disrupted by either group, chaos for both will result.

Organized labor has clearly demonstrated a sincere desire to go all-out in protecting the re-employment rights of veterans. In the 22nd District of Illinois, one union went so far as to call for a strike because it felt that the management was not affording a veteran proper consideration. Fortunately, management realized that pressure of public opinion would be so much against it that the employer conceded the point and re-hired the veteran. A man in the service can be assured that labor unions will be among those that will help guarantee his job.

It must be remembered that in the armed forces today are thousands of men who before the war were active officers and members of labor unions. As soldiers they will resent any move to weaken their unions while they are on the battle front. They expect that their organizations will be kept intact while they are under arms.

It is interesting to note the methods that labor-busters use. Under the guise of helping veterans, anti-labor forces have proposed an amendment to the GI Bill of Rights, that would not require a veteran to join a union in a plant where he might become employed after the war. This on the surface would seem to be a measure designed to relieve the veteran of a small amount of red tape that would assure his re-employment. In effect, this measure would have the opposite effect. No greater impediment could be placed in the path of rehabilitating a veteran than to involve him against his will in a fight with labor groups.

In these labor groups that the Rankin Amendment is aimed at, are thousands of veterans of World War I. What greater calamity could befall us than to have these two groups of veterans pitted against each other.

The answer to veterans' aid lies not in exclusive legislation that would pit the veterans as a group against another group. The answer, we feel, lies in an abundant economy wherein there will be full employment.

To achieve this full employment we must have teamwork. The soldiers themselves know the great value of teamwork. In battle, under enemy fire, they have seen the coordinated action of a squad or a platoon save the day and permit the advance toward an objective.

We have both been in the Army in this war—in fact we were both enlisted men at Camp Lee, Va., at the time of our election. We have discussed the problem of post-war employment with many soldiers and find them to believe that teamwork will be necessary to assure them jobs.

We feel that the Rankin Amendment is aimed at our peacetime economy. It is directed at the gains that have been made by labor—better working conditions, shorter hours, safety protection, etc. To permit the splitting up of this labor unity would jeopardize all of the gains which many men are dying to retain.

The veterans must not be deceived; they must not be used for any purpose that does not improve their lot. We must guard against those forces that seek to embroil the veterans in a crusade to achieve some individual's purpose. They must not be used as a battering ram in any anti-union or anti-business campaign.

The veteran's welfare is the welfare of America. As he prospers so do we. As he is involved in bitter struggles with other groups, he loses and so do we all.

Spark Annual Wage Drive

"NOW is the time to mobilize for continuing prosperity," said the CIO Executive Board at its July session as it OK'ed a program aimed at bringing home to the people the value of a guaranteed annual wage. (Full text of the Board's statement appears elsewhere in this issue.)

Following the Board meeting, CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week offered the assistance of the CIO Dept. of Research & Education to CIO unions preparing statements for the labor-management conference of the Presidential Subcommittee on Guaranteed Wage Plans. Murray is a member of the Presidential Subcommittee.

The Board pointed out that "business is in an excellent position to agree to annual wage plans," with good markets waiting, and the record amount of 45 billion dollars of working capital as well as 1944 corporate profits before taxes of $25 billion.

If employers instead of workers bore the cost of the failure to run industry at top speed, the Board said, "they would find ways to provide work and would support any government action needed" for full employment. Farmers, storekeepers and the whole community would benefit from the steady income for workers provided by the guaranteed annual wage, the Board declared.

President Murray, in a letter offering assistance to CIO unions, asked that statements of affiliates be cleared with the CIO Annual Wage Committee headed by Harold Ruttenberg, Steelworkers' research director, before presentation to the labor-management conference.

CIO Convention Cancelled To Help Speed V-J Day

THE CIO Executive Board in the interest of a speedy victory over Japan and in cooperation with the Office of Defense Transportation has cancelled the 1945 National CIO Convention. The AFL also has called off its 1945 convention.

The ODT has banned all meetings of 50 or more out-of-town delegates to make available transportation for the movement of troops and war supplies.

Until the next convention is held, the executive board will continue to direct the CIO as authorized by the constitution.

"WHEREAS, (1) It appears clear that due to the regulations of the ODT the CIO will not be able to convene a convention in 1945 in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, and

"(2) The Executive Board of the CIO is empowered to enforce the Constitution and to carry out the instructions of the convention and between conventions has the power to direct the affairs of the organization; now, therefore, be it

"RESOLVED, That (1) The Constitution of the CIO, adopted at the 1944 convention of the CIO, shall continue in full force and effect until amended or revised in accordance with the provisions thereof at the next convention;

"(2) The present officers and the members of the Executive Board shall continue to serve in their respective offices with the powers and duties conferred upon them under the Constitution until the next convention;

"(3) The standing and special committees that have been heretofore designated by the President of the CIO and approved by the Evecutive Board are continued until further action is taken thereon."

CIO Urges 65c Minimum Wage

THE national drive to end substandard wages—which affect about 10 million workers—hitched forward this week with introduction in House and Senate of amendments to the Wage Hour Act raising the present wage minimum from 40 cents an hour to 65 cents this year and 75 cents within the next two years.

The bills were put in the Senate by Sen. James Mead (D., N. Y.), acting for Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), and Reps. Hook (D., Mich.), Huber (D., Ohio), and Price (D., Ill.). They call for:

1. 65 cents an hour for the first 44 hours in each week for the first year.

2. 70 cents an hour for the first 42 hours for the second year.

3. 75 cents an hour for the first 40 hours for the third year.

The bill allows industry committees set up by the Wage Hour Act to increase the minimum for particular industries to 75 cents the first year, and provides higher rates for certain key occupations in the industries covered.

Seamen and workers in the "area of production" on canning fish and allied products are included for the first time. General agricultural processing workers are not. Present exemptions from the hours regulation in the act covering certain perishable food industries are eliminated.

In a statement praising the Senators and Congressmen for introducing the bill, CIO President Murray said:

"The CIO welcomes the introduction of amendments to raise the wage floor to 65 cents as an act of justice to 10 million American workers and as good sound economic sense to the entire nation.

"Substandard wages as now paid to millions of Americans mean a substandard economy. Workers receiving less than a decent minimum are not going to be able to buy the goods and services that must be sold to avert another economic depression worse than any we have previously felt.

"Senators Pepper and Wagner and those associated with them deserve the full support of all Americans who want to see their country properous now and in the postwar."

Senators joining with Pepper in placing the bill are in addition to Sens. Mead and Wagner; Murray (D., Mont.); Guffey (D., Penna.); Kilgore (D., W. V.); Thomas (D., Utah); Magnuson (D., Wash.), and Myers (D., Penna.).

Hearings are not expected before the recess, and therefore will probably not start until Congress reconvenes in October. Meantime, CIO and other progressive organizations will put on a recess campaign to prepare the way for speedy hearings and early passage.

10 Soviet Labor Heads Visit U. S.

TEN leaders of Soviet trade unions, first of a series of foreign unionists to visit the CIO, were on their way here from Moscow this week on the invitation of CIO Pres. Murray.

Leader of the group is Vasili Kuznetsov, chairman of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions and head of the USSR delegation to the World Trade Union Conference in London earlier this year.

The 10 delegates are coming on an invitation issued to Soviet, British and French unions by Murray June 4, when he said: "With the decisive defeat of the Nazi military forces in Europe, many immediate and severe problems arise relating to reconversion and reconstruction.

"I believe it would be of invaluable assistance to the leaders and members of CIO to have the opportunity of meeting with the representatives of your organization for the purpose of exchanging views and information."

With Kuznetsov are N. Gaisenok, of the shipbuilding union; M. Zhdanov, chairman of the Naval Transport Workers; K. Kuzakov, Government Employes; A. Stepanov, of the Central Council; B. Gostev, Automobile Workers; A Orlova, Sewing Factory Workers; I. Chevtaev, Sawmill Workers; I. Shostak, Highschool and Scientific Institution Workers; M. Falin, assistant to Kuznetsov, and L. Samoshina, interpreter.

No Job Blueprint; CIO Asks Action

THOUGH the task of securing full production and jobs for all "is as challenging as any we have met throughout the war" to date, the U.S. has received "no blueprint for this task, either from government or from industry," the CIO Executive Board said in its July 13-14 meeting here in Washington.

The Murray-Patman full employment bill (S 380, HR 2202), which should be "the object of study and discussion by the members of every CIO union" during the summer recess "is only the first of a series of measures which should be carried into effect either by legislation or executive order," the Board added.

These measures include the program outlined in President Murray's "Re-employment Plan" and steps outlined in other resolutions of the current Board meeting and "should be fitted into a broad national program, and not treated as isolated proposals unrelated to each other."

For summer recess activity, the Board urged CIO members to ask their Congressmen and Senators to line up with Sen. Murray (D., Mont.), and Rep. Patman (D., Tex.), and others as sponsors of S 380 and HR 2202, as well as telling them about the rest of CIO's plans for security and properity now and after the war.

Meantime, the CIO Legislative Dept. will send each member of Congress a pre-recess letter outlining the entire CIO program, which will also be sent to CIO affiliates.

CIO Backs Seamen's Pay-Boost Battle

FULL CIO support for the merchant seamen in their fight against a wage cut and for a 55c an hour minimum was voted by the CIO Executive Board this week.

"The struggle of our seamen to obtain adequate standards is the cause of all American workers, and is necessary for a strong and prosperous America and the program of 60 million jobs," the Board said.

"The CIO Board instructs all CIO unions, councils and auxiliaries to give full and active support to the petition of the CIO maritime union."

Meantime, the CIO Natl. Maritime Union and the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards appeared before the War Labor Board to testify for the 55c minimum in a case pending for some months now. Action of the Maritime Emergency Board in killing the Atlantic "war risk bonus" gives their case special urgency.

Rank and file members, plus NMU and MCS officials, told the WLB some of the facts of life on a seaman's wages which for skilled workers are as little as 42c an hour.

Average annual wartime earnings of seamen are $2,200, as shown by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. This includes the bonus. Without it, earnings average $950—if a seaman works a full year. Unskilled seamen, such as messmen, ordinary seamen, etc., earn even less.

Hail FEPC Victory

CIO's Executive Board, meeting here July 13-14, hailed the compromise vote of $250,000 for the FEPC as "a triumph of the true democratic American spirit over all the devices and maneuvers of our native reactionary forces."

"At the same time we hail the victory won, we realize that this is only the first round in fighting discrimination in employment and we pledge ourselves to go forward with unabated vigor in the campaign for creation of a permanent FEPC," the Board said.

"Speedy establishment of a permanent FEPC is a vital piece of reconversion legislation for the period ahead, when the forces of reaction will spare no effort to divide and split the democratic forces of the country."

Citizens of Trenton Hang Blackmarket

A citizen's rally in Trenton, N. J. last week to fight black market practices and support full employment was held at the steps of Trenton's City Hall, climaxing a parade through the city's streets which featured Mr. Black Market, a sinister-looking villain, hanged in effigy.

Political Tour for '46

Beginning their organizational work for the 1946 congressional election campaigns, Elmer A. Benson, chairman of the executive council, and C. B. Baldwin, executive vice-chairman of the National Citizens Political Action Committee, today started a six-week cross country trip which will take them to 19 key cities in 15 states.

Benson, former Minnesota governor, recently elected to the chairmanship of PAC's executive council, issued a brief statement of the pair's purpose in making the trip: "We are looking to the 1946 elections. We are going out to confer with local and state officials, political leaders of the major parties, and the leaders of civic affairs in each of the cities on our itinerary. We want their ideas on how we can stimulate political interest and get a healthy 80 to 100 per cent vote in 1946."

Extra Work, Extra Food

OPA is reasonable. If you are in the hardworking industries, you need supplementary meat, fat and sugar rations. And they've already given them to loggers, deep sea fishermen, seamen on inland waterways, miners and some heavy construction workers who are fed by their employers under conditions of isolation.

This week OPA started to test the plan further with coal miners in the San Francisco and Denver regions.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

SOME FOLKS well worth knowing are coming your way in the next few weeks.

They may or may not be the kind of people you'd want for company on a fishing trip or for a game of poker. But whether you find them congenial or not, they're still worth knowing, for very practical reasons.

It so happens these folks have a lot to say about your job, your earnings, what's going to happen to you if you lose your job, what you and your family are going to eat and wear, how you're going to be housed, and what sort of opportunity your children will have in life.

The folks who are coming your way are your representatives in Congress, now preparing to return home for the summer recess.

If you doubt they have as much to say about your personal affairs as we've indicated, just consider some of the bills they've been arguing about or cold-shouldering in Congress.

Look through the cellophane of long-winded speeches, personal and party politics, and the gobbledygook of legislative terminology—and you will see your job, your wages, your savings and your future wrapped up in the packages they handle, labeled HR No. this and S. No. that.

★ ★ ★

You need a wage increase, and your union could probably get you a good one if its hands were freed. But under the Little Steel formula, it can only go so far and no further.

The administration will be influenced in its decision on wages by a petition now circulating in Congress to break through the Little Steel wage freeze.

It's worth getting acquainted with your Congressman, just to find out if he has signed this petition, if for nothing else.

If you are one of the ten million Americans subsisting on substandard wages of less than 65 cents an hour, your interest is obvious in the bill to raise the minimum wage under the Fair Labor Standards Act to 65 cents an hour.

Even if you aren't, you can never be sure that unemployment will not force you one day to take a job at substandard wages; and in any case, your higher wage rates will never be secure so long as millions of your fellows are paid less than a living wage.

You'll surely want to know what your representatives in Congress are going to do about this bill.

What's going to happen to you and your family, if you get laid off through the cutbacks that are closing more and more plants?

As things stand, you won't get enough to live on under the various state unemployment compensation laws, and you'll get this little for very few weeks.

But there's a bill before Congress, introduced by Sen. Kilgore and several other Senators, to raise emergency unemployment benefits to $25 to 26 weeks; to cover federal, maritime and other workers who now get no protection whatever; to increase veterans' benefits; and to pay travel costs to new jobs.

What are your representatives in Congress going to do about this bill, and are they going to act on it in time?

Are you going to have a fair shot at new jobs and an equal chance for promotion, or are you going to be discriminated against because of your color, race, religion or national origin?

When your Congressmen are home, you'll want to know what they have done to save the present Fair Employment Practice Committee and what they're going to do about a permanent FEPC.

And you'll certainly want to know if they're going to push through the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill to provide you with some decent security against the hazards of age, illness, unemployment etc.; and what's cooking on the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill and other plans to provide jobs for all.

All this is your personal business, as well as the people's business. It also happens to be the legislative program adopted by the CIO Executive Board and Political Action Committee. The coming recess will give you a good chance to ask your representatives in Congress what they propose to do about it.

On The Job

American workers who stayed on the job on July 4 more than made up for all time lost through strikes and employers' lockouts since Pearl Harbor, according to Dept. of Labor statistics.

Since war workers have regularly been giving up their holidays to keep the armed forces supplied, it will be seen that the patriotic devotion of the vast majority of American workers has made up many times for the delinquencies of a minority of workers and employers.

Yet most of the American press is silent about facts like these, while it runs scare headlines about "strike waves" every time a few workers are off the job.

The CIO does not in any sense condone wartime strikes. It regards its no-strike as a sacred obligation until Japan is finally and completely defeated. And its responsible leaders have done everything within their power to prevent any stoppages.

At the same time, however, the CIO seeks to remedy the conditions that lead to stoppages. It points out that the best way to do this is to remove some of the present restraints on free collective bargaining.

Philip Murray has recently called public attention to the fact that "workers' grievances have accumulated to an intolerable extent" under wartime restrictions, and that "many employers have taken advantage of labor's no-strike pledge, and of the slowness and other defects of governmental labor processes, to deny redress for these grievances and to defy rulings of the War Labor Board."

At the same time, the Little Steel wage freeze has kept wages lagging far behind living costs; and even today, when cutbacks, loss of overtime, etc., are sharply reducing take-home pay, labor is still denied the right to secure necessary wage adjustments through free collective bargaining.

Murray therefore points out that "the best way to assure industrial peace during reconversion and after the war is to scrap the Little Steel formula, to eliminate substandard wages, and to restore freedom to the unions to bargain collectively for the speedy adjustment of grievances and for increased wages."

Bad For Women

"There's nothin' so bad for a woman as a man who thinks he is good," says the popular song.

And that goes for the majority of the House Judiciary Committee, who have reported out the so-called Equal Rights Amendment, under the possible impression it is good for women.

Actually there is nothing so bad for a woman as this phoney amendment, whose chief effect would be to wipe out all the state laws protecting women's wages, hours and working conditions.

For real equal rights for women, to which the CIO is firmly committed, we recommend the bill just introduced by Rep. Mary Norton, calling for equal pay for equal work and no discrimination against women in layoffs.

CIO News Wins Praise For 'Outstanding Job'

From Edmund G. Brown, San Francisco district attorney, came the recent comment: "I have just finished reading with interest the stories on Teen Age Workers, together with comment by Mr. Philip Murray. It is indeed heartening when such men as Mr. Murray show an interest in our youth."

Praise for the same feature, a center spread picture story, came from Martha M. Eliot and Beatrice McConnell, respectively acting chief and director of the industrial division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Children's Bureau.

And from Samuel J. Kramer, director of publicity and publications of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, came praise from himself and from President John Green on a feature which dealt with reconversion as it affects the shipyard industry. Kramer said:

"President Green felt that it caught the human problem in shipbuilding employment to a very successful degree, and cogently summarized the union's position in stressing the urgency of planning for full employment in our industry."

And Senator James E. Murray of Montana, who received a copy of The CIO News containing a feature on the new social security bill, wrote that it was an "excellent presentation."

This feature also drew praise from Evelyn Adler, director of the national social service division of the CIO Office & Professional Workers, who said: "Let me congratulate you on the outstanding job the CIO NEWS is doing these days."

Pamphlet Helps Race Understanding

In an emergency move to help cities and towns prevent race riots this summer, the Public Affairs Committee in cooperation with the American Council On Race Relations today issued Race Riots Are Not Necessary, with a ten-point program of action on what to do if race riots threaten.

The pamphlet tells how to spot danger signals preceding rioting and recommends specific emergency action that the community, individuals, organizations, churches, schools, and community groups should take. Plans for long-term programs to foster better intergroup relations are also outlined.

Labor Scholarships

Special labor scholarships for southern students will be offered by the CIO in cooperation with the Rosenwald Fund and Antioch College, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, announced today.

"The purpose of the scholarships is to make it possible for able young men and women in the labor movement to get the practical and democratic education that will enable them to develop their full potentialities for effective and responsible labor leadership," Carey said.

Only applicants under 35 will be considered. The accent will be on basic courses in English (with particular attention to writing and speaking), Economics, Government, Labor History and Psychology.

Applications should be submitted to the Julius Rosenwald Fund, 4901 Ellis Ave., Chicago.

Publicity Hunger Laid To Richberg

Corporation lawyer, Donald Richberg, has a personal motive in his effort to foist repeal of the Wagner Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act on the country through passage of the Federal Industrial Relations bill, CIO Sec.-Treas., James B. Carey charged this week.

Carey made his position plain in a telegram to the American Forum of the Air, text of which follows:

"In my first reading of the Richberg Bill, I assumed it was a regrettable attempt to destroy the Wagner Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-injunction Act. Closer study after receiving your invitation to appear in a debate on the American Forum of the Air, convinced me that the bill is a publicity stunt in which Donald Richberg has involved several well-meaning U. S. Senators.

"Lawyer Richberg's apparent purpose is to make his services attractive to corporations intent on weakening and destroying labor unions.

"Choosing not to repeat the mistake of Senators Ball, Burton and Hatch in being drawn into a cunning publicity campaign, I cannot appear on the Forum Tuesday night. I regret any inconvenience that may result."

CIO Radio Roundup

Pres. John Green of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers will be the stellar attraction on the Town Hall of the Air July 26 when he will participate in a discussion on veterans' preference in employment. Look for it at 8:30 p.m. EWT over NBC stations.

* * *

Interested in sub-standard wages? Better tune in at 1:15 p.m. EWT Sunday to NBC stations for CIO's America United show. Carrying the ball will be Gladys Dickason, research director of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Senator Mead of N. Y., and Jerome Udell, a clothing manufacturer.

* * *

Lineups for coming America United programs are: Aug. 5—Van A. Bittner, assistant to the president of the United Steelworkers, and a Congressman and an official of the Social Security Board, discussing the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill. The Aug. 12 program will deal with political action.

* * *

"The Air Belongs to the People" is the title of an article written by Ernest Goodman, assistant counsel of the CIO United Auto Workers Union, in a recent issue of the Journal of the Federal Communications Bar Assn.

"In the crucial period of history which lies ahead, the securing of a durable peace and a stable economy in cooperation with the people of other nations will depend to a large degree upon an enlightened public understanding of political, social and economic problems as they arise," Goodman wrote.

"Radio must be ready to fulfill its heavy responsibility in this process of enlightenment. The moulding of public opinion must not be left to industry." Goodman said that there is increasing evidence that the radio industry is showing an increasing awareness of labor's viewpoint and the validity of giving it public expression.

"Labor," Goodman added, "seeks no selfish advantage or monopoly. What it asks for itself it seeks to obtain for other groups. It is determined, however, to continue its efforts to create a truly free radio in America which observes in practice what it concedes in theory, that 'The air belongs to the people'."

Putting theory into practice, the UAW-CIO is protesting discrimination against it by station WCKY in Cincinnati, Ohio. According to Allen W. Sayler, of the union's education department, the station refused to let the union state its position on the War Labor Board and for the Wagner-Murray-Dingell social security bill.

CIO Man Appointed

Mayor Hubert H. Humphrey, Jr., of Minneapolis this week appointed Pres. Robert Wishart of Dist. 11, CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, to the board of public welfare.

Push Big CIO Housing Program

AN intensified CIO housing program under the leadership of UAW-CIO Pres. R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing and Community Development Committee, has been launched in support of national housing legislation.

The program will revolve around legislation scheduled for introduction by Senator Wagner of N. Y., with a national CIO housing meeting slated for some time in October in Washington, D. C., to act as a sounding board.

Additional points in the program include an intensified educational campaign among CIO unions and the public at large, with increased use of the labor press and with publication of a CIO pamphlet on the need for a big postwar housing program—as one of the educational series put out by the CIO Political Action Committee.

The housing committee program was approved by the CIO Executive Board following a meeting of the committee, attended by Thomas and William G. Nicholas, committee director and head of the UAW-CIO housing department.

The committee recommended:

1. That all international unions start a campaign to stop evictions for the duration of the war.

2. That they press for speedy action on postwar housing legislation.

3. That they enlarge their housing educational programs.

4. That they distribute to their local unions questionnaires regarding local housing developments.

In a report on progress of the committee in securing legislation aiding workers and veterans, Thomas said that it is important to educate the CIO membership about the gains that the people will make if an adequate federal housing program is pushed in the postwar period.

"We must prepare early," Thomas said, "to educate our membership to the fact that, in this prospective legislation, for the first time, there is an opportunity for them to own or rent decent homes at prices they can afford to pay.

"The continuation and expansion of the public low-rent housing program is a 'must' if we are to achieve our total postwar housing objectives," Thomas declared. "The wording of the objectives of this Act should be changed so as to relate the program of housing for low-income families to the national goal of full employment and full production."

The Ball and Chain Bill

The most serious legislative attack on labor unions since the war started is the Ball-Burton-Hatch Federal Industrial Relations Act. What would happen to labor if this proposal were made law is told by CIO General Counsel Pressman and his Assistant in the following article, fourth of a series.

By LEE PRESSMAN AND FRANK DONNER

TWO features are slipped into the bill which would provide a Roman holiday for employers who have no intention of permitting employes freely to choose a collective bargaining representative. The first provides that certification of the proposed new board may be challenged in the courts.

Under existing law an employer cannot resist a certification through court review. He is required to bargain first.

Under the proposed law an employer could take every certification up to the Supreme Court and even if he lost it would be at least two years before he would have to bargain.

Under the existing and well established practice of the NLRB an employer may not petition for an election in his plant. If a union is already a certified bargaining agent only a rival union may raise the question of representation with the Board and if the rival makes an adequate showing the Board holds an election.

Under the proposed bill, whenever an employer decides that the union is weak and may possibly lose an election he can file a petition and raise a question concerning the representation of his employes. This, despite the fact that labor agencies and the courts have uniformly held that it is none of the employer's affair whether or not his employes are to have a collective bargaining agent and what labor organization that agent is to be.

Instead of bargaining, a union would be forced to spend its entire time and energies in fighting off employer attacks and in preparing for elections.

The anti-labor thrust of this bill is shown not only by what is in the bill but also by what is left out. Under the Wagner Act as it is now written all employers in interstate commerce, no matter how many workers they employ, are required to comply. Under the proposed bill, employment by an employer of less than 20 employes is not covered.

A second section limits the protection to "national" commerce and not "interstate" commerce as is provided for now. Moreover, the bill is confined to employment directly affecting the producing, processing, preparing or handling of raw materials, supplies or goods in substantial quantities in such "national" commerce.

To thousands of employers, the sponsors of this bill graciously say:

"You may now bust unions, discharge union leaders and refuse to bargain to your heart's content. If you are a large department store exploiting thousands of workers you may kill off the union without Federal challenge since you handle goods after interstate shipment.

"If you are a manufacturer you may lock out your employes for union activities and escape punishment under the law by the argument that the goods which you ship directly in interstate commerce are not 'substantial' in quantity."

Other portions of the bill make it clear that its purpose is to destroy federal collective bargaining protection to the greatest extent possible. Thus, it specifically provides that the laws of the several states are to be applicable not only where the proposed bills inapplicable but even where the controversy involved is one within the scope of the bill.

The unmistakable purpose of the bill is to remove many employes from the protection of the progressive features of the Wagner Act and to subject them to the reactionary controls of the state laws and state boards.

It is plain that the inevitable effect of turning over to the states the rights of millions of employes now protected by the federal government would be to invite each state to become a Labor Reno.

This measure would inevitably set in motion a yellow-dog open-shop race among the states to compete for those employers freed from the obligation of complying with the federal law.

House Improves GI Loans

THE House this week passed and sent to the Senate amendments liberalizing the loan and the educational provisions of the GI Bill of Rights.

Yielding to pressure, Rep. John E. Rankin, (D. Miss.) chairman of the House World War Veterans Committee, reluctantly introduced the amendments.

The CIO particularly favored the change taking away the necessity of obtaining approval of loans by the Veterans Administration, but the VA may guarantee all loans made by banks and other concerns on the approved list. The Government will continue to guarantee each loan up to $2,000.

Another amendment increases from two to four years the time in which a veteran may sign up for a vocational training course after his discharge. The time for completing postwar training is boosted from seven to nine years.

Subsistence for a veteran-student is raised from $50 to $60 a month if he is single, and from $75 to $85 if he has dependents. Short, intensive courses are provided for, and the Government will also pay tuition at approved correspondent schools.

N. Y. Wage, Job Drive

An eight-point program of action to carry the campaign for wage adjustments and full employment throughout the community was adopted by the Greater New York CIO Council at a citywide conference of more than 1,000 shop stewards at Town Hall last week.

Sharply attacking the War Labor Board and its policies encouraging pay cuts, the conference pointed to the immediate need for arousing the public on the national CIO's program for reconversion and full employment. It called for these actions:

1. A petition campaign demanding that Congress provide for the human side of reconversion.

2. Immediate visits to congressmen to enlist their support.

3. Mass delegations at WLB hearings on individual dispute cases.

4. A citywide conference to organize support.

5. An after-work demonstration on a city scale.

6. Shop meetings in every union to discuss the program and send resolutions.

7. More organization of the unorganized.

8. Day-to-day political action in support of the program.

Reaction Fights Jobs for All Program

THE greatest propaganda job in U. S. history is being directed against labor's 60 million job program, In Fact, weekly newsletter, warned in its July 16 issue.

"The main purpose of the present campaign is to insure a certain amount of unemployment, which in turn insures what businessmen call 'the normal float' of job seekers," said the newsletter. "This makes it possible to smash or to weaken unions, pay lower wages, make higher profits."

Declaring it had conclusive evidence "that there is an organized movement against giving the American people jobs after the war," In Fact said: "If the anti-job forces have their way there will be more propaganda setting veterans against labor, but there will not be jobs for all the men now in uniform.

"1. Native Fascists. Fascism in Italy and Germany provided jobs for all on a slavery basis, but fascism is the greatest enemy of free labor. America Firster James S. Kemper, chairman, Natl. Republican Finance Committee, and employer of native fascist radio commentator Upton Close, is opposed to full employment. So is the Gannett-Peale-Rumely Committee for Constitutional Government, and so is their writer, Sam Pettengill, named as No. 1 fascist organization and No. 1 American fascist respectively in Congress recently.

"2. Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and affiliates. Although the native fascist organizations are more vocal, the most powerful force against jobs for all is the NAM, dominated by the Du-Ponts, General Motors, and similar firms, many with cartel connections in Nazi Germany.

"3. Bankers and their economists. Both in England and the U. S. the idea of collective responsibility and government planning against unemployment are under attack by bankers, their press, and their hired writers.

"4. The American press, leading columnists and magazines. The newspapers are closest to the public, have always pretend they are pro bono publico, when in truth they are in the pay of anti-labor forces. Therefore the press dare not openly attack.

"Sample sneer: 'The slogan of full employment has become more and more fashionable. . . . It involves dangers both to the free enterprise system and to labor's liberties.' (New York Times editorial, June 18.)

"Leading popular weekly attacking jobs for all is Saturday Evening Post, directed by Walter E. Fuller, who is also director of the NAM. Newsweek, owned by big business interests, calls it the 'Fool' Employment bill.

"5. Senate and House. Both Senators Connally of Texas and Vandenberg of Michigan announced they would turn down the San Francisco world peace charter if the world's labor interests insisted on putting a full employment indorsement into this historic document. . . . But real leaders of corporation attack on jobs is Sen. Taft of Ohio.

In the House, corporation friends headed by Rep. Woodruff of Michigan, a gentleman who followed the Nazi line for four years, lead the fight against national welfare via full employment."

Baltimore CIO Plans Labor Day Event

Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D. N. Y.), Paul Robeson and a representative from the office of CIO Pres. Philip Murray as well as industrialists and representatives from Great Britain and Soviet Union labor organizations are scheduled to speak at the Labor Day celebration at Carlin Park, Baltimore, sponsored by the Baltimore CIO Industrial Union Council.

Bethlehem Celebrates Phil Murray Day

The CIO United Steelworkers have a president who works hard not only for their union but for the CIO and every working man and woman of America.

His name, of course, is Philip Murray. Every year the Steelworkers hold a Phil Murray Day. Last week they celebrated it in Bethlehem, Pa., home city of giant Bethlehem Steel, a typical "one-industry" town in which the union rose through mighty struggles to build itself a place in the minds and hearts of the workers and the community at large.

The community spirit came alive last Tuesday night at a dinner attended by more than 400 people and at a rally that packed the Liberty High School Auditorium to watch dynamic plays produced by Stage for Action and to hear Phil Murray tell about what he believes is good for all America. The Mayor and leaders of religion, the professions and business sat side by side with steel workers to hear Murray declare that full employment IS possible after the war.

Murray declared that the CIO is going to lead a crusade for economic security for all the people, and as part of it, a campaign for a guaranteed annual wage.

"The annual wage," he said, "is predicated on a good sound base—that men, women and children have got to eat 365 days a year, have got to pay rent every month in the year, and have got to pay the cost of illness when it happens."

At the Phil Murray Day dinner Murray broke bread with more than 400 friends, among them Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Newell (right). Below, Murray chats with some of Bethlehem's 30,000 steel workers who packed a big hall to hear him. (Pictures by Ryan and Globe-Times)

CIO Board Urges Action to Hal

The task of the CIO executive board is more important than ever before, because wartime traveling restrictions necessitated the cancellation of the national CIO convention this year.

On account of this added importance six of the most important statements and resolutions of the July session of the board are herewith given in full. One statement calls for enactment of the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill providing for a job census as the first step toward realization of the jobs-for-all program whose urgent need is highlighted by cut-backs with their resulting unemployment.

Layoffs of thousands upon thousands of workers in the war industries also point up the significance of the statement asking immediate passage of the Doughton Bill providing for increased unemployment compensation payments. Equally important for continued prosperity are the statements asking President Truman to revise the national wage policy and urging employers to provide guaranteed annual wages.

The board also authorized CIO participation in the Paris convention of the World Federation of Trade Unions in September, and condemned the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill as "undemocratic class legislation designed to destroy a free labor movement."

Jobs For All Bill Seen as 'Must'

The CIO looks forward to a speedy and complete victory over Japan and to the establishment of a lasting peace. Every member of the CIO has come to realize that the war has unlocked vast new productivity, capable of creating a standard of living far higher than we have had before, and we are determined to see this productivity become an instrument for insuring national economic security and expansion after the war.

Full production and full employment depend on whether American labor and American organizing skills can be directed without hindrance to the job of producing abundance. Every day decisions are being made which shape our chances of securing this abundance.

Our needs outrun even our great productive capacity. To fill these needs America must have a program for promoting a steady flow of adequate incomes into the hands of consumers.

We believe that this is a task as challenging as any we have met throughout the war. To date we have no blueprint for this task, either from government or from industry.

A first step toward creating such a program is represented by the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill now awaiting hearings before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and the House Committee on Executive Expenditures. This bill should be the object of study and discussion by the members of every CIO international union. This discussion is preliminary to the application by CIO international unions to the Congressional Committees for an opportunity to be heard. Hearings will be held in the fall of 1945 after Congress reconvenes.

Only First Step

The Murray-Patman Full Employment bill, is only the first of a series of measures which should be carried into effect either by legislation or executive order. These measures should be fitted into a broad national program, and not treated as isolated proposals unrelated to each other. The CIO Executive Board at its current meetings has approved a series of statements which form the basis for such a program.

This CIO program is so broad-based as to be an adequate foundation for a national program for industry, agriculture and government as well as labor. We urge immediate action by Congress and by President Truman and his advisers to create and implement such a national program.

Before VJ Day this program should be reported to Congress for maintaining postwar full production and full employment.

Congress will recess after the passage by the Senate of the Charter. Over 100 members of the House of Representatives have associated themselves with Congressmen Patman of Texas and Outland of California as sponsors of the Murray-Patman bill in the House. They are pledged to spend the summer working in their Congressional Districts and their States on behalf of the passage of this legislation.

The names of these Congressmen will be sent to every CIO international union and every CIO council with a request that these Congressmen be visited by CIO delegations and congratulated on their support of this legislation. Each delegation should, moreover, bring to these Congressmen a list of the additional measures which are needed in the estimation of the CIO, if this bill is to serve as an effective first step towards full production and full employment.

Action Is Needed

Every Congressman who has not yet signed up as a sponsor of the Murray-Patman Bill should be visited also, and vigorously urged to lend his support to this and all other measures calculated to promote postwar full employment at adequate take-home pay.

For the information of every member of the House and Senate the CIO Legislative Department is drafting a letter to go to all Senators and Representatives before the recess, informing them of the CIO program for full employment. Copies of this letter will go to every international union for the information of their members.

Unemployment Compensation

As cutbacks and lay-offs increase and unemployment mounts, the Congress of the United States still continues to disregard the crying need for an emergency unemployment compensation measure such as requested by President Truman on May 26th.

The bill introduced by Congressman Doughton "by request" fails to meet the demands of the situation in several respects. Its most glaring shortcoming is the provision that it shall not go into effect until 600,000 compensable claims have been filed for unemployment compensation. We feel compelled to point out that this figure is misleading because it represents a gross unemployment figure of approximately 3,000,000. We further condemn the thinking that would penalize those war workers who are the first to suffer unemployment and which would cut off from any benefits all unemployed federal workers and maritime workers until such time as compensable claims for workers covered under existing law reached the 600,000.

Other shortcomings are the failure to include food processing and packing workers under its provisions, the lack of transportation allowances to provide for workers desiring to take jobs in other localities, and no provisions to raise the benefits to unemployed veterans above the flat $20 a week provided in the G. I. Bill of Rights.

Hearings Urged

Inadequate as the Doughton Bill may be, we condemn the decision of the House Ways and Means Committee to take no action on the bill at this time, and call upon Congress and the American people to insist that hearings be held immediately on the Doughton Bill. We urge members of Congress to introduce legislation correcting its inadequacies so that action can be taken as soon as possible to provide the workers of America with an adequate emergency unemployment compensation bill as some measure of relief in the critical months ahead.

Imperative as the passage of an adequate emergency bill is at this time, we wish to reiterate that we regard the standards in any emergency legislation as quite inadequate and that only by passage of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill's provisions can we obtain adequate, permanent unemployment compensation and social security legislation.

On National Wage Policy

Unemployment is increasing. Wage earners are in addition suffering a loss of weekly wages and purchasing power. This is resulting from a marked decline in overtime wage payments and the tendency of present wage rate structures to be lowered through a reconversion to the production of civilian goods.

Meanwhile, the cost of living continues to increase and industrial profits to soar.

Unemployment, increasing jo curity, and decreasing weekly w meet a rapidly rising cost of do not provide the basis for panding postwar economy of f duction and full employment.

The war against Japan ca continued full war production, steps are being taken to prot morale and productive efficie wage earners and to assure an e ing postwar economy.

Unrest and ugly resentment the workers against this situat apparent to those who are in with the conditions that exist country.

Guaranteed Annual Wages

Labor's desire for guaranteed wages grows out of our terrible ences with irregular jobs and unemployment. These evils m overcome if our nation is to c in the path of democratic p Failure to achieve full empl during the 30's cost us 400 bill lars, or more than the nation's total wealth in 1929 and eight times the total national income in 1932.

The people will judge our present system of private enterprise and our present business leadership by the degree to which they make full use of the nation's tremendous capacity to produce.

Now is the time to mobilize for continuing prosperity. We cannot afford to wait until we are once more plunged into depression, when the task will be far more difficult. Business is in an excellent position to agree to guaranteed wage plans for the years just ahead. Not only are good markets waiting, if government and business handle matters reasonably well, but business has the record amount of 45 billion dollars of working capital. Corporate profits before taxes in 1944 were 25 billion dollars, or a quarter as much as all wages and salaries paid to every person employed in the United States. Business is also protected by the tax law which virtually insures it against loss under the carry-back carry-forward provisions.

Goal Is Clear

Our aim is to have agreements on guaranteed wages developed in collective bargaining conferences and embodied in written contracts between unions and employers. Many such agreements are already in effect, adapted to the needs and possibilities of each situation. No exact blue-print is universally applicable, but our goal is clear; pay for a full work-week, 52 weeks a year, for all regular employes.

In the past wage-earners have had to bear the terrible cost of the failure of employers to run industry at full speed. If employers bore the cost, we are confident they would find ways to provide work and that they would support any government action needed to provide a general framework for full employment. We seek steady jobs for all, rather than pay for idleness, but the basic evil in our economic system is that men able and eager to work have been forced to remain idle for years.

We are only asking what others already have. A company pays for land and buildings by the year. It plans its dividends to stockholders by the year. It pays for much advertising space and for insurance by the year. It pays its officers and plant managers by the year. It sets aside money each year to buy new machines to replace the old. Why should it not plan to pay its wage-earners by the year too?

If the employers will agree to give labor regular work and pay as war ends, the whole community will benefit. When factories run full blast, farmers and storekeepers prosper. When plants and men are idle, farm prices fall and business loses. A floor under the income of wage-earners would mean a floor under the national income.

This problem requires the best co-operative effort of all groups of citizens. It is gratifying that so many have already given their support to the idea. The first responsibility for providing steady jobs rests with management, and we stand ready to co-operate in every way to help in overcoming difficulties. It is gratifying that the Presidential Subcommittee on Guaranteed Wage Plans, appointed at President Roosevelt's request, is to make a thorough study of methods of stabilizing employment at high levels.

Assures Steady Income

The building of homes and factories and machinery can be far more regular than in the past. People can buy autos more regularly the year around, rather than in so great a rush at certain seasons. Prices and credit terms can be adjusted to help stop seasonal dips. If production in autos is at continuous high levels, there will be a steady flow of orders from auto companies for steel, radios, glass, cloth, tires and other parts.

If one company or even one industry cannot act alone to assure steady employment, labor-management councils on an industry-wide, inter-industry, or area basis should tackle the problem.

The guaranteed annual wage is practical even without full employment as a method of bringing security to some of our people, and thus increasing purchases, business activity, and the number of jobs. With full employment, guaranteed wage plans would give the individual security and would help to prevent a sudden decline such as occurred in 1929 and 1937.

A nation that could rally as we did to win the war cannot meekly accept defeat by unemployment and failure to solve our economic problems. It is time to apply practical methods to assure full employment.

Executive Board Backs WFTU

WHEREAS, (1) The Administrative Committee, designated at the World Trade Union Conference held in London in February of this year, completed by unanimous action, a draft of the constitution of the World Federation of Trade Unions;

(2) The call has been issued to labor organizations throughout the world to participate at the constitutional convention of the new World Federation of Trade Unions to be held in Paris in September;

(3) The establishment of the World Federation of Trade Unions, representing over 60 million organized workers throughout the world, will constitute a bulwark against any resurgence of Nazism or Fascism and assure a full mobilization of the people for an enduring and prosperous peace for the common people throughout the world; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, that the Executive Board of the CIO hereby (1) commends the work of its representatives on the Administrative Committee and approves the proposed draft of constitution for the World Federation of Trade Unions and authorizes the President of the CIO to take the necessary steps for the CIO to participate at the Paris convention to be held in September and to secure affiliation of the CIO with the World Federation of Trade Unions;

(2) Authorizes the executive officers of the CIO to distribute copies of the proposed constitution to all the State and Local Industrial Union Councils of the CIO in order that our entire membership shall be fully informed of the structure and work of the organization and in turn bring such information to all other local labor organizations throughout the country;

Representation Asked

(3) Authorizes the executive officers of the CIO to make representations to the American State Department that the United States representative on the Social and Economic Council to be created under the San Francisco Charter support the requests of the World Federation of Trade Unions and the CIO that they be afforded the opportunity of participating in the work of the Social and Economic Council and assist in the preparation of all policies and programs of action dealing with the problems affecting the workers.

Ball and Chain Bill Condemned

WHEREAS, there has been introduced by Senators Ball, Burton and Hatch a bill known as the Federal Industrial Relations Act; and

WHEREAS, the proposed bill mutilates and disfigures labor's Magna Carta, the Wagner Act, by converting it from a protection of labor into an assault upon labor by

1) eliminating existing protections for labor's self-organization and concerted activities;

2) unjustifiably attacking and regulating labor organizations;

3) removing from the protection of the Wagner Act millions of American workers;

4) removing existing protections from and exposing to reactionary state legislation further millions of workers engaged in interstate commerce now protected by the Wagner Act; and

5) imposing unfair and unwarranted qualifications upon collective bargaining provisions for the union security so as virtually to outlaw them; and

WHEREAS, the bill permits employers to take unilateral action in the form of wage cuts and other attacks upon workers' living standards and at the same time forbids labor to protect itself against even the most arbitrary and destructive actions on the part of employers, thus stripping from labor the constitutional and fundamental rights of free men and at the same time exposing it and leaving it defenseless against employer assaults; and

Wipes Out Gains

WHEREAS, the bill eliminates the protections of the Norris-La-Guardia Act obtained by labor only after years of bitter struggle, and subjects labor to the vicious abuse of the federal injunction; and

WHEREAS, the bill invents new crimes of labor organizations and invites the financial enslavement of workers and their children by authorizing employers to sue for commission of such crimes; and

WHEREAS, this complicated legislative nightmare would permit the tribunals it sets up as well as the courts full latitude in designating any labor organization as a pariah without any right to existence or recognition or protection against the destructive acts of employers; and

WHEREAS, the bill would permanently frustrate collective bargaining by permitting employers to hamstring labor organizations through years of endless administrative and judicial proceedings; and

WHEREAS, most of the officers and members of the drafting committee of the bill are not, as claimed, free of prejudice against either organized labor or employers but closely identified with or representatives of powerful corporate interests; and

Bill Is Biased

WHEREAS, far from being neutral or unbiased as claimed by the sponsors, this bill is a legislative declaration of war upon organized labor unparelleled in the annals of any democratic country, a bill which, like the German Nurenberg laws, would place a particular group in the community in a permanent economic ghetto; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That the Congress of Industrial Organizations unqualifiedly and unreservedly condemns this measure in its entirety as undemocratic class legislation designed to destroy a free labor movement; that we call upon all constitutent bodies of the CIO to make known their opposition to this bill to enslave labor with every means at their disposal and that we call upon all fair-minded citizens to make known their opposition to this reactionary attempt to launch a post-war assault upon labor.

The contract also calls for many other benefits.

The statement of policy adopted by the officers and Vice Presidents of the CIO is receiving splendid support in the field; meetings are being held in many areas; already meetings have been in such cities as New York, Philadelphia, Boston, New Haven on the East Coast, St. Louis, Chicago and points on to the West Coast as well as through the South.

The latest report is from Baltimore where CIO Regional Director Frank Bender announces plans for a public meeting there on August 2 at which various city councilmen will be in attendance as well as religious groups, civic groups, the Mayor, etc. The Governor of Maryland has said he favors this program and will either address this meeting or a later one. Judge Waxter, chairman of the Department of Public Welfare, Baltimore, will be the chairman of a committee to be set up to be composed of three members from the CIO, three from the AFL and the Brotherhoods, to become a permanent committee advocating this program.

A number of legislators are getting busy introducing bills seeing the necessity and logic of this program as adopted by the CIO. Public support has been rallied everywhere. Keep up the good work! It is for the good of America!

CIO Victory Predicted In Pennsylvania Railroad Shop Crafts Election

National leaders of the CIO and the United Railroad Workers of America are confident of a sweeping victory for the CIO union among Pennsylvania Railroad employes in one of the biggest elections in several years to determine the collective bargaining agent.

Almost 50,000 non-operating workers in seven shop crafts and their helpers and apprentices will be eligible to vote in the election which is tentatively scheduled to begin August 1 and will continue every day in various shops until August 31. The Railway Mediation Board will be in charge.

Only other union appearing on the ballot will be the Shop Crafts Brotherhood dominated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. There will be a third place on the ballot for the worker to write in another union he desires, but URRWA leaders expect few—if any—write-in votes.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a letter to the crafts declared the Brotherhood was "an organization in which the employer determines who is to represent the employes."

"Any man sees at once that such a structure is in no sense voluntary and free." Murray continued. "Honest bargaining under these circumstances is impossible because the employer is meeting only himself at the negotiating table."

In a pre-election statement addressed to the workers involved, CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood said that a "vote for the CIO" is a vote for "a movement that has brought the benefits of collective bargaining to millions of souls," and warned against attempts of the railroad to influence the voting.

ELIGIBLE TO VOTE

Eligible to vote will be machinists, boiler makers, sheet metal workers, electrical workers as well as passenger and freight car inspectors, coach cleaners, powerhouse employes, shop laborers and laborers.

Voting is scheduled to begin August 1 at Altoona, Sunnyside, Enola, and Pittsburgh in Pennsylvania, and at Columbus, Ohio Balloting will continue every day in various shops of the gigantic Pennsylvania System until the final votes are cast in Baltimore on August 31.

The outcome of the entire election will determine who will be the collective bargaining agent for all the workers involved.

The Brotherhood has fought the URRWA viciously since organization began two years ago. Many men and women have been fired on charges which the URRWA says were unfounded. The company union, the URRWA also states, has used various devices to curry the favor of the workers— from free cigarets to promotions. Despite all these tactics, the CIO union grew by leaps and bounds in the favor of the workers.

Board OK's PlantoMerge FE and UAW

Amalgamation of the United Farm Equipment & Metal Workers Union with the United Automobile, Aircraft & Agricultural Implement Workers (UAW-CIO) has been recommended by the CIO Jurisdiction Committee. Its proposals to bring about this amalgamation were approved by the CIO Executive Board, meeting in Washington July 13-14. They read as follows:

(1) "The President of the CIO shall appoint a representative or a committee, to work out with dispatch in conjunction with both unions the detals of the amalgamation.

(2) "The terms of the amalgamation shall provide for adequate protection and appropriate representation within the UAW-CIO for the full membership and present officers and staff representatives of the Farm Equipment Workers Union and for the transfer by the Farm Equipment Workers Union to the UAW-CIO of all of its assets and the assumption by the UAW-CIO of the liabilities of the Farm Equipment Workers Union.

(3) "All cross-raiding and condemnation by either organization of the other shall immediately cease. Any dispute arising in this connection shall be settled by the representative or the committee to be designated by the President of the CIO.

(4) "Upon final consummation of the amalgamation, the Farm Equipment Workers Union shall relinquish its charter to the CIO."

Following action by the Board approving this program, Pres. Philip Murray appointed Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, CIO Director of Organization, as the representative to work out the details of the amalgamation.

COMMITTEE'S REASONS

The Jurisdiction Committee declared its reasons for this recommendation are that both unions have organized "workers performing substantially the same type of work;" that jurisdictional disputes have arisen between them; and that "the only adequate solution for this problem, in order to protect the interests of the membership of these two unions, to provide the maximum degree of service for them, and to assure the full union organization of similar workers who are still unorganized under the banner of the CIO would be an immediate amalgamation of the Farm Equipment Workers Union with the UAW-CIO."

Steel Wins Retroactive Pay

Approximately 27,000 workers in 12 steel casting companies are affected by the ruling of the War Labor Board making retroactive correction of wage rate inequities and rates for mechanical and maintenance occupations. These rates will be determined by collective bargaining for new contracts which is now under way.

The CIO United Steelworkers, representative of the workers in these plants, pressed for the changes. In most cases these changes will be retroactive to the date of the expiration of the old contracts.

Companies involved are the American Steel Foundries, Chicago; National Roll and Foundry, Avonmere, Pa; Mackintosh-Hemhill, Continential Foundry and Machine, McConway and Torley, Reliance Steel Casting, United Engineering and Foundry, all of Pittsburgh; Fort Pitt Steel Casting, Mckeesport; Natl. Mallable and Steel Casting, Cleveland; Electric Steel Castings, Indianapolis; National Erie, Erie, and Symington-Gould, Rochester.

These firms were originally in the basic steel case before the WLB. In its order May 5, the board made vacattion and shift differentials retroactive, but left to collective bargaining the effective date of other wage provisions, including correction of inequities.

World Charter Gives Women Place With Equality Clause

By ELEANOR FOWLER

Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE twenty-to-one vote of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in favor of ratification of the United Nations' Charter reflects the splendid job that has been done in building popular support. One reactionary Republican Senator, who had been considered a possible opponent, was quoted in the paper as saying, "I should vote for it. The people want it."

Women's organizations have been in the lead in mobilizing the American people behind the Charter.

Women have also been deeply concerned with the content of the Charter. Seven women were delegates to the San Francisco Conference. In addition quite a number of women's organizations had observees and consultants at the Conference.

Their influence is evident in the second paragraph of the Charter which says that the peoples of the United Nations are determined "to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and value of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small."

WOMEN URGE ARTICLE

Article 8 of the Charter was also urged especially by women. It reads "The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs."

Then in three separate places in the Charter, in the description of the purposes which member nations pledge themselves to achieve, this phrase appears: "the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion."

Urging the new organization to set up such a Commission is one of the immediaete steps which women can take as soon as the Charter is ratified. There will be wide support for such a move, too, for women of many nations are active as never before.

As a result of the heroic part they played in the resistance movements in Europe, women in many countries there have won full voting rights for the first time.

The response of our American women to the work of CIO-PAC and the way women turned out at the polls last November shows the awareness of women in this country of the part they must play in public life.

Cracking the Quip

WHEN THE Germans were still in Antwerp, Nazi officers were angered at seeing the Dutch ridicule Der Fuehrer as they walked by. Instead of heiling Hitler, the salute they gave the Nazis was, "Heil, Baron Munchausen!"

"He was a great liar, too," explained a Dutchman.

Signs of the Times: The sign in a cafeteria window reading, "Highschool boys and girls wanted, to sample pies every afternoon (and to carry a few dishes, too)" . . . Fletcher Martin, war correspondent for the Negro newspaper "Louisville Defender," recently reported that the war fronts are freer of race prejudice than the home front. Seems the GIs get along together, like the GUYs on the home front should.

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . No amount of atrocity stories seem to convince the saps who want to be tender-hearted to the Nazis. These advocates of soft peace (who have heads to match) should be told the story of Marshall Foch and the German delegation that came to him for armistice terms at the end of World War I. Foch read them the conditions from a paper.

"But-but, there must be some mistake!" the head German officer stammered. "These are terms which no civilized nation could impose on another!"

"I am very glad to hear you say so," replied Foch gravely. "No, gentlemen, these are not OUR terms. They are the terms imposd on Lille by the German commander when that city surrendered."

A Washington reporter was questioning a well-known isolationist Senator, regarding his recent press statements in favor of international cooperation: "Apparently, then, you've undergone a change of heart, Senator?" . . . "No," stated the legislator . . . "But your views," said the surprised newsman, "aren't they different than those you expressed some time ago?" . . . "Those weren't my views," corrected the Senator, "those were my interviews."

A small-town GI stationed in a Big Town, married a local girl. A few days later, the gal's brother took the groom to a hockey game at a big sports arena, something the GI had never seen before.

"Now then, Joe," said the brother-in-law as the game was about to begin, "you're going to see more excitement here for a couple of dollars, than you've ever seen before."

"I doubt it," said the GI, "that's all I paid for my marriage license."

Recess Roundup

Supplementing the Washington Guide's July 9 survey on "unfinished business," we're listing some additional items to check with your Congressmen when they come home for the summer recess.

1. Wages. Ask your Representative and Senators if they've signed the wage petition being circulated on the Hill.

The petition urges President Truman to authorize WLB and other agencies to change the national wage policy to keep purchasing power up, eliminate substandard wages, help in ending the war quickly.

2. Unemployment benefits. Two bills to carry out Pres. Truman's and labor's request for emergency unemployment payments to ward off depression are in Congress now.

One is S.1274 sponsored by Sens. Kilgore, Murray, Thomas (Utah), Guffey and Pepper. It allows for U. S. aid to raise payments up to $25 a week for 26 weeks and includes seamen, Federal workers, agricultural processing workers and those in small firms not now covered, as well as travel allowances.

In addition, it amends the GI Bill of Rights by increasing veterans' unemployment benefits to $25 a week for 52 weeks and to $30 for veterans with dependents.

The other is H. R. 3736, the Doughton bill. It allows the same scale of benefits, includes seamen and U. S. employes, but does not include agricultural processing workers, omits travel allowances, and does not increase benefits to veterans. It also weasels on when bill goes into effect by a provision that none of the benefits shall be paid until 600,000 compensable claims have been filed under state laws.

3. 65c wage floor. Reps. Hook (D. Mich.), Huber (D., Ohio), Price (D., Ill.), O'Toole (D., N. Y.,), have put in an amendment to the wage hour act providing for a 65c wage minimum, compared to the present 40c. A similar bill has been put in the Senate by a coalition headed by Sens. Mead (D., N. Y.), Pepper (D., Fla.), and Thomas (D., Utah).

More than 10 million U. S. workers get less than 65c, can't live decently or contribute to prosperity on such earnings.

Key strategy is to ask your Senators for a commitment to vote for cloture (⅔ vote required) to gag the expected filibuster, bring the bill to the floor.

5. Equal pay. S 1178 requires equal pay for equal work, no discrimination against women in layoffs.

Decline & Fall

Oh, what has happened to Senator Ball?
He used to be called a liberal—
Used to be for the United Nations,
For Bretton Woods and no reservations.
Ball is for labor, wants it free—
It has his deepest sympathy.
To show how he loves us again and again
He's trying to give us a nice Ball and chain,
A beautiful, shiny Ball-Burton-Hatch
For company unions to reach up and catch.
Ball says he's a liberal, and surely no coward—
But why is he stooging for Roy W. Howard?

Action Memo

More than 70 Congressmen have signed the petition to Pres. Truman asking him to order a change in the wage policy allowing for upward revisions. Is your man one of them ? Ask him during the recess.

NAM Tells All

Here's what the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, which sometimes has amazing outbursts of frankness, thinks about the unemployment compensation. It's quoted from NAM News:

"The Congressional attitude is best expressed by the treatment accorded the latest recommendation on the subject by Chairman Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee. In introducing a bill to carry out the recommendations, he marked the bill: 'Introduced by Request.'

"This means the committee chairman was not enthusiastic over the plan and simply was according the President the courtesy of formally complying with his request.

"In view of this, the whole Congress is expected to indulge in much deliberation and little action in the immediate future."

Then, after this cheerful note, NAM News flashes a warning: "Organized labor can be expected to start an immediate pressure campaign on behalf of the program, and the effectiveness of that pressure will largely determine what the final disposition will be."

Thanks for the tip, NAM.

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

Benefits (HR 3736 & S 1274)	Two bills: HR 3736 by Rep. Doughton (D., N. C.). S 1274 is put in by group of Senators; both are for unemployed benefits up to $25 a week for 26 weeks. S 1274 is the better bill, has CIO support.	HR 3736 to House Ways and Means; S 1274 to Senate Finance Committee.	Urge Congressmen to act quickly at hearings. Support S 1274.
65c wage floor	Amends Fair Labor Standard Act to put 65c floor under wages (present floor is 40c).	Introduced by Sen. Pepper and 12 others; by Rep. Hook (D. Mich.) in House.	Urge support when you see your Congressman during recess.
Equal pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work, no discrimination against women on layoffs.	To Senate Labor Committee (Sen. Murray, D., Mont. chmn.)	Same as above.
'Equal Rights' (HJ Res 49)	Wipes out all laws protecting women under mask of 'equal rights.' Wedge for raids on laws protecting men workers.	Reported out of House Judiciary Committee with 7 man dissent.	Urge Congressmen to oppose and to support equal pay bill (above) instead.
Ball, Burton, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; outlaws closed shop. Sponsored by big corporations, using Ball et al as stooges.	Senate Labor Committee; anti-labor press yelling for quick vote.	Urge Congressmen to oppose.
FEPC (S 101, HR 2232)	Make FEPC permanent U. S. government agency.	Stalled in House Rules; Discharge Petition out.	Urge Representative to sign petition.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Will retire men like Bilbo, Rankin et al to private life.	Passed House 2 to 1; now stalled in Senate Judiciary.	Urge Senators to pledge vote for cloture to end filibuster.

(Note: During the recess, consult phone book for address of Representatives and Senators; call on them at home and in local office.)

Coming Up— Issues to Watch

TAXES—AGAIN: It's a tiresome subject, but Congress is thinking and working on taxes. So far the House has passed a bill to give the corporations more gravy, sent it to the Senate. The bill does this:

1. Increases the excess profits tax exemption from $10,000 to $25,000.

2. Lets corporations take their postwar 10 per cent credit on excess profits tax refunds now.

3. Sets the maturity date of postwar tax refund bonds up to Jan. 1, 1946.

4. Speeds up "carryback" of tax allowances for possible operating deficits of corporations.

In brief, Congress has already started giving out gravy to the corporations—while no proposals have been made for relieving the burden on middle and low incomes.

★ ★ ★

WAGE FLOOR: Congress has two proposals to set a floor under wages. They are:

1. Amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act raising the present 40-cent minimum to 65 cents.

2. A resolution by Sen. Pepper (D., Fla.) declaring that it is the national policy of the U. S. to pay wages of not less than 65 cents.

No. 1, the amendments to the wage hour act, is the most active; has been introduced in the House by Rep. Hook (D., Mich.), Huber (D., O.), Price (D., Ill.), and O'Toole (D., N. Y.), and in the Senate by Sens. Mead (D., N. Y.), Pepper (D., Fla.), Thomas (D., Utah) and others.

No. 2 was introduced last year, will not be pushed in favor of the wage hour amendments.

Tell your Senators and your Representative that you want action on the amendments.

FEPC: with the partial victory on the appropriation for FEPC, the need for action on S 101 and HR 2232 becomes more urgent than ever.

Both bills are stalled, HR 2232 in House Rules and S 101 in the Senate. Urge action on both.

Vol. 8, No. 31 July 30, 1945

Protesting the 200,000 employes already laid off in and around Detroit, Sam Sage, secretary of the Wayne County CIO Council, dramatically rides a white horse and carries a banner reading "The British Aren't Coming, but Unemployment Is." They urged action on Congress.

'How About A Job For Every Worker?'

JOBS and security were the demands of the thousands of CIO unionists who rallied in Detroit's Cadillac Square last week.

National unemployment total for Aug. 1 was expected to reach 2,000,000, according to the War Manpower Commission, as a result of cutbacks since VE Day.

War production cutbacks for the month of June had resulted in the layoff of 34,228 workers in 365 plants throughout the nation, according to War Production Board announcement. Of 160,000 workers affected by June cutbacks 116,139 more will be laid off in the third quarter of this year, 6,946 in the fourth quarter, and 2,748 in the first of next year.

Protesting these recent layoffs and the lowering of wages in the reconversion period, CIOers in the Cadillac Square rally displayed banners reading: "Congress guaranteed profits for corporations. How about a job for every worker?"

C. Pat Quin, president of the Detroit and Wayne County CIO Council, presided at the rally. The principal speaker was President R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Automobile Workers. Among the other speakers were Richard T. Frankensteen, UAW-CIO vice president and candidate for Mayor, and Clare Van Auken of the Democratic State Central Committee.

Thomas charged the automobile companies with being on strike against the union. "The automobile companies," he said, "have asked OPA for a 25 per cent increase in prices, based on increased operating costs and wages.

"New production systems developed during the war have increased efficiency enough to balance any increase in the costs of material and we all know what wages mean now.

"They are merely on strike against our union and they are trying everything they know to provoke us into strikes.

"Well, they can strike all they want to, but they are not going to trick me into calling a strike. Our problem is jobs and I have never seen anybody settle an unemployment question by adding more unemployment to it."

R. J. Thomas, CIO United Automobile Workers' president, speaks before the UAW-CIO mass meeting in Detroit's Cadillac Square. Thomas charged that automobile manufacturers are on strike against the union and are deliberately trying to provoke labor into striking.

On a 30-day furlough he visited his union headquarters, conferred with his union officers, Fitzgerald and Emspak. He had been away for two and a half years; learned that the organization drive he started at Winchester Arms was successful.

Capt. Michael Jimenez volunteered into the U. S. Army; was sent overseas as a civilian. In Africa he became a sergeant; at Anzio a lieutenant, and by the end of the Italian campaign he was a full Captain.

Guerrilla Specialist Warns Us 'Must Learn to Live With All'

ON the road ahead there was a terrific explosion. The long line of German trucks that wound through the Italian mountains screeched to a stop. The vital bridge that connected them with their forces fighting the Allies was blown to bits. It would take many days for the damage to be repaired. Days when the German strength would be weakened for lack of supplies.

American lives would be saved and the American advance hastened because of the destruction of that bridge. The Italian partisans had done a good job.

A former organizer for the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, Capt. Michael Jimenez, was organizer and Allied contact for many of these important Italian partisan groups. This week in Washington, D. C., he told The CIO NEWS as much about his activities as military security would permit.

Capt. Jimenez was awarded the Legion of Merit for his service in Italy. His citation as a then first lieutenant reads in part, "In the successful accomplishment of a mission of the utmost importance under particularly dangerous circumstances, First Lieut. Jimenez reflected great credit upon himself and contributed materially to the success of the Allied operations in Italy."

Capt. Jimenez learned guerrilla fighting the hard way. During the Spanish civil war he fought as an American volunteer with the Spanish Loyalists, organizing and working with guerrilla groups behind Franco lines.

In the American Army, from the African campaign through the Anzio landing and Italy, Capt. Jimenez rose from private to captain in the field.

He is enthusiastic about the Italian partisans. "Some of the best anti-fascist fighters I've seen," he said. "People don't realize how much the Allied Armies owe to them. Thousands of American lives have been saved and the Italian campaign shortened considerably by the activities of these Italian forces.

"The whole of the enemy rear," he continued, "was covered with Partisan-held areas. They controlled the majority of the roads and rail lines, forcing the enemy to travel by day in strength and making them easy prey for the allied air forces."

When the Allied forces broke through the Apennines and captured Bologna, the partisans had already liberated every important town in northern Italy, including Milan, Turin, Venice and Genoa, he said.

All the Italian anti-fascists ask, Jimenez said, "is greater freedom of action to build a democratic country. And they have earned that right by their many dead in the common cause."

"The most shocking thing about coming home," he said, "is the amount of talk that one encounters for the first time of the difficulties of living with other countries, and the need For fighting other countries, and yes, discrimination, here at home.

"Why, during my two and a half years overseas, especially in Italy with the Fifth and Eighth Armies, there were people of all colors, all nations, fighting for common things. There were French, Americans, Brazilians, Greeks, Poles, Canadians New Zealanders, Italians, living together and fighting together, never encountering any differences, but only finding common grounds. You get the difference over here; you don't get that overseas.

"Sure we joked about the British, or other nationalities, but it was not serious. All of us fought together, and we learned to respect each other, demonstrating that there are no basic differences among men fighting for the same things. We rather sought out the things we had in common, that kept us together, and kept us fighting. That's what I'd like to see more of at home."

On his furlough Capt. Jimenez saw his son, Michael, for the first time. His wife, Rosemarie, an artist in peace times, works at Sunship and is a member of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

As to the future, Capt. Jimenez is being reassigned now. "But," he says, "my intentions are definitely to go back to my organizing job, much more determined than before. Why, President Truman himself said it. It's we vets who have to take the initiative in the coming period. The future depends on us. And I'm planning to take my place in that future."

Bilbo's Pen Writes With Fascist Ink

SEN. BILBO (D., Miss.), most notorious Negro-baiter in Congress, has added several million Americans of Italian descent to his list—and has run into trouble for doing it.

Latest Bilbo racist insult is a letter to three CIO women members, Sec. Treas. Josephine Timms of the American Communications Assn. and Miss Josephine Piccolo of New York and Mrs. Bernice Zeller of Baltimore.

Writing to Miss Piccolo, the fascist mounthpiece said: "What the H... are you griping about?" after addressing her with the insulting "My Dear Dago." To Miss Timms, he wrote: "Your letter indicates that your mind has been poisoned by a lot of rot appearing in PM, the Daily Worker and other pink, off-brand and unAmerican publications in New York City."

Bilbo has been challenged by Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.) to apologize to both women. Things that Bilbo says in Congress are protected from libel suits. What do decent people in Missippippi feel about their Senator?

In the third letter, this time to Mrs. Bernice Zeller, CIO member of Baltimore, Md., Bilbo added this touch: "I wired a bunch of these fanatics in New York the other day and told them if these Communists and fanatical groups did not quit trying to pass such damphool legislation through the Congress to oppress the people and rob them of their freedom that eventually the great mass of American people would revolt and figuratively liquidate every member of their groups."

Municipal Elections Head Political Action Lists Now

BUOYED by sweeping victories scored by labor-endorsed candidates in municipal elections throughout the nation, CIO Political Action Committee officials look forward to the August 7 primary in Detroit, Mich., as a test of labor's political strength in an off-presidential election year.

Labor and political observers are also focusing attention on the November mayoralty race in New York City where the CIO-PAC, through the American Labor Party, has endorsed William O'Dwyer for Mayor, State Senator Lazarus Joseph for Comptroller and Vincent Impellitteri for president of the City Council. The Republican-Liberal-Fusion mayoralty choice, Judge Jonah Goldstein, was attacked last week by Sidney Hillman, chairman of CIO-PAC and the ALP, as being a hand-picked appointment of Governor Dewey.

Special interest is centered upon the Detroit primary for a labor official, UAW Vice-President Richard T. Frankensteen, has entered the mayoralty race and is conceded to be the chief opponent of the incumbent, Mayor Edward E. Jeffries.

Jeffries was condemned nationally for his anti-Negro stand during the 1943 campaign following the race riots in that city. He has sought to mollify Negro groups by a series of favorable appointments. Political observers believe, however, that the overtures will not wipe out the memories of Jeffries' position in 1943 and Frankensteen will draw a sizeable Negro vote.

In Minneapolis, the United Labor Volunteer Committee, representing the AFL, CIO and Railroad Brotherhood, were responsible for the victory scored by Hubert H. Humphrey, Jr., over the incumbent, Mayor Marvin L. Kline, one of Tom Dewey's chief mid-west lieutenants. Besides aiding Humphrey roll up the largest majority ever scored in Minneapolis history, labor's political action group helped break a city council progressive-conservative deadlock to give the progressives a clear-cut margin. Eight of the 11 aldermanic contests in which labor took part found labor-supported candidates the winners. In addition, Mrs. Nellie Stone, Negro candidate for the library board, was elected with labor backings.

In Birmingham, City Commissioners W. Cooper Green, J. W. Morgan and Eugene Connor were all re-elected with labor support, Carey E. Haigler, president of the Alabama Industrial Union Council, reported.

In Los Angeles, Field Representative George Roberts said, "Mayor Fletcher Bowron, endorsed by the CIO and Railroad Brotherhoods, won hands down while two anti-labor council members were ousted after several run-offs. Several labor-endorsed candidates won council seats." Roberts reports that it looks "like we can have the most progressive council in years."

NCPAC Leaders on Cross-Country Trek to Stir PA

PLUNGING into organizational work for the 1946 Congressional election campaigns, Chairman Elmer A. Benson and Exec. Vice Chairman C. B. Baldwin, of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee, left July 19 for a 6-week cross-country trip which will take them to 19 key cities in 15 states.

Explaining the purpose of the trip, Benson said: "We are looking to the 1946 elections. We are going out to confer with local and state officials, political leaders of the major parties, and the leaders of civic affairs in each of the cities on our itinerary. We want their ideas on how we can stimulate political interest and get a healthy, 80 to 100 per cent vote in 1946."

Benson pointed out that municipal and congressional elections since November "have been decided by 10 and 20 and 30 per cent of the electorate," adding: "We think the people will turn out at the polls in 1946 when they recognize the responsibility of the Congress for their welfare, and we are hopeful that every American will recognize and assume his individual responsibility for the kind of Congress we have and the kind we are going to get after the next elections.

"We are alarmed," he said, "at the manner in which religious and racial bigotry is being spread in America, and spread by evil men using the halls of Congress as a sounding board for Hitler's theories of super-races. With only a few honorable exceptions our senators and representatives have remained silent while Bilbo, Eastland, Rankin and others have used their privileged positions for foul attacks on Catholics, Jews, Negroes and basic American principles."

Benson also expressed alarm at the failure of Congress to take action to insure orderely reconversion and said one of the objects of the trip would be "to explore the postwar prospects for full production and full employment in industry and agriculture."

The NCPAC leader said he and Baldwin would consult with the leaders of the many non-partisan, progressive groups "who played the decisive role in the 1944 elections" on their plans for mobilizing political action in the 1946 congressional races. They would also be on the lookout for good candidates, both Republican and Democratic, worthy of support in the primaries and elections next year, he said.

Benson and Baldwin will visit Chicago, St. Louis, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Sacramento, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Helena, Bismarck, Sioux Falls, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Kansas City and Des Moines before returning to New York the last week in August.

Super-Seniority in Action!

Ex-GI 'Bumps' War I Vet With 12 Years' Seniority

A CASE before the War Labor Board arising from the displacement of a World War I veteran in his job by a World War II veteran illustrates the industrial chaos resulting from application of Selective Service's super-seniority theory.

The situation arose at the Mishawaka, Ind., plant of the U. S. Rubber Co., where World War I veteran, A. F. Mello, had been on the job since 1932, as a service man whose duty it was to take supplies to workers making rubber soles and garments.

Came the war and it was necessary to add service men on the second and third shifts. One of those hired for this job was Forest O. Thomas on August 12, 1942 He was put on the second shift, while Mello remained on his prewar shift, the first.

On the job less than four months, Thomas was drafted, while Mello continued on his old job. Discharged from the Army in December, 1944, Thomas went to the plant and insisted that he get his old job back even though the company told him that the second shift had been abolished.

The company gave Mello's job to Thomas and fired the World War I veteran who had 12 years' priority.

Local 65, CIO Rubber Workers protested, although it agreed with the company that under the Selective Service Act Thomas was a permanent employe and entitled to employment.

The union disagreed that Thomas was entitled to Mello's job, pointing out that Thomas' old job no longer existed, but joined with the company in asking state Selective Service for a ruling.

SELECTIVE SERVICE RULES

The request was referred to national headquarters of Selective Service, which replied:

"In such circumstances, where the former position no longer exists the veteran is entitled to a position substantially equivalent in seniority, status and pay, a requirement which appears to be fulfilled in this instance."

When the company refused to arbitrate the matter, the case was referred to WLB as a dispute threatening interruption of war production.

The CIO position is that a veteran shall not lose anything by having served his country but shall be in the same job status as if he had remained on the job.

EXTENSION of the 55-cent hourly wage to textile workers on government contract work was asked by Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers Union (CIO) in letters to Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach and Wage-Hour Administrator L. Metcalfe Walling.

Rieve also requested that minimum occupational rates be established in the textile industry in all cases where the Walsh-Healey act applies.

The union leader pointed out that the Walsh-Healey textile minimum under which government contracts are awarded is still 40 cents an hour although the effective minimum wage in the industry has been 55 cents since the War Labor Board directive of Feb. 20.

Rieve asked for a review of the Labor Dept.'s wage policies under the act "to give the textile workers the protection intended by the Walsh-Healey act against the use of public funds to support subminimum wages, and also as a means of assisting the manpower situation in a critical war industry by improving the industry's competitive position for labor."

CIO Aids Buffalo Reconversion Plans

A Civic Full Employment Committee has been set up by Buffalo's mayor with the purpose of cushioning reconversion unemployment. The committe is made up of 15 labor, management and public representatives. CIO Regional Director Hugh Thompson was among those attending the meeting setting up the committee.

Annual Wage Study Begins

A SUBCOMMITTEE of the war Manpower and Recconversion Advisory Board of which CIO President Philip Murray is a member, this week appointed Murray Latimer and Arthur Meyer as co-directors to head an objective government study of the guaranteed annual wage.

In addition to Murray the subcommittee includes Anna Rosenberg of the War Manpower commission, Albert Goss of the National Grange, and is chaired by Chamber of Commerce President Eric Johnson.

Meyer, who has been doing labor mediation work since 1936, serving on the WLB in the last few years, will have charge of the conference division of the study. Through a program of conferences between labor groups and business groups he will study the guaranteed wage plans that are or have been in effect.

Latimer, chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board since 1934 and a member of the faculty of the Harvard Business School prior to that, will have charge of the research division of the study.

In announcing the appointment, Johnson stressed the fact that the study would be with an eye only to a form of voluntary guaranteed wage. He pointed out that such a plan in keeping business operations on a steady basis and providing a regular income for labor would have a profound effect in leveling economic cycles.

Thanks to CIO

The joint CIO and AFL gift of $22,500 to the Cardiff Allied Seamen's Club in England was acknowledged with thanks this week in a letter to CIO President Murray from John S. Winant, Chairman of the Council of the Management of the Merchant Navy Club Co.

More Than 17,000,000 Workers Get Below 65c, Pepper Urges Fair Level

MILLIONS of American men and women workers—and their families—are forced today to "exist on earnings insufficient to provide even the barest minimum standard of living consistent with health and decency," the Pepper committee of the U. S. Senate said this week in releasing its report on substandard wages.

The report supports the need for the bill put in by Sen. Pepper (R., Fla.) and other Senators raising the present wage hour minimum from 40 cents an hour to 65.

(This bill was reported in the July 23 CIO NEWS as applying the 65 cent minimum to a 44 hour work week for the first year, 42 for the second and 40 for subsequent years. It now appears that the final version of the bill as put in the Senate hopper starts with the 40 hour week.)

More than 17,000,000 workers now get less than 65 cents, the report said. Of these, 2,000,000 get less than even the wage hour minimum of 40 cents. Five million of the 17 are the 50 cents level.

These wage levels fall far below minimum health needs as worked out by such studies as the WPA maintenance budget, the Heller Committee budget and a study prepared by the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Thus, the WPA figure, adjusted to 1943 living costs, shows a minimum wage need of 80 cents an hour , the Heller Committee $1.42 and the Textile Workers, 78 cents.

"While the bases of these several estimates are not entirely uniform, the Pepper report says, "the subcommittee finds in them conclusive evidence that the 65 cent minimum substandard wage rate proposed is an extremely conservative, if not inadequate, figure from the standpoint of affording a minimum standard of living."

Quotes from testimony of CIO witnesses before the Pepper Committee give a tragic color to the report—such as this, from a Food and Tobacco Workers union member earning 50 cents an hour in an Indiana cannery:

"My household expenses, food expenses, run $15 a week. We do not have milk; I cannot afford milk except for only the baby. It costs $1.80 a week to feed the baby milk, and the other boys are lucky if they get the quantity of milk that is required to make a good healthy boy.

"We have been married 18 years and my husband has never had a suit of clothes. I sew, and I have sewed four dresses; I make my own clothing. The dress I have on is borrowed in order to come here."

Or this from a Virginia member of the Textile Workers Union, explaining that if she had 65 cents an hour, she would: " . . . try first to have these children's tonsils removed; next I would try to get them a decent place to live, and I think next I would try to get them a little more milk."

Or this, from a widow member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, earning 50 cents, whose chief dream is to get an old piano for her 9-year-old daughter:

"My youngest girl, she's nine now, she goes straight to the piano when we go to a house where they have one. She does want to learn to play the piano so bad. I've thought and thought that maybe I could save 50 cents a week to buy a second hand piano for her . . . But try as hard as I can, I pinch and save and squeeze, I haven't found a way to do it yet."

Such conditions not only tell of millions of personal hardships and frustrations—especially heavy on the children—but are also a factor in the war against fascism and the struggle for a secure world, the report points out.

This is shown in the close connection between army-navy rejections and substandard incomes, increased illiteracy and generally low health levels in the state where starvation wages are paid.

"Low wages also take their toll from the war effort through absenteeism and lowered efficiency on the job brought on by malnutrition and inadequate living contions," it says.

This in turn is marked by the exodus of workers from low wage areas and industries to higher paid jobs, which is the direct cause of serious military shortages in textiles and other war materials. The same manpower shortages have the same causes in food, shoes, hosiery etc.

The increase in the cost of living—up 45.8 per cent since 1941—falls most heavily on substandard wage earners, the report adds. Low paid workers have to pay a much greater share of their income for basic necessities—food, clothing, shelter—where the highest increases have taken place. Even the Bureau of Labor Statistics, it is pointed out, admits this.

The report sharply criticizes War Labor Board "hesitancy and irresolution" in eliminating starvation wages, saying:

"Even prior to the stabilization period, the Board recognized an obligation to eliminate below subsistence wages, stating in one of its earliest decisions: ' . . . no wage tribunal should fix a wage below the level of health and decency in order to keep such a submarginal industry in operation.' "

Despite this, the report adds, the Board's policy in attacking the substandard wage problem has thus far been one of hesitancy and irresolution."

Highest possible cost, of the 65 cent minimum and then only on "the unrealistic assumption that all workers receiving less than 65 cents an hour would be immediately raised to 65 cents" would be about four billion dollars a year.

"A more realistic estimate, for which the WLB is the authority, places the total annual cost at $761,000,000." This would mean a total annual increase in the nonagricultural wage bill of 0.5 per cent.

"The cost of the proposal can be absorbed by American industry without substantially affecting current profit levels and, in most instances, within the limits of existing price ceilings," the report continues.

Corporate profits in 1943 were reported by the U. S. Dept. of Commerce at 24.2 billion dollars —four times above those of 1939. The estimate of a $761,000,000 addition to the wage bill, therefore, would be only 3.1 per cent of 1943 profits.

In concluding its recommendations, the report points out that the 65 cent minimum proposal is "a practical first step toward assuring the purchasing power that will be essential to the achievement of full employment in the reconversion and postwar periods."

Senators Join Pepper on Anti-Poll Tax Bill

SIX more Senators have joined with Senator Claude Pepper (D. Fla.) in the bi-partisan steering committee for final passage of H. R. 7, the Federal anti-poll tax bill, bringing the total to 12.

The following are the Senators who have newly pledged their support to passage of the bill to probibit imposition of a poll tax:

Congress Comes Home

Before adjourning, it has rushed through a bill to give profit-takers five billion dollars in direct tax relief, to "improve the cash position of business enterprises."

While this and every other possible measure has been passed to protect the interests of the well-to-do, Congress has shown no similar concern for the "cash position" of American working people.

It has failed to provide any emergency relief for laid-off war workers and those who find their take-home pay sharply cut by loss of overtime, transfers, downgrading, etc.

It has also failed to act on pending measures for expanded social security, full employment and elimination of substandard wages.

The return home of your Congressional representatives furnishes an excellent opportunity to impress on them the popular demand for adoption of measures like these—to encourage the progressives who have put up a good fight, and to show the lukewarm and reactionary that the voters have their eyes on them.

Ask your representatives particularly what they have done and propose to do about the Kilgore-Forand bill for $25 a week for 26 weeks for laid-off war workers; about the Congressional petition to break through the Little Steel wage freeze; about the bill to raise substandard wages to at least 65c an hour; about the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill for more adequate social security; about the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill; about a permanent FEPC; and about the vicious Ball-Burton-Hatch bill that would destroy the rights of labor unions.

Your representatives are coming home to find out how you feel about Congressional measures like these. Don't fail to let them know.

British Labor's Victory

THE landslide victory of the British Labor party is excellent news for progressives everywhere.

American labor is naturally delighted that the British labor movement, with which it enjoys the closest fraternal relations, should achieve such outstanding success in its political activities.

But the Labor party victory is much broader than a victory for the organized workers, from whom the party draws its greatest support. It is a victory for the British common people generally.

The huge vote for the Labor party indicates how broad is its popular support, which seems comparable in scope to the support for Roosevelt in the last American elections.

The British elections reflect and reinforce the worldwide progressive trend, and the determination of the common people in all countries to enjoy the full benefits of the people's victory in this people's war.

Significant too is the overwhelmingly pro-labor vote of British service men and women.

American tories, pro-fascists and labor-haters will find a warning for themselves in the British elections. The democratic trend of the times is against them.

American labor and progressives, on the other hand, will draw great encouragement. They will be stimulated to renewed political activity in this year's city elections, and for a people's victory over our American tories in next year's Congressional elections.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

CURLED, nose on paws, the black dog at the Washington army airport did not even stir in his sleep.

Arriving and departing planes were routine for him. So too were welcomes and farewells for great and small.

Whirling propellers and hurrying legs just helped to circulate the stagnant air and keep the flies away, so he could sleep without a muscle-twitch.

For the airport staff too, another arrival was mere routine, as the officer told them to get ready for "the olive-drab job."

It landed smoothly and easily like all the rest—the olive-drab job with a red star on it. The passengers stepped out, were greeted and absorbed in waiting cars. The staff got busy on the next arrival.

And the black dog did not even stir in his sleep.

It was all as simple and informal as when Stanley met up with the lost explorer in the African jungle and said, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume"—or when American GI's and Red Army men first met and embraced in the center of Germany.

This was a first meeting too. Nothing so much in itself maybe, for folks are always coming and going and meeting and greeting. But something to get excited about, if you can look further into the past and the future than can a sleeping dog.

The "olive-drab job" was a Soviet plane. It had flown half way around the world to bring, as invited guests of the CIO, the first fraternal delegation of Soviet trade unionists ever to visit America.

First to step off the plane was a Russian Bill Smith. The Russian word for a smith is kuznets, and William is Vassili.

Vassili Kuznetsov is the Phil Murray of the USSR, head of the trade union movement there and, like Murray, from the steelworkers' union. He has something too of Murray's democratic simplicity and dignity.

Another passenger was the Johnny Green of the USSR, head of the shipbuilders' union, Nick Gaissenok by name, lively and friendly as Johnny himself.

Then there was the Soviet auto workers' counterpart of R. J. Thomas, tall, serious Boris Gostov, with deep-set eyes.

Another was a sailor, Mike Zhdanov, the Joe Curran of the Soviet maritime union, salty and blunt like most men of the sea.

Completing the delegation were quiet Ivan Chevtaev of the Woodworkers' union; ruddy-faced Alex Stepanov, ace wage negotiator; Mike Falin, assistant to Kuznetsov; blonde Claudia Orlova of the Clothing Workers; brown-eyed Iraida Shostak of the Teachers' union; and dainty Liubov Samoshina, the interpreter.

When these visitors got together over some beers with their American hosts, it was like any chin-fest between delegates at a CIO convention—plenty in common to discuss, job experiences, organizing problems—and notes to compare on differing conditions.

The Soviet unionists asked endless questions about their respective industries in the United States, about wages, working and living conditions, how American unions function.

They were soon swapping comparisons about grievance committee procedures, wage negotiations, union elections, etc.

The only wonder was that this sort of thing should never have happened before—that it took a world war to break down the barrier of lies that kept American and Soviet labor apart.

Looking back over the murky, blood-streaked water that has flowed under the bridge, we may well mourn the tragedy of past labor division.

Who knows but what fascism might have been nipped in the bud without a world-wide war, if labor had long ago achieved the international unity and understanding now in the making.

But, looking ahead, there is still work aplenty for world labor unity, to wipe out all vestiges of fascism and to preserve our future peace.

In our own country there are many—some even claiming to speak for labor—who are trying to re-erect the old barrier of lies and hatred between the peoples of the US and the USSR, and to defeat the purposes of the World Federation of Trade Unions and the United Nations Charter.

The present friendly, homely, almost casual visiting between American and Soviet trade unionists may seem a small thing in itself. But, like the first meeting between Soviet and American GI's in Germany, it is a token full of promise.

'Soviet Trade Unions Are Democratic As Any'—Says Vassili Kuznetsov

By C. W. FOWLER

SOVIET trade unions are as democratic and they function as effectively as any in the world, Vassili Kuznetsov, chairman of the All Union Central Council of Trade Unions of the USSR, told news reporters in an hour-long press conference in CIO headquarters here in Washington.

Kuznetsov, whose position corresponds to that of Pres. Murray here, is visiting the U. S. with nine fellow trade union leaders as guests of the CIO. They came on the invitation sent by Pres. Murray to trade unions of the USSR, Britain and France last June, and will stay in the country about two more weeks.

Kuznetsov, a big, broad-shouldered steelworker who has worked and lived in this country, spoke English without hesitation and met every question from the reporters—some of them distinctly hostile—head on and without evasion.

"We're willing to discuss our trade union set-up with anybody," Kuznetsov said after he had been introduced by CIO Vice President Allan S. Haywood. "We think that the clearing up of this question is one of the most important contributions we can make to international labor unity. In fact, that is one of the main reasons why we are glad to be here as guests of President Murray and the CIO."

Soviet trade unions are run by officials elected by secret ballot, he added, and leaders are chosen solely on the basis of their efficiency in looking out for the members' interests. Around 90% of the country's workers belong, including white collar and professional people and agricultural workers employed on the state-owned farms. Workers on the collective farms, he explained, do not belong to unions, but get their income on a share basis, proportionate to the amount of work they do.

Membership and dues payments are both voluntary, Kuznetsov said. Some industries are 100% organized, others as low as 85%. Dues are roughly 1 per cent of the workers' income.

As in the U. S., reconversion from war to peacetime production is one of the main preoccupations of the unions in the USSR, Kuznetsov said. Already the government has ordered a reduction in working hours from 10 and 12 to eight and has restored paid vacations, dropped during the war.

"Our biggest problem is not the fear of unemployment, for we have no unemployment, but its opposite—lack of manpower. Even with the partial demobilization of our army and with the shift of workers from the farms to the cities, we still need millions of men and women workers," he said.

"We will also have a big source in conversion of war plants to peacetime work—but we are not pletely stopping manufacture of munitions. When we do stop depends on the world situation—depends on how well the governments and the workers build a world of peace and security."

In addition to cutting the hours and restoring vacations, the government has ordered industry to keep take home pay at wartime levels, so that a worker gets the same pay for eight hours as he used to get for 10 or 12.

"We worry most about how quickly we can reconvert," he said, "and not about unemployment or wage reductions. How quickly we can do the job, of course, depends to a great extent on how much equipment we can buy from your country. Soviet workers have a great admiration for the products of the U. S. We know your stuff is good."

The Soviets also plan to use German prisoners of war to help rebuild the devastation the Nazis spread. Some are being used already in construction, timber and agriculture, and the Soviet trade unions "hope the Allies will agree to our use of more of them."

There haven't been any strikes during the war, Kuznetsov said, though there have been disputes between workers and management which have been decided.

Grievance adjustment machinery begins in the plants, where committees of four—two from the unions and two from management—meet regularly on beefs. If this committee fails to iron out the beef, it is taken to the central committee of the union and to the top management.

If the dispute is still unsolved, the central committee of the union takes it over and solves it without management. If management, however, still balks, the beef can be sent on to the central committee of the All Union Council, whose action is final.

Disputes usually take about a month or a month and a half to settle, Kuznetsov said. "Of course we have disputes, but we don't have strikes. We settle the disputes—so why should there be a strike when there's no need for it?"

Pressed again on strikes, this time by a Scripps-Howard reporter, Kuznetsov said yes, there had been pre-war strikes. "There were big strikes around 1905 and again in early 1917, you may remember," he said. After the 1917 revolution there were plenty of disputes, but he couldn't recall that they had to be settled by strikes.

"All industry belongs to the state," he said. "Wages are fixed by collective bargaining and by studies of government bodies and trade union committees. There is no official ban on strikes. Why should there be?"

To another newsman who felt uneasily that government planning in the Soviet Union was opposed to free enterprise, Kuznetsov said:

"We have central control of industry in our country, done by the State Planning Commission. This group makes plans for all industry. Right now we are working out a three-year plan of reconstruction and expansion of industry.

"This plan, which will cover every industry, will be sent around the country for discussion by unions and management. Corrections will be made there. This plan will then be broken down to three months installments. These in turn will be broken down to one month installments—so that we will know where we're at any time."

Plans are usually 90 to 95% fulfilled, sometimes more, and are frequently carried out in less than the allotted time.

To another questioner, Kuznetsov explained that workers were not allowed to travel from one job to another during the war. Since the defeat of Germany, their freedom of movement has been restored.

"Our system is very good for us," he said, in answering a question as to which system he thought the better—ours or that of the USSR. "Without it we could not have stood this terrible war. For the working class our system is not bad."

Labor Calls OPA Plan Wage Freeze

THE OPA Labor Policy Committee, representing CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods, this week said that the OPA plan for removal of price ceilings was created to "appease" anti-price control interests and would "freeze wages." Stabilization Director Davis has issued a directive putting the plan in operation.

The committee said that the directive "will encourage the very anti-price control forces it is designed to appease, inviting them to redouble their efforts to get from under price control before the need for it has passed.

Under the directive Davis will "no longer review OPA removal of price ceilings on commodities which OPA believes do not significantly affect the cost of living," the committee declared.

The committee asserted that there will be no suspension or exemption of prices of commodities listed in the Bureau of Labor Standards index on the cost of living, which is used by the War Labor Board to determine whether wages should rise.

"The plan will allow the cost of living to rise, but not the cost of living index," the committee charged. "The index will continue to serve as a freeze on wages."

CIO Backs Maternal, Child Aid

CIO support for the maternal and child welfare aid bill just introduced in Congress by Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) and nine other Senators was assured in a letter this week from Legislative Director Nathan Cowan.

The bill provides complete maternity and child care, plus welfare work and special aid for crippled children, for all mothers and children who need it, at a cost of $100,000,000 for the first year. The program would be financed by the Federal government and made available through the states.

The bill is "in line with the resolution passed by the 1944 CIO convention," Cowan wrote, "in which we upheld the 'right of all mothers and children, whatever their race, residence or family income, to all diagnostic and curative medical services they need for good health'."

Urging early hearings and quick action on the bill, Pepper said: "We need only refer to the 40 per cent of applicants for enlistment in the WACs rejected to realize that indifference to the health of our children sooner or later strikes at the very life of the nation.

"Investigation has shown that a considerable proportion of the physical defects for which registrants were rejected could have been prevented or remedied by better health care."

State systems are not enough to take care of the need, Pepper said, pointing out that in 1944 15,000 crippled children were listed in state agencies which could do nothing for them due to lack of money under the present social security act.

Ivan Chevtaev, 37, is chairman of the Central Committee of the Sawmill and Woodworkers Union. Membership is 800,000. He comes from Sverdlovsk in the Ural Mountains. His Union's prime concern is getting out the products to rebuild his nation's devastated homes and cities.

Claudia Orlova, 38, is chairman of her Moscow sewing factory committee. Her husband was killed in the war. She has one daughter. Her factory, which in peace-time produced dresses, has been making uniforms. The visitors are well-clad in Russian made garments.

Iraida Shostak, 26, teaches English, and is chairman of the Omsk, Siberia, Committee of Highschool and Scientific Workers. Her husband, an officer in the Red Army, has been away for four years. She looks forward to life together again—of study, work, family—"a boy and girl."

Guests of CIO

Story by Helen Kay
Pictures by Norman Driscoll

THEY came by plane, their own, a C-47—American type plane with a crew of five Russians. At Fairbanks they picked up American pilots and landed at the Washington airport on Saturday, July 21st. They were guests of the CIO, invited here to learn about our trade unions at the personal request of Philip Murray.

There were ten of them: seven men and three women. They toured the CIO offices; they toured the city. They mingled on the streets with the citizens of Washington, and no one stared strangely at them, for they were not strange. Their Russian-made clothes were well-tailored. They looked in fact like any other group of citizens in Washington. Perhaps if one had looked closely one might have noticed that the men's jackets buttoned to the left rather than to the right. And if some turned for a second glance it was probably only to wonder who the tall, ruggedly handsome man at their head was. Or perhaps to take another look at attractive Iraida.

And when American trade unionists talked with them they were impressed not by any differences, but by the similarities. The shop talk was the same, and the friendliness and informality were the same. And when they got down to cases, a lot of the problems were the same. They were invited, and they came for the same reason: for friendly relations between the unions of the Soviet Union and the unions of the United States. For international labor unity and for a tomorrow of security and peace.

Vassili Kuznetsov, the delegation's chairman, is in himself a good-will ambassador to our trade unions. He knows and appreciates America. And of the CIO and its policies he has much good to say. "We always felt the lack of information about each other was a serious obstacle in establishing good and friendly relations. This visit will help our American friends understand us better. But we came really to learn more from the CIO. We have been watching your work. Every worker of our country understands the enormous effect of the CIO in organizing the workers and improving their conditions of work, during the war, and also in securing a high level of production to provide for the American forces and also to help us substantially with arms and food supplies."

Kuznetsov extended a cordial and hearty invitation to the CIO to return their visit. "We must build a strong international labor organization, where labor can express its aspirations. No more wars, work for all at good wages and under good living conditions. The same for all workers, everywhere. We hope this visit will bring us closer together. And we hope your return visit will give us an opportunity to strengthen our good relations."

Soviet Trade Uni

Alexander Stepanov, 34, is in charge of the Division of Wages of the Central Union. He is an economist and explained that each factory had a wage committee, as did each central union, studying its living facts, i. e., what wages buy.

Boris Gostov, 50, is from the Central Committee of the Auto Union. Membership is 200,000. He is proud of the Russian autos which they name like our bombers, the Zis 101, a Buick, the M1, like a Ford. Our industry fathered theirs.

Allan Haywood, CIO Vice President, and Vassili Kuznetsov tog study a map of the United States, pointing out the key center trade unionists will visit. Vassili Kuznetsov, 43, is chairman of the All-Union Central Council of the Trade Unions. Membership is 25,000,000. This is his third trip to America. He worked in Pittsburgh steel mills and at Henry Ford's. He speaks English fluently. He was a metallurgical engineer, but gradually became more interested in the conditions of workers than in the actual steel process. Found himself the head of the Iron and Steel Union, and now chairman of the All-Union Central Council. His wife is a university teacher. He has three children. He brings a hearty invitation to the CIO to come to this country.

CIO Wins Consolidated Edison Workers, to Form New National Union

THE overwhelming vote of the Brotherhood of the Consolidated Edison Employes, New York City, this week to affiliate with the CIO Utility Workers Organizing Committee presaged the formation of a national CIO affiliate of utility workers. The referendum to affiliate carried 8,555 to 2,843, and followed a CIO victory several weeks ago in similar balloting conducted by the Tri-States Utility Workers with headquarters in St. Louis, Mo.

The Consolidated Edison Co. and the AFL Int. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers joined in attempting to keep the New York utility workers from voting CIO. The company conducted a campaign of intimidation, spreading the rumor that a vote for the CIO was a vote to lose what benefits they had, while the AFL union made a futile attempt to halt the election by a court injunction.

"The next step is to consolidate these victories and to expand to utility workers in other areas that are calling for the CIO," Allan S. Haywood, CIO Director of Organization and Vice President, declared. "Then a national union will be formed by the consolidation of the CIO Utility Workers Organizing Committee and these groups."

Within the next several days CIO Pres. Philip Murray will meet with Harold J. Straub, general chairman of UWOC; Joseph A. Fisher, president of the joint council of the Brotherhood of Consolidated Edison Employes, and other leaders of the Brotherhood with the purpose of taking steps to form the national union.

Fisher said that other utilty workers organizations in Kansas City, Indiana, Nebraska, part of Michigan and Texas would probably affiliate with the CIO.

On the recommendation of its officers, including Fisher, William Pachler and Patrick McGrath, the New York group at a convention in April in Cleveland decided to hold a referendum.

The Consolidated Edison Employes were originally in the AFL but revolting against their leadership defeated it and elected the independent brotherhood as their collective bargaining agent in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election in 1940.

Following receipt of the new CIO victory, Haywood issued a warning that if anything prevents collective bargaining for the Consolidated Edison Workers, the company alone will be held responsible.

Haywood also said that the victory was a slap at AFL Pres. William Green, whose IBEW affiliate moved in a Missouri court to prevent the workers from choosing the CIO as its collective bargaining agent. This week the court dissolved a temporary restraining order against the CIO in St. Louis.

Bethlehem's Biggest Yard Goes CIO

THE eleven-year-old regime of the company-created "independent union" has been broken by the victory of the CIO Shipbuilders Union in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election at the Fore River Shipyard at Quincy, Mass., oldest and largest shipyard of the Bethlehem Steel Co. The vote was 7,226 for the CIO to 5,317 for no union.

Since the victory a week ago, the Shipbuilders Union has been receiving 200 new members a day, Thomas J. Gallagher, organizational director of the union, declared this week.

Although the company union did not appear on the ballot, it held sway since it was set up in 1934 to replace the illegal Employes Representative Plan, favored everywhere as long as possible by the Eugene Grace firm in the hope of thwarting union activity.

Neither in the 1941 NLRB election nor in the recent one did the "independent union" appear on the ballot. The CIO was swamped by the "no union" vote in the 1941 election, and shortly thereafter the company again recognized the "independent union."

Over 400 workers who came to the bona fide union headquarters at Quincy to hear the returns celebrated the victory at a party arranged by the union, which was assisted in the final days of the campaign by 800 volunteer organizers.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO Vice-President and Director of Organization

After numerous efforts the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers came through with a smashing victory at the Bethlehem-Fore River Shipyard in Quincy, Mass., one that means much not only to this organization but to the entire CIO, particularly in the area involved. CIO received 7226 and No Union received 5317. Congratulations to every officer and member of this organization who participated in this splendid achievement.

FLASH! A great victory for the CIO! The employes of Consolidated-Edison, members of the Brotherhood of Consolidated Edison Employes, at the recommendation of their officers, Brothers Joseph Fisher, William Pachler and Patrick McGrath, conducted a referendum to vote on affiliation with the CIO. The results have justified the opinion and leadership of these officers. The vote was 8555 for CIO as against 2843.

This is the largest single unit of utility workers in the world. These results assure a real, powerful, effective union amongst workers throughout the Nation. All those who participated and friends of the CIO are to be congratulated.

It is hoped that now the company will cease their opposition and recognize the right of these workers to associate themselves with an institution of their choosing, maintaining their contractual rights and building a relationship that will guarantee improvements, elimination of abuses and sound collective bargaining.

Simultaneous with this victory, CIO Reg. Dir. James Ritchie, St. Louis, reports that a temporary restraining order against the CIO was dissolved by the Court. These miserable efforts to prevent workers from having their choice, resorted to by the AFL will be repudiated everywhere. On with the march!

These victories demonstrate what can be done with real, hard work and devotion to the cause. There are many more to be won; many more workers to be organized, so let our first objective remain to ORGANIZE THE UNORGANIZED.

Wallace Urged to Call Job Parley

PRES. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union this week asked Sec. of Commerce Wallace to call a conference of industry and labor to take steps to halt layoffs, as the Dept. of Labor reported that 90 out of 100 cities showed a drop in employment during the past year.

While failure of the House to act on President Truman's request for unemployment benefits means that the matter would await return of Congressmen from their summer vacation, the Dept. of Labor survey showed that big cities as well as small had been hit. Employment in Dallas fell off 32 per cent, Hartford 20 per cent, Memphis 21 per cent, New York 10 per cent, Oklahoma 9 per cent, Oakland 34 per cent and Wichita 20 per cent.

Millions of workers, Knight wrote Wallace, "see Congress adjourning without action of any kind on the unemployment compensation bill for the victims of reconversion, despite its approval by President Truman.

"They see legislation introduced in Congress aimed to cripple their unions—their only guarantee of economic justice. They see the goal of 60 million jobs for which you and we fought in the great election of 1944, forgotten by those entrusted with the destiny of our nation . . .

"Through your great office as "With your keen understanding of the needs of the American people, you are eminently qualified to bring together the heads of American industry and labor in order ican industry and labor in order to lead the way into a postwar economy of full employment at high wages."

Marine Cooks and Stewards Become National Union, Broaden Their Organization

RECOGNIZING expansion of the union to national stature, the first constitutional convention of CIO Marine Cooks and Stewards of the Pacific, meeting at San Francisco this week, adopted a new name, National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards.

The change of name was voted by adoption of a new constitution which extends organization to stewards' department employes of ocean airways and sets as one of union's purposes "extermination of all fascist activity."

Delegates Thursday came out en masse for blood donations at Red Cross. The mass donor trip was symbolic of the atmosphere of the convention, which reaffirmed its no-strike pledge, established a permanent Political Action Committee and threw all resources of the union behind the fight of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union against wage cuts and for a living wage.

More than 100 delegates turned out on the NMU's picket line before San Francisco offices of War Shipping Administration on Wednesday in protest against slash in seamen's bonuses before the seamen have won a living base wage.

The convention heard Sec.-Treas. E. F. Burke review the 44-year history of the union and list convention tasks of strengthening political action, broadening rank-and-file participation in union affairs, and enlarging the educational department.

Delegates also heard Calif. Atty. Gen. Robert W. Kenny and California CIO Council Sec. Mervyn Rathborne urge the importance of political action to win the fight for full employment and democracy.

Calif. CIO Director Harry Bridges was congratulated by the convention for his successful fight against deportation. The assembly declared the union will not relinquish its efforts until Bridges has won full citizenship.

Pointing to the growth of the MC&S to its present 15,000 membership, Burke declared it has become a national organization and recommended the new name.

One possible avenue of future expansion, he said, is organization of cooks and stewards on ocean-going commercial airways. Burke is one of the original six men who organized M. C. & S. in 1901.

The no-strike pledge contained a warning to "reactionary shipowners and their disruptionist stooges within labor movement who at present are frantically trying to wreck our unity of purpose and action."

The sole opponent of the resolution to join with other seamen's unions in a radio broadcast on the seamen's wage case was answered by a dozen delegates. Only one vote was cast against the resolution.

Rathborne outlined political action tasks and stressed the importance of next year's elections to Congress and the state legislature.

"CIO must raise issues of importance to the people and carry them into the election so that we can make sure people will make progress, not lose ground," he declared. "In off years like 1946 when there is no presidential campaign people often lose interest."

Opening ceremony was standing tribute to 750 M. C. & S. members who have died in the war. Taps was sounded by a Navy bugler as the delegates stood in silence.

Women Should Tell Congress Of Phony 'Equal Rights' Plan

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

The majority report of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives approving the Equal Rights Amendment has finally been issued.

It is quite a revealing document. It says that the Committee feels that laws "protecting the safety and welfare of the female sex have in fact discriminated against such sex."

They regard minimum wage and maximum hour laws for women as "discriminatory." They are opposed to special provisions for wives of workers in social security and workmen's compensation laws. They approve the Equal Rights Amendment because it would invalidate those laws.

They have, in fact, swallowed whole the arguments of the rather well-heeled women who support this amendment because they want to get rid of discriminatory property laws in the states. And in so doing they have certainly not displeased the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers which would like nothing better than a chance to exploit women workers through longer hours and lower pay.

The minority report of Representatives Celler, Lane, Gorski, Feighan and Gwynne, opposing the Equal Rights Amendment, makes some excellent points. They do not deny that there are discriminations in the states against women in matters of property, jury service, etc., but they say:

"Using the Constitution as a broom with which to sweep away indiscriminately the good with the bad is neither sound law nor sane behavior."

That is the stand taken by most of the important national women's organizations. The League of Women Voters, the American Association of University Women, the National Women's Trade Union League, the National Councils of Catholic Women, Negro Women and Jewish Women, and the entire labor movement are strongly opposed to the Equal Rights Amendment.

A JOB TO BE DONE

If possible, discuss the amendment with your Congressmen and Senators before they come back to Washington in October. Explain to them why we oppose the amendment. Tell them that women workers need the protection of minimum wage and maximum hours laws. Ask him to oppose the Equal Rights Amendment if it comes before the House.

Talk to him at the same time about supporting the Pepper Equal Pay for Equal Work Bill, S. 1178. Here is a bill which would make it an "unfair wage practice" for any employer in interstate commerce to discriminate in pay between the sexes.

It provides for an Equal Pay Division in the Women's Bureau of the U. S. Dept. of Labor which would investigate complaints and order violations corrected following a procedure much like the N.L.R.B. It provides also for the establishment of industry committees for each industry where discriminations exist to recommend how to eliminate them.

This bill is aimed at the most important inequality which women suffer from today. A Women's Bureau study covering 25 industries in 1944 shows that men's average hourly earnings were 50% higher than those of women. The Bureau, in a new leaflet called "Rate for the Job," outlines the action needed to secure equal pay.

The leaflet does not mention federal legislation. That is an additional step which it is up to the women in the unions to push.

Tell your representatives in Washington that support of the Pepper Equal Pay Bill is the way for them to show that they are concerned about true equality for women at the same time that they oppose the phony equality proposed in the Equal Rights Amendment.

CIO Outlook Backs Bills To Help 16 Million Women Who Will Want to Keep Jobs

THE current CIO Economic Outlook calls for 60 million jobs, and the enactment of the Norton-Pepper equal-pay-for-equal-work bill and the amendment to the Wages and Hours Law in behalf of the 15 to 16 million women who want to stay on their jobs after the war.

The monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education cites polls by unions, Chambers of Commerce, the Department of Labor and states showing "the great majority of our women workers want to keep their jobs."

It is pointed out that circumstances, such as war casualties and the grim necessity of augmenting the chief bread winner's income, will force many women to stay on the job even though they would prefer to keep house.

"When all these women wanting jobs after the war are added together, the total comes to something like 15 or 16 million, as compared to 11 million working women in 1939," the Outlook asserts.

The Outlook states that in keeping with its policy, the CIO has helped pass laws in six states requiring equal pay for equal work, and is calling for the passage of the Norton-Pepper Bill to embody the equal-pay principal in federal laws.

HIGHER WAGES URGENT

For the benefit of women in industry, the publication points out, the CIO is also pressing for the passage of the amendment to the Wages and Hours Act (Fair Labor Standards Act) which would lift the minimum of 40 cents per hour to 65 cents during the first year of its operation, to 70 cents in the second year and to 75 cents thereafter.

To aid the women workers hold their jobs, the CIO also seeks extension of the Lanham Act which provided funds during the war for the child-care centers, the publication says.

The CIO, the paper asserts, continues its opposition to the so-called "Equal Rights Amendment" because it would wipe out hard-won state laws protecting women.

The Outlook praises the CIO Auxiliaries, stating that they have been in "the forefront of the battle for progressive legislation" and that "their role in the struggle against inflation has been particularly outstanding."

UE Trains New York, Jersey Leaders In Vets' Problems, Has Several Summer Schools

ONE of the first schools to train local CIO union leaders in the handling of veterans' problems was held this summer by District 4, Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, at International Headquarters, New York City. District 4 includes New York and New Jersey.

This school offered more specialized training than is given at the summer schools conducted by Districts 5 (Canada), 6 West Virginia and part of Pennsylvania), 9 (Michigan and Indiana), and 11 (Minnesota, Wisconsin and northern Illinois). District 8 (Missouri, Iowa and southern Illinois) was also scheduled to have a summer school, but the details were not available as the CIO News went to press.

The veterans' problem school gave five days (9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.) of intensified training for members of the servicemen's and veterans' committees, selected by each local to take the course.

Aimed to give the local leaders all they should know to be able to handle all veterans problems exclusive of negotiating clauses for veterans, the school was taught by representatives of the American Legion's welfare dept., the Labor Legionnaires, War Manpower Commission, the Veterans Administration and the Red Cross.

The school was supervised by Tom Neill, executive secretary of the National UE Servicemen's and Veterans' Welfare Committee,—himself a veteran. A number of the students were also veterans.

Rather than depend on outside teachers the UE summer schools are taught by UE district and international officers because they are best acquainted with problems facing the locals' leadership.

TWO SCHOOLS AT MADISON

Two of the schools, District 9 and 11, were held along picturesque Lake Mendota, Madison, Wisconsin.

Held during the past week, District 5 school at Port Huron, marked its third year. This Canadian UE School is democratically run by a Council, elected by the students themselves which has the responsibility of seeing that all goes well.

Only UE members in good standing whose applications have been approved by the local union may attend and the courses offered included: how to make union meetings interesting, union security, labor's political tasks, background of industry and community action.

District 6 conducted its school in Legioner Valley at the foot of the Alleghany Mountains and was attended by about 80 workers, each local having the right to send one delegate or more, depending on size. Subjects taught included trade union history, organization, consolidation, processing of grievances, War Labor Board, reconversion and community action.

Rest, relax and learn is the motto of the schools where the cost per student ranges from $30 to $60. Increasing desire of the membership to become leaders contributes to the ever-growing popularity of these schools.

This is the sixth of a series in summer schools conducted by international unions.

SCMWA OK's Stepped-Up PAC Plan

THE executive board of the CIO State, County and Municipal workers has unanimously adopted an intensified and expanded educational and political action campaign as presented by Director of Education Goldsmith. The plan provides.

1. Establishment of leadership schools in key areas such as Chicago, New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania and California, where the expenses of designated SWMCA members will be paid.

2. Intensification of political action has been planned for the coming local elections in preparation for the crucial Congressional elections of 1946.

CIO News Scoops Press on Forecast In British Election

WHERE was the U. S. press with its corps of correspondents in England while the British were preparing to vote Churchill out and Attlee as Prime Minister?

The only U. S. newspaper which printed the truth was the June issue of the servicemen's edition of the CIO NEWS, which quoted Charles L. Whipple, former CIO Newspaper Guild organizer, as predicting a Labor Party victory.

Whipple, returned from duty with the Red Cross in Europe, reported that the Labor Party would win because it knew the answers for reconversion, replacement of homes destroyed by bombs, food allotments and relationship with Russia. The CIO NEWS has no correspondent in England.

The Ball and Chain Bill

The most serious legislative attack on labor unions since the war started is the Ball-Burton-Hatch Federal Industrial Relations Act. What would happen to labor if this proposal were made law is told by CIO General Counsel Pressman and his Assistant in the following article, fifth of a series.

By LEE PRESSMAN AND FRANK DONNER

THE proposed law also substitutes ambiguous phrases for the well established terms now in the National Labor Relations Act, which will invite extensive litigation and promote delays.

The new tricky terminology substituted in the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill for the settled language of the Wagner Act can only have the effect of inaugurating a period of uncertainty and destructive litigation.

Thus for the settled and well established term "interstate commerce" the new act proposes the term "national or international commerce." The purpose of this substitution is to shrivel the federal protection of the right to organize so that as few as possible workers are covered. But it will take years before the meaning of the term "national or international commerce" will be settled in the courts.

There is absolutely no justification for setting aside a phrase which has an established meaning and substituting one which will prove to be a gold mine for lawyers.

Likewise productive of endless delays are the new and vague terms which the statute contains. Lawyers will have a field day obtaining judicial construction of such terms as "managerial actions," "authority of management," "national commerce," and scores of other new phrases.

We have today a clear and well established law. This law has operated for ten years and has been applauded by experts as a major contribution of the Roosevelt Administration to the solution of labor relations problems.

This law the sponsors of the bill now propose to scrap and in its place substitute a measure which not only provoke industrial disputes but which because of its very vagueness and novelty will create a vacuum in the field of labor relations and unparalleled confusion in an area where certainty and clarity are imperative.

The bill also eloquently fails to refer to any purpose of encouraging collective bargaining or promoting self-organization.

This is in glaring contrast to the preamble of the National Labor Relations Act. The preamble to that Act, a statement of historic significance, recites the fact that employers have denied employes the right to organize and have refused to accept collective bargaining and that such denial and refusal has been a cause of industrial strife.

The preamble further points out that there is an inequality of bargaining power between employes who are denied full freedom of association and powerfully organized employers, and that experience has shown that legal protection of the right to organize and bargain collectively is in the public interest.

Not only does the declaration of policy in the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill gloss over this important recognition by the federal government of the basic needs of workers, but it retreats from the promise of federal protection and relegates to reactionary state legislatures the protection of organizational rights.

The ominous assumption in the B-B-H preamble that workers are not in need of protection in their right to organize foreshadows a complicated system of union restrictions and disregard of basic rights of association which finds its counterpart only in the labor relations codes of fascist countries.

The act also deals with duties of employers and employes. These duties on the part of employes are of tremendous importance in interpreting the act since violation of them may lead to the imposition of severe penalties.

The act imposes a duty to exert every reasonable effort to settle a controversy even after the Board deals with the controversy through settlement procedures.

Thus, an employer can indefinitely stall any union action by demanding continued settlement efforts and can dissipate the strength of a union to the point where negotiation becomes a weapon in his hands.

Stripped of its power to enforce its demands through collective action, the union is relegated to a perpetual talk-fest conducted under the employer's terms.

By ARTHUR WHITE

A PUBLIC speaker who's been making lecture tours arguing the pros of world cooperation among nations, was beset by hecklers while addressing a midwest audience. Knowing the city was the breeding place of various seditious groups, he tried to continue without paying heed, but the heckling continued—this time in the form of a long, loud hiss. For a moment the lecturer was flustered, then recovering, he remarked acidly:

"As far as I know, there are only three things that hiss—a snake, a goose, and a fool. Will the heckler please come forward and be identified?"

"Mabel, is that you? Has your sailor friend gone yet?"

"No, ma," was the reply.

"Thought he had," the mother added, "'cause the whole house is pitch dark."

"And," quipped a third scribe, "shall we mention the name of the trust?"

THE Story of Labor

Summer Action For Jobs, Wages

(Following are excerpts from the CIO summer action program sent to all affiliates by Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director.)

This is the situation in Washington:

Emergency unemployment compensation bills have been introduced by Sen. Kilgore (D., W. Va.) and Rep. Forand (D., R. I.) providing up to $25 a week for 26 weeks and extending coverage to federal, maritime and agricultural packing workers. Rep. Doughton has introduced an inadequate, half-way measure, but no date for hearings has been set by his Ways and Means Committee.

No action has been taken on the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill for adequate permanent social security. Bills amending the wage-hour act to increase minimum wages to 65c an hour have been introduced.

The Murray-Patman full employment bill lies dormant in committee.

The permanent FEPC bill is bottled in the House Rules Committee.

Meanwhile, Sens. Ball, Burton and Hatch have introduced a Federal Labor Relations Bill drafted by Donald Richberg, which cuts the heart out of the Wagner Act.

Men and women in the shops must make their wishes known to their local officials, political leaders and Congressmen through personal visits by large delegations.

Support should be sought from all community groups that will back the CIO program. Veterans, AFL, Brotherhoods, YWCA's, Auxiliaries, church groups, fraternal organizations and mayors and city councilmen should be called on to make the program the program of the whole community.

SIX-POINT PROGRAM

Call on your Representatives and Senators to:

1. Insist on immediate hearings on unemployment compensation and work for passage of the Kilgore Forand bill (S 1274, HR 3891). Remind them that we want passage at this session of the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill (S 1050, HR 3293).

2. Sign the wage petition to Pres. Truman, which asks him to issue an executive order restoring the WLB's authority to order substantial wage adjustments which will:

a) provide an increase in basic wage rates.

b) aid in the effective prosecution of the war.

c) raise substandard wages.

d) maintain consumer purchasing power during reconversion.

3. Become a sponsor of the full employment bill (S 380, HR 2202) . . . with 100 Congressmen who have already agreed to sponsor it.

4. Support the Pepper-Thomas-Hook bill (S 1282, HR 3837) amend-

Out of the Bag

Sen. Wheeler (D., Mont.) in promising a fight on use of U. S. armed force to help keep the peace has let the cat out of the isolationist bag in the United Nations charter vote.

Wheeler took the tip from Herbert Hoover's testimony last week, when he demanded that Congress have veto power over everything effective that the U. S. Delegate to UNO might do.

This is the complete negation of real U. S. participation in the United Nations. Hoover and Wheeler and all the rest—including many who are going along on the vote for the charter—know this.

The opposition to United Nations unity has not disappeared. Like the Nazi werewolves, its gone underground.

Rankin Aids Loan Sharks

Rep. Rankin's (D. Miss.) new amendments to the GI Bill of Rights are designed to help real estate loan sharks at the expense of the veterans, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan points out this week in a letter to Senators on the Veterans sub-Committee.

"Amendments proposed in the Rankin Bill leave the appraisal of property which the veteran wants to buy entirely in the hands of the lender," he said.

"We are convinced that this will operate to keep real estate prices inflated. We believe that appraisals should be made by the Federal Housing agency, which has the facilities to handle this job and which would protect veterans from paying inflated prices for existing houses.

"This would protect the veteran from buying a gold brick and also aid in expanding our housing program in the interests of all groups of our people."

Educational provisions of the Rankin proposal are also inadequate. These amounts should be $100 a month for each student veteran plus $25 for each dependent.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

(Note: This week's score box lists seven issues to be followed during the summer recess in addition to the major ones described in adjoining columns.)

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Polltax (HR 7)	Gives 10 million Americans chance to vote.	Passed House by two to one; now in Senate Judiciary.	Urge Senators to support; pledge vote for cloture to end filibuster.
Equal Pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work; no discrimination against women in layoffs.	To Senate Labor Committee.	Urge early hearings; favorable vote by Senators.
'Equal Rights' (HJ Res 49)	Wipes out all laws protecting women under guise of 'equal rights.' Wedge against laws protecting men as well.	Reported out by Committee with 7 members dissenting.	Urge Representative and Senators to oppose; support S 1178 as real path to equality.
Missouri Valley (S 555)	Flood control, postwar farms and jobs for 9 state MVA area; benefits whole U. S.	Stalled in Senate after hostile Commerce Committee report.	Urge Senators to support early hearings, favorable report, passage.
Rankin (HR 3384)	Aims to break down union shop conditions by extempting veterans from union shop contracts.	Railroaded through House Veterans Committee without a vote; majority against it.	Urge Representative to oppose.
Seamen's Rights (S 1128 HR 2346)	Give social security benefits now denied to merchant seamen.	Senate Commerce and House Merchant Marine Committees.	Urge early report and favorable vote.
School Lunch (HR 3370, S 962)	Sets up permanent school lunch program.	Passed by House with action set in Senate Agriculture.	Urge Senators to support with $100,000,000 fund.

Coming Up— Issues to Watch

WAGES: 70 Congressmen have signed the wage petition being circulated by Rep. Holifield (D., Cal.). In a statement asking more signatures, Holifield said this week:

"We urge all members of Congress to sign this petition and to use their influence in this campaign to prevent a repetition of the postwar economic crisis of World War I.

"We owe it to our constituents, to the country, and especially to the returning veterans, who must not be faced with unemployment and misery after the victory over German and Japanese fascism."

Has your man signed yet? Ask him during the recess.

FRIEND of labor was former Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr. One of his last acts before leaving office was to write Sen. Wagner (D., N. Y.) in support of S. 380, the full employment bill.

"It is my belief that S. 380 should be acted on by your Committee and Congress with all the speed that is possible and consistent with a careful consideration of its provisions," he wrote.

"Delay, on the other hand, offers the spectacle of this country facing this rapidly approaching crisis with indecision, confusion and stop-gap emergency measures."

NAM slick stuff is pouring off the presses these days, despite the heat and the paper shortage. Latest is a tastefully yellow covered pamphlet entitled, "What Bureaucracy Means to You."

What the pamphlet wants is more laws to "regulate" U. S. bureaus—especially those dealing with labor. By regulate NAM means hamstring with such tricks as court review, giving "the people a larger voice," etc.

1. S 7 and HR 1203 by Sen. McCarran and Rep. Sumners for court review.

2. HR 2602 by Rep. Gwynne to put a six months statute of limitations on workers' claims under the wage hour act.

Vol. 8, No. 32 82 August 6, 1945

ROOSEVELT SAID: "Among our objectives, I place the security of the men, women and children of the Nation first." To assist those who are not covered by the social insurance programs, the Social Security Act provides cash allowances for needy old people, dependent children and needy blind. Through 1944, the Federal government had contributed well over $2,500,000,000 to the States for this program. Some 2,000,000 old people, or about one elderly person in every five in our country, receives this help. A quarter of a million families get a monthly check for dependent children. 56,000 blind men and women receive an average monthly check of $29.41 to help them meet their daily needs.

WHEN ten years ago, on August 14, 1935, President Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act, and made it law, he called it the "Cornerstone of a structure which is being built but is by no means complete."

Enemies of social security called it "unconstitutional," "unworkable," and "Un-American." It has been working for 10 years now. And the American people are certain of only one thing: They want more of it.

The principal of social security was care of people from the cradle to the grave. It divided into three parts: Aid to dependent children, care through the working years, and old age insurance.

Aid to dependent children: By June, 1945, only Alaska and Nevada were without a Federal-State aid program to dependent children. The average payment in June, 1936, was $23.46. By December, 1944, it was $45.58. Texas had the lowest payment with a $20 monthly average; Washington the highest with an average of $85.34. In June, 1936, 70,000 families received aid for dependent children. In December, 1944, the figure was 254,000.

Unemployment Compensation: The latest figures available are for 1943. During that year 45,000,000 workers had earned wage credits under the unemployment compensation system. N. Y. State had the highest number with 6,000,000. The maximum benefits as of June 30, 1945, were 14 weeks in Arizona and Mississippi, to 26 weeks in Ill., Md., N. J., N. Y. and Wash.

Old Age and Survivors Insurance: Accounts have been established with the Social Security Board under this insurance for 80,504,000 workers. 339 billion dollars was the total amount of wage credits. At the end of 1940, 254,700 people were on the benefit rolls to receive $4,707,000 monthly. At the end of 1944, 1,116,000 people were on the benefit rolls to receive $20,445,000 monthly.

Much still remains to complete the structure of social security. President Truman has urged unemployment compensation for the entire nation of $25 for 26 weeks. The Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill rounds out the picture with increased medical and health insurance and coverage for at least 15,000,000 more persons—such as local government workers, the farmer and the self-employed, not now covered, as well as increased benefits.

Social security is still in the building.

10 YEARS OF SOCIAL SECURITY

It Happened This Week

UE Blasts Davis

In hot water with the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week was William H. Davis, director of economic stabilization.

Davis denied severance pay to 25,000 employes of the U. S. Cartridge Co. in St. Louis after the WLB had approved the plan as negotiated between the union and management operating the government-owned plant.

The UE said the plan was recognized as reasonable and in accord with government stabilization policies. The UE pointed out that by Aug. 1 25,000 workers will have been laid off, and that severance pay would be but small compensation for the war job they have contributed.

"Davis refusal is evidence that the welfare of the working people is given but slight consideration," UE said.

4% for Pegler

That's the conclusion that could be drawn from a survey just conducted among 300 "average" members of Local 65, CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Union, in N. Y. City.

To the question, "Which newspaper do you usually read?" 42 percent replied, "The Daily News." The anti-labor, anti-United-Nations-unity rag, however, also drew top score of 62 percent for the newspaper which readers thought was the least truthful!

Hearst's anti-union Journal-American and Mirror and Roy Howard's labor-baiting World-Telegram were at the bottom of the "usually read" list in that order, and Westbrook Pegler, ex-Telegram and now Hearst columnist, was next to the last among usually read columnists. His rating: 4 percent.

Unionist Released

Jose Peter, head of the Argentine packinghouse workers' union, arrived in Montevideo, Uruguary, this week, after spending the major part of the last two years in fascist Argentina's jails.

The release was hailed by Pres. Lewis J. Clark of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, which had long protested Peter's detention.

"The UPWA joins with all other laboring groups to condemn the coddling of fascism in Argentina where Hitler and Franco had hoped to establish a base," Clark said.

Plan Is Needed

The CIO this week voiced enthusiastic support for the recommendation of the Senate War Investigating Committee that the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion assume full powers to coordinate and direct the work of all war agencies concerned with reconversion.

Ever since it became evident, some time before VE Day, that large scale cutbacks would result in layoffs of thousands of workers, the CIO has urged the War Production Board to use its controls for the purpose of allocating scarce materials on a planned basis in order to insure orderly reconversion and a minimum of unemployment.

CIO Bares Texas Fascist Plot to Throttle Unions

A CONSPIRACY on the part of Fight for Free Enterprise to use the courts of Texas to persecute the CIO was charged this week by Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Union and Sec. W. M. Akin of the Texas CIO Council, on the basis of documents submitted to Atty.-Gen. Grover Sellers and the U. S. Dept. of Justice.

Newspapers were to be coerced, framed up evidence was to be manufactured, and unsubstantiated charges were to be levelled against the CIO in such a way that the libel laws could be evaded, it was charged.

CIO representatives named William Walker, chairman of Fight for Free Enterprise, with headquarters in San Antonio, as the sponsor of a secret memorandum sent to business men in the Rio Grande valley. The memorandum contained Walker's program for fighting union organization among agricultural and cannery workers in the Valley, and asked for funds for an anti-CIO crusade.

The memorandum was marked "confidential" and was unsigned. It was enclosed in an envelope with the address of Walker's organization and was accompanied by a begging letter signed by Walker.

This memorandum revealed how the CIO was to be accused of being "communistic and atheistic." A scheme was divulged to seek a writ of mandamus, under which scurrilous charges could be made against the CIO without fear of being prosecuted under the libel laws.

Publications of an inflammatory nature were to be circulated, falsely purporting to be issued by the CIO itself.

World War II veterans were to be recruited on the basis of toughness and "peculiar abilities" to take violent action against the CIO.

CIO members were to be trapped on the basis of understandings with certain police officers.

Newspapers which refused to join in the Fight for Free Enterprise campaign were to be disciplined by circulation and advertising boycotts.

In placing proof of their charges before Atty.-Gen. Sellers, Knight and Akin asked him to investigate Fight for Free Enterprise, to revoke its charter and to prosecute Walker and his associates.

The Ball and Chain Bill

The most serious legislative attack on labor unions since the war started is the Ball-Burton-Hatch Federal Industrial Relations Act. What would happen to labor if this proposal were made law is told by CIO General Counsel Pressman and his Assistant in the following article, sixth of a series.

By LEE PRESSMAN AND FRANK DONNER

IT IS provided in Section 3 (d) of the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill that whenever a controversy arises both parties are under duty, pending the exhaustion of settlement efforts under the act, to make no use of any unilateral "arbitrary or coercive methods or compulsory processes to end the controversy or to obtain an advantage in its final determination and to make no change in the conditions out of which the controversy arose."

Under the provisions of this section a union could never strike for recognition.

Whenever a union demanded recognition, an employer, by the simple device of petitioning the Board and engaging in the complicated stalling procedures which the act sets up, could permanently frustrate the union's attempt to get recognition.

Even if the union had an overwhelming majority an employer could deny recognition and lead the union through the intricate mazes of endless administrative proceedings and judicial review.

If the union struck for recognition it would constitute a violation of its duty to maintain existing conditions pending exhaustion of settlement efforts and would thus be a violation which could give rise to an injunection, to a permanent loss of status as a labor organization, and to a suit for damages by the employer.

Moreover, since a strike for recognition wold be a strike to compel a "managerial action," it would also constitute an unfair labor practice on the part of the union.

This act also provides that in the event a special fact-finding commission is appointed for the settlement of controversies within 30 days from the date the commission is created, the union is forbidden to take any action until 30 days after the commission reports.

Under this section an employer can cut wages and use delaying tactics to defeat any attempt of the union to resist his action.

The employer is under no duty to restore the wage cut pending exhaustion of settlement efforts. The employes are required to accept the wage cut and are tied hand and foot while they are dragged through the complicated processes under the bill.

The proposed bill provides that in considering the appropriateness of the unit the Board should determine what unit will best represent employes having a common interest in "wages, hours or working conditions, giving particular weight to evidence as to the unit which by custom and practice has proved to be acceptable to employes."

This language not only sharply deviates from the language of the Wagner Act, but also ignores the fact that acceptability to the employes in the past is merely one criterion of what a proper bargaining unit should be, that there are many other tests which are equally important.

Finally, under present rulings of the Labor Board a unit may be appropriate for collective bargaining and to promote self-organization even though it is not the "best" unit. Where only part of a large unit is organized the Board frequently decides that that unit is appropriate for collective bargaining even though a larger unit might be more appropriate.

This section would encourage the Board to throw out petitions for elections because the unit sought is not perfect even though in so doing it would deny the advantages of collective bargaining to a large group of individuals who want it.

Another section provides that if more than one labor organization is seeking to represent employes within a common interest, the Board can require the labor organizations involved to disregard union lines and designate a common representative for collective action on all matters of common interest.

Special mention should be made of the provision in this section for judicial review of certifications. This is little more than a club obligingly placed by the sponsors of this bill in the hands of employers to place representation controversies on a judicial, non-stop merry-go-round.

The crudeness of this attempt to enable employers to refuse to bargain is underlined by two circumstances: (1) although the bill purports to be modeled on the Railway Labor Act no provision is contained in the Railway Labor Act providing for judicial review of certifications; (2) while the act is made a two-way proposition where it can hurt and maim labor, it is not made a two-way proposition where it might help.

Thus an employer can review a certification in court but no review is provided to a union for a denial of certification by the agency.

Education In the CIO

About Newspapering

LABOR JOURNALISM: Students arrived at Highlander Folk School on August 6 to learn and practice the methods of putting out a newspaper. From August 6 to 13 the annual course in LABOR JOURNALISM will be conducted by Carl Haessler, manager of Federated Press.

History of Labor

Louis Hollander, President of the N. Y. State CIO, in discussing the "Role of organized labor in the U. S. Economy," at Cornell University Summer School, reviewed the history of American Labor from the formation of the first union in 1792 to labor's present-day struggle against Nazism and Japanese Imperialism.

He said: "Organized labor, now comes to full maturity, intends to make its full contribution to prosperity and extend full political and economic democracy for America. I know that if we work together we can build a new life in this great and beautiful land of ours—a life from which poverty will be banished and in which men can live in peace, security and plenty."

In Ohio State

AUTO: The Auto Workers of Ohio will go to the school at Ohio State University during the week of August 5, an event which for the first time extends to Ohio the national summer school educational program inaugurated by the UAW-CIO.

Nineteen members of the teaching staff of Ohio State, one visiting professor from Denison University and representatives of WLB and WPB will lecture on labor problems and related topic and lead the panel discussions.

Day to Day Learnin'

TEXTILE: Intensive training in handling day-to-day union problems inside and outside the shop, plus history and background courses designed to inspire loyalty and understanding of the American labor movement, were the keynotes of the two one-week summer institutes conducted by the Educational Dept. of the CIO Textile Workers Union at Webster, Mass.

Seventy shop stewards, local union officers and active rank and filers from 50 different local unions in New England attended.

On the Air With CIO

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and J. Raymond Walsh, radio commentator, will be the speakers on the weekly CIO America United program at 1:15 p. m., EWT, Sunday, Aug. 12. The subject of discussion will be Progressive Political Action. NBC stations.

The subject of the August 19 program will be Full Employment, with Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach and CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey as speakers. Richard Harkness will be the moderator.

Albert Goss, National Grange master, and Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization and vice-president, will speak on Wages and Purchasing Power on the Aug. 26 program.

Planning a Must to Avoid 'Boom or Bust'

How the Full Employment Bill Would Work

1. The U. S. Government would make a survey of the business situation.

2. On the basis of information a job "budget" would be worked out.

3. From all over the nation, reports would be gathered on jobs available.

4. If there were not enough jobs, Govt. and business would try to make more.

5. If private industry could not provide needed jobs, the government would.

6. Together, business and government would help guarantee jobs for all.

Jobs-for-All Bill Up In Congress

SENATOR Wagner warned this week that the U. S. may once again embark upon a "boom-and-bust" road if Congress fails to plan for the future, as the Senate Banking subcommittee held two preliminary hearings on the Full Employment Bill (S. 380), which is fully supported by CIO.

Additional hearings were scheduled for October 9 when the Senate will reconvene. First witnesses to be called will be veterans "who want jobs for all—not jobs for some," warned Representative Wright Patman (D., Texas), sponsor of the House measure, along with 103 other House members.

"The most frightening thing about the depression which followed World War I is that it was eradicated only by World War II," said Senator James C. O'Mahoney of Wyoming. He called the pending legislation "a bill for economic preparedness."

"The war-weary people of Great Britain know that economic tranquility rests upon full employment with all the social gains that full employment means for all the people," said Senator Wagner.

The CIO Executive Board resolved at its last meeting to support the Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill "as a first step toward creating such a program" of full employment.

Tells How French RR Unionists Helped to 'Railroad' Nazis

SHOT down over France, during the German occupation, many American airmen were given false identity papers and smuggled to freedom disguised as railroad workers by the French Railway Unionists.

Gerard Ouradou, secretary general of the National Railway Federation of France, a member of the French Consultative Assembly and one of the three French unionists visiting the U. S., in Washington this week told of this and other activities of his union in the Resistance.

French underground meetings were held in Ouradou's home during the first part of the occupation until August, 1943, when he was forced to go underground himself and assume a false identity.

Methods of sabotage used by the Railway unionists ranged from uncoupling cars from the engine at the top of a hill to so confusing German supply and troop trains in the switchyards that it was days before they could be got out. Ouradou told of the purposeful "losing" of a troop train in this way until the underground could get word to the Allies to bomb the switch yards. In this way thousands of German troops were killed.

The other two French trade unionists, Jean Brodier, secretary general of the Christian Trade Unions, and Marcel Jean Emile Camus, a member of the Central Committee of Parisian Unions, arrived in Washington July 31. The CHEERS FOR LABOR VICTORY:.. A London crowd hails the Labor Party upset of the Churchill government, with new premier Clement R. Attlee and his wife sharing the spotlight in the foreground.

Greece, Spain Hail British Labor Sweep

THE 2-1 victory of the British Labor Party over tory Churchill is expected to have wide repercussions in Europe, it was reported this week from London by Allied Labor News and Federated Press.

In Greece and Franco Spain, where the Churchill government has cooperated in suppressing democratic people's movements, a new deal is hoped for.

According to reports, Churchill saw Franco before proceeding to Potsdam for the Big Three conference where he presumably continued in his role of protector of the cocky little Spanish dictator.

With Clement R. Attlee as new prime minister, the picture has changed drastically. Extension of the Big Three conference was interpreted as meaning that Attlee was revamping some of Churchill's reactionary policies and preparing to go along with the Soviet Union in a denunciation of Franco.

The British election likewise buoyed up the democratic French parties, which are now expected to put new force in their fight against Gen. deGaulle's attempts to keep himself in power through autocratic methods.

The Labor victory probably also means that King Victor Emmanuel of Italy and King Leopold of Belgium will be permanently unemployed.

Meanwhile, latest British election returns showed that the Labor Party had won 381 seats in the new Parliament—a clear majority, of 60 over the other parties combined.

The Gonservative party, headed by Churchill, who resigned as Premier, had 193 seats. When Churchill's coalition government was dissolved on May 23, the Conservatives had 349 seats, Labor 168, and the Liberal party 19.

Indicating the tremendous interest in the election, the first since 1935, more than 25,000,000 out of a possible 32,500,000 electors went to the polls.

At its annual convention last May, the Labor Party charged that the Churchill government "was more concerned with the preservation of vested interests than for the welfare, liberty and equality of the liberated peoples of Europe."

Bevin, presenting Labor's world economic policy for the convention, gave as its main demands the universal orderly distribution of food, with monopolies barred from exploiting the people's needs; the elimination of cartels; and international control of raw material areas.

Labor's domestic program, titled "a five-year plan to rebuild Britain," calls for immediate nationalization of the coal, power and transport industries; public ownership of the Bank of England; gradual nationalization of other industries, such as iron and steel; and public supervision of monopolies and cartels.

Guide to Resume In October

Beginning with this issue of The CIO NEWS, the Washington Guide will not be published until the Congressional recess is over. At present writing, the recess is expected to end early in October. The CIO NEWS will continue to report news of legislative importance.

CIO Man Named To Labor Dept.

Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach this week named as his special assistant Pres. John W. Gibson of the Michigan CIO Council, first recognition given the CIO in the department under the new secretary. Gibson will work with Assistant Secretaries Carl Moran and Daniel W. Tracy, former AFL man, in merging many labor agencies with the Labor Dept.

CIO vs. China Union! Soccer Game Tonight!

Phil Murray who used to be quite a soccer player in his own right, kicked off an idea last week which rated a full daily column by Bill Leiser, sports editor of the San Francisco Chronicle.

Murray, who played soccer in Scotland and later in the U. S., suggested international competition of teams representing unions from all the United Nations. In an interview with Leiser, Murray said:

"When the war is over, we shall encourage sports among all locals, which in turn should become district sports, then intersectional sports and later international sports."

Let's Keep On Building It!

Too Little, Too Late

We all know that a stitch in time saves nine, that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and that too-little-and-too-late is one of our worst enemies.

But it's another matter to get the powers-that-be to act accordingly.

A year before Pearl Harbor, the CIO was promoting Pres. Murray's industry council plan for production preparedness and its unions were urging early and effective conversion of their respective industries to war production.

But most of these warnings fell on deaf ears, so far as industry and government were concerned, and the war's lessons had to be learned from sad experience.

Now again, for many months the CIO has been warning of the dangers and problems of reconversion, and demanding early preparations to protect the human victims of cutbacks and to gear our industrial and governmental machinery to a program of full employment.

And again, these warnings seem to have fallen on deaf ears.

No wage relief has yet been furnished to the workers whose take-home pay is being cut by layoffs, loss of overtime, down-grading, etc. No effective plans have been made for re-employment and the orderly expansion of peacetime production.

At a time like this, Congress has actually decided to take a prolonged vacation. It has left Washington without taking any action on emergency unemployment benefits, on eliminating substandard wages, on adequate social security, or on legislation for full employment.

But now to labor's warnings have been added those of a number of eminent Senators.

The Mead war investigating committee has reported that, unless the government acts quickly, the United States is heading for the worst kind of postwar depression and unemployment.

"Should the war in the Pacific end soon," Senator Mead warns, it will find us largely unprepared to overcome our domestic problems. Reconversion will not have progressed far enough to absorb the manpower which will be suddenly released. Government work programs will not have been established, and unemployment on a large scale will ensue."

In the hearings on the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill, Senators Wagner and Murray have issued similar warnings.

Even enactment of this bill will not make up for the fact that Congress "has done too little and been too late in acting on matters of reconversion and postwar economic affairs," Wagner said. "If we fail to act promptly, we may once again be swept along the boom-and-bust road."

Murray warned big business against flirting with ideas of a big supply of cheap labor and opening the gates to "postwar enemy No. 1," pointing to the British people's overwhelming defeat of their reactionaries and tories.

While Congress is on vacation, the CIO is urging adoption of the Mead Committee's proposal that the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion assume full powers to coordinate and direct the work of all agencies concerned with reconversion.

It may also be pointed out that Congressional committees can get on with their work even while Congress is not in session.

But how about Congress itself getting back on the job before October 1 and pushing through the big load of unfinished business on which the immediate welfare of our whole country depends?

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

WHAT'S happened to Hitler? Is he dead or alive? If dead, does his ghost still walk?

There are signs of his continuing handiwork in these United States, as well as in such obvious haunts as Fascist Spain and Argentina.

Jew-baiting and Negro-baiting speeches are made in Congress by characters like Bilbo and Rankin. American "natioinalists" run rampant, not furtively but seeking publicity, to get more money from the frightened rich. Whole newspaper chains feature Hitleristic "red scares" and propaganda for another world war.

And now Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers Intl. Union and Secretary W. M. Akin of the Texas CIO Council, have uncovered a Hitleristic plot in our own Southwest.

The CIO leaders have submitted to Texas Attorney General Grover Sellers a secret unsigned memorandum sent to businessmen in the Rio Grande Valley. They charge it is sponsored by William Walker, chairman of an outfit known as "Fight for Free Enterprise."

The memorandum contains a program for fighting union organization among agricultural and cannery workers in the Valley, and asks for funds for an anti-CIO crusade.

It outlines plans for an anonymous setup, referred to as "The Organization", which is to be "the 'Front' for attacking the CIO vigorously and relentlessly on behalf of those who, for obvious reasons, cannot now make themselves the target for reprisals."

★ ★ ★

The proposed methods of attack neatly combine the doctrines of Mein Kampf and the common practices of American union-busters. They include:

(1) A press campaign designed to identify the CIO with "Communism" and "atheism."

(2) A scheme for a Writ of Mandamus against the Texas Attorney General, under which an opportunity might be afforded for "allegations of a sensational nature without regard to libel," which slanders the newspapers might print "with complete immunity from any action by CIO."

(3) Radio programs "flaying the CIO." But such attacks are to be "interspersed among other current topics to refute any charge that this is solely an anti-CIO program"—and, "in order to split labor," praise is proposed for "the general purpose of old-line American unionism."

(4) Creation of "periodical sensation" by publication of purported CIO documents to "inflame public opinion and arouse resentment and opposition." While stopping short of describing such documents as forgeries, the memorandum cynically comments that "no amount of CIO denial will destroy the effect of such releases."

(5) "Discharged veterans . . . will be carefully selected for toughness and peculiar abilities and set to work organizing 'Americanism Protective Committees'" to oppose "CIO activities, and to become political campaign organizations in the spring of 1946." Fascist violence is also suggested by saying that these "will also become direct action committees" for "counteracting any strong-arm work attempted by the CIO."

(6) "Punitive action" against newspapers fair to CIO, including pressure on advertisers to withdraw their patronage.

(7) Frame-ups against CIO members. Billboards with "vitriolic attacks on the CIO" are proposed, in which connection "certain peace officers will enter into an understanding with 'The Organization' whereby the CIO hoodlums will be trapped in attempts to destroy these billboards."

(8) "An intensive campaign in the 1946 primaries to nominate Democratic candidates bitterly opposed to the CIO."

Before you dismiss this plot as "crackpot" stuff, consider its ingredients—and recall that Hitler himself was once scoffed at as a "harmless crackpot."

Here is Hitler's "Bolshevik menace;" his "big lie" technique; his fund-raising from anti-labor employers; his Reichstag fire frameup and forgeries; his divide-and-conquer; his Storm-Troop hoodlumism; his suborning of press and police; and his combination of political demagogy with mob violence.

Then remember that all of these devices have had their American precedents and parallels in past union-busting campaigns.

The memorandum sets forth with brutal cynicism and in familiar American terms a pattern which, if adopted by powerful employing interests for a postwar anti-union drive, might lead to a formidable growth of American Fascism.

CIO NEWS REPORT ON CONGRESS

HERE'S the record of what Congress has done—or failed to do—since its opening last January. The record is based on record votes. Such votes, however, are not the complete story. Use the record, but remember these warning notes while you do:

1. You are interested in Congressmen who want to do a good job for all the people, who want to work hard to win the war and to build a postwar world of peace and security. No single vote should be used either to condemn or justify a Congressman's record.

2. Record votes should not be added up like a schoolroom test to furnish a "good" or "bad" rule of thumb scorecard. Adding up record votes to figure "percentages" is equally a trap for the unwary. A Congressman's record on votes is important, but it is not the whole picture of his activities.

3. The way to get full value from this record is to study it issue by issue until you know where your Congressman stands—and to follow his other activities too.

4. Think of it in terms of issues, not statistics. Your Congressman isn't a sum in arithmetic.

He is the Congressman who fought and worked in committees, who talked with his fellow Congressmen in the cloak rooms and on the floor, who met with CIO delegations from the home town and listened to what they had to say.

Study the issues, learn the record—and always remember, your Congressman is what you make him.

WHAT THE SENATE DID

BELOW are brief summary explanations of 15 record votes in the Senate since last January. These votes (published on the following page) were chosen to give a rounded picture of issues affecting domestic and foreign policy. In some cases, several votes are recorded on one bill. This is done to include proposed amendments that would have affected the bill just as much as final passage.

1. LEND-LEASE. Amendment by Sen. Taft (R., O.) to prevent use of Lend-Lease funds for relief, rehabilitation or reconstruction. Aimed against U. S.-British-Soviet postwar cooperation. Defeated 39 to 39. Against: Democrats 37, Republicans 2. For: Democrats 3, Republicans 35, Minor 1.

2. RECIPROCAL TRADE (1). Vote to pass act enabling renewal of reciprocal trade agreements to promote postwar world trade and jobs. Note from two following votes that many Senators who voted for passage also voted for crippling amendments which were defeated. Passed 54 to 21. For: Democrats 38, Republicans 15, Minor 1. Against: Democrats 5, Republicans 16.

3. RECIPROCAL TRADE (2). Amendment to withhold power from the President to reduce U. S. tariff barriers up to 50% in return for concessions from foreign countries. Would have seriously weakened bargaining power of U. S. and made agreements meaningless. Defeated 47 to 33. Against: Democrats 37, Republicans 9. Minor 1. For: Democrats 8, Republicans 27.

4. RECIPROCAL TRADE (3). Amendment to give Congress veto power over trade agreements entered into under reciprocal trade by the President. Would have seriously weakened ability of President to bargain with foreign countries for trade concessions. Defeated 49 to 27. Against: Democrats 37, Republicans 11; Minor 1. For: Democrats 7, Republicans 20.

5. BRETTON WOODS (1). Vote on passage of bill to ratify Bretton Woods agreements on world finance and world trade, aiding reconstruction and helping provide jobs. Only handful of reactionaries like Taft (R.,O.) voted against passage, after various amendments (see below) were defeated. Passed 61 to 16. For: Democrats 41, Republicans 19, Minor 1. Against: Democrats 2, Republicans 14.

6. BRETTON WOODS (2). Amendment by Sen. Taft (R., O.), most consistent foe of Bretton Woods and other United Nations cooperation, to postpone action until November 15, 1945. Would have laid agreements on shelf and been a sign that U. S. was not prepared to cooperate with other nations. Defeated 52 to 31. Against: Democrats 44, Republicans 8. For: Democrats 3, Republicans 27, Minor 1.

7. BRETTON WOODS (3). Another Amendment by Sen. Taft (R., O.) which would have barred U. S. participation in Bretton Woods agreements until all other nations had removed all their currency restrictions. Such restrictions were taken into account when U. S. delegates agreed to plan last summer. Taft's intent was to stall. Defeated 53 to 23. Against: Democrats 41, Republicans 12. For: Democrats 1, Republicans 21, Minor 1.

8. BRETTON WOODS (4). Amendment by Sen. Ball (R., Minn.) with same intent as that by Sen. Taft (R., O.) listed above, except that Ball's move would give Britain and other countries three years time to remove all currency restrictions. Again an attempt to stall. Defeated 46 to 29. Against: Democrats 39, Republicans 7. For: Democrats 3, Republicans 25, Minor 1.

9. HENRY WALLACE. Maneuver by Sen. Bailey (D., N.C.) to block Wallace's appointment as Secretary of Commerce by bringing up confirmation vote before vote on George bill, which took Reconstruction Finance Corp. away from Commerce Dept. Would have defeated Wallace, since a majority of Senators were against his confirmation with RFC powers, but for it without them. Vote is good test of Senators' views on full employment. Defeated 43 to 41. Against: Democrats 32, Republicans 10, Minor 1. For Democrats 15, Republicans 26.

10. HENRY WALLACE. Vote to confirm appointment of Wallace as Secretary of Commerce. Taken after defeat of Bailey amendment (above) and after passage of Sen. George's (D., Ga.) bill taking RFC lending powers away from Commerce Dept. Passed 56 to 32. For: Democrats 45, Republicans 10, Minor 1. Against: Democrats 4, Republicans 28.

11. AUBREY WILLIAMS. Vote on confirmation of Williams as head of Rural Electrification Administration. Debate was marked by one of most flagrant red-baiting, labor-baiting and anti-Negro outbursts in recent Congressional history. Defeated 52 to 36. Against: Democrats 18, Republicans 34. For: Democrats 31, Republicans 4, Minor 1.

12. PRICE CONTROL (1). Vote on an amendment by Sen. Taft (R., O.) to guarantee a cost-plus-profit price ceiling on every product, regardless of overall profits of industries producing them. Would have required minute examination of cost of every product, made price control impossible. Passed 37 to 28. Later removed in House-Senate conference committee. Against: Democrats 25, Republicans 3, Minor 1. For: Democrats 10, Republicans 27.

13. PRICE CONTROL (2). Amendment by Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.) similar to Taft proposal above. Would have required cost-plus prices on all agricultural commodities, including fibres. Same objections apply to it as to Taft Amendment. Defeated 41 to 26. Against: Democrats 33, Republicans 7, Minor 1. For: Democrats 1, Republicans 25.

14. FEPC. Vote on Sen. Barkley's (D., Ky.) amendment to give FEPC $250,000 —half of what was required—to carry on work. Though the compromise was inadequate it ended several days of filibustering (led by Sen. Bilbo, Miss.) and broke a jam on appropriation measures needed to carry on war agencies. Passed 42 to 26. For: Democrats 23, Republcans 18, Minor 1. Against: Democrats 20, Republicans 6.

15. TAX REFUNDS. Vote on amendment, to House-passed bill, by Sen. Wherry (R., Neb.) giving corporations additional year of tax credit and excess profits tax relief already provided in the

WHAT THE HOUSE DID

BELOW are brief summary explanations of 15 record votes in the House of Representatives since last January. The votes (published on the following pages) were chosen to give an all-around picture of your Congressman's record during that period. As in the Senate vote, more than one record vote is given on an issue. This is to help you trace your Congressman's record, not only on votes for outright passage of a bill, but also on amendments to it.

1. RECIPROCAL TRADE (1). Vote on final passage of bill to renew reciprocal trade agreements act, under which the government can make agreements to lower U. S. tariff barriers in return for similar concessions from other countries. Agreements are an important part of postwar world prosperity and will contribute to full employment here. Passed 239 to 153. For: Democrats 205. Republicans 33. Minor 1. Against: Democrats 12. Republicans 140. Minor 1.

2. RECIPROCAL TRADE (2). Vote was on motion by Rep. Knutson (R. Minn.) to recommit reciprocal trade bill to House Ways & Means Committee; would have eliminated government's authority to cut U. S. tariffs by 50% in return for similar concessions from other countries. Motion would have effectively killed renewal of agreements. Defeated 212 to 181. Against: Democrats 204. Republicans 7. Minor 1. For: Democrats 13. Republicans 167.

3. BRETTON WOODS (1). Vote on final passage of bill ratifying Bretton Woods agreements for postwar financial and economic reconstruction to eliminate economic aggression and help provide jobs for U. S. workers in foreign trade. Taken following defeat of motion to recommit the bill (see below). Passed 345 to 18. For: Democrats 205. Republicans 138. Minor 2. Against: Republicans 18.

4. BRETTON WOODS (2). Vote was on motion by Rep. Sumner (R. Ill.) to recommit Bretton Woods ratification bill which would have killed bill. A few Congressmen who voted for final passage (see above) voted for Sumner motion to recommit. Defeated 326 to 29. Against: Democrats 202. Republicans 122. Minor 2. For Democrats 0. Republicans 29.

5. FEDERAL WORKERS' PAY RAISE. Vote on giving "white collar" U. S. government workers 15% pay raise already allowed under the Little Steel formula, which they had not received before. Bill had Administration and labor support. Passed 317 to 36. For: Democrats 188, Republicans 127. Minor 2. Against: Democrats 10. Republicans 26.

6. UN-AMERICAN (DIES) COMMITTEE. First week in 1945 session saw sneak move by Rep. Rankin (D. Miss.) to make old and infamous Dies Committee permanent Congressional unit. Though the Dies Committee was repudiated by voters when they defeated four of its members in the 1944 election, bill passed 207 to 186. Against: Democrats 150. Republicans 54. Minor 2. For: Democrats 71. Republicans 136.

7. HENRY WALLACE (1). Vote on whether or not to accept House rule on bill by Sen. George (D. Ga.) that took lending powers of Reconstruction Finance Committee away from the Dept. of Commerce as pre-condition to Senate confirmation of Wallace as Commerce Secretary. Good test of House attitude toward full employment, as represented by Wallace confirmation. Rule accepted 202 to 192. For: Democrats 200. Minor 2. Against: Democrats 19. Republicans 173.

8. HENRY WALLACE (2). Fight of House opponents of Henry Wallace as Secretary of Commerce also took form of a fight to block passage of the George bill (see above) taking RFC away from Dept. of Commerce. Vote recorded here was on motion to recommit George bill. Defeated 204 to 196. Against: Democrats 200. Republicans 2. Minor 2. For: Democrats 12. Republicans 184.

9. AGRICULTURAL CENSUS. Measure originally passed by Republican Congress in 1924, has been renewed since. Especially valuable in wartime and in postwar, as basis for planning increased agricutural production. Passed 198 to 171. For: Democrats 195. Minor 1. Against: Democrats 7. Republicans 163. Minor 1.

10. PRICE CONTROL (1). Vote was on amendment by Rep. Jenkins (R. O.) to make Secretary of Agriculture a "food czar" with veto power over all decisions relating to food, except rationing. Would have deprived OPA and Office of Economic Stabilization (OES) of any real authority to regulate food prices; would have increased pressure for higher living costs. Passed once by teller (non-record) vote, 145 to 142, then defeated on record vote, 198 to 178. Against: Democrats 196. Republicans 1. Minor 1. For: Democrats 14. Republicans 164.

11. PRICE CONTROL (2). On amendment by Rep. Anderson (R. Minn.) which also gave veto power to Secretary of Agriculture. Amendment passed 211 to 155, later modified in House-Senate Conference Committee to limit veto power of Secretary of Agriculture and keep his actions subject to review by OES. Against: Democrats 154. Republicans 0. Minor 1. For: Democrats 48. Republicans 162. Minor 1.

12. PRICE CONTROL (3). Amendment by Rep. Dirkson (R. Ill.) which would have subjected all OPA orders and regulations to court review, thus tying up price control enforcement in endless legal red tape, giving hostile judges opportunity to wreck it. Passed in House, 200 to 164, later removed from bill in House-Senate Conference Committee. Against: Democrats 156. Republicans 6. Minor 2. For: Democrats 30. Republicans 170.

13. POLLTAX REPEAL. House vote on passage of HR 7, bill to repeal polltax and give 10 million white and Negro Americans opportunity to vote. Equally important with vote was signing of Discharge Petition which was necessary to bring bill out of committee and on floor for vote. Signers of peition are indicated by asterisks (*). Bills brought out on petition are scheduled several days in advance for vote. There is little excuse for absenteeism during vote. Passed 251 to 105. For:

How To Read This Record

(See Preceding Page for Identification of Issues)

A plus symbol (+) means a vote on the progressive side, as urged on the Senators and Representatives by the CIO.

A zero (o) means that the Senator or Representative did not vote, for whatever reason.

A blank space means that the Senator or Representative listed was not a member of the Senate or House at the time the vote was taken.

The asterisk (*) in the listing of House record vote 13 indicates that Representative so marked signed the Discharge Petition to bring the polltax repeal bill out of the Rules Committee and onto the House floor for a vote.

What House Did

14. LEA RIDER. Rider hung on War Labor Board appropriation bill by Rep. Lea (D. Calif.) prohibits use of WLB funds in cases involving agricultural workers and takes WLB means of settling disputes away from 1,500,000 workers. An attempt to do through WLB rider what employer forces tried—and failed—to do to Wagner Act. Will be precedent for future attacks on labor's collective bargaining rights. Passed 203 to 103. Against: Democrats 83. Republicans 19. Minor 1. For: Democrats 97. Republicans 106. Minor 0.

15. TAX REFUNDS. Bill increased excess profits tax exemptions from $10,000 a year to $25,000, allowed corporations to take their 10% credit on excess profits tax refunds now rather than after war, set maturity date of postwar tax refunds bonds up to Jan. 1, 1946, and speeded up "carryback" of tax allowances for possible future operating losses of corporations. At same time, House refused to do anything on emergency unemployment compensation bill to help war workers, veterans during reconversion. Passed 246 to 91. Against: Democrats 85. Republicans 4. Minor 2. For: Democrats 107. Republicans 139. Minor 0.

BIG STEEL VICTORY

This company has resisted unionism for several decades. The election brought forth the following results in the production plant: CIO, 3561; Valve Independent Union (company union), 1225; neither, 1165.

The AFL stuck in its puny meddling nose and in a small division the results were: USA-CIO, 58; AFL, 34. This is a culmination of many AFL failures to organize this plant with their craft stupidity and the credit must go to the USA District Director, Joseph Germano and his staff; CIO Representatives Loren Houser, Henry Henry, Claude Kramer and James Doherty, supported by the regional office of the CIO, Walter Harris.

Congratulations to all of you. On with the next victory.

S. H. Dalrymple, Pres., Un. Rubber Workers of America, reports: Lloyd Mfg. Co., Apponaug, R. I., CIO 36; against 0; United States Rubber Co., Naugatuck, Conn., CIO 1583; AFL 308; no union 61. This is one of the local unions that participated in the formation of their international union. During recent months the AFL has been conducting a vicious campaign trying to take over the local. Francis Quinn, Int. Rep., and George Froelich, President of the local union and other local officers were responsible for this victory.

Frank J. Bender, CIO Reg. Dir., Baltimore, Md., reports: Gibbs & Booth Packing Plant, Baltimore, Md., FTA-CIO 121; neither 79. CIO Representatives Brylke and Ryan and FTA Representative Henley handled the campaign.

Bernard Segal, Evecutive Director, United Office & Professional Workers of America, reports: The major Jewish organizations in New York City have endorsed collective bargaining for their clerical and professional employes by recognizing as their collective bargaining agent the Social Service Employes Union, Local 19 of the UOPWA-CIO. The American Jewish Committee and the Joint Defense Appeal are alone among the major Jewish organizations in refusing to bargain with the union of their employes.

Mrs. Joe Worker Learned Hard Way That Union, Not Boss, Was Family Friend

By HELEN BLANCHARD
Director of Organization, CIO Auxiliaries

OHIO is the scene of much auxiliary organizing activity these days. Yes, Ohio women are definitely swinging into line to support one of the greatest campaigns in the history of the CIO. The battle of reconversion is here and while our union leaders are emphasizing the need of "community action" the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries is busy mobilizing every person who will lend an ear in support of the job ahead.

Most of us will remember that among the many devices used by management to prevent union organization was the personal visit with Mrs. Joe Worker, during the hours when Joe Worker was at the shop. The object of the visit was an attempt to rally Mrs. Worker on the side of management (very tactfully, of course) usually pointing out that "If" the plant was organized, Joe would lose his job—"If" the plant was organized the plant would move out of town—management would never, never recognize the union and therefore Joe was just being foolish, jeopardizing his chances for promotion, increased pay, etc., by participating in the attempt to organize the shop.

We were able to overcome this by pointing out the real facts—but every member who is active in his or her trade union knows it meant extra house to house visits in order to place these facts before Mrs. Worker and convince her that management was not telling the entire story.

We know that among the many ways used to get our program across, personal contact ranks high; to spread this work we must involve as many of our people as possible so that the visits can be made by members in their own neighborhood. We must combat the Pollyannish soap opera radio programs and the Peglarized newspaper accounts of the real facts to which our families are subjected and direct their thinking activity along a real constructive program for all wage earners.

Many of our CIO families are still unaware of the importance of supporting the CIO program in relation to OPA, unemployment insurance, full employment, 65c minimum wage, the extension of social security and other measures designed to strengthen the family unit in America. Defeat of the Burton Ball Hatch bill is an important MUST on our list. However, once it is made clear to our women folk what this means to the individual wage earner, they become eager to participate in group action.

Legislative and educational committees are not the only levels at which our union and auxiliary interests merge. Our auxiliary members do yeoman service on welfare and social committees.

Therefore, the first step towards getting our CIO program across in the community is to organize our families. To do this we urge the appointment of committees of three to meet with an equal number of representatives of the auxiliary to map out a plan of action suitable to the locality. Where no auxiliary exists we urge that a committee be appointed—a meeting called to which our families are invited—and at the meeting three women be asked to work with the union committee to work out further action.

We know a large percentage of wage earning women will need to continue to work after the war. (See "Economic Outlook" for July—"Woman—Her 'Place' and Her Problems"). Some, however, will return to their homes—ways and means should be worked out so that these former union members be eligible for auxiliary membership. Their trade union experience will be a valuable asset in the maintenance of strong auxiliaries. And through auxiliary membership, these former trade union members will be kept in close contact with our CIO program.

Yes, we know it is a difficult campaign, but we are convinced the obstacles are not unsurmountable. Does it work? The answer based on our experience is a vigorous "yes."

By ARTHUR WHITE

WHEN Rep. Adam Clayton Powell was elected to office, a Congressional colleague advised him thusly: "I can give you no theoretical advice in law-making, but I'll tell you one thing from experience. It will sometimes happen, when you're on your feet orating in support of a bill, that some Congressman will disagree. He will probably shake his head violently, and you'll be tempted to go over to him and convert him to your viewpoint then and there. Don't do it. He's probably one of the few who have been listening."

Recently, a few Nazis escaped from a POW camp in the U. S. The local sleuths used a method common to the section—bloodhounds for tracking them down. The man who held the dogs by the leash insists that he's telling the truth in reporting that, at a certain point on the trail, one hound stopped short, turned to the others, and said: "Let's make believe we lost the scent. I simply CAN'T stand the awful smell!"

The other day a labor editor celebrated his birthday at a luncheon tendered by friends. When he returned to his office, he answered a phone call, and was amazed to hear the almost forgotten nasal twang of the boy who delivered singing telegrams. "Happy birthday to you!" the voice sang out.

The song concluded, the startled editor inquired, "Has the ban on singing telegrams been lifted?"

"No, this is Black Market stuff," whispered the singer, and hung up.

The Story of Labor

1 The Maryland State CIO Committee on Employment and Unemployment Compensation made the rounds of elected representatives and government officials to present their program to meet the human aspects of retirement.

2 The first Congressman they went to see was Lansdale Sasscer. They urged him to petition President Truman for a revision of the national wage policy; that he endorse unemployment compensation legislation of $25 for 26 weeks.

Maryland CIO Takes Job Plan to Congress

FACED with the problem of a cutback in the weekly hours, resulting in a 25 to 35% decrease in take home pay, the Maryland State CIO Committee on Employment and Unemployment Compensation pointed out the problem to Maryland officials last week, and gave step by step proposals for meeting the situation.

Starting out at 8:45 a. m. from Baltimore, the delegation arrived in Washington to confer with their Congressmen.

- That Maryland Congressmen petition President Harry S. Truman to recommend a revision in the national wage policy which would provide for the restoration by executive order of the original authority of the National War Labor Board to approve or direct such wage adjustments as may be necessary and which will not substantially affect the cost of living.
- That they endorse Truman's proposal calling for emergency unemployment compensation legislation of $25 for 26 weeks.
- That they sponsor the Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill, HR 2202, and S 380.
- That they sign the Permanent Fair Employment Practice discharge petition.
- That they support the 65-cent minimum hourly wage.
- That they urge Admiral Land to halt the bonus cuts for seamen.

By noon the delegation was back in the city of Baltimore conferring with War Manpower directors, Unemployment Compensation officers, and with the Governor of the State of Maryland.

The members of the State CIO Committee on Employment and Unemployment Compensation making the trip were: Phil Kulinski, chief shop steward, of the United Auto Workers Local 239, at Eastern Aircraft; Charles Valentine, president of United Steelworkers Local 2609, Bethlehem Steel, Sparrows Point; Milton Barnes, vice president United Steelworkers Local 2610; Ernest Magenti, of UAW's Local 738, Glenn L. Martin; Leonard Kline, president of Local 109 UE, at Bendix Freize; Ray Seese, president of the IUMSWA, Local 24, Key Highway Shipyard, and Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the State CIO.

Other unionists joining the group were: Charles Mesko of Local 43, Shipyard Workers, at Bethlehem-Fairfield; Harold L. Wilson of UE Local 130, Westinghouse; Richard Carter of the Shipyard Union, and Franklin Keesey.

3 Representative H. Streett Baldwin kept the delegation waiting an hour and a half. Then baldly told them that they were doing wrong about FEPC, by trying to make it permanent. Milton Barnes, at right, asked for FEPC support.

4 At Unemployment Compensation offices back in Baltimore, the committee pressed for clarity and speed in determining the justice of unemployed workers applying for benefits. Richard Carter and Ray Seese enter the office.

5 Brother Charles Mesko, of Local 43, of the Industrial Union of Shipbuilding Workers, shows the way into the War Manpower Commission offices, where they presented demands for jobs their regular occupation, at comparable wages.

6 To Governor Herbert R. O'Conor, they proposed the creation of a Maryland State Committee on Reconversion with CIO participation, which would concern itself with helping to assure full employment in the State of Maryland.

JAPAN was hit by two atomic bombs last week. One was the product of scientists. The other was a knockout blow from our ally, the USSR. Both hits were scheduled to hasten V-J Day.

The CIO, in the meantime, continued to show the ten guests from the Soviet trade unions our country. In Atlantic City CIO Pres. Philip Murray hailed their visit as "of unquestionable importance in strengthening the ties between the United States and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, assuring peaceful relations, understanding and cooperation between the two countries for the future peace of mankind."

The Russians visited auto plants and cafes, packinghouses and shipyards, workingmen's homes, steel mills, and clubs, fur shops and clothing centers. Their sightseeing was climaxed with an enthusiastic ovation at Carnegie Hall, where Chairman Sidney Hillman of CIO-PAC and Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt made them welcome.

Phyllis Phillips' mother led the delegation. "How can we educate our children on 34½ cents an hour?" her mother asked the War Labor Board.

Thirteen women and four children were among the delegation to plead for their right as a family to continue to exist. "You can't support children on 34½c an hour. You're driving our husbands out of the industry. They won't be able to stay there and watch their families starve at this salary," the women said.

By HELEN KAY

THIRTEEN seamen's wives and four children upset the smooth decorum of office procedure at the War Labor Board in Washington this week when they presented the raw material of what a bonus cut means to them.

There were husky voices and tears in presenting their plea for a 55c minimum hourly wage for merchant seamen. They spoke in the choked voices of suffering and deprivation. And the public members of the board were embarrassed in the face of the people's suffering. The Board members' intellectual machinery and their cool, abstract figures of a 55c versus a 34½c hourly wage came face to face with the daily reality of a housewife's worries—of hunger, and cold, and sickness and crying children. They didn't like it.

The delegation was led by Mrs. Phyllis Phillips, seaman's wife, and included women from the ports of Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, and from four of the maritime unions, including the CIO's Natl. Maritime Union, the American Communications Assn., the Marine Cooks & Stewards Union, and the Independent Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders & Wipers Union.

Formerly only 12 per cent of all seamen were family men. During recent years a new type of man has entered the service, and a much larger percentage of seamen carry the responsibilities of parenthood.

Mrs. Lillian Holmberg, mother of two children, practically sobbed out her story. "My husband was on the Murmansk run. All through the war, I received only $28.75 for the support of myself and the two children. We had a little house. The mortgage people came down on me. There was nothing to protect me from them, like soldiers' and Navy men's wives are protected. I had to pay the mortgage people or get evicted.

"My son, at 14, graduated from school, at the head of his class. I had no clothes for his graduation. I had to pawn my wedding ring to get him a little suit. And he was the most brilliant student in school. He won the American Legion scholarship.

"My flat was freezing. I had only three tons of coal for the winter. My children would cry with the cold in the morning. And that was pay with the bonus. Now what do you expect me to do with the bonus taken away?"

"I can't live in a single furnished room," she said. "After all, when my husband comes home, I must have a place for him. The ship doesn't furnish me with laundry, linen, meals, room rent, that must go on even while he is on board ship. This effort of the company would mean a double cost of maintenance for us." Peggy Weiss explained how all their money was used to upgrade her husband, from a seaman to a ship's radio operator.

"During the war, with the war risk, the companies gave them a bonus, comparable to the wage increases that workers won on shoreside jobs. This was done instead of decent wage increases, so that it could be yanked away at any time. Now they've yanked it away.

"We lived on that standard. We could just get by on it. Now we're told we must go back to the pre-war standard. It's not possible. It cuts our income in half. It's a bread and butter question, and not fair. No worker is supposed to be cut back to 1942 levels; that's a ruling of the WLB, and that's what they're trying to do to us."

The War Labor Board member interjected a remark: "Mrs. Santilli, you talk like a lawyer."

"No," she said, "like a housewife."

The four maritime unions are conducting a nationwide drive to gain for seamen the same minimum that shoreside workers have already won. Seamen average 34½c an hour today. They took a 50% cut in wages when their war-time bonus was taken. They are demanding 55c an hour and overtime after 40 hours.

In addition to depriving seamen of the war-risk bonus, the companies are today attempting to have subsistence included as part of the seamen's earnings.

Mrs. Marie Lopez has seven children. She brought two of them with her, Donald 6, and Robert 9. Her husband ships from the port of Philadelphia. He is a deckman, now on the Pacific run. "How can I go to work to supplement our income, when I have so many children to take care of? I can't leave the children. Why the authorities would be down on me for neglect in a moment. And now they take our money away, and do nothing about seeing that these children get properly fed and clothed." Similar stories of sacrifice to "keep 'em sailing" were told to the War Labor Board by other wives and children of seamen.

House Heads Back Congress Return If War Ends Quickly

IMMEDIATE return to Washington of Congress was recommended this week by Democratic and Republican leaders in the House of Representatives, in view of expected peace, and provided that Congressional Committees have work ready for the Congressmen.

Comments came from Reps. John W. McCormack, Democrat, and Joseph W. Martin, Jr., Republican, in answer to wires and telephone calls from The CIO NEWS.

The CIO NEWS wires said:

"In view of probable early end of Japanese war due to entrance of Soviet Union, use of atomic bombs, would you favor calling Congress back to work immediately to deal with reconversion program, postwar job plans?"

Wires also were sent to Senate leaders who were not available for comment.

McCormack's reply said:

"In event of Jap capitulation, which I think will happen, Committees in House having emergency and reconversion legislation pending before them in my opinion will have to be called back for immediate hearings and Congress called back at an early date.

"As you know, Committee action is necessary before Congress itself can act, but both events will have to take place in the very near future."

Martin, in a telephone conversation from Massachusetts, said he would want to talk to the Administration about the matter, and that he "hadn't heard anything."

"Whether we were to be called back or not," he said, "would depend on whether or not the committees have work ready for us. If they have the work ready, and if the war is to be over in a month or two, we should come back immediately."

Martin pointed out that sometimes it takes committees "three or four weeks" to get work ready for Congress.

CIO Delegates Urge Quick Reconversion

DELEGATES of eight CIO unions left Washington for their home communities this week after telling government officials dramatic stories of layoffs of thousands of workers. The delegates were convinced that more definite steps must be taken by Federal agencies and Congress to prevent widespread misery.

The delegates represented workers in industries bearing the brunt of reconversion—Auto Workers; Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; Shipbuilding Workers, Steelworkers, Rubber Workers and Federal Workers.

Before calling on government agencies they met with the CIO Reconversion Committee and 70 government officials. After the meetings and the visits, the union officials urged establishment of government policy which would:

1. Provide for government-operation of government-owned plants if a thorough survey showed that private industry is unwilling or unable to operate them.

2. Call for a change in Natl. War Labor Board policy, which has included broad hints in official speeches on how to cut wages and still remain within WLB regulations. Delegates pointed out that such wage cuts, usually obtained by job reclassifications, are in addition to heavy pay losses due to the elimination of overtime and wartime bonuses.

3. Provide for a change in the policy of state unemployment compensation boards and local offices of the U. S. Employment Service, which are said to be forcing workers into low paid jobs that do not utilize their skills, by referring them to such jobs and refusing to certify them for unemployment benefits if the jobs are refused.

Labor's Aid for Atom Bomb Wins War Dept. Praise

THE important part played by the CIO and organized labor in general in the production of the atomic bomb which "vaporized" 60 per cent of the Japanese city of Hiroshima was stressed this week by Secretary of War Stimson and Under Secretary Patterson.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was especially lauded for his aid in the recruitment of workers for the Oak Ridge, Tenn., and the Richland, Wash., plants where the bombs are produced. Patterson wired Murray:

"Now that the Japanese have felt the deadly force of our new atomic bomb, I want to thank you for assistance you have given in carrying forward this project.

"The manufacture of these bombs under the conditions of utmost secrecy was possible only through the cooperative effort of science, industry, labor and the Army."

Not only did the CIO leadership aid in labor recruitment, but much of the equipment was supplied by CIO workers in Allis-Chalmers, Chrysler, General Electric, U. S. Rubber and Westinghouse plants.

ATTENTION—CONGRESS!

PRESSURE mounting to the breaking point against Japan—threatened with U. S. atomic bombs and the crushing blows of the Red Army—may end the war as this is written.

On pressing reconversion issues like unemployment compensation, needed wage boosts, the Murray-Patman full employment bill, minimum wage amendments and a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, Congress has failed to act.

This week, CIO sent a letter to every member of Congress, signed by Legislative Director Nathan E. Cowan, warning that many CIO members "already are feeling the pinch of the reconversion period." Cowan asked Congress to act speedily in formulating a program necessary to prevent an "atomic bombing" of our economy which would bury in the vast crater of a depression the hopes of millions of Americans.

Major excerpts of Cowan's letter to Congress follow:

"As it becomes increasingly apparent that the war against Japan is going to absorb only a portion of this country's productive resources, members of organized labor feel deeply concerned with plans for the achievement of full production and full employment. I have been requested by the Executive Board of the CIO to acquaint you with some of the steps which we feel should be taken to reach the goal of full employment and to ask your support for our program.

"Already the members of our organization are feeling the pinch of the reconversion period. Many of them are unemployed because of cutbacks in war contracts. Others have had their incomes sharply reduced as they have been forced to take jobs at lower wages or have lost their overtime pay with reduction in working hours. Millions of American workers are still struggling to make ends meet on sub-standard wages.

"Some unemployment during the reconversion period is inevitable, but we believe there are three important steps which must be taken to prevent the necessary transitional unemployment from becoming mass depression unemployment. They are (1) a 20% increase in basic wage rates, (2) raising the statutory minimum wage from 40c an hour to 65c, and (3) adequate emergency unemployment compensation.

"We do not think that these measures alone will prevent another depression. The CIO has endorsed the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill as the framework for a positive program for achieving full employment which should include a national housing program, public and private, such as the one embodied in the bill introduced by Senator Wagner, development and utilization of our national resources through regional and valley authorities, not only on the Missouri but on the other great river valleys of the country, development and improvement of the highways, airports, and railroads of the nation, and the construction of hospital facilities to raise the level of the people's health.

"To put our economy on a sounder, less fluctuating basis, the principle of the guaranteed annual wage should be endorsed by the government, while at the same time our unions attempt to negotiate contracts carrying annual wage provisions.

"For the security of those citizens whose incomes cannot be assured by full employment and adequate, annual wages—the aged, the disabled, the dependent children, and the sick—a better national social security system, such as set forth in the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill, is necessary.

"A higher standard of living cannot be reached without better educational opportunities for all, and the CIO has long been on record as endorsing federal aid to education. We look to this Congress for enactment of legislation providing such an aid, in order that succeeding generations of Americans will not be handicapped by lack of educational opportunities.

"The struggle for full employment will require a people fully as united as were Americans during the wartime struggle against Fascism. To this end, the CIO supports the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Commission which will prevent reactionary employers from pitting Negro workers against white workers and will prevent denial of employment to individuals because of their race, creed, color, or national origin.

"To this end we oppose any legislation designed to drive a wedge between the veterans and the workers. To this end, we support the Equal Pay Bill, rather than the falsely named "Equal Rights" amendment, to guarantee women workers the same economic status as men workers.

"And to this end we oppose the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill which would paralyze the labor movement of the nation in its efforts to gain the better wages and working conditions which are part and parcel of any full employment program. A detailed analysis of this bill, showing the harm it would do, will be sent to you shortly.

"We are glad to read in the press that a group of Senators has outlined a 12 point program for the consideration of Congress next Fall. We were glad also to see in the Congressional Record the closing remarks of Senator Barkley. Many of the points in the CIO's full employment program are included in these Senate lists.

"We very much hope that during the summer recess you will learn from the people in your own State or Congressional district the reconversion problems which confront them, that you will confer with the members of organized labor as well as other groups interested in establishing full employment in this country, and that we may be able to count on your support for the various legislative measures which embody the CIO's program.

"We would appreciate hearing from you as to your willingness to support this program."

Send Them Back to Washington!

THE Soviet declaration of war against Japan plus the astounding news of U. S. atomic bombing both forecast a possible early end of hostilities.

The problems of peace—reconversion, jobs, unemployment compensation to tide over the jobless, and a host of others—may come tumbling into our laps almost overnight.

Meanwhile, Congress has left Washington, with the avowed intention of returning in leisurely fashion no sooner than October 8. This is the concern of every American—particularly of every member of the CIO.

Your Congressman is probably home. He's dusted off his doorstep for expected visitors. Pay him a call. Take his voting record along (it was published in the August 6 issue of the CIO NEWS). Talk to him about what he did—or didn't—do. Ask him what he plans to do about the Congressional petition to break the Little Steel formula, about a 65-cent minimum wage, about the Wagner-Murray-Dingell social security improvements, about the Murray-Patman full employment bill, about the Kilgore-Forand bill for $25 a week unemployment compensation for 26 weeks, about opposing the anti-labor Ball-Burton-Hatch bill.

And just as important—with war's end probably imminent—be sure that you tell him that his place is back in Washington, cooking with gas on some of the critical problems that will pack the punch of an enemy's atomic bomb on our economy unless Congress acts on them at once.

Blast Heard Round the World

The mighty man-made atomic earthquake that this week spread utter devastation in Japan's city of Hiroshima has implications far more terrible — and also hopeful — than the quick extermination of Japanese war makers and an early and successful conclusion of the conflict.

Release of atomic energy, in bombs now possessing the explosive force of 40 million pounds of TNT, may send others besides the Japanese to join their ancestors unless the peoples of the world take firm steps to banish war forever.

It is utterly beyond imagination to conceive of the destructive force now at man's command, when one thinks of a bomb that has the power to deliver a punch equivalent to that normally delivered by 2,000 B-29's. Think what 1,000 B-29's, each dropping an atomic bomb, could do to the city of New York!

Now, more than ever, it is vitally necessary for the peoples of the world to demand that their leaders support without equivocation every step toward world cooperation and world peace that the United Nations ought to take.

The CIO's position on this is absolutely clear. Not only has it wholeheartedly welcomed the extension of United Nations cooperation but it has done its share to further international friendship and understanding in its own field of labor.

The CIO looks forward confidently both to a world which will recognize the necessity for peace if mankind is to survive on this planet, and to the potentialities for progress in the elimination of human drudgery due to the development and application of the terrific forces at our disposal for the benefit of all human beings.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

Len De Caux this week writes from Hawaii, on his way to visit Pacific war fronts with other labor editors.

IT'S just a few hours' hop on a C-54 plane from San Francisco to the Hawaiian Islands, main hopping-off point to the war, and a couple more similar hops could take you to Tokyo.

Army releases call Hawaii a funnel through which a constant stream of men and materials flows westward to Guam, Okinawa, and the Philippines. Through it also passes a thinner trickle eastward —wounded Americans returning from the battle zones to the U. S. A.

Sunshine, palms, balmy breezes, breakers, Waikiki beach surfboard riders and many other far-famed attractions still weave a spell on the newcomer who doesn't have to stay.

But I have yet to speak to an American soldier coming, going or staying who wouldn't gladly trade them all for a sight of his hometown. I talked to wounded men just arrived by hospital plane—a farm boy from Kentucky with a side wound; a Negro from Tennessee, his body in a plaster cast; a Virginian from Roanoke, one leg cut off at the knee; a Reading, Pa., textile worker; a college boy from Maine; a factory worker from Manitowoc, Wisc.; a Chester, Md., crabber and oysterman; a pocketbook worker from Brooklyn.

All were cheerful and welcomed a chat. They were willing but not eager to talk of battle experiences, but their eyes really lit up and smiles came readily as soon as they got a chance to talk of their home towns and states, particularly with a visitor knowing these parts.

They were brave and cheerful because they were stout-hearted youngsters, too proud to show suffering, but the chief cause of their good cheer and smiles that shone through discomfort was the knowledge that now at last they were really on the way home. Lieut. Gen. Robert Richardson, commanding general of the Middle Pacific Army Forces, spoke of the overwhelming longing for home of all men in the Pacific any length of time in terms of "length of war psychology" and "war weariness."

"We must share the burden of men who have been out here three or four years," he said. He emphasized what it means to be separated from family and home so long on lonely Pacific atolls or even in the comparative comfort of civilization of Hawaii.

To return any substantial number to the U. S. A. creates serious personnel problems. Of course replacements must be seasoned and there is griping about rotation furloughs and actual operation of the point system for discharge.

But with all the griping, war weariness and homesickness, fighting spirit is high, as the Japs can confirm, and so is the determination to stick it out and finish the job.

Here in Hawaii, the close-knit interdependence of war workers and fighting forces is obvious—seamen carrying men and supplies, longshoremen loading and unloading ships, mechanics repairing equipment, all work alongside Army and Navy personnel.

The CIO is highly praised by high Army officers as a power in the Hawaiian Islands. NMU seamen are constantly in and out of port, all civilian stevedores are organized in the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, and the ILWU has won 43 NLRB elections by an average 97 per cent vote involving more than 20,000 sugar, pineapple and railroad workers. In the last elections, CIO-PAC was successful in electing 80 per cent of its slate to the territorial legislature.

Asked his opinion on labor's war performance, Richardson said, "As far as I know, the Army never has been short of supplies because of labor's activities. We have been a constant beneficiary of hard-working, war-minded Americans working on assembly lines, on docks, in mines, and manning merchant ships. Supplies and equipment go to troops in the field because labor and the Army play on the same team. I am satisfied that the total efforts of labor can be called one of the bright spots of the war."

CIO's Frankensteen Wins Detroit Mayoralty Primary

RESIDENTS of Detroit, fourth largest city in the nation, turned out in double the expected numbers this week to name Richard T. Frankensteen, vice-president of the CIO United Auto Workers Union, as their first choice for mayor in a primary election. The final vote will be held this November.

Three other CIO-supported candidates ran first, ninth and 11th in the common council nomination race, with 18 nominated and nine to be elected.

The victory was hailed by CIO-PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman, who pointed to other successes in Minneapolis, Newark, Birmingham and Los Angeles, where CIO-supported candidates were victorious in primary and run-off contests.

Frankensteen drew 82,936 votes to incumbent Mayor Edward J. Jefferies' 68,754. County Auditor James D. Friel ran third with 35,720.

The three other CIO-backed council candidates were: Lt. George Edwards, former UAW official now in service, who ran first among the 18 nominated; the Rev. Charles Hill, popular Negro clergyman; and Tracy Doll, secretary of the Wayne County PAC. Hill and Doll placed ninth and 11th.

PAC Warms Up for 1946

VICTORY of the British Labor Party and of UAW-CIO's Richard Frankensteen, who was nominated for mayor of Detroit, will provide additional stimuli for a meeting of CIO Political Action workers to be held in New York City Aug. 13-14.

Representatives of CIO international unions assigned to political action work will meet with CIO-PAC officials to discuss means of coordinating PAC activities with their unions, according to Chairman Sidney Hillman.

With 1945 mayoralty campaigns and the 1946 Congressional elections as action "musts", the meeting will discuss the general PAC program, organization in cities and states, the forthcoming $1 voluntary contribution drive and educational material.

In N. J., the Newark CIO Council and the Essex and W. Hudson PAC's conducted a three-way drive against the black market and for full employment and improved unemployment compensation benefits.

A meeting of national CIO and PAC officials in Atlanta was held this week.

In Louisiana, a state PAC committee has been established, with attention directed at January municipal elections and an intensive registration drive.

In Cincinnati, CIO Newspaper Guild member Rollin H. Everett, editor of the Sun, official CIO Council paper, will be a candidate for city council.

Vandenberg Meet Draws Qualified Ok

CIO President Murray this week voiced approval, in broad terms, of Senator Arthur Vandenberg's suggestion for a labor-business conference on industrial peace, and suggested that the meeting be called by Secretary of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach and Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace.

Murray warned that it is "extremely important for the success of such a conference that its perspective be clear." He said, in a letter to Schwellenbach outlining the CIO proposal:

"There would appear to be a suggestion in Senator Vandenberg's proposal that the conference be confined to a consideration of legislation to deal with so-called disputes between labor and management. This type of approach necessarily leads to concrete measures such as the obnoxious Ball-Burton-Hatch bill recently introduced in the Senate.

"The elimination of unnecessary industrial disputes must rest on a much sounder basis. This is the fulfillment of our national objective of an expanding economy with full production and full employment."

Among pressing issues that Murray recommended for the attention of such a conference were:

An adequate wage policy, a 65-cents-an-hour minimum wage, the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill, a permanent FEPC, consideration of an annual wage for workers, and legislation to aid small business.

Levinson Dies

Edward Levinson, publicity director of the CIO United Auto Workers Union, died Wednesday, August 8, in a Detroit hospital. The 43-year-old editor of the United Auto Workers had been ill for two weeks.

Levinson, born in Brooklyn, had been labor editor of the N.Y. Post, and had worked on newspapers in Denver, Oakland and San Francisco.

The Ball and Chain Bill

What would happen to labor if the Ball-Burton-Hatch Act were made law is told by CIO General Counsel Pressman and his Assistant in the following article, seventh of a series.

By LEE PRESSMAN AND FRANK DONNER

IN connection with cases subject to arbitration, the proposed law provides that in the event of a refusal to arbitrate the Board can decide that a special fact-finding commission is necessary. There is no provision for a hearing or any protection for the union when this finding is made. The Board can make it on its own motion and on the basis of backdoor surmise.

When the board determines that a commission is necessary it can ask the President to appoint one. The commission is to report the facts in 30 days from the date it is created and the board may allow an additional 30 days on the request of the commission.

What this section does in effect is to create a period of 60 days during which a union is absolutely frozen in its attempts to resist unilateral employer action.

The union is under a duty for 30 days after the expiration of the report of the fact-finding commission not to picket, strike or engage in any such action to end the controversy. So there is a 90-day period possible during which a union must twiddle its thumbs in the face of even the most outrageous conduct by an employer.

Section 10 of the proposed law provides for voluntary arbitration. This section is as complicated as a Rube Goldberg invention and about as useful. It simply provides machinery for voluntary arbitration. But it does so in a way that is involved, expensive and technical.

This legislative nightmare is also contained in the Railway Labor Act, and in the 10 years of the functioning of the Railway Labor Act it has been invoked exactly 37 times.

Section 11 of the proposed bill is an iron fist under a very thin sheath of velvet. Innocently headed "Maintenance of Essential Supplies and Services," it authorizes the board under the procedure for creating a special fact-finding commission to make a public announcement as to whether it is in the public interest to require the parties "to accept temporarily a compulsory settlement of their labor relations controversy."

Under the statute the board may make such a finding without a hearing and whenever it chooses. The standards which are supposed to guide the board in determining whether it should require the parties to accept "temporarily a compulsory settlement of their labor controversies" are so loose as to give it extremely wide latitude.

If the parties fail to agree, then the special fact-finding commission becomes a board of compulsory arbitration. The compulsory arbitration procedure is of such a character as to make the qualification "temporarily" a joke.

The arbitration hearings and procedure are so involved as necessarily to be enormously time-consuming with elaborate provisions for hearings and court review.

1. On July 27, in New Bedfard, Mass., the CIO Textile Workers Union defeated the AFL Textile Workers by more than two to one in an NLRB election involving 10,000 workers in the nine mills of the New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers Assn. It was the loyalty of voters like Mrs. Eva Secia, on a maternity leave from the mill, who made the vote possible. Fifty cars were manned by volunteers to bring out the voters. They did a bang-up job, as the score shows.

2. The CIO Textile Workers Union is now bargaining agent for nearly 15,000 New B workers in 14 mills. NLRB elections will be held in three other mills this mont AFL, which once dominated the city, is the bargaining agent at only one mill. W Green came to speak. But the workers only heard the CIO. 5. Shop steward Virginio Marshall of the Nashawena Mills handed out leaflets at the plant gate to afternoon shift workers going into the mill who would vote later in the afternoon. The last man on the right, looking on disconsolately, is an AFL organizer who became discouraged because all the workers were for CIO. The AFL polled only 2,581 votes against the CIO's 5,773. Only eighty-eight voted for no union, indicating the widespread interest in the election.

Real vacations, higher pay, Free insurance, that's the CIO way. So leave the AFL box bare, And mark your X in the mddle square," which is what happened.

4. Even the children came out, filled with the enthusiasm of getting the vote counted. The CIO record brought out the vote. The CIO won the first vacations with pay for textile workers in New Bedford. The CIO won a seven and a half per cent increase in 1942. They won five cents an hour in 1945, which brought $1,000,000 in back pay in one week, and about $2,000,000 more each year.

7. Tony England, director of the New Bedford TWUA, is being congratulated by a textile worker on the victory. The City Hall rang with shouts of "CIO;" people hugged each other, shook hands; enthusiasm was high. England declared the victory was possible because "the CIO has led every major gain that has been made by the textile workers of New Bedford." With CIO more gains for textile workers will follow, as well as gains for other workers who join CIO unions.

Organizing

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO Vice-President and Director of Organization

The banner victory of the week is the Textile Workers Union, CIO, victory in nine member mills of the New Bedford Cotton Mfg. Assn., New Bedford, Mass. That man, William Green, again as in the General Motors election, Ford election and many others appeared on the scene, branded the CIO as a subversive movement and hit us with everything in the book.

He was given a big play by the newspapers. He had with him John J. Murphy, who along with Wee Willie predicted a great AFL victory in the Ford campaign but the result ought to have been enough—seemingly it wasn't. The workers in the mills gave the best answer to Willie's ranting and raving and his appeal to bigotry. TWUA-CIO received 5,773 votes; United Textile Workers, AFL 2,581, No Union 88.

J. William Belanger, Mass. State Director, TWUA-CIO, and Antonio England, New Bedford director, with their staffs are to be congratulated. To William Green's ranting and raving about raidings, let everyone bear in mind the CIO has had a contract here for some time. If we can get Mr. Green to speak at more meetings where elections are being held, we can be assured of more victories.

Not satisfied with this result, the TWUA-CIO, reports CIO Reg. Dir. C. H. Gillman, came through with a victory at the Highland Crompton Mills, Griffin, Ga. Faced with opposition of the company, Chamber of Commerce and an anti-labor paper "The Militant Truth," similar to publications of the "Christian American" group, the CIO tallied 531 votes, with 107 against. TWUA Rep. Frank Barker was in charge.

Wm. B. Taylor, Dir. Oil Workers Org. Campaign, comes in with a triple; Gulf Refining Co., Houston Pipe Line Division Telegraph Operators voted 100% for CIO; Gulf Oil Corp. Telephone Operators, Kilgore, Texas, voted 100% for CIO; Tidewater State-Wide Production and Drilling, California, 275 for CIO, 256 against. Congratulations, Bill!

George Brown, Dir. Org. IWA-CIO, reports: Greensville Manufacturing, Emporia, Va., CIO 73, Against 20. IWA Rep. R. Wray Alt was in charge and received the support of CIO Reg. Dir. E. B. Pugh.

UAW Reg. Dir. Paul E. Miley sends in two good victories: Columbus Bolt Works, Columbus, Ohio. 900 participated in the election with 55% voting for CIO. The opposition was a company union. Intl. Reps. James Desmond and Waldo Sneary were in charge. At Vulcan Iron and Mold Co. Latrobe, Pa., of 300 employes voting, 98% voted for CIO, with 2% for no Union. Assistant Dir. Charles Rigby and Intl. Rep. Stanley Kwiat were in charge.

Walter H. Harris, CIO Reg. Dir. Chicago, reports a smashing victory for the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Union at the plants of the Luggage Manufacturers Assn. and Independent Luggage Co., 32 shops voting with 735 for CIO, as against 198 for AFL, Neither 6. The AFL had had bargaining rights in there for 8 years. Abe Feinglass, Midwest Director, IF&LWUA, was in charge.

CIO Reg. Dir. I. L. DeShetler, reports a victory for CIO Packinghouse Workers at Producers Creamery Co., Springfield, Mo., CIO 130, No Union 39. Director Baker was in charge.

Morris Muster, Intl. Pres. United Furniture Workers, CIO, reports following victories: Morris Novelty Furniture Co., Martinsville, Va., CIO 108, No Union 51; Hooker-Bassett Furn. Co., CIO 145, No Union 24.

Frank Bender, Reg. Dir. Maryland, reports: Nelson Co., Sparrows Point, Md., CIO 40, No Union 38. CIO Reps. Robert Brylke and Edmund Ryan conducted the campaign.

The State of Georgia, by referendum, adopts a new constitution providing for elimination of poll tax requirements for voting! Victory by ORGANIZING!

Ask Election at Weirton Steel; Company Fires War Veteran

Confident of victory, the CIO Steelworkers this week petitioned the Natl. Labor Relations Board for an election at the Weirton Steel plant, Weirton, W. Va., the bitterest and only major hold-out against the union.

The management organized three company unions in an effort to head off the Steelworkers. Two of them were ordered dissolved by Federal court order. The NLRB has instituted action to cite the company for contempt because of the formation of the third stooge union, the Weirton Independent Union.

The Steelworkers are so confident of victory that they are willing to have the third "independent" union appear on the ballot.

The CIO Steelworkers this week charged that the Weirton Steel Co., Weirton, W. Va., fired a World War II verteran with more than 12 years' seniority after bluntly telling him, "The GI Bill of Rights don't mean a damn thing around here."

The veteran, Kenneth Weir—no relation to Ernest T. Weir, chairman of the Weirton Steel Board, was fired while trying to settle a grievance in his capacity as steward for WIU, which the Natl. Labor Relotions Board has ruled is a company union but which Weirton Steel recognizes as bargaining agent.

The veteran was seeking to bring store room rates in the Weirton plant up to those paid in steel plants organized by USA, the union asserts.

ACW Demands Dollar A Day Raise, Pensions

On behalf of 150,000 clothing workers throughout the country, the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers at a conference this week in New York City, with the Clothing Manufacturers' Assn., demanded a $1 a day wage increase, a retirement fund and six paid holidays.

Pensions, if the union's request is granted, would begin at the retirement age of 65. The employers would set up a fund into which they would pay three percent of their weekly payrolls for such a purpose.

More than 100 clothing manufacturers and union representatives attended the conference when Pres. Sidney Hillman of ACW presented the union demands.

Both sides agreed to designate subcommittees which will continue the discussions for a new collective bargaining agreement.

See Bargaining Chaos in Food Industry

Chaos in bargaining relations between food processing employers and the industry's 3 million employes was predicted this week by the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers Union unless Congress acts to nullify a law withdrawing War Labor Board jurisdiction over these workers.

Nub of the trouble is the "Lea Rider" to the recently passed War Agencies Appropriation bill, which forbids the WLB to spend any money on cases involving these workers.

FTA Pres. Donald Henderson this week urged all CIO affiliates to support S 1348 and its companion measure in the House, which would amend the Social Security Act and would automatically repeal the Lea Rider.

Hastie for Judge Urged by Murray

CIO President Murray recommended the appointment of Judge William H. Hastie, dean of law at Howard University, to fill one of the vacancies on the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in a letter to President Truman this week.

Urging Hastie's appointment, Murray wrote, "Judge Hastie is a Negro and one of the outstanding leaders of his people in the United States. His learning, experience and broad sympathies combine amply to equip him for a judgeship."

FTA Requests Poll In Northern Calif.

The CIO Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers this week filed a petition with the Natl. Labor Relations Board for an industry-wide hearing covering the Northern California cannery workers.

How Congress votes this fall depends a lot on YOU. Your Senators and Congressman are home for the summer. Have you seen them yet to tell them about CIO's reconveresion program and to ask them to support it?

New Utility Union Chartered By CIO

FORMATION of a new affiliate of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the Utility Workers Union of America, was announced this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The new union, which was granted a charter by the CIO, is a combination of the former CIO Utility Workers Organizing Committee, the Brotherhood of Consolidated Edison Employes of New York City and other former affiliates of the independent Utility Workers Union throughout the Nation.

The new union, which has over 60,000 members, is headed by Joseph A. Fisher, New York City, President; William J. Pachler, New York City, Secretary-Treasurer, and Harold J. Straub, New York City, and William Munger, Ohio, Vice Presidents.

Granting of the charter to the Utility Workers Union of America followed an election two weeks ago, in which Consolidated employes voted by 8,555 to 2,843 to affiliate with the CIO. The CIO also has scored several recent election victories in the St. Louis area.

The Consolidated Edison employes formerly were affiliated with the AFL, but revolted against their leadership and elected an independent brotherhood as their collective bargaining agency in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election in 1940.

GREETED BY MURRAY

In welcoming the new group of workers to the CIO, Murray said:

"Formation of the new CIO affiliate is evidence that thousands of employes in the utility industry have recognized the gains that CIO has brought to millions of workers, and the contribution that CIO has made to victory over the Nazis and will continue to make in the war against Japan."

On the Air With CIO

A "vigilant and active Federal Communications Commission" is the best guarantee of a free radio, UAW-CIO Pres. R. J. Thomas this week wired the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters who are meeting in Washington to formulate a new code for members of the association.

Thomas urged that the association base their code on a policy of fair operation of radio in the public interest such as is contained in the statement of policy agreed to by Station WHKC and the UAW-CIO, and recently approved by the FCC. Under that agreement, the station management agreed to cease political censorship of scripts, and to disregard the present NAB code on which the censorship had been based.

The development and growth of Soviet trade unions and their working mechanism will be discussed in an interview with Vassili Kuznetzov, chairman of the Soviet All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, by Ed Hart, Washington radio newsman, on station WINX Tuesday, Aug. 14, at 8:30 p. m.

The methods by which Soviet social security and health insurance are handled by unions will be stressed in the interview as well as Soviet mediation and arbitration which have eliminated the necessity of strikes.

White Collar Workers Vote 5-1 for UE

The CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week won by 5-1 a NLRB election involving 1,000 white collar workers in five plants of the Sperry Gyroscope Co. in Brooklyn and Nassau Counties, N. Y.

Pro-UE sentiment mounted after the workers learned that a War Labor Board decision gave a 14 cents average hourly increase and 15 million dollars in retroactive pay to Sperry production workers.

UAW Wins Despite Layoff Maneuvers

Announcement of the layoff of three-fifths of the shop workers at the A. & G. Aircraft Co., Akron, Ohio, three days before an NLRB election failed to keep CIO Auto Workers this week from tallying 175 votes for the union to 84 against. The company is a subsidiary of Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

Ask Seamen's Raise

The New York city council this week unanimously adopted a resolution asking the Natl. War Labor Board to approve a petition for an increase in the merchant seaman's basic wage rate. The resolution was introduced by Councilman Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., on behalf of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union.

Aids Nigerian Editor

The CIO took the fight for a free press to Nigeria this week. Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Auto Workers, in a cable to the British government, protested the threatened banishment of Editor Nnamdu Azikewi and the suppression of his publications, which have advocated the organization of Nigerian workers in trade unions.

Impeach Bilbo--NMU

Charging Sen. T. G. Bilbo of Mississippi, with carrying on "one of the most vile and vicious attacks on all racial minorities in the U. S. in the history of the country," the CIO Natl. Maritime Union this week wrote Sen. Robert F. Wagner urging him to start impeachment proceedings against Bilbo.

Education Notes

The national 8th War Loan committee of 16 mm. film distributors this week elected Sec.-Treas. Addes of the CIO Auto Workers to its executive committee. This action came in recognition of the outstanding record of the UAW Film Dept. in the 7th War Loan Drive.

The 7th War Bond films were shown to more than 700,000 persons by UAW locals. Over 500 local unions have regular film programs not only for their own membership but also for community organizations.

The CIO Dept. of Research and Education this week issued a new and revised edition of the pamphlet, "First Aid in Lay-Offs," for guidance of workers faced with increasing unemployment.

The pamphlet tells how jobless workers may get unemployment benefits. One section tells what the workers can do through their unions to halt further unemployment, and another outlines the CIO program for reconversion and peace.

In addition to a national issue of the pamphlet, the department has published Iowa, Nebraska and New York editions advising the workers of their unemployment benefit rights under their respective state laws. Arrangement for publishing state editions should be made with the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union and the United Seamen's Service are sponsoring until August 25 an exhibition of 60 water colors and drawings by 36 active merchant seamen at the Gallery, 63 East 57th St., New York.

A jury of prominent painters and artists selected the pictures from a group of 600 submitted by 175 members of the NMU. Twenty-one of the artists represented received their first instructions at art classes conducted at the NMU recreation hall, New York City, by a United Seamen's Service teacher.

"Invest in yourself" is a slogan directed at youth in the National Back-to-School drive sponsored by the U. S. Children's Bureau and the U. S. Office of Education.

High school enrollment dropped 600,000 in the 1943-44 school year below the all-time high of seven and a quarter million in 1940-41.

The 1944 Back-to-School drive was responsible for only a negligible drop at the beginning of the 1944-45 year, but enrollment by the end of the year, partially because of the attraction of jobs in war industries, dropped a million below wartime peak.

Springfield Plan Teaches Children What U. S. Means

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

HAVE you ever heard of the Springfield Plan for education in democracy? Started in the Springfield, Mass., public schools about six years ago, it is a plan to teach first the children and then the community as a whole that all races, all nationalities, all religions are part of America.

The youngest children study their own school, the part each person from the janitor to the principal, plays in making it run. Then they have a fireman, a milkman, a postman, a policeman visit the class and explain how they try to help the people of the city and what the children can do to help them.

Beginning in the third grade, the children start to study the differences between nationalities.

The children tell stories of how their families came to America and to Springfield. They teach the other children their songs.

The plan reaches out beyond the school, too. The students carry home their understanding of true democracy. In addition, the Springfield Adult Education Council has been established which sponsors classes and discussions.

The schools follow through also in finding employment for their graduates. An employer who asks for a worker in terms of creed or color is told that no such records are kept or distinctions made. Instead he is urged to hire on a straight merit basis.

The basic ideas of the Springfield plan should be carried out in every community. Then all American children would grow up with a real understanding of democracy, and their parents also would learn that all races and nationalities are equally American and must work together to build our nation. (For more information about the Springfield plan, write to the League for Fair Play, 11 W. 42nd St., New York 18, N. Y.)

Congressman Vito Marcantonio, chief battering ram in the drive to rub out the poll-tax, often reaches the boiling point when verbally assaulting the opposition on the House floor . . . Recently, when "Marc" was at white-heat, his colleague, Adam Clayton Powell, tried to calm him, saying: "Take it easy, Marc, or you'll catch on fire." THE Story of Labor

'IN THE RED' $11.09 A WEEK

A TYPICAL steel worker in a typical steel town goes "in the red" $11.09 a week. The typical worker is one of 126 employes of steel mills in the Braddock, Pa., area (pop. 43,000) where steel means jobs and shut downs mean unemployment and hunger. He is a representative sample.

The typical worker, who makes only $45.92 a week after taxes, was presented this week by the CIO United Steelworkers in a comprehensive 60-page study of his economic life as of January, 1945.

"The Braddock steel worker," said the study, "is 45 years old, with 17 years of continuous service, and has a family consisting of a wife and one dependent.

"The Braddock family's total income was $56.60 a week after taxes, 11 per cent being contributed in wages by other members of the family and 8 per cent coming from other income, mainly from boarders or roomers—most of the latter being relatives.

"Weekly family expenditures were $57.01, and on his own earnings the average Braddock steelworker went into the red by $11.09 a week. Even with extra family income, however, his total family income only equalled expenditures and he was unable to accumulate any net savings," said the study, which was prepared by USA-CIO Research Director Harold J. Ruttenberg.

How about the future? How will a sharp drop in war time earnings affect Mr. Average Braddock?

Disastrously, said the study, for with the elimination of the 48-hour week, which is a virtual certainty during the reconversion period, weekly income will drop at least 25 per cent—from $50.85 before tax deductions to $38.38.

Worse yet, since there has been at least a 30 per cent increase in retail prices since 1941, Mr. Average Braddock's real earnings in terms of January, 1941 dollars will be only $29.52, or $3.33 less than he was actually earning in January, 1941. A ten per cent reduction in real wages!

Will savings tide Mr. Average Braddock over the reconversion period? No, say the Steelworkers, for the average family has only $313 put away for a rainy day. The study points out:

"Unless price control is more effectively maintained and basic wage rates are substantially increased to offset the decline in earnings, the Braddock steel worker may have to use his total savings for rainy day money, and will not be able to spend much, if any, of it in such a way as to help turn the wheels of industry.

"His savings will have to go for living essentials and not consumer durable goods—like washing machines, electric ice boxes, automobiles—where the absence of sufficient effective purchasing power can be fatal to achieveing full employment."

What does the union propose to do about it? One way of helping to solve the problem is to institute a guaranteed annual wage, like that signed last week between the USA-CIO and the Wildman Mfg. Co., at Norristown, Pa. It guarantees a minimum of 1,200 hours of work a year for employes who have completed five years of continuous service.

Wretched houses that hundreds of Braddock workers have to live in (above) and where their children have to play, in the streets (below).

SEE 10 MILLION OUT OF WORK BY 1946!

ONE million people were reported jobless 24 hours after victory over Japan. One Government source estimated this week ten million might be out of work by Christmas, confronting the nation with a crisis calling for bold, imaginative planning to avert economic disaster.

The storm signals for the economic hurricane have long been raised. Even before the victory announcement, the CIO leadership was reporting cutbacks and layoffs in shipbuilding, electrical supplies, aircraft and other industries—and was telling what action should be taken.

Reconversion Mobilizer Snyder this week in his report to President Truman stated that there were 1,100,000 unemployed before he announced huge slashes in war contracts.

"This total of unemployment," he added, "is expected to rise to five million within three months; perhaps to eight million before next spring. . ."

Another Government source was not so optimistic and predicted 10 million out of work by next Christmas.

Snyder conceded that the Army was slashing purchases of aircraft and weapons by 94 to 100 percent, that the Navy had cancelled shipbuilding contracts totaling one and a half billion dollars.

BUYING DROPS

He added that all buying of construction, railway, telephone and telegraph equipment would cease immediately, with gasoline purchases dropping 44 percent, textile items 75 percent, and Army cancellations ending 99 percent of its steel and 98 percent of its copper and aluminum consumption.

The army of unemployed war workers will be augmented by an army of returned veterans. Snyder said that demobilization from the armed services will return at least seven million men to civilian life within a year.

Immediately following victory, news of tremendous lay-offs and enforced vacations began coming in from all parts of the country.

In Chicago alone war contracts totaling two billion dollars were cancelled and three plants employing 55,000 were due for immediate shutdown.

Cutbacks threw 130,000 persons out of employment at Cleveland, while the CIO, the War Manpower Commission and management agreed that 300,000 were off the payrolls at Detroit, heart of the arsenal for democracy.

The CIO NEWS this week in cooperation with Federated Press sent wires throughout the country to get as accurate a picture as possible of the extent of unemployment, locality by locality. Here it is:

300,000 OFF IN DETROIT

DETROIT—300,000 unemployed, Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO Auto Workers, Director Romney of the Automotive Council and War Manpower Director Cushman agree. Ford laid off 15,000 and is asking as many employes as possible to take vacations. The Murray and Packard Corps., have greatly reduced operations within the past two months with many layoffs resulting.

ST. LOUIS—Army on day after Japanese surrender cancelled quarter billion dollars in orders in 77 plants in Missouri, Arkansas and Illinois, with jobless in St. Louis alone expected to be 60,000 within a few days.

The Air Technical Service Command cancelled 120 contracts which will also throw thousands out of work. Among the plants affected in St. Louis were Chevrolet Shell, Chevrolet Motors, Lincoln Engineering, Western Cartridge, Wagner Electric and Monsanto Cartridge.

The CIO Council charged that the much-publicized labor management committee has been turned into a "do nothing management committee," with only 20 percent of a 63 million public works bond issue providing 1,600 jobs allocated. The Council's proposal of a $300 million bond issue to take care of a broad slum clearance and public works program to provide 40,000 jobs has been ignored.

LOS ANGELES—Aviation plants expected to be heavily hit by Army plane contract cancellations. Community has made no plans to care of the unemployed.

NEW ORLEANS—Shipyards will be hard hit by ship contract cancellations. One plant employing 20,000 is scheduled to shut down completely within 30 days.

PHILADELPHIA—This city recovered from celebration of victory over Japan to face lay-off jitters with 19,000 at the Navy shipyard compelled to take "automatic leaves" and an estimated 10,000 being forced to take accrued vacations. The Navy yard ordinarily employs 60,000 workers.

BOSTON—A War Manpower Commission estimate placed the number of unemployed war workers at between 150,000 and 200,000. Fifty thousand were already out of work at shipyards at Hingham, Fore River and South Boston, Mass.; Providence, R. I., Bath and Portland, Maine. What jobs were available were in service industries, textile mills and other consumer goods plants at sharp reductions in pay.

CHICAGO—Faced with cancellation of 800 million dollars worth of contracts and the expected lay-off of 300,000 war workers this week, the CIO will hold a rally in the Coliseum Monday evening, August 20.

Hardest hit would be members of the CIO Electrical Radio and Machine Workers, and stewards from 65 UE plants held a meeting to conduct a survey and plan remedial action.

Also among the heavy sufferers in the army contract cancellations were the CIO Auto Workers with 50,000 expected to be thrown out of work at Dodge, Bendix, Buick, Douglas Aircraft and Pressed Steel Car. Partial shutdowns and complete closing at Ford Motor and Studebaker had thrown 16,000 on the street. Most workers laid off have been forced to take jobs at much lower pay.

ENTIRE LOCAL OUT

SAN FRANCISCO—CIO expected to turn to political action to take care of displaced workers. Keystone Copper mine at Angels' Camp closed down completely, throwing entire Mine, Mill and Smelters local out of work. Workers in steel industry, seamen and longshoremen had not been affected by lay-offs early this week. Ship scalers laid off by Navy cutbacks obtained other jobs.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Twenty-four thousand were expected momentarily to be out of work at the Bell Aircraft Plant at Marietta, outside of this city. Three thousand lost their jobs since V-E Day, and for several days the plant, making B-29s, was operating on a 40-hour week. Shifts had been working 60 hours and more.

Full Text of CIO Stand On Reconversion Policy

The following resolutions were passed unanimously at a meeting of the CIO Natl. Executive Officers and Vice-Presidents at Washington, D. C., Aug. 16

Wages And Legislation

The day of final Victory has come. Our nation must now turn its full attention and devote its energies—so intensively geared for war—to peace.

The necessary and immediate cutback of war orders leaves a terrifying vacuum in its wake. It is conceded that millions of workers will be immediately laid off; hours of work for those remaining employed will be drastically curtailed with resulting loss in weekly earnings; work in civilian production may frequently net lower earnings than the same employes have previously received in war work.

Many employers, determined to continue their vendetta against trade unions, will endeavor to provoke labor into strike action and thereby place at labor's doorstep the responsibility for the difficulties which may arise in the near future.

All this bodes ill for our reconversion and postwar economy unless with a singleness of purpose immediate and concrete steps are taken by labor, management and the government.

The foundation, upon which the American people desire to build their future, was laid by President Roosevelt in his historic Economic Bill of Rights. This reflects the aspiration of our people. Nothing less will suffice. It means jobs for all with steadily increasing wages, decent homes, health and education facilities for all, full opportunity to all businessmen to compete in a free market and a decent return to farmers.

1) Full production and full employment for reconversion and postwar rest primarily upon the purchasing power of the American people. This is now threatened through loss of weekly earnings, return to civilian production with lower rates of pay and unemployment. The President should by Executive Order direct an immediate revision of our national wage policy to provide for a substantial increase in basic wage rates for American workers. All wage cuts of any description or through whatever guise must be combatted and prevented. The minimum wage should be immediately raised to 65 cents per hour.

2) Effective price control must be continued to prevent inflation. Now, more than ever, it is essential that profiteering be curbed. Control of prices must not be weakened. Demagogic appeals by profiteers for elimination of controls should be exposed and their true design revealed as but attempts to gouge the American public. The extortionate profits which corporations have amassed during the war reflect the increasing labor efficiency and productivity resulting in decreased costs and demonstrate the absence of any justification for increases in the cost of living.

3) Congress should be quickly convened in order to enact legislation covering the following:

(a) Provision for additional federal payments to enable unemployment compensation payments to be increased to $25 per week for 26 weeks. Unemployment compensation should also be made available to federal employes, maritime workers, and others who are not now protected under existing law.

(b) The Pepper amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide for a minimum wage of 65 cents an hour with permission for industry committees to establish by specific industries a minimum wage of 75 cents per hour.

(c) Creating a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee that will abolish in industry all discriminatory practices based on race, creed, color or nationality.

(d) The Wagner-Murray-Dingell Social Security amendments to improve old-age pensions, federalize unemployment compensation, and establish a basis for health insurance.

(e) The Murray-Patman full employment bill which recognizes the obligation of the government to assure full employment and full production.

(f) Amendments of the G. I. Bill of Rights to provide for increased mustering out pay, increased advances for education and business opportunities, and greater protection and facilities for the disabled veterans.

(g) Drastic revision of tax legislation to provide for relief to low income groups by way of increased exemptions for married couples and increased credits for dependents, elimination of taxes on low incomes, extension of the benefits of the carry-back to individuals similar to those now enjoyed by corporations, and special relief for small business to encourage the maximum initiative for the resumption of peace-time production.

4) The objective of full production and full employment can only be achieved through the unified efforts of labor, management and government. Industrial strife should be avoided and certainly not provoked.

But the problem of industrial disputes cannot be solved merely through the creation of machinery to handle such disputes. With the enactment and implementation of a program, designed to meet the needs of the people and assuring an expanding economy with full production and full employment, we can achieve industrial accord.

The CIO therefore offers these recommendations: The program herein described should be made the basis of immediate action by Congress and the President of the United States. On this basis, a labor-management conference can make a substantial contribution by dealing with problems of mutual concern and formulating additional suggested appropriate action to be taken either by labor and management or by government.

Finally, in order that during the immediate reconversion period there may be available to labor and management the necessary machinery to dispose of disputes unresolved through collective bargaining, the National War Labor Board should be temporarily continued.

Collective Bargaining

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has been authorized to communicate this resolution to all affiliated bodies advising them that the resolution will be the statement of national policy as expressed by the CIO Vice Presidents at their meeting.

OBSERVANCE OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS

WHEREAS, (1) The foremost objective of labor unions is to establish collective bargaining relations between labor and employers and that understandings arrived at with regard to wages, hours and conditions of employment be embodied in written, signed agreements for a definite term.

(2) Consistent with labor's desire for industrial peace, collective bargaining agreements customarily provide that for the life thereof there shall be no strikes or stoppages of work and that all grievances arising thereunder shall be adjusted under the grievance machinery.

(3 These collective bargaining agreements which thus assure industrial peace for their duration should furnish a very healthy and stabilizing influnece during our reconversion and postwar periods; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That it is the unshakable policy of the CIO and its affiliated organizations to adhere to their contractual obligations in letter and in spirit.

The CIO also calls upon employers who have such agreements with labor unions to equally adhere to their contractual obligations and not endeavor in any way to provoke their employes by violating their agreements and thereby hope to encourage strikes and stoppages.

An equal determination on the part of labor and management to comply with collective bargaining agreements should establish a firm basis for swift and peaceful reconversion to full civilian production and employment.

Unemployment Compensation

With the open predictions of government agencies that as a result of drastic cancellations of war contracts there will be several millions of workers unemployed within the next few weeks, it becomes extremely important to guard against any practices within the several States which are designed to deprive unemployed workers of their rightful claims to unemployment compensation.

There is one such outstanding practice of a most vicious nature.

Under unemployment compensation statutes, an unemployed worker must first register for employment before qualifying for unemployment compensation. He is disqualified from receiving such compensation when he refuses to accept another job which is construed to be suitable employment.

In many States the U. S. Employment Service, to which has been delegated the authority of referring registered workers to available jobs, has insisted that these unemployed workers accept jobs at drastically lower wages than they have been receiving heretofore. This is done even though the new job is one that does not utilize the skills of the unemployed worker.

In many cases skilled workers who have been receiving $1 or more an hour in their past work, are being referred to unskilled jobs paying 50c an hour. Upon their refusal to accept this vicious wage cut, the workers are denied any unemployment compensation. Frequently the unemployment compensation benefits to which these workers would be entitled are in excess of what they would earn at this substantial wage.

We condemn this practice as an abominable system of wage cutting and a protection of the very substandard wages which threaten the expanding economy that all Americans seek for our postwar period. Reports from the Office of War Mobilization and other government officials have repeatedly proclaimed a determination to maintain a high level of mass purchasing power and to strive for steadily increasing wages to accomplish that objective.

Yet the first concrete problem which arises is solved through wage cuts and support for substandard wages.

We therefore call upon the United States Employment Service, now under the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission, to refuse to refer men to jobs at lower wages than they have previously enjoyed or to jobs which will not utilize the employes' skills in full.

We also call upon all State CIO Industrial Union Councils to bring this matter forceably to the attention of the Unemployment Compensation Divisions in their respective States and demand the discontinuance of this practice where it is now in vogue and to take all steps necessary to protect the unemployed workers in their claims for unemployment compensation.

Unemployment Benefits—How To Get Them

If you're temporarily out of work, here are some handy hints on your unemployment compensation rights and how to get benefits. The suggestions are from the Natl. Edition of First Aid in Layoffs, Publication No. 123 of the CIO Education & Research Dept. The information applies generally in most states. To be sure of your rights, check your state law carefully too!

Here are things to look out for in all or most states:

Register at once. Go to the nearest public employment office as soon as you lose your job. Register for work and file a claim right away even if you are in doubt whether you are eligible for benefits. If you delay, you may lose benefits.

Part-time benefits. If on an old or a new job you are given only part-time work, file a claim for partial unemployment benefits.

You are entitled to benefits if you have recently worked long enough in covered employment and are now out of a job and able and willing to work. "Covered employment" includes most work in factories or other industries.

You are not entitled to benefits if you do not file a claim and register each week as being able and willing to work.

You may lose some or all of your benefits if you quit your job voluntarily for personal reasons or for reasons not connected with the job, or if you are discharged for cause. The state laws on these matters differ widely and some are very bad. That is one reason why a national system is needed.

You may lose some or all of your benefits if you turn down a job. If you are offered a job you feel you cannot accept, the way you answer may needlessly lose your benefit checks. In order to make clear that you are willing to work, don't refuse to be interviewed for the job, but go and find out the facts. Know your rights, and if you find the job is unsuitable, be sure to explain your refusal in terms that will insofar as possible protect your benefit rights. The distance from the job, health, previous work history, and perhaps family circumstances may be taken into account by state agencies in making rulings on whether refusal of a job means loss of benefits.

The Federal Social Security Act declares that you can turn down a job and still get benefits: (A) if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute; (B) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality; (C) if as a condition of being employed the individual would be required to join a company union or to resign or refrain from joining any bona fide labor organization.

If you are refused benefits, you have the right to appeal but you must act within a few days (usually 5 to 10 days) after the agency's statement of your benefit rights is delivered or mailed to you. Go to the public employment office and ask to have your case reviewed as the law provides. You may appeal not only refusal of benefits but other rulings on your benefit rights.

The amount of the benefit check you receive is determined by your past earnings, but cannot be more than a certain maximum which in very few states is more than $20 a week. Many states have even lower maximums.

The number of weeks for which benefits are paid also depends on the state law. The maximum duration in only a few states is more than 20 weeks, and may be less.

If you are a veteran, you get special benefits: $20 a week for up to 52 weeks. Veterans should read the CIO War Relief Handbook, "CIO Veterans' Guide."

If you move to another state, you may file a claim for benefits from the state in which you worked by applying at the public employment office nearest your new home.

CIO Says:

Up Wages, Guarantee Jobs to Clinch Victory

By FRED d'AVILA

THE CIO this week put forward a program calling for wage increases and legislation to ease the shock of conversion to a peacetime economy, as millions of workers faced immediate loss of jobs.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, at a press conference following a meeting of CIO Executive Officers and Vice-Presidents at Washington, D. C., said that 80 percent of CIO contracts contain clauses allowing for reopening of wage discussions if national wage policy changes.

With President Truman announcing that Natl. War Labor Board wage restrictions have been eased, Murray said that CIO unions with such clauses in their contracts would probably ask for pay boosts.

President Truman authorized the WLB "to release proposed voluntary wage increases from the necessity of approval upon condition that they will not be used in whole or in part as the basis for seeking an increase in price ceilings."

He said that wage increases requiring price increases must be continued to be passed on by the WLB and approved by the Director of Economic Stabilization.

Truman, in a new Executive Order, gave the WLB authority to "approve or direct increases which are necessary to aid in the effective transition to a peacetime economy," including "maladjustments and inequities" in wage rates.

The new policy is expected to release hundreds of "Form 10" cases which have sought voluntary wage increases but have been held up because they violated the Little Steel Formula holding increases to a rigid 15 percent over January, 1941, rates.

Truman asked employers and labor to continue voluntary compliance with WLB directives, pending eventual abolition of the WLB and assumption of its conciliation and arbitration functions by the Dept. of Labor. Temporary continuance of the WLB was approved by the CIO officers.

"It is conceded," they said, "that millions of workers will be immediately laid off; hours of work for those remaining employed will be drastically curtailed with resulting loss in weekly earnings; work in civilian production may frequently net lower earnings than the same employes have previously received in war work."

1. An Executive Order by the President directing an immediate revision of national wage policy to provide for substantial increase in basic wage rates. "All wage cuts of any description or through whatever guise must be combatted and prevented. The minimum wage should be immediately raised to 65 cents an hour."

2. Effective price control to prevent inflation and curb profiteering.

3. Quick return of Congress to pass legislation providing for: Unemployment compensation up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, and extension of coverage to workers not now protected; the Pepper amendment to the Wage-Hour law upping the minimum to 65 cents; a permanent FEPC; the Wagner-Murray-Dingell social security amendments; the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill; increased benefits under the GI Bill of Rights; drastic revision of tax legislation to ease the burden on low income earners and to give relief to small business.

"With the enactment and implementation of a program designed to meet the needs of the people and assuring an expanding economy with full production and full employment, we can achieve industrial accord," the CIO officers stated.

Referring then to the conference to be called by President Truman for discussion of industrial peace, the CIO officers declared:

"On this basis, a labor-management conference can make a substantial contribution by dealing with problems of mutual concern and formulating additional suggested appropriate action to be taken either by labor and management or by government."

Meanwhile, the CIO was preparing testimony for hearings on the Full Employment Bill, called by Senator Wagner for August 21.

Senator George, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, announced that hearings will begin August 29 on the CIO's and President Truman's recommendation for up to $25 a week unemployment compensation for 26 weeks and extension of coverage to workers not now protected.

Pledge Contract Observance

"IT is the unshakeable policy of the CIO and its affiliated organizations to adhere to their contractual obligations in letter and in spirit," according to a resolution unanimously adopted this week by the CIO Executive Officers and Vice-Presidents.

Meeting in Washington at the call of President Murray, the CIO heads declared in the statement, which outlined national CIO policy:

"The CIO calls upon employers who have agreements with labor unions to equally adhere to their contractual obligations and not endeavor in any way to provoke their employes by violating their agreements and thereby hope to encourage strikes and stoppages."

The CIO pointed out that collective bargaining agreements customarily provide that for the life thereof there shall be no strikes or stoppages of work and that all grievances shall be adjusted under grievance machinery.

"These collective bargaining agreements, which thus assure industrial peace for their duration, should furnish a very healthy and stabilizing influence during our reconversion and postwar periods," the CIO said.

In a press conference at which the statement was issued, President Murray said:

"I know of no better way to avert strikes during the reconversion period than by the institution of collective bargaining in American industry with the proper machinery incorporated for the settlement of disputes."

Hit 'Compenstion' Pay Cuts

A demand that the U. S. Employment Service cease acting as a wage cutting agency was made this week by the CIO Executive Officers and Vice-Presidents, meeting in Washington at the call of Pres. Philip Murray.

The CIO charged that in many states the USES is referring unemployed workers to jobs at drastically lower pay that do not utilize their skills, and that refusal to accept these jobs results in denial of unemployment compensation.

"In many cases," said the CIO, "skilled workers who have been receiving $1 or more an hour in their past work, are being referred to unskilled jobs paying 50 cents an hour. Upon their refusal to accept this vicious wage cut, the workers are denied any unemployment compensation.

"Frequently the unemployment compensation benefits to which these workers would be entitled are in excess of what they would earn at this substandard wage."

The CIO officers condemned this practice as "an abominable system of wage cutting and a protection of the very substandard wages which threaten the expanding economy that all Americans seek for our postwar period."

All state CIO Councils were requested to bring the matter forcibly to the attention of their unemployment compensation divisions and to demand discontinuance of the wage cutting practice.

Victory and the Tasks Ahead

By PHILIP MURRAY

The six million members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations—like all other Americans—welcome with joyous relief the announcement of victory over the Japanese war makers.

The millions of mothers, fathers, wives and sweethearts of CIO men serving in the armed forces take great pride in the tremendous accomplishments of all our fighting men. They are proud, too, of the contributions made by workers at home who turned out the weapons that our fighters and their Allies needed to crush both the Nazis and the Japanese.

Now, when the horrible destruction of war is vividly etched in the minds of the peoples of the world, is the time to make certain that we build a sound peace.

The development and use of the atomic bomb make war's destructiveness almost unimaginable. If we are to keep our homes, our cities, our very civilization, we must insist on international control of this force for the benefit—and not the extermination—of mankind.

The solid war unity that has been steadily building among the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China must be carefully nurtured and extended even further in the years ahead.

And within our borders, we must continue to build our own democracy—as a contribution to the general welfare and full employment of all Americans, and as a guarantee that our government will cooperate with all other peace-loving nations to build a world free from war, free from want, and free from insecurity.

No Time for Piddling Around

Estimates that 10 million workers may be unemployed by Christmas and that millions of demobilized servicemen will be back home seeking jobs make serious reading for all but the callous few who can overlook the fact that a lot of people in this country may suffer from irregular eating.

The American people did not fight this war for the privilege of standing in bread lines. They have the right to expect that American business—and if necessary, American government—will guarantee jobs to all those willing and able to work.

Speaking for six million Americans and their families, the CIO has put forward a program which will help to guarantee jobs so that the "terrifying vacuum" left by cutbacks will be rapidly filled.

The program calls for an immediate rise in wages, a ban against wage cuts, a 65 cents an hour minimum wage, effective price control, unemployment compensation up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to assure equal job rights for minorities, the Murray-Patman full employment bill, improvements of the Social Security law and the GI Bill of Rights, and easing of the tax burden on low income groups and on small business.

The CIO has asked President Truman and Congress to act on this program.

The CIO has asked management to bargain in good faith and to shun action which in any way would provoke employes by the violation of collective bargaining contracts.

The CIO has put forward these proposals in good faith, and has said for itself that "it is the unshakeable policy of the CIO and its affiliated organizations to adhere to their contractual obligations in letter and spirit."

CIO President Murray has pointed out that CIO collective bargaining agreements, most of which provide for industrial peace during their existence, furnish a healthy and stabilizing influence during the reconversion period.

CIO has done its part. It is the job of business, the Adminitsration and Congress to do likewise. There's no time for piddling!

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

Len De Caux this week writes from Hawaii on his way to visit Pacific war fronts with other labor editors.

HAWAII, crossroads of the Pacific, has long been halfway house between home and the battlefronts, for hundreds of thousands of westward-moving Americans.

With the tide about to turn eastward, Hawaii is now their halfway house between soldiering and civilian life, and the minds of the GI's here are poised halfway between the two.

★ ★ ★

Someone once remarked that "if all the movies stars were laid end to end on Waikiki beach, I wouldn't be surprised." And indeed, Hawaii suggests a Hollywood dream of heaven on earth.

Warm sunny days the year around, cooled by gentle breezes, shady trees and brief showers through sunshine. Brilliantly star-studded nights. Green cloud-crowned mountains and breath-catching scenery. Ocean all around in every shade of blue. A paradise for bathers, lovers and the lazy.

A handsome, kindly people, easy-going and laughter-loving, made up of every race. Delicious tropical fruits. Virgin nature with all the comforts of civilization at hand. The kind of place where a lucky few may escape from the pressures and strains of workaday life.

But the GIs here are not impressed by their glimpses of this escapists' paradise. Their heaven on earth is Hometown, USA.

Hawaii to them suggests army life, forced absence from home, and khaki, khaki everywhere with not a dame to date—or hardly any.

They'll tell you what's wrong with Hawaii without being asked. The climate is monotonous, they crave winter as well as summer. Waikiki Beach is a flop, there's so little sand and the stones bruise your feet. And so on.

★ ★ ★

Young, vigorous and practical, these Americans indulge in few lazy dreams. Their postwar planning is for home and family, civilian freedoms, and an active life of interesting work. Mechanical interests predominate in these sons of a machine age and mechanized war.

There are few self-kidders of the Horatio Alger school. Army surveys show the great majority expect to have to work for wages, though about half would prefer other jobs than those they left.

They want a chance to get ahead, certainly, but their immediate and chief concern is for steady jobs at decent wages and under decent conditions.

★ ★ ★

Actually, the CIO is the chief agency working for everything that most GIs want most, but most of them don't know it.

One wounded man, before the war a non-union textile machinery worker, told me, "Hell, we'll all be in the union after this war." But others are not so sure.

There are many thousands without previous industrial or union experience whose minds are a clean slate so far as unionism is concerned, or a slate smudged with anti-labor propaganda.

There are many previous unionists, too, long out of touch with their unions and blaming them for lack of interest, who are doubtful and uneasy on labor questions.

But here in Hawaii's many huge military establishments, there are also hundreds of CIO servicemen who cherish and promote the CIO program with all the zeal of volunteer organizers.

These CIO GI's and civilian unionists here report that most servicemen with anti-labor prejudices are more lacking in information than anything else. They soon recognize how poisoned are such sources of their prejudices as the Hearst press, and are greatly encouraged to get the real dope on the CIO from people who know.

The big new Labor Canteen, at this halfway house for countless returning servicemen, can do so much for so many along these lines at such a critical time in their thinking that CIO'ers here can't understand why more support is not forthcoming from unions on the U.S. mainland. (Address P.O. Box 356, Honolulu).

The CIO faces one of its greatest challenges to win the support of millions of returning GI's. Its whole program is made to order for them. It is the agency doing most to avert what they dread most, unemployment, low wages and another war. It is also the agency doing most to create the conditions and oppotrunities they most desire. But most of them are "from Missouri" and have to be shown.

FRANKENSTEEN FOR MAYOR!

The Inside Story On Detroit Victory

By IRVING RICHTER

UAW-CIO Washington Legislative Representative

I heard that remark from a Ford worker in Detroit after England's great Labor Party victory. "I hear that comment everywhere in Ford now," the worker added, "even from guys who never cared about politics."

It wasn't just Detroit workers who saw their municipal elections differently after the British victory. Professional people, small businessmen and clerks responded in the same way. All groups rallied behind Vice-Pres. Richard T. Frankensteen, of the CIO United Auto Workers, and his slate. And the British victory was undoubtedly a big factor in doubling the estimated umber of votes. Until election Day, August 7, estimates ranged from 75,000 to 120,000. The actual vote was over 200,000.

LISTENING TO THE PEOPLE'S VERDICT which gave him 82,936 votes and first place in the Detroit primary election for mayor are UAW-CIIO Vice-Pres. Richard T. Frankensteen and his wife. Incumbent Mayor Jeffries got only 68,754.

But the British elections helped merely to sharpen issues which were already sharp in Detroit.

Frankensteen, who ran first in the mayoralty primary, months before he entered the race publicly exposed the auto industry leaders as plotting to destroy organized labor. He made public a speech of the chief economist of the Chrysler Corp., John W. Scoville, which was the key to thinking of the top command of Detroit's auto manufacturers. Scoville said:

"If you believe in economic freedom and competition, then you will be opposed to collective bargaining. . . . As industrial turmoil increases, more and more people will see the evils generated by collective bargaining, and we should look forward to the time when all federal labor laws will be repealed."

During the campaign Frankensteen stressed the fact that the auto manufacturers had refused to sign the Labor-Management Charter because they preferred "turmoil" and strikes. Yet at all times Frankensteen made it clear that he was not running as a labor candidate. While proudly admitting his labor background and his labor support, he promised that he would be a mayor for all of Detroit.

Community Issues

He stressed local community issues such as housing, taxes, parks, trash removal and transportation. But he tied these issues in with the basic issue of jobs. The chief campaign slogan of Frankensteen and the labor-supported candidates for the Common Council was:

As in Great Britain, the labor-supported slate in Detroit faced a campaign of red-baiting and threats of "labor dictatorship." They faced two additional issues which fill loom even larger in the final election — Jew-baiting and Negro-baiting.

Those who count on "industrial turmoil" to destroy the union shop and turn the clock back in Detroit are stirring up strife among union members of different racial, religious and national origins.

During the campaign they told home owners that the labor candidate would undermine their property by public housing programs and particularly public housing for Negroes.

They whispered among the large Polish-American population that Frankensteen was anti-Catholic. In the stronghold of the Ku Klux Klan, they whispered that Frankensteen was a Jew, and also that he was a Catholic.

Whispers Nailed

In one of his first speeches Frankensteen nailed the whispering campaign about his religion. On June 22, over Station WXYZ, he said:

"This campaign has hardly gotten under way, yet an insidious, underground conspiracy of whispering is already launched. Religious hatreds are being stirred up . . . and this, mind you, at a time when thousands of our boys are fighting and dying in defense of tolerance.

"Mussolini is dead. Hitler is dead or in hiding. These two chief exponents of religious hatreds—they and all their bloody-handed minions—have paid the price of their intolerance.

"Is it not a calamity and a disgrace that, while our boys die to banish such evils abroad, we find them sprouting like poisonous weeds here at home?"

In his subsequent addresses he developed a 13-point program for the City of Detroit. While Mayor Jeffries had publicly announced that there was no unemployment program, the first sentence in Frankensteen's program was: "Maintain and create jobs for all."

He cited Senator Wagner's statement that Federal action on jobs "is ineffective unless integrated with the plans of state and local governments."

His campaign literature included letters to Frankensteen from the late President Roosevelt and from Senator James E. Murray showing that Frankensteen had been active in the fight for full employment long before he made it a campaign issue.

Job security, industrial peace, and a constructive community program! These were the people's chief problems. And Frankensteen and the three labor-supported candidates for Councilmen—George Edwards, Tracy Doll and Charles Hill — gave straightforward answers.

The League of Women Voters asked all the candidates to answer a series of basic community questions. Jeffries and his group ducked the issues.

Even while trying to duck, Jeffries exposed himself as looking to the past for solution of Detroit's pressing problems. Thus, the League of Women Voters quoted him as being "not necessarily" in favor of public housing for low income families, and as saying "maybe private industry will do the job itself."

When asked whether municipal employes had the right to organize, he said he believed in that right. But when asked if they had the right to affiliate with labor unions, he said: "To some extent in some departments."

Labor's candidates personified the unity which they stressed in their campaign. They include a serviceman, a union man, a Negro.

George Edwards, on leave from the Council, is in active service as a Navy lieutenant. He won top place on the list of 18 nominated to the Council, despite his inability to campaign.

Cleric in Ninth Place

The Rev. Charles A. Hill, a Negro, who won ninth place, has a 20-year record as a minister in Detroit and has been active in many community services.

Tracy Doll, eleventh place winner, has long been a leader in the and is a member of Hudson Local 154, UAW-CIO.

The Detroit primary is run on a non-partisan basis. The 18 Common Council nominees who receive the highest votes fight it out in November for the nine places in the Council. Jeffries and Frankensteen, as the two highest of the mayoralty candidates, enter the November race.

There was no political or party machine behind labor's candidate. Jeffries had the Republican machine working for him in the neighborhoods. The Democratic party as such showed little activity, even though prominent individual Democrats have supported the labor group.

Reasons for Victory

The large outpouring of votes was due to several factors:

1. The incredibly active personal campaign made by Frankensteen, who averaged at least ten speeches a day, seven days a week

2. The work of the Wayne County CIO-PAC.

3. The Wayne County CIO Industrial Union Council.

4. The Detroit Women for Frankensteen, an independent committee.

5. The Michigan Citizens' Committee, also independent, which endorsed the three labor candidates and three other Councilmen.

6. A businessmen's committee.

7. Various Negro committees.

8. The activity of local unions.

THE JOB AHEAD

Detroit is one of the strongholds, if not the chief center of activity, for the American fascist movement. The leading financial support for the "Nationalists" is in Detroit. Their chief candidate for the American fuehrer, Gerald L. K. Smith, has his headquarters there. Father Coughlin's Royal Oak business is booming again. The successor to the Ku Klux Klan, the United Sons of America, is busy organizing another race riot in Detroit. They are working in the plants and are even trying to sign up CIO shop stewards by playing on racial and religious prejudices.

The "Mothers" groups, who have been so active on behalf of a negotiated peace with the Nazis and the Japanese, have their headquarters in Detroit.

There is no question that these anti-labor groups will now more actively promote religious and racial bitterness in their campaign to destroy organized labor and institute fascism. Their hate sheets have already mentioned Detroit's mayoralty race as a testing ground.

These groups are receiving generous funds from the top automobile manufacturers, who fought Roosevelt and now fight Frankensteen, and who recently launched the propaganda campaign against full employment as threatening our "freedom."

Labor's candidates in Detroit are continuing to make full employment their Number One issue. As the war draws to a close, the people of Detroit again see the spectre of unemployment. And not only the workers!

Frankensteen pointed out that "the Forgotten Men of 1945—the small businessmen" — are faced with the same fear of economic insecurity. "Providing jobs at decent wages . . . is not the problem of any one group alone—it is the greatest challenge to community effort Detroit has ever faced. Properly and naturally, the Mayor of Detroit should be the spark plug of such effort."

The vast majority of Detroit's residents would benefit from Frankensteen's program. They would suffer under the program of Jeffries and his supporters.

Much at Stake

The stakes are big. The 1946 elections in Michigan will include not only the 17 Congressional Districts, but a contest for Arthur Vandenberg's seat in the Senate.

Michigan already has the largest collection of Congressmen who follow an out and out fascist program—Hoffman, Bradley, Woodruff, Shafer, Dondero. It has just elected one of the few fighting liberals in Congress, Frank Hook, of Iron Mountain.

After the 1946 election, it will send to Washington either more Hoffmans or more Hooks. It will have either a Governor who will carry on the great liberal tradition of Frank Murphy or a Governor modeled after the present conservative, Harry Kelly.

Finally, labor's success in the Detroit primaries, if it is repeated in the final elections, will serve as a great stimulus to progressive political action all over the United States.

The Ford worker was right. If they can do it in England, we can do it here. The Detroit primary victory showed the way.

1 President Philip Murray officially accepted the invitation extended by Chairman Vassili Kuznetsov to send an official delegation to visit the Soviet Union "at the earliest possible date." Commenting on the Soviet invitation, Mr. Murray said: "Extremely interesting information has been exchanged and a firm basis has been laid for strengthening and cementing the relations between organized labor of the United States and of the Soviet Union. This friendship between the working people of these two important nations would be the greatest assurance for a durable and lasting peace which is the aspiration of the common people throughout the world." Above, left to right, are: Nikolai Gaissenok, of the Russian shipbuilders union; Claudia Orlovo from a sewing factory committee; Vassili Kuznetsov, chairman of the Russian trade unions; Alex Stepanov of their wages division; Ivan Chevtaev, of the woodworkers union, and Philip Murray.

2 The Russian trade unionists visited Philip Murray in Atlantic City where the Steelworkers' executive board was in session. Mr. Murray took the visitors on a tour of the Atlantic City boardwalk, showed them the sights of America's seaside resort.

3 In New York Chairman Sidney Hillman of CIO's PAC declared that "the visit of our Soviet friends to this country is a symbol of the new working partnership which we have established with our brother trade unionists of other lands."

4 In Detroit Auto Workers President R. J. Thomas welcomed Vassili Kuznetsov and the Soviet delegates. The Russian chairman had worked at Ford's in 1932. John R. Gibson, newly appointed assistant secretary of the Labor Dept., shakes his hand.

5 The Russian trade union guests toured the Ford plant. Here they watch the Ford cars coming off the last assembly line. It was like coming home again to the chairman of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, for he had worked at Ford's as well as in Pittsburgh. He was sent here by his government to study American methods. He also attended classes at Carnegie Tech. "I saw that the workers at Ford's had no protection at all. They had no union in those days. And now I see that they are 100% organized. It is a wonderful thing the CIO has done. The American people should be proud of this splendid organization," said Vassili Kuznetsov. "I am deeply impressed with the progressive character of the CIO and am proud to have been a guest in your great country."

The basis of all their thinking was friendship. The peace of the world depended on it. Mrs. Roosevelt expressed it well: "We are a great producing nation, and we need to have the people all over the world steadily rising in their standard of living, because the more they want, the greater help we can get in achieving our desires. The Russians have done extraordinary things in the last 25 years. We must extend to them the hand of friendship; accept our responsibilities, and act with integrity and generosity as the people of a great nation."

Their guide through the key industrial cities selected for their visits was a former U. S. Congressman, and Major in the U. S. Army, at present State Senator from Pennsylvania, Elmer Holland. In each city the unions showed them plants. And there were always questions, questions, questions—and answers to be remembered.

They were overawed by the richness of our country. "You have so much, so much of everything. So many lights, so many cars, so many small houses," Iraida Shostak, the little English teacher from Omsk, Siberia, said.

"I have lived in your country, and I feel at home among your people," Vassili Kuznetsov explained. "You have the capacity to give your people so much. We are inspired by your example to build our industry to greater productivity."

As they left they were assured by CIO's president, Philip Murray, that an official delegation would come soon to their country—to visit with their people, to look at their industry, and that the visit begun in fraternal friendship between the trade unions of Russia and the CIO would be a symbol of the friendship of the people of "our two great nations."

A meeting was held on August 9 in Atlanta, Georgia, of CIO regional directors and international representatives in the Southern States. The writer presided. Resolutions were adopted declaring for fullest cooperation in effectuating organizing programs and PAC. Thomas Burns, assistant to the chairman, PAC-CIO, also addressed the meeting as well as CIO Regional Director Paul R. Christopher.

Brother Christopher has been assigned as national PAC director in the South as well as CIO national representative.

We are looking forward to greater activities throughout the Southern area.

PEACE HAS COME—THANK GOD! Members of Congress are sojourning on vacation and the questions of human concern remain unsettled; full employment, unemployment insurance and many other benefits to meet the post-war conditions and benefit the nation still remain to be acted upon.

President Murray called a meeting of the CIO vice presidents for Thursday, August 16, for the purpose of dealing with the conditions that V-J Day has brought. To protect the workers of America and America itself we must continue on organizing the unorganized and activizing them so that the Congress will be made of men and women that place human rights first.

Agency Workers Ask To Stay With U.S.

Answers to a questionnaire submitted by the CIO United Federal Workers to War Production Board employes indicate that the great majority of Federal employes in war agencies want to continue working in Washington for the government now that the war is over. The questionnaire was answered a short time before V-J Day.

The WPB employes, many of them not members of the union, also endorsed the UFWA's reconversion plan which would give present government workers and veterans absolute preference over outsiders for Federal jobs, as well as plans for unemployment compensation for Federal workers and protection of Negroes and other minority groups against discrimination in hiring for Federal jobs, and a request that Congress pass the Murray-Patman full employment bill.

Firm's Plea Rejected

The Natl. Labor Relations Board this week rejected the request of Marshall, Meadows, Inc., Auburn, N. Y., that it need not recognize the CIO Shoe Workers, who won an NLRB election at the plant last January. The union filed charges that the company refused to bargain.

Pennsy Rules Out 'Iced' GI Cars

The Pennsylvania R. R., which poses as the friend of servicemen and veterans, has issued orders that troop trains shall not be air-conditioned except where the windows cannot be opened, Natl. Director A. B. Martin of the CIO Railroad Workers charged this week.

While the shop craft workers on the Pennsylvania R. R. are deciding this month in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election whether they want the Railroad Workers to represent them, the Pennsylvania R. R. and its company union have been posing as the guardian of the rights of servicemen and veterans.

The Railroad Workers quoted a Pennsylvania R. R. order which stated that pump and motor blower fuses should be removed from the air-conditioning apparatus of cars, except where the window guides have been changed so that it is impossible to open the windows.

The CIO union also stated that the railroad is trying to force shop craft employe-veterans to go to company union meetings before getting their jobs back.

UE Set to Organize Rest of Sylvia Plants

Fresh from a victory in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election at the ninth plant of the Sylvia Electric Products Co., the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at a meeting in Buffalo, N. Y., this week set up a board to complete organization of 10,000 additional workers in 11 other plants of the concern.

Organizing, PAC Pushed in South

CIO regional directors, intl. representatives of CIO unions and officials of industrial union councils, at a conference at Atlanta, Ga., this week mapped a program for increased organizational work and for greater political activity.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, who presided, and Thomas Burns, assistant to PAC Chairman Hillman, announced the appointment of Paul Christopher, CIO regional director for Tennessee, as southern PAC representative and as national representative of the CIO in the South. Christopher will coordinate organizing and PAC work in nine states—Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi.

ENDORSE CIO PROGRAM

The conference endorsed the CIO program, including revision of the Little Steel formula, an annual wage, raising of minimum wages from 40 to 65 cents, and unemployment compensation up to $25 for 26 weeks, etc.

The confeernce mapped a four-point program:

1. To redouble CIO organizational work "through the coordinated and cooperative effort of all CIO directors and all representatives of national unions."

2. To organize immediately effective PAC programs to elect Congressmen "more conscious of the needs of the people than the present Congress as a whole has apparently been" and to urge President Truman to reconvene Congress immediately to act on reconversion legislation.

3. To demand that Congress and the Natl. War Labor Board end discrimination against southern workers. A resolution pointed out that while freight differentials discriminating against southern industry have been removed and while southern Congressmen get the same pay as those from the North, the WLB aided southern industrialists to maintain "low wage rates for southern workers doing the same kind of work as workers in the north."

4. To cooperate with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare "in its efforts to unite all progressive people for the purpose of achieving a prosperous, healthy, educated and democratic South." The CIO executive board endorsed the Southern Conference last November.

Pres. Clark Foreman and Margaret Fischer of the Southern Conference were among the speakers.

CIO Analyzes Ball, Chain Bill

The Ball-Burton-Hatch bill "is undoubtedly the most bald-faced and arrogant attack against labor ever launched in the history of this country," CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman and his assistant, Frank Donner, declare in a 43-page analysis of the proposed measure sent this week to regional directors, International unions and State and local IUCs. The analysis has a foreword by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The Ball and Chain Bill

What would happen to labor if the Ball-Burton-Hatch Act were made law is told by CIO General Counsel Pressman and his Assistant in the following article, last of a series.

By LEE PRESSMAN AND FRANK DONNER

UNLIKE the report of the fact-finding commission, the statute does not even provide for a limitation of 60 to 90 days during which the union is frozen, but simply states that the time limit upon the making of an award shall be specified in the order creating the arbitration board.

It is provided that the board can fix a date in the future when the award is to become effective.

No period is fixed during which the award is to be operative except that the statute provides that it is to be no longer than two years from the effective date of the award.

In the event that the award is set aside in the courts, then either side may start all over again, bring the case to the board and go through the same tortured cycle once more.

Thus it is possible under this statute for a union to surrender for a period of years its right to strike or engage in any form of collective activity. A union may be tied hand and foot not merely for 90 days but for a number of years.

It is a violation of this statute to strike, picket or boycott an employer at any time in which he asks for a conference or at any time a controversy is running through the mazes of the mediation, conciliation and arbitration apparatus set up by the act.

Again it is made a violation of the act for anyone "whether or not a party to a labor relations controversy to interfere or to incite or to support any interference with a performance by any person of duties imposed upon him by Section 3 or in concert to attempt to prevent the effectuation" of the purposes of the act.

This means that if an individual contributed to a strike fund, if he walked on a picket line, even if he were not a member of the union, if he organized a consumers committee to resist a wage cut, he and every member of the consumers committee might be in violation of the law.

This section reintroduces into the law ideas of conspiracy which were condemned as undemocratic 80 years ago. This section is a stick of dynamite which would blast the unity of labor with other progressive groups in the community, which would denounce as illegal any attempt to organize community sentiment for support against arbitrary and unfair employer conduct.

To understand Nazi labor law one does not have to read German. Simply read Section 12(a)(2) of the Ball-Burton-Hatch act.

A final section of the proposed bill underlines the vindictiveness of the sponsors of this measure. This section authorizes the board in its discretion either to refuse to recognize or refuse to certify any union which fails to perform the duties imposed on it by the statute.

Under this section the board could make a permanent outlaw, a pariah, of any labor organization, even though it is the freely chosen representative of the employes.

Under this section if a union sought an election the employer could easily stymie the entire proceeding by the simple device of charging it with a violation of the statute so that instead of being required to bargain with a certified bargaining agent he could obtain a judgment from the board outlawing it forever as an illegal organization.

Women Are Still Unaware Of Value of Ballots

By FAYE STEPHENSON
President, CIO Auxiliaries

AUGUST 26 is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Nineteenth Amendment to our United States Constitution which gave women the vote. The passage of the Amendment by Congress and its ratification by 36 of our states—the last one being Tennessee—was the result of a campaign begun at the first Women's Rights Convention in Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848.

Although the fight to obtain women's suffrage was a militant one led by a small minority of courageous women, the movement never involved the majority of women—working class women. So that even after the Nineteenth Amendment was ratified, political life in this country was not appreciably influenced by the women's vote.

Women are so isolated in their own homes they don't have much chance to talk to other people and achieve an understanding of political issues. They listen to the radio and absorb the poison which Fulton Lewis, Jr., and Lowell Thomas and others give off. If they read newspapers, they stand a very slight chance of getting a true picture.

That's one reason auxiliaries are so important to the labor movement. They get these isolated women together to discuss what is going on in the world and to bring them labor's viewpoint on public affairs. They also offer these women an opportunity to do something to build a better world.

WOMEN IN CONGRESS

In the 1944 elections, women began to wake up. Under the prodding of the CIO's Political Action Committee, they came out to the polls in larger numbers than ever before, and showed their will to continue the progressive Roosevelt Administration. And yet in a country where women are at present 60% of the voters, and where we have a Congress of 435 Congressmen and 96 Senators, there are exactly NINE women sent to Washington to represent all of the people.

This discrimination against women in public life is merely a reflection of the discrimination practiced against women in all phases of American life—including our own unions. The war has helped to bring a different attitude about. Women proved in industry after industry that they could hold men's jobs. They have proved in the WACS and WAVES and SPARS that they make excellent members of the armed forces.

The women of the resistance movements have shown that they could fight as well as the men, too. They have won full political rights as an immediate result.

The 25th anniversary of our right to vote is a good time for American women to make a pledge—a pledge to every man and woman who has died and risked death to preserve our democracy—a pledge that would read something like this:

"I solemnly vow that I will study the issues that are before our country; that I will take an active part in urging the passage of laws which will contribute toward peace, jobs and security for our people; that I will register now and vote in 1946 for men who will fight in Congress for the things you have fought for on the battlefield."

Asks U.S. Control Of Atomic Bomb

Vice-Pres. Richard T. Frankensteen of the CIO United Auto Workers this week called for federal control of the atomic bomb and the processes that developed atomic energy.

"Here is something that is too big, too awesome for us to leave to chance or to monopoly," Frankenstein said. "Our government has a responsibility to use the process to advance industry and social progress.

"If the scientists are correct, the automobile industry, the coal and oil industries, our electrical industries are due for revolutionary changes. This process can create turmoil in our basic industries, or it can advance the standard of living of all of us."

U.S. Job Aid A 'Must,' Is PAC Warning

THE CIO Political Action Committee opened a coast-to-coast campaign this week for Federal legislation to protect workers during the reconversion crisis.

Alarmed by the cancellation of billions of dollars in war contracts and predictions that eight to ten million war workers will be unemployed within the next few weeks, the committee voted at a conference of international union officials in N. Y. City to bring pressure on Congress for prompt passage of labor's reconversion program.

"In winning the last rounds of the war in the Pacific we must not lose the first rounds of the peace in Detroit, Pittsburgh, and San Francisco," said PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman, who presided at the conference.

"To our men and women in the armed forces, as well as to our great armies of men and women on the homefront who demonstrated their zeal in the production of tools of victory, we wish to make clear that we shall consider ourselves victorious only when we win the war and when we are assured of victory over poverty and the fear of depression."

Hillman warned that unless Congress acts promptly huge sections of the American people will suffer and America's powerful productive capacity will be frittered away. Most urgent job before Congress, he said, is expansion and liberalization of unemployment benefits.

Other urgent legislation mentioned by Hillman included the Murray-Patman full employment bill, the 65c hourly minimum wage, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell social security bill, a national housing program, additional veterans legislation and other measures designed to contribute toward a full production and full employment program.

Main points in the CIO reconversion program being urged upon the administration and Congress, Hillman said, include:

Higher basic wages.

No reduction in take-home pay to compensate for cutbacks and shorter workweeks.

Hold the price line. OPA must be retained to keep a ceiling on prices. Quality grading must be added to price control.

Retain and improve the U. S. Employment Service to help transfer workers to the right jobs.

Increase and improve unemployment compensation which should be raised to allow $25 weekly for a minimum of 26 weeks.

Planning and improvement of state and federal work projects.

A program of full production and full employment through the teamwork of government, management and labor.

On the Air With CIO

Rep. James P. Geelan of Conn., Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization and vice-president, and Albert Goss, National Grange master, will discuss Wages and Purchasing Power on the CIO America United Program at 1:15 p.m., EWT Aug. 26.

All sorts of high sounding intentions are set forth in the recently adopted new standards of practice of the Natl. Asso. of Broadcasters.

The new standards recommend that political broadcasts and those dealing with public questions "be confined to straightforward statements appealing to intelligence and reason."

Another states that "news should be presented with fairness and accuracy" and goes on to say that "the fundamental purpose of news dissemination in a democracy is to enable people to know what is happening and to understand the meaning of events so that they may form their own conclusions."

The code also recommends shorter commercials for daytime programs.

CIO Asks Place On Latin Council

Representation of U. S. and Latin American Labor Organizations on the Inter-American Economic and Social Council was urged today in a telegram sent by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Nelson Rockefeller, Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Inter-American Affairs.

Murray pointed out that a CIO representative gave valuable assistance to the Inter-American Conference at Mexico City which authorized the establishment of the council and "in effect was largely responsible for the incorporation of the more important provisions of the labor program" of the conference.

"The assistance of organized labor is essential to the perfecting of economic cooperation on a world wide scale," Murray said. "It is not less essential in the establishment of Inter-American economic cooperation. Labor can perform its full share of the task only if it participates in the work of the council."

CIO Urges Full Employment Meets On Labor Day

CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a telegram to House sponsors of the Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill, this week urged them to call conferences in their Congressional Districts of representatives of local government, businessmen, employers, labor organizations and interested citizens to inform themselves as to what V-J Day means in terms of employment in their district.

At the same time President Murray asked Mayor La Guardia to urge each member of the Mayors Conference to proclaim Labor Day as Full Employment Day and hold discussions of the problem in public meetings on that day.

Bilbo Libels Servicemen; MMU Asks Impeachment

REITERATING its demand that Senator Theodore G. Bilbo of Mississippi be removed from the Senate, the CIO Natl. Maritime Union this week made public a letter he wrote to an American soldier which the union asserted was "the final word" warranting his speedy ouster.

The letter, written on July 23, was sent to Private Stanley S. Levine, who is with the Medical Detachment at the Brooke Convalescent Hospital, Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

Addressing him as "Dear Levine," the Mississippi Senator assailed the serviceman as a "Bowery inmate," "common kike," and "just a sorry, puny, insignificant uncultured, unrefined, dirty, pusillanimous, limicolous, communistic braying jackass."

Ferdinand C. Smith, secretary of the NMU, declared that "the Senate can no longer permit Senator Bilbo to disgrace it by such violent rantings. Bilbo's attack upon a man in the uniform of the U. S. is the final word which urgently demands his prompt impeachment."

Private Levine, a merchant seaman and member of NMU before entering the service, turned the letter over to the union.

The full text of Bilbo's letter follows:

"Your letter of July 19 has just been received and I confess to you that I took time to read the asinine contents of your letter. From your scribblings I get a strong suspicion that you are a 'Bowery inmate,' from the slum sections of New York City and that you are what is commonly called a very common 'kike.' Therefore, you do not deserve nor do you merit Senatorial attention.

"But you make such an ugly threat until I think I will just try your hand and call you what I think you are—just a sorry, puny, insignificant, uncultured, unrefined, dirty, pusillanimous, limicolous, communistic braying jackass. If this does not fit you or does not paint your true picture, then let me know and I will finish the job because I promise you I can do better word painting.

"I am sure if you want to give publicity to this letter the public generally will recognize your photograph.

"But really, I am sorry for you and I suggest that you submit to treatment of just even a second class psychiatrist."

Cracking the Quip

By ARTHUR WHITE

Now that the trials of War Criminals have begun in earnest, wails and lamentations will doubtlessly be heard from those who wish to save the "defenseless" Nazis and their appeasers, from the "ruthless victors" of the war. To such "humanitarians" we might reply in the words of the old Yugoslav peasant woman. Standing in her doorway, she noticed a Nazi soldier hurry down the street and knock down a little girl in his way. He stopped, picked up the child, wiped some mud from her face, and sent her on her way with a friendly tap. Catching the old woman's eye, he blushed crimson. She, with a nod of approval said: "Quite a nice thing you did for that child." He blushed even deeper, "For that kind deed," she went on, "I wish you the coolest spot in Hell!"

* * *

A bunch of kids were playing the modern version of "cops and robbers." Some pretended that they were part of the U. S. military attending the captured enemy. Two boys stood guard with toy rifles. Nearby, several "prisoners" were seated at an improvised table made of an orange crate, and were being fed a mess of jelly beans by their "captors." But a passerby noticed that one little feller sat with arms folded, a sullen look on his face.

"What's the matter with Jimmy," asked the adult, "doesn't he want to play?"

"No, he won't eat the jelly beans," explained one of the older kids. "He insists on ice cream."

"But why?" was the query. "Isn't he one of your prisoners, too?"

"Yeah," said the youngster, "but Jimmy is a Nazi general, and he wants to be coddled!"

CREAM OF WIT—Wm. A. White: Liberty is the one thing you can's have unless you give it to others. . . . Anon: It isn't enough to safeguard posterity; we must also provide a posterity to safeguard. . . . Old German proverb (which the Nazis apparently never paid any attention to): A great war leaves the country with three armies —an army of cripples, an army of mourners and an army of thieves.

One of the monarchist refugees who helped establish a "government-in-exile" on Park Avenue, made a face-saving appearance at a New York war bond rally, and was introduced to a leading labor official.

"How unpleasant it must be for you Americans," commented the monarchist snobbishly, "to be governed by people whom one would never thing of asking to dinner."

"No more unpleasant," was the laborite's retort, "than being governed by people who wouldn't ask you to dinner."

THE Story of Labor

1 Today 9,000,000 workers in every type of industry—shipyards, steel mills, aircraft factories, textile mills, tobacco plants, to name a few—are getting food on the job. Here Harry Greenfield, president of the CIO United Steelworkers, Local 1697 of the Diamond Chain Co. in Indianapolis, Ind., is eating in the plant cafeteria.

IN-PLANT FEEDING

2 Henry Griswold, the oldest employe at this plant, has been with the company for 52 years. Only since the war has in-plant feeding grown. Before the war, about 2,000,000 workers in manufacturing had meals served them. The War Food Administration's Industrial Feeding Division has encouraged the growth of factory lunchrooms and cafeterias. The government was concerned with seeing that menus were balanced to pack a punch.

3 One thousand persons take a "square meal" during lunchtime in this new Boeing cafeteria. They come in groups of 100 and step into line at 10-minute intervals. Each employe has 30 minutes in which to eat. The average meal costs only 30 cents.

4 The cook is preparing meat for stewing, a most popular item in plant cafeterias. In-plant feeding at its best assures the worker at least one balanced meal a day at reasonable cost. A recent survey by the War Food Administration showed that 100 of 101 companies, queried about post-war feeding, plan to continue the program into peacetime.

5 Going are the days of the old food wagon which makes the rounds of the textile mill serving cold drinks and sandwiches. Today textile mills are following the lead of other industries in installing cafeterias for their workers with at least 15 minutes for eating time.

A PRAIRIE fire unemployment crisis this week swept across the U. S. from New York to California. Men and women thrown out of war work swarmed into U. S. Employment offices seeking jobs or unemployment compensation. In New York City long lines formed (below). Meanwhile, in Washington, the CIO urged passage of the Full Employment Bill (see pages 3, 4 and 5) as an aid in averting a jobless crisis that might become as bad as the 1929 depression — unless Congres acts at once on legislation designed to cushion the shock of reconversion.

MILLIONS SEEK JOBS

The CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union is the strongest trade union organization in the Hawaiian Islands.

HAWAII—CIO!

By LEN DE CAUX

THE RISE of the CIO in the Hawaiian Islands is one of the most dramatic and significant success stories in recent labor history.

Political action combined with aggressive union organizing and emphasis on CIO's no-discrimination policy have brought higher wages and better conditions to tens of thousands of workers along with liberal social legislation and more democracy for all the multi-racial inhabitants of one of the most company-dominated territories in the world.

When the war started, there were only 2,000 CIO members on the Islands. But today, the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union alone has close to 17,000 dues-paying members, and its regional director, Jack W. Hall, estimates membership will shortly increase to about 25,000.

For the first time in history, the CIO has broken through the vicious anti-unionism of the Big Five companies that dominate the economic life of the Islands and has brought strong union organization to tens of thousands of sugar, pineapple and railroad workers.

Its success in this respect has just been signalized by a standard contract won by the ILWU, bringing sugar workers immedate wage increases of $5,000,000 a year with another $2 or $3 million in store once wage rates are standardized and reclassified under the agreement. It is estimated the average final increase per worker will be $300.

The way to union organization and better conditions was paved in last year's election campaign, when Big Five control of the Territorial Legislature was challenged by Labor's Political Action Committee, in which AFL unions cooperated with the CIO.

As a result of this campaign, 16 out of 21 PAC-endorsed candidates were elected to the House of Representatives, including two ILWU leaders, and six out of eight PAC-endorsed Senators were elected.

The extent of labor influence is indicated by the fact that the total membership of the House is 30, and of the Senate 15.

Labor speedily drew dividends from its political successes. A Little Wagner Act was passed, which unlike other similar state acts covers agricultural workers, the biggest single group on the Islands.

The minimum wage under the Territorial law, which had once been as low as 20 cents an hour, was upped to 40 cents and extended to children from 12 years up. Workmen's compensation was liberalized, the child labor law was strengthened, and unemployment compensation was increased from a maximum of $20 to $25 a week for 20 weeks.

Following the election also, the ILWU took advantage of the more democratic atmosphere on the Islands by launching a big organizing drive. This resulted in the union winning 97 per cent of the vote in 43 NLRB elections among some 18,000 industrial workers in the sugar, pineapple and railroad industries.

Seeing this handwriting on the wall, the companies have agreed to recognize the union without elections among some 10,000 agricultural workers, provided a crosscheck of union membership indicates a union majority.

A MAJOR FACTOR in CIO success in Hawaii is CIO's national leadership in combatting all forms of racial discrimination. It has placed the CIO out of reach of any effective competition from the AFL, which has only some eight or nine thousand members on the Islands.

Hawaii is the greatest melting pot of races and nationalities in the United States. Out of a total population of some 460,000, there are only 155,000 whites, most of them in business, professions, white-collar work and a few of the highly skilled trades.

The rest of the population includes 160,000 Japanese Americans, with an outstanding record of loyalty to the United States, 40,000 Hawaiians, 40,000 Filipinos, 26,000 Koreans, 27,000 Chinese, together with Portuguese and members of nearly every other race and nationality under the sun.

"There is more racial tolerance in the Hawaiian Islands than in any place I've seen," Lt.-Gen. Robt. Richardson, top army man in the Middle Pacific, told the writer.

However, "there has been the most intense economic discrimination, which the CIO has done much to break down," according to Hall, who is president of the CIO Council as well as regional director of the ILWU.

THE RISE OF the CIO in Hawaii since the war is comparable, on a smaller scale, to the early dramatic victories of the CIO on the U. S. mainland.

Company rule was, if anything, more complete and far-reaching here. Five companies—American Factors, Alexander & Baldwin, Castle & Cook, Theo. H. Davies and C. Brewer Co.—for decades dominated every phase of Hawaiian life.

These Big Five not only own the sugar and pineapple plantations, the chief industries of the Islands, but also control utilities, railroads, urban transportation, longshoring, hotels, department stores, insurance, banking and shipping to and from Hawaii.

Unions were, of course, anathema to the Big Five, and every attempt at union organization was met with violence, discharges, arrests, bribery of leaders, and every form of pressure from pliant tools in politics, police and business.

There were desperate and bloody strikes in the years immediately preceding the war, and as many as 50 people were shot up in one of them.

The first CIO union to gain a foothold in Hawaii was the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, which had to conduct extensive strikes before it won its first agreements in 1941, covering stevedores. The ILWU is now the dominant and much the largest union on the Islands and has conducted all the recent big organizing drives.

Other unions represented here include the Natl. Maritime Union, the Marine Cooks & Stewards, a rapidly growing local of the State, County & Municipal Workers, the American Communications Assn., and the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians.

ALONG WITH its political and organizing successes, the CIO has not only won the devotion of the workers, unorganized as well as organized, but has also achieved an extraordinary degree of general community esteem.

Top-ranking Army officers like Generals Richardson and Morrison, and Colonels concerned with labor relations, all spoke in the highest terms of the CIO and its leaders. They credited the CIO with an unsullied record of keeping supplies moving for the troops and preventing strikes, with unfailing cooperation with the armed forces, and with stimulating the win-the-war spirit of the workesr.

WAGE RATES are roughly comparable to those in the U. S. mainland, but living costs are much higher. In fact, government employes are given a 25 per cent differential over the mainland on this account. Food costs are estimated by Hall to be 30 per cent higher than in San Francisco, and with a housing shortage rents are sky-high.

Complicating the many other difficulties overcome by the CIO in its successful organizing and political drives are the considerable distances by water that separate the five main Hawaiian Islands (it's 1,000 miles from one end of the Islands to the other). Hall has to travel by airplane to keep his contacts with union members in the various islands.

One-Way Ticket For CIO Goodwill

THE FIRST labor canteen in a "theater of operations" opened in Honolulu on August 19. Since Hawaii is the main transient center for U. S. armed forces in the Pacific, besides having huge permanent Army and Navy installations, the new canteen is expected to serve a larger number of servicemen and women than any other labor canteen in the world.

Hawaii's labor canteen was started on the initiative of local CIO and AFL unions, in response to a vigorous and growing demand for such a center from unionists in the armed forces passing through or stationed in Hawaii. These unionists had an almost universal complaint—that labor does not make enough effort to maintain contact with and supply information to servicemen to counteract the large amount of anti-labor propaganda.

But the local labor sponsors of the canteen point out that this is much more than a local project, since Hawaii is the main "funnel" for returning servicemen. They are therefore urging international unions and the national CIO and AFL to help finance the Labor Canteen on a scale far beyond the means of the comparatively small local labor movement.

The importance of the canteen as a gathering place for transient and resident service men and women, merchant seamen, veterans and mainland and local war workers is recognized by top-ranking military and civic officials who have given it active support.

Its sponsors and supporters include Lt. Gen. Robt. C. Richardson, Commanding General of the U. S. Middle Pacific Army Forces; Governor Ingram Stainback, Mayor Petrie of Honolulu, the Chamber of Commerce, Veterans of Foreign Wars, as well as local CIO and AFL leaders.

The program of the Labor Canteen will include discussion groups on current political, economic and social problems, lectures, movies, dances and excursions.

The large headquarters donated for the canteen, which is to be open daily and is available for at least six months after the war, is to include an information booth, reading room and library, writing room, music room, game room and photographic dark room.

Besides asking financial support from unions throughout the United States, the Canteen is asking for quantities of union papers, pamphlets and other educational material.

Contributions and literature should be addressed to the Labor Canteen, 830 Richards St., P. O. Box 356, Honolulu, T. H.

IT'S JOBS, NOT EXCUSES THE PEOPLE WANT

By C. W. FOWLER

SPEAKING slowly and emphatically to a crowded Senate committee session, Philip Murray this week brought a message from millions of American workers and veterans with one basic point—jobs.

"For all these people and their families the hourly burning question is whether they can expect soon to be gainfully re-employed—or for how long they do get a job," he said. "This doubt darkens their view of the whole world. They and their country need some immediate, concrete evidence that their elected representatives understand the needs of today as they understand them."

Murray was testifying for S 380, the jobs-for-all bill now before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. The audience of Senators, reporters and listeners-in filled the big room. Ordinarily, a few faithful folk attend Senate hearings. This time, the standing room only sign was out.

Murray told the Senators—and the newspapers—some of the questions that are beginning to worry the American people. For example, he said, the American people are beginning to ask:

"Why are the good things a part of war? Why can't we have them in peacetime as well? Our people have seen infant and child care, housing, maternity care of wives of servicemen, more ample supplies of good food, physical fitness activities, steady jobs at better wages, more complete utilization of the labor and skill of all Americans."

These questions, Murray said, get all the sharper when the workers look around and see the enormous industrial plant they built in four years lying idle while they are laid off. It makes them wonder, he went on, why this $15 billion plant—built at the taxpayers' expense — can't be bought or leased by private industry and operated for full production.

"The American labor movement has upheld private competitive enterprise," he said. "The members of the unions know this and support the idea. Our rank and file are expecting the industrialists to buy the plants and run them. They at least expect they will lease them.

"If the plants are not started up soon to make jobs and turn out goods, the average citizen is going to ask: well, why doesn't the government hire engineers and managers to operate these factories the way it was done during the war?"

Throughout Murray's testimony, there were no interruptions even from the Republican side of the committee table. Men like Sen. Austin (R. Vt.) who has been heckling other pro-job witnesses at will had nothing to ask Murray. Sen. Taft (R. O.), who has come out second best in previous encounters with Murray was absent. Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.) made a contribution when he matched a quotation from Scripture in Murray's testimony with two others to the same point. Even the reference to government operation of plants found the Senators speechless.

"The people's questions and agitations have to be answered to their satisfaction quite soon," Murray said. "Right now the passage of this full employment bill and the other legislation I have mentioned would be acceptable. The people would recognize that Congress was trying to help us all pass over this bridge to tomorrow."

The bill, Murray explained, does not create or set up jobs by itself. Its function is to provide the government and the country with a means of measuring the total need for jobs and the steps to take to see they are provided.

Even this simple proposition, he pointed out, has its opponents. "There are people in the nation who are afraid of this program of full employment and production," he said.

"Even in Congress, there are those who have village minds in a cosmopolitan society and manage to hold a penny so close to their eyes that they hide the whole blazing sun. The fact of these timid souls makes more imperative the energy and devotion of the rest of us in advancing this constructive and progressive program."

CIO to Testify At Jobless Pay Hearings

Following up his testimony for the jobs for all bill (S 380) of Aug. 22, President Murray is expected to appear at hearings on the emergency unemployment compensation bill in the Senate Finance committee this coming week.

Murray will argue for the bill, which provides up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, as an immediate "must" to help head off a critical drop in purchasing power and the economic crisis that is bound to result.

The bill will also have hearings in the House, at which CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey is scheduled to testify.

The CIO NEWS will carry full reports of both appearances for the bill.

Over-Formula Pay Hikes OK—If They Don't Boost Prices

AN executive order by Pres. Harry S. Truman this week made it possible for the Natl. War Labor Board to grant wage increases without regard to the Little Steel Formula or other controls providing the employer sought no price increases.

The executive order further provided that the WLB could approve "without regard to limitations contained in any other orders or directives, such increases as may be necessary to correct maladjustments or inequities which would interfere with the effective transition to a peacetime economy, provided, however, that in dispute cases this additional authority shall not be used to direct increases to be effective as of a date prior to the date of this order."

By inclusion of the final clause, the WLB is stopped from granting retroactive increases in dispute cases involving substandards of living or inequities.

Should the WLB or OPA feel that a proposed wage or salary increase "will require a change in the price ceiling of the commodity or services involved, such proposed increase, if approved . . . shall become effective only if also approved by the director of economic stabilization."

The Presidential directive said that the agencies concerned should "move as rapidly as possible without endangering the stability of the economy toward the removal of price, wage, production and other controls and toward the restoration of collective bargaining and the free market."

All of the steps, the order said, shall be made "under the guidance and direction of the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion."

Thus, Reconversion Director John W. Snyder and Economic Stabilizer William H. Davis are handed virtual control over the nation's economy during the transition period.

Urges Labor Dept. Changes

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Auto Workers Union this week suggested the establishment by the U. S. Dept. of Labor of three new bureaus—Bureau of Labor Production, Bureau of Workers' Education and Bureau of Cooperatives and Consumer Interests.

In a letter to Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Thomas said of the bureaus:

Labor Production: "If full employment of peacetime goods is to be of the same degree of importance as war goods and munitions, there should be some agency in the federal government staffed by labor men whose job it will be to give of labor's knowledge of experience in maintaining full production. We need a Bureau of Labor Production, to which labor can come with plans, that will bring these plans to the attention of other government agencies, and Congress, and will be able to deal with specific situations."

Workers' Education: "One of the most valuable services performed by the Dept. of Agriculture for the nation's farmers is the education work conducted in connection with the Extension Service. Nowhere in the Federal Government is there any agency that attempts to do a comparable job with the nation's wage earners."

Cooperatives and Consumer Interests: "The Dept. of Agriculture each year spends tremendous sums helping to organize farmers' cooperatives, and service them in various ways. Industrial workers need aid and service in organizing both consumer and producer cooperatives. And the postwar problems of price and quality are of tremendous concern to industrial workers."

Report from Cleveland

'NOT HIT HARD' YET 65,000 LOSE JOBS

By GARLAND ASHCRAFT

CLEVELAND, a city of small plants and diversified industry, has not felt the impact of VJ-Day cancellations as have other industrial centers, BUT—

Within a week of VJ-Day the War Manpower Commission estimated that 51,750 workers had lost their jobs and the CIO put the figure at 65,000.

This out of an estimated 532,000 war contract workers as of VJ Day.

The Cleveland CIO Council estimates that within the next 60 days 80,000 to 100,000 workers will be displaced.

In terms of unemployment, the gradual return of approximately 130,000 demobilized veterans must be taken into account.

As a manufacturing center, Cleveland is essentially the maker of nuts and bolts and parts and pieces—a small industry town. It is a city of subcontractors.

Ten days after the shooting war ceased, cancelation hadn't affected the sub-contracts appreciably. The few big-time contractors were hit heavily and the Government Defense Plant Corporation establishments shut shop immediately.

The Industrial Division of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce is authority for the statement that not more than 19% of Cleveland industry will have a serious reconversion problem, as against a WPB estimate of 39% for industry as a whole in the nation.

Yet, the situation in Cleveland, one of the most "average" of the nation's larger cities, is perhaps fairly typical of the industry reconversion problem of the country, as a whole. Certainly it is not in a class with Detroit, where cancelations hit the big-time contractors in the auto industry like an atomic bomb, nor like Akron where the tire industry will move right along without serious dislocation.

Facts are hard to report in Cleveland. This is because industrial leadership has adopted a policy of playing down the seriousness of the unemployment situation just as it did in the Hoover depression when the Federal Government had to step in and find out how many were really unemployed.

Efforts of the CIO to face the situation realistically have been countered in the newspapers and by industrial organizations with the charge that the CIO is being sensationally pessimistic.

Neither the local office of the WMC nor any other Government agency will give a reporter an "on the record" estimate of current or future employment figures. As they say, they do not want to stick their necks out.

To illustrate this, the Cleveland C. of C. which conducts a year-round employment survey of 100 representative industries which is accepted as usually objective and accurate, gave "off the record" to a CIO representative an estimate of maximum unemployment during the reconversion period.

The Cleveland Union Leader asked the Chamber if it would be quoted as to that figure. The answer was that the Chamber would not, although the Leader was permitted to use the figure on its own responsibility. The paper estimated that 160,000 war workers would be "displaced" within six weeks.

One indication that the situation is not as rosy as the industrialists want it painted is that the U. S. Employment Service here is planning to hire 100 additional workers to handle the reconversion work load.

While there may be a tendency of labor leaders and labor newspapers to exaggerate reconversion unemployment, there is certainly a concerted effort of business and industry here to underestimate it.

It is the same hold-head-in-the-sand attitude which had us deep in the depression of the 30s before it was realized that there were millions of unemployed who wanted jobs.

PASS IT NOW!

Halt the Economic Pearl Harbor!

Reports are flying around Washington that Congress may put off coming back to work for another few weeks, on the ground that pending bills won't come up for action until some time in October.

Nothing could be more heartlessly and more cynically removed from the truth. The need for immediate and positive action by Congress on at least eight main issues has never been greater.

President Murray outlined them in his testimony this week on the full employment bill. Here they are:

1. The full employment bill, which sets up a "national budget" and provides machinery for jobs for all.

2. Emergency unemployment compensation of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks.

3. A 65c-an-hour minimum wage, through amendment to the present Wage-Hour Act.

4. An end to the two years' dawdling on the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill to improve social security and give us a real national health program.

5. A permanent FEPC to stop the spread of discrimination, and final repeal of the polltax by Senate action.

6. A new approach to the tax structure, based on taking the load off the low incomes and putting some of it on the upper brackets.

7. Quick preparation of a big program of public works and regional developments such as the Missouri Valley plan to make jobs and create wealth for all the people. Plans and blueprints for projects already worked out must be released now.

8. Amendment of veterans laws to give the returning GI a break and to help keep him out of the clutches of the loan shark and the real estate swindlers.

This is the outline of an immediate action program for Congress. Unless quick and positive action is forthcoming, the nation can expect a severe period of depression and economic crisis.

So far, little evidence of positive planning is seen in Washington, either in Congress or in the Administration. In his testimony on the jobs-for-all bill, Murray spoke stingingly of "some very important people" who have been asleep at "this second, economic Pearl Harbor" which hit the country with the mass layoffs before and after VJ Day.

Who are these people who've been asleep—or who've been deliberately turning the other way while millions of working men and women are out in the streets without jobs and without money?

They're the Congressmen and Senators, Republican and Democrat alike, who think there's no need to be alarmed, no need for Congress to do anything in a "rush."

They're the men of industry like Ira Mosher of the NAM who blandly issue statements saying that unemployment won't amount to much, and even if it does, a little taste of it won't hurt.

They're the newspaper editorial writers and the reporters who smugly repeat the GOP-NAM line of "reassurance," broadcasting optimistic reports which they know to be untrue with the aim of distracting the people's pressure on Congress and the Administration.

Finally, they're the forces—like those in the Automotive Council of Michigan—who want a depression and mass misery so they can have a try at smashing the labor movement and reducing the workers to the point where they were before the CIO was organized.

The means of waking these "very important" people to the needs of the country lie right at our hands.

The means of waking Congress lie in political action on Congress, to get it back to work, to get it to act quickly and positively on the minimum program outlined by Philip Murray.

Have you done your part of this job?

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

The following excerpts from President Murray's testimony on S 380, the jobs-for-all bill, take the place this week of Len De Caux's reguar column.

FOR ALL those (jobless) and their families the hourly burning question is whether they can expect soon to be gainfully re-employed—or for how long if they do get a job. This doubt darkens their view of the world ahead. They and the whole country need some immediate, concrete evidence that their elected representatives understand the needs of today as they understand them.

We want this Senate Bill 380 passed, but it is only a part of the legislation we know is necessary. There are some other bills pending before this Congress, which are long overdue.

The Kilgore-Forand Unemployment Compensation bill should be picked up at once and moved on to passage.

We must have the Pepper amendment to the Wage-Hour Act, so there will be an increased number of workers provided a minimum wage, and to increase that minimum wage from 40 to 65 cents an hour.

There has been two years of dawdling over the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill to improve old-age retirement pensions, establish health insurance and provide other Social Security advances. Hearings should begin at once.

We expect Congress to pass the permanent Fair Employment Practices Act to abolish discrimination from our midst. We have just finished a war to stamp out racial discrimation in Hitler Germany; shall we stand by and have it remain in our own country?

There must be further improvement in existing laws that provide help for demobilized veterans, especially for those permanently disabled in the service of democracy.

A whole new concept of tax legislation must be worked out, to provide relief for low income groups and to pull the idle wealth of the nation into healthy economic circulation.

We insist that the anti-Poll Tax measure is a non-partisan responsibility of both Senate and House, so that we may extend the franchise to every American.

The need is great to modernize America postwar. There must be prompt action on the great program of roads, schools, hospitals, housing. The money already authorized for highways should be available at once. The Missouri Valley Authority is imperative, because of the new wealth it will bring to our nation.

The control of atomic power must forever rest in the hands of the whole American people. No group of private monopolists can be allowed to seize and wield control over these forces of life and death.

All these things and this Full Employment Bill add up to continued prosperity, which is the basis and foundation of true peace—peace among Americans as well as among nations.

Failure to do these necessary things now will bring stronger questions from the people. I will tell you what one of those questions will be; they are already coming to my desk. Everybody knows about the 15 billions dollars worth of U.S.-owned plants and machinery. But workmen don't think of them as figures in an accountant's ledger; they think of them as hours of labor applied . . . units of goods turned out.

The American labor movement has upheld private competitive enterprise. The members of the unions know this and support the idea. Our rank and file are expecting the industrialists to buy the plants and run them. They at least expect they will lease them. If the plants are not soon started up to make jobs and turn out goods, the average citizen is going to ask: well, why doesn't the government hire engineers and managers to operate these factories the way it was done during the war?

Resolutions are being passed in Local Unions; individuals are inquiring: Why not? It's going to be impossible to answer that one with talk of "confidence" and similar chatter. Working people know you don't pay the landlord and groceryman with words—it takes cash. And if private enterprise fails to give workers jobs at good wages, turning out things we all need, the people will recognize the failure of private capitalism and vigorously call for government operation.

Jobless Prairie Fire Sweeps U.S.

THE PRAIRIE fire unemployment crisis this week swept across the entire nation, striking with particular fury the East and West Coasts.

Unemployment also continued to mount in the heart of the country—in such cities as Detroit, St. Louis and Chicago—as was forecast in the July 20 issue of The CIO NEWS.

Two new developments underscored the gravity of the situation:

1. The U. S. Maritime Commission this week halted work on almost half a billion dollars worth of contracts, mostly for ships. This was in addition to one and a half billion dollar Navy ship contract cancelations already announced.

2. The War Manpower Commission announced that eight sections including the Detroit-Flint and the Los Angeles areas, would be "distressed" by October 15, meaning that 20 to 25 per cent of the workers would be jobless. The WMC said 89 other divisions would be labor surplus areas. Later WMC added 77 industrial areas where from five to 12 per cent of the workers would be hunting employment.

In addition to the Detroit-Flint and Los Angeles zones, the WMC listed as forthcoming "distressed areas": Portland, Me.; Buffalo-Niagara Falls, N. Y., areas; Wichita, Kan.; Portland, Ore.; Talladega, Ala., and Panama City, Fla.

Meanwhile in Chicago, war veterans joined thousand of CIO members as they chanted "We Want Work" in a demonstration in Chicago's Coliseum and Loop.

More than a week after the victory announcement, the Associated Press was saying that only "more than a million" were unemployed and was stressing the availability of low-paying jobs, even though the days after Japan's defeat some of the most conservative papers reported more than a million jobless. Additional news of discharges city by city were received this week as follows:

LOS ANGELES—75,000 jobless war workers; layoffs within a week or two expected to exceed 200,000, displacing more than 350 to 360 thousand war workers. Unless reconversion plans turn out better than is likely, the percentage drop in employment will be greater than in any other war production area.

State manpower authorities believe than not only Los Angeles but also San Diego will be harder hit than any other California area.

Mass firings occurred in aircraft, aircrafts parts, ship construction and related industries. Among the firings were: Douglas, 13,000; 12,000 at the vast new Long Beach factory: North American Inglewood plant, 3500 with the remaining 10,000 working only 40 hours instead of 48, their pay cut almost one-fourth; Consolidated's vultee at Downey, 550 of the 2800 workers laid off, with the balance working only 40 hours.

NEW YORK CITY—About 153,000 workers laid off in New York and Long Island, with most war plants completely shut down, and almost a third of a million to be idle by Sept. 15, according to the New York CIO Council.

One hundred thousand workers were fired in aircraft and airplane parts plants alone and the plants affected included Grumman, in Beth Page and Port Washington, L. I.; Republic in Farmingdale, and the Ranger plant.

Another 35,000 workers were idle in plants producing ammunition, radar and other electrical equipment for the Army and Navy. Fifteen thousand were out of work in uniform making shops, but most of these workers are expected to be on the job again within two months making civilian garments.

With between 40,000 and 50,000 expected to be looking for jobs momentarily in two Long Island counties, the Sperry Local of the CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers held a community meeting at Garden City, L. A., and advocated a program to increase employment and wages, and to curb price increases.

Kansas City—40,000 laid off, 5100 at the North American Aviation bombing plant which is under contract with the CIO Auto Workers. Lake City ordnance plant had already cut its employment from 24,000 to 7,000 when the victory news came, and 5,350 more were slated to go within the next month.

Baltimore—32,000 workers dismissed at war plants, and thousands more will be laid off in shipbuilding, airplane and other war industries within the next two months. At the Glenn L. Martin aircraft plant 15,000 were laid off, and 3,000 lost their jobs when the Eastern Aircraft plant shut down completely. Eight thousand more were given the pink slip at the Bethlehem Fairfield shipyards, and 3,000 were dismissed at the Maryland Drydock shipyards.

Phliadelphia—8,400 members of the CIO Electrical Radio and Machine Workers at four plants were jobless, in addition to other thousands thrown out of work by the termination of war contracts.

A UE group came to Washington from the Bendix Aviation Corp., government-built plant where 5,200 were thrown out of work after returning to the plant from the two-day victory holiday.

They asked that the government operate the plant if no private purchasers could be found.

JOB SEEKERS flooded U. S. Employment Service Offices like that in New York City (top) as plants like Douglas Aircraft in Long Beach, Calif., shut down or wiped out virtually whole departments leaving sometimes just one worker (center). Lack of reconversion planning to insure jobs brought protests (lower left) from thousands like Olga Chapell and Irene Munyer, who used to work at Buick in Melrose Park, Ill. The bitter irony of war that brings jobs and peace that brings unemployment is pointed up by discharged Milo C. Ritter, wheeling his tools past a job recruiting sign at Douglas Aircraft (lower right).

HOW BENNIE GOT HIS JOB

STORY BY FRED ROSS

PICTURES BY REBECCA SNYDER

THIS is the story of a Bridgeport, Conn., veteran of World War II, Benjamin Costello. It is also the story of how he got a job upon his discharge from the service. More than that, it is the story of what unions and a community, realizing their responsibility toward veterans, did to solve the problem.

Before 23-year-old Benjamin Costello went to war, he was a packer at the Columbia Recording Co. and a shop steward of a CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' local. With an Army Ordnance outfit at Saipan, he was working on a crane which was unloading crates when something hit him—he didn't know what—and he fell 40 feet, suffering a fractured right ankle and face injuries.

After he was in hospitals for a year, the Army decided that the war was over for Costello and discharged him. He faced a number of problems, but their solution was made simpler by the fact that Bridgeport had faced the problems created by the return of 30,000 veterans and the location of 48,000 war workers in the community.

Bridgeport's answer was the Community Advisory Service Center, a reconverted mansion in the town's center where, under one roof, was all the information Costello needed to ease his return to civilian life. There were also the representatives of Federal and State governmental agencies dealing with veterans' problems.

Costello's big problem was a job. He could not return to his old one, because his bad ankle would not allow him to stand for long periods. But he had to have a job, particularly since he had taken on a new responsibility while he was in the Army —a wife.

Even before he went into the Army, he felt that his job as a packer had no future. At the center, Costello was given an aptitude test which showed that he was suited for office work, and a talk with a trained occupational adviser convinced him that he should study under the GI Bill of Rights to prepare himself for such a job.

The library at the center also showed him where he could take the necessary courses. But he didn't have a job.

Here his union stepped into the picture. His union of course was represented in the service center organization on a coordinating committee and by Leo Dunn, who was a member of the service's central control committee. An AFL member, Dunn had been chosen by all of the participating unions to be their representative on the control committee.

There was a job as bill of lading clerk open at Columbia Recording, but a woman steward was next in line for it. Costello did not want to interfere with her progress, but she waived her rights to the job, and insisted that he take it.

Arrangements were also made at the center for treatment at a Veterans Hospital of Costello's ankle which still bothered him and for payment by the Veterans Administration of $34.50 monthly because of his partial disability.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender of Baltimore, announces: American Smelting and Refining Co., Baltimore, Md., CIO 451, Copper Employes Assn., 205. MMSW Rep. James Hill was in charge.

We had a welcome visit this week from two of our CIO people in Miami, Florida, where they are doing a splendid job; Brothers Charles N. Smolikoff who is president of the Florida State IUC and Brother H. W. Beck. Both are members of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers—Brother Smolikoff is the IUM&SWA Regional Director for Florida and Brother Beck is president of the local union in Miami. These men are doing good work.

At this writing the voting among the shop crafts on the Pennsylvania Railroad is taking place, with the CIO and a definitely company-controlled union as contestants. The company is rendering the company union every support possible and every effort is being made to violate decent procedure in elections. Under these great difficulties, the CIO is waging its campaign. Every man on the staff is on his job rendering every effort unstintingly. The election will not be completed until the end of September. Various divisions vote on different dates in a number of crafts. Some of our Internationals are lending assistance by way of manpower in this, also.

The Consolidated-Edison Company in New York is resorting to its regular foul tactics and have adopted the policy of attempting to abrogate the contract because the workers voted to go CIO. This is similar to the conduct those of the forces of democracy have had to defeat. The contract is a scrap of paper. The matter is now before the National War Labor Board. The IBEW-AFL is teaming up with the company in this vicious action both in New York and St. Louis, contrary to all trade union rules and principles. The fight goes on.

Many of our unions are now effected by hundreds of thousands of workers being laid off daily and yet Congress is on its vacation. The CIO is pressing for its program which is for full employment and decent unemployment insurance. What private enterprise cannot do, the Govt. must. Now more than ever we must concentrate on organizing campaigns; bringing the workers under the banner of the CIO. THERE MUST BE NO LET UP ON THIS.

Murray Supports FTA In Election Demands

Request of the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers for an industry-wide NLRB election among 60,000 northern California cannery workers this week won the support of the national and California CIO.

The election is being sought in some 70 canneries of the California Processors & Growers Assn. and in approximately 50 independent canneries. In a joint statement, Pres. James M. Thimmes and Sec. Mervyn Rathborne of the California CIO, announcing their and CIO Pres. Philip Murray's support of the FTA campaign, said:

"Further shortages of canned goods are threatened by the present chaotic condition in the cannery industry which has virtually deprived the workers of any effective industry-wide collective bargaining agency, thereby creating serious threats to uninterrupted production."

Navy Turns Western Union Boy

WHILE tens of thousands of displaced New Yorkers are hunting for new jobs the Western Union Telegraph Co., is using Navy personnel, free of charge, for delivery of telegrams in the Metropolitan area, the CIO American Communications Association charged this week in a telegram to Chairman Porter of the Federal Communications Commission.

The ACA, which represents all of the Western Union employes in the Metropolitan area, demanded that the commission investigate the handling of all telegraph traffic in New York for the period beginning August 14, when the company, in addition to being unable to handle normal business traffic, suddenly began to accept a huge volume of holiday greetings and race track messages.

The union also pointed out that the company is forcing the employes to omit lunches and normal short relief periods, and is enforcing a policy of heavy overtime which is seriously jeopardizing their health.

Glass Workers Win Union Security

The Natl. War Labor Board this week directed continuance of the present union shop arrangement between the Pittsburgh Plate Glass and the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass companies and the CIO Glass Workers during the present contract period with the addition of a provision for the voluntary, irrevocable checkoff of union dues.

The Board's decision settles, in addition to the union security issue, eleven issues in dispute between the 16,000 employes represented by the union, the Pittsburgh Co.'s plants at Creighton and Ford City, Pa.; Crystal City, Mo.; Mount Vernon, Ohio; Clarksburg, W. Va., and Henryetta, Okla.; and the Libbey-Owens-Ford plants at Toledo and Rossford, Ohio; Ottawa, Ill.; Charleston, W. Va., and Shreveport, La.

CIO Memorial To Roosevelt

A "living" memorial to Franklin Delano Roosevelt in the form of a completely equipped children's wing on the fifth floor of the new Georgetown hospital in Washington, D. C., is being donated by the CIO, President Murray announced last week.

Speaking of the donation, Murray said: "We can conceive of no better method of paying tribute to our late President than the best of medical care for little children. It is most fitting that this tribute to a great humanitarian will stand down through the years as a daily reminder to little children that the afflicted are often chosen by Divine Providence for mighty missions among their fellow men."

Deibler Named Head Of Newspaper Board

Frederick S. Deibler, vice chairman of the Daily Newspaper Printing and Publishing Commission of the Natl. War Labor Board since its establishment on March 1, 1943, has been named chairman to succeed Robert K. Burns, who resigned to return to the University of Chicago, it was announced today.

UPWA Asks 17c Hourly Increase

THE Intl. Executive Board of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers at a meeting in Chicago this week demanded 17½c per hour wage increase for all packinghouse workers, and outlined a program to defeat the Ball-Burton Hatch bill.

The board also decided to support CIO's program for full employment, protest President Truman's action in turning all USES offices back to the States, and to hold the next International Convention of the UPWA-CIO in Montreal, Canada, during June, 1946.

California CIO Asks Governor Call Parley

The California CIO Council and every affiliated union have issued a statement, addressed to President Truman and Gov. Earl Warren, demanding immediate attention to the settlement of urgent economic problems created by the abrupt ending of the war.

The statement asks Truman to reconvene Congress immediately and enact the Murray-Patman full employment bill, the Doughton-Kilgore bill to increase unemployment compensation, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, the Pepper-Hatch bill for a 65c minimum wage and the Chavez-Norton bill establishing a permanent FEPC.

Overtime Ordered For 'V-J Work'

LABOR Secretary Schwellenbach ruled this week that employes of war contractors must be paid time and half rates if they worked the two-day holiday proclaimed by President Truman to mark the celebration of the victory over Japan.

The Presidential order by error included other employes, although it was meant to apply only to government workers.

Schwellenbach's order also said that the two days must be counted in computing the seventh day of work for overtime pay and also for the sixth day in plants where contracts require premium pay for the sixth day of work. The Government must reimburse war contractors who make these payments under this order.

For employes of war contractors who did not work, companies do not have to pay wages for the two days. However, they may pay such employes at straight time rates, and official quarters indicated that they will be reimbursed for such an outlay.

Concerning all other workers, President Truman said he hoped "straight time wages will be paid to all who did not actually work on those days."

WLB RULING

The Natl. War Labor Board this week declared that employers shall not be considered to have violated the wage stabilization laws if they pay their workers premium wages for time worked during the two-day victory celebration.

The board also ruled that employers may consider hours not worked in computing overtime pay, and that they may pay employes excused from work.

High Score for UAW

Workers scored a smashing victory at Griffin Wheel Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, this week. Ninety-five percent of the eligible employes voted for UAW-CIO.

Truman Urged to Keep GIs In Monkey Ward Stores

AGGRAVATED unrest among workers would result if the reported intended move of the Army to withdraw from 13 units of the Montgomery Ward & Co., occurs before the disputes that caused the seizures are resolved, Irving Abramson, CIO natl. director for the Montgomery Ward workers, this week telegraphed President Truman.

Abramson in an interview said that newspapers are filled with pious editorials on the need for labor leadership. In this case, he pointed out, there is need for intelligent leadership on the part of government.

The 13 seized units include two in Detroit and seven in Chicago. In none of the seized plants has the firm obeyed the order of the Natl. War Labor Board to give back pay to the workers, which was the cause of the seizure, Abramson said.

In addition, there are cases before the WLB involving 18 other units of the firm where the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes have been recognized as the collective bargaining agent.

Montgomery Ward this week filed a $1,300,000 libel suit in federal court in Kansas City, Mo., against the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes, the Kansas City local of the union and more than a score of members and officers.

Edwin Chevlin, union spokesman, called the suit "another attempt by Sewell Avery to stifle the freedom of the press" and charged that the mail order company was "trying to keep the CIO from printing the truth."

Ward's suit complains that statements in union leaflets distributed during a drive to organize employes of its mail order plant and retail store in Kansas City damaged its goodwill and reputation.

All creeds, races and religions helped win the war against fascism. Together —now—we can win the security needed in peace. What the Congress of Industrial Organizations thinks about this is told in The CIO NEWS by Pres. Murray.

BY PHILIP MURRAY

THE policy of the CIO toward the question of discrimination is clear and unequivocal. In our constitution we declare that the object of the CIO is to organize workers "regardless of race, creed, color or nationality, and to unite them for common action into labor unions for their mutual aid and protection."

With this as a base, the CIO has consistently fought the evil of discrimination in the social and economic life of our nation. Within our own ranks, discrimination is rigorously excluded. No question is raised concerning the racial or national origin of a member of the CIO. All members are equally free to participate in the affairs of CIO unions, to run for office, to take a full part in the attainment of CIO objectives. One of our most active committees, the National CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, devotes considerable time to interpreting and enforcing our CIO policy.

The CIO believes—and acts on the belief—that all people should have equal opportunity to participate as citizens in the affairs of their country. We stand resolutely opposed to such political discriminations as the polltax and other barriers against full citizenship. We have fought—and still fight—against discrimination in employment. We believe, as did the founders of the republic, that all men are created free and equal, and that their rights cannot and must not be alienated.

We take this stand not only because we believe in justice for all our people, important as that belief is in our daily lives. We take it also for a very practical, bread and butter reason. Discrimination against one group or sector of our population—or against an individual, for that matter—threatens the security of all.

The trade unions have learned this lesson by bitter experience. The practice of divide and rule is as old as exploitation itself. It has been, since the dawn of recorded history, the most useful weapon in the arsenal of tyranny. Union men and women who have fought exploitation know how this device has been used to keep them divided and powerless, to set them fighting among themselves rather than uniting for their own betterment.

The great war against nazism and fascism in Europe, and against slavery in the Pacific and Asia, is the clearest illustration yet afforded of the evil ends served by discrimination. Hitler, Mussolini and every fascist, big and little, who aped them, used the weapon of discrimination to rise to power.

The tragic spectacle of Europe's past decade, the millions of innocent dead, the tortured children and the ravaged cities are clear proof that racial hate, based on discrimination, threatens the whole of civilization. Millions of the democratic world's best and most vigorous men have had to die to destroy this monster.

I do not mean to say that racial discrimination is solely responsible for wars such as that waged by the Nazis and the Japanese. Social and economic factors of poverty, greed, economic aggression underlie the desire for world conquest.

They also underlie the practice of discrimination. Appeals to prejudice and hate make most headway in an atmosphere of fierce and unequal competition for an inadequate number of jobs. Substandard living and the desperate necessity for survival drive men to emotions and acts they would not contemplate in more decent conditions.

This is why the CIO programs of jobs for all, regardless of racial or national origin, for decent pay, for the guaranteed annual wage and for security are a major contribution to combating discrimination.

The nation as a whole, as well as its working men and women, suffers when discrimination is permitted or condoned. Again, this fact has been clearly demonstrated in the course of the war against fascist aggression. The "miracles of production" that helped defeat Hitler and Japan could not be achieved while we permit the skill and strength of any racial or national minorities to be wasted or rejected.

The attainment of full production and jobs for all must equally enlist the skill and talent of all the American people, no matter what their origin or color. The war we fight against poverty, disease and insecurity requires our fullest mobilization just as the war against tyranny does.

For this reason, the CIO took the lead in the fight against discrimination as a war measure as well as a measure of simple justice. Our support of the Fair Employment Practice Committee was unwavering from the very start. The will of six million CIO men and women was felt in the recent Congressional campaign over the issue of the FEPC, is being felt now in the struggle to secure it as a permanent government agency.

For the future, the CIO pledges all its resources—and the strength and goodwill of six million working men and women—to the fight against the mean technique of discrimination. In making this fight, our members realize that the fight is not alone for justice, but in their social and economic interest and in the interest of all the nation.

Deny Care To Soldiers' Children

CHILD care centers providing facilities for thousands of children of working mothers will be closed Oct. 31 unless President Truman acts to continue the centers' existence. The fathers of many of these children are servicemen or disabled veterans.

Child care centers established under the Lanham Act of 1942 to free mothers for war work will be closed because of war-end cancellation of federal grants. The life of these centers can be extended by a Presidential order until legislation providing for peacetime child care centers is enacted.

These centers were set up in 2892 communities to take care of children of working mothers. By last June their enrollment had reached 107,719. Federal funds totalling $44,638,264 had been spent on them.

Wherever local funds are inadequate to maintain them the centers will be forced to close. And this will be in the majority of cases for non-Federal contributions have been less than 33 percent of the total expenditures.

New York and Washington were the only two states that contributed to the child care program. In other states Federal funds were added to by the community or by community organizations.

Now with peace it is said working mothers can be expected to return to being housewives. The fact is overlooked that husbands of many of these women are still in the service or are disabled from the services, and that many of these women are cutback victims, looking for new jobs, and must continue working.

Send Children Back To School, Is Plea

"Our sacrifices in the war will mean little for the future if our children are not trained to make the best possible use of our national resources and to participate intelligently in world affairs," Chief of the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Dept. of Labor Katherine Lenroot stated recently in an article in the current "Woman's Home Companion."

Miss Lenroot asked the help of American women to cut down increasing child labor, and return the children to schools. At present, three million children between the ages of 14 and 18 are at work when they should be in school full time, the article says.

Organizing Auxiliary Needs Special Kind of Technique

By CARRIE CARROLL

Secretary-Treasurer, Los Angeles CIO Auxiliary Council

The Los Angeles Auxiliary Council found one key that opens the door to organizing new auxiliaries. Most union leaders in Los Angeles know the auxiliaries' work on price control, child care, fighting for good legislation, and the good will they build for CIO by their community activities.

We have appeared before union executive boards and membership meetings and found overwhelming support for organizing an auxiliary. However, auxiliaries failed to materialize.

Union officers and active members, badgered by a thousand and one demands on their time, just don't get around to doing any actual planning and follow-up work that is necessary to get an auxiliary going. We finally came to the conclusion that the Auxiliary Council would have to find an Auxiliary member to be responsible for getting new auxiliaries organized and stay with the newly organized auxiliary until officers are elected and the Auxiliary is on its way.

Here's how we did it recently in sunny Southern California:

Vera Warren, newly elected organizer, chose Local 9 of the CIO Shipbuilding Union as her first try. She and Leslie Taylor, executive secretary of the union, decided on a pot luck supper to which union members, their wives and sisters were invited.

All the officers supported the idea of getting an auxiliary going in their local. They set an example to the rest of the membership by bringing their wives to the supper meeting.

About a hundred union members and their wives came to the supper meeting. The men, who had a meeting after, were pleased with the hot meal right in their union hall. After the men left, the women got down to business. Eighteen signed application cards. Speakers outlined the valuable work auxiliaries could perform.

Twenty women came to the first meeting called by the new auxiliary which was publicized in the union paper. Officers were elected; a war activities committee and entertainment committee were set up; two delegates to the Auxiliary Council were elected; and an auxiliary representative to serve on the Union Executive Board.

When the meeting adjourned, the women said they looked forward to the next meeting when Regional Director Bill Smith will install officers, and the campaign to raise funds for the Children's Hospital and other activities will be launched.

On the Air With CIO

"Unity of world labor will be the greatest bulwark for peace and democracy," CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the nation over American Broadcasting Company stations last week.

Speaking on Drew Pearson's radio program, Murray said:

"We may confidently anticipate that world labor will make certain that Fascism and Nazism will never again threaten the peace of the world.

"We may be equally confident that the activities of the World Trade Union Congress will be directed toward the end that the material and human resources of the world will henceforth be utilized not for human exploitation —not for the repression of Colonial peoples—but for the rich enjoyment by the common people of all the blessings which a peaceful and prosperous world can bestow."

Speakers for PAC, Congress and the public will discuss "Congress Goes Back to Work" on CIO's America United program Sunday, Sept. 2, at 1:15 p.m. EWT. NBC stations.

CIO President Murray will talk on "What Labor Expects" on CBS stations at 10:45 p.m. EWT Saturday, Sept. 1.

Col. Evans F. Carlson, USMCR, who originated the Gung-Ho concept of all-out cooperation for victory, spoke on the question, "Should We or an International Authority Control Strategic Bases in the Pacific?" on America's Town Meeting over the American Broadcasting Station last week.

Col. Carlson, leader of the famed Carlson's Raiders, and Rep. George E. Outland (D. Cal.) argued that U. S. administration of the bases would betray the ideals of the Atlantic Charter. Sen. Warren Magnuson (D. Wash.) and Rep. Edouard Izac (D. Cal.) claimed that U. S. should keep the bases.

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . Montana's Sen. Murray recently told a conference called by the Independent Arts and Sciences Committee, that unless continuing full employment was assured in postwar U. S., it would mean the end of our economic system, plus a worldwide crisis, followed by another war.

"I can't agree with Murray's pessimistic outlook," blustered a head-in-sand senator, after reading the Montanan's remarks. "The United States will come out of this war the most powerful country in the world. We'll be able to lick any problem—and if need be, any nation!"

"Yes," countered another politico, "no doubt we'll be very powerful. But what Murray is trying to show is that if we don't have full employment there is a nation that can lick us—stagnation!"

Just before V-E Day, one of our invading armies reached a German university town. On a hill overlooking this town, stands an ancient castle. A GI giving the place the once-over, commented to a buddy: "You know, that castle has stood for years. They say that not a stone has been touched; nothing has been altered, nothing replaced."

The other soldier meditated. "Uh, huh. It must be owned by the same landlord I have back in Brooklyn."

Several days after the Aussies had driven inland on Borneo, they came in contact with a group of the island's natives. With the aid of an interpreter, the Australian commander spoke with an old cannibal chieftain, and their conversation went something like this:

"Chief," said the C. O., "I would like to know if your tribe still makes a practice of eating the flesh of enemies captured during a war."

"Oh, no," the old chief assured him, "we haven't done that for a long while. We used to be the best bunch of cannibals in the world, but then the Japanese came along and drove us out of business."

MIKE STOFKO, table operator. "I've got two girls and a boy. One time when work was slack we had sick expenses. I asked for more work. The foreman said I shouldn't have so many kids. It wouldn't happen with an annual wage."

ANN VETROSKY, machine shop inspector. "I'm for it. Last depression my father worked one day a month, for four years! We had no shoes and not enough to eat. For three years we couldn't pay the rent. It had us all in the dumps."

GEZA KOVACS, open hearth helper. "I've seen depressions, and people losing homes and cars and furniture. An annual wage would provide security—you could always be sure that you could meet installment payments, anyway."

THEODORE DENNIS, chipper: "Unless we have guaranteed jobs for all, to talk of unity is foolish. We will never have the cooperation of all groups unless we have the security that comes from full employment. I'm for an annual wage."

REV. A. A. WELSH: "An annual wage would contribute not only to security but the peace of mind of the people. It makes them more creative, less inclined to worry. All clergymen I've talked to have expressed similar views."

JUDGE HERBERT F. LAUB. "An hourly wage is meaningless unless it is for a definite period of time. An annual wage would help eliminate depressions after wars. I've seen what they've done to people and I don't like them."

WEIR JEPSON, bank president. "I'm against it—it's just a palliative. The foundation of our competitive capitalist economy is the family group. We need a family protective tax, a system which will restore true capitalism."

9 OUT OF 10 WANT ANNUAL WAGE

By FRED d'AVILA

ANN Vetrosky is 21 years old. She was a hungry member of a steel worker's family during the last depression. For four long years—from 1930 to 1934—her father had one day's work a month. For three years they couldn't pay rent. For four years they got groceries through "relief." The father, mother, five children and a grandmother didn't have enough to eat. "It got us in the dumps."

Ann lives—and used to work—in Bethlehem, Pa., a city of 62,000 people that boasts uniqueness in that it has the oldest girls' boarding school in the United States, and yet is common to many other cities in that it is a one-industry town. Steel is the industry. When it goes up, Bethlehem booms. When it drops, Bethlehem hits the cellar.

Ann is one of 10 Bethlehem residents asked by The CIO NEWS if they think Bethlehem people would be benefited by a guaranteed annual wage. Nine out of 10 said they favored it. They were: three Bethlehem workers and one (Ann) who had just been laid off, a priest, a minister, a judge, a movie owner and an editor of a daily newspaper. The tenth, who opposed it as a "palliative," was a banker.

The workers were very personal. They had felt the sharp clutch of depressions. They wanted security. The priest and minister and judge and editor, who all have "annual wages," were sympathetic—they looked on the matter from a human viewpoint. The movie owner was very practical—an annual wage meant steady business.

All of them remembered the last depression. They weren't too sure of the figures—and the best that were available were unofficial, and indicative of the casual attitude practically all government agencies displayed then toward the problem of full employment.

But a sample of what the 30's slump meant for Bethlehem was found in the Pennsylvania Industrial Directory, a publication that lists employment figures supplied by industry, county by county. Bethlehem lies in Lehigh and North Hampton Counties. Here are the employment figures the Directory listed for industries employing more than 100 workers:

1934	8,819
1937	16,607
1941	21,725

The negative side of the picture, as estimated for the Bethlehem area, showed that 8 percent of the workers were unemployed in 1930, 31 percent in 1934, and 13 percent in 1940.

Bethlehem, up to just before VJ-Day, was booming. Its one big industry, Bethlehem Steel, employed about 30,000 workers.

Today it is expected that only 25 percent of that work force will be needed in the immediate future.

Most of the workers who have been, and will be, laid off are members of the CIO United Steelworkers of America. But the problem is bigger than them and the union—it is community and nationwide.

Bethlehem jobs have followed Bethlehem Steel. Here are employment figures of Steel and Bethlehem for four years, for industries with more than 100 workers:

	Bethlehem City	Bethlehem Steel
1930	14,262	9,361
1934	8,819	4,723
1937	16,607	12,428
1941	21,725	17,159

It is easy to see what a guaranteed annual wage in Bethlehem Steel—with pay checks rolling in every week—would do to Bethlehem City's business.

As to the logic and praticallity of a guaranteed annual wage, the CIO Steelworkers in the words of Pres. Philip Murray, "are only asking what others already have."

"A company," Murray says, "pays for land and buildings by the year. It pays its dividends to stockholders by the year. It pays for much advertising space and insurance by the year. It pays its officers and plant managers by the year. It sets aside money each year to buy machines to replace the old. Why should it not plan to pay its wage earners by the year too?"

FATHER JOSEPH F. MAY: "I've seen the effect of periods of unemployment in terms of family and community strain. Sure, I'm for an annual wage. I'm using Philip Murray's speech on the subject at a labor school where I teach."

HAROLD HIRSCHBERG, theater owner. "I'd rather have people come to the movies once a week, 52 weeks a year, than twice a week for six months and stay away six months. How will the plan work? I'll leave that to experts."

DALE GRANLEY, editor: "I'm 100% for it on a human basis. I don't think anyone can quarrel with it on that score. We'd have to have some form of transitional aid to go from no security to 365-day-a-year security, though."

Below, Chicago CIO workers assemble for a mile-long torchlight parade through the Loop that urged President Truman to use unexpended war appropriations for severance pay for war workers.

Sixty Million Jobs Or Chaos—Wallace

By FRED d'AVILA

HENRY A. WALLACE has rung the bell with a stimulating and challenging book, "Sixty Million Jobs," which ought to earn the Secretary of Commerce a shower of both gardenias and garlic.

The garlic will come from those industrialists who hang on to the idea that long lines outside employment windows help keep wages down and help keep the country's economy on the up and up.

The gardenias will be handed out by citizens who believe—as does the former Vice-President—that human beings have a right to decent jobs at decent wages, and that providing those jobs is the surest means for maintaining our "free enterprise" system.

The answer to that problem, says Wallace, is national planning to stimulate private enterprise as well as direct pubilc help, if needed, to guarantee jobs for all who are willing and able to work—along the lines of the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill.

Wallace, in his call for full employment that would yield a $200 billion a year national income, lists two other important "musts" as companions to planning for full employment:

1. Elimination of social tension caused by racial and religious discrimination, with a recommendation that Congress enact a legal remedy making "such social crimes punishable."

2. Cooperation with other nations for the development of trade and the perpetuation of peace, with the flat statement that "irresponsible defeatist talk about the possibility of war with Russia . . . at a time when the blood of our boys shed on the fields of Europe has scarcely dried, is criminal."

Wallace's book, published in the same format as Wendell Willkie's best selling "One World," makes the point that the American system cannot afford another depression like that which shook the world during the 30's.

Wallace points out that failure to plan then cost the United States 88 million man-years of labor that never will be replaced, and a total of $350 billion in manpower and money needed to build 70,000 homes at $5,000 each which would three times over wipe out the rural and urban slums.

What will happen if we let the nation drift into another depression?

"As early as 1943," Wallace warns, "the Dept. of Commerce pointed out to us that, in 1946, we could produce the same amount of goods that we produced in 1940 and still have 19 million workers unemployed.

"If we do not prepare our plans now, with courage and wisdom, we shall eventually experience a loss not of 88 million man-years of labor but of 200 million man years of labor—a loss not of $350 billion in national production, but a loss of more than $500 billion."

Declaring that he has spent at least half his time since the last election studying the problem of providing for full employment, Wallace cites statistic after statistic to prove that the goal is possible and that as a matter of fact most people are distinctly in favor of the national planning needed to attain it.

He points out that in 1940 more than one-third of the nation's 37 million families had incomes of less than $1,000 a year. He urges the doubling of the standard of living of those whose incomes have been the lowest to gain thereby more security for all. He recommends a guaranteed annual wage.

He urges rank and file education to eliminate political ignorance and apathy on a local level as a precondition to successful development of national planning for full employment.

CIO Warns 'Super-Seniority' Court Rule is Anti-Veteran

CLINTON S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans' Committee,, this week branded as "anti-veteran" the ruling of Judge Matthew J. Abruzzo in Brooklyn Federal Court that Abraham Fishgold, World War II veteran, is entitled to a job even though a non-veteran with greater seniority is displaced.

The decision upholds Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey's "super seniority" interpretation of the Selective Service Act. The case arose when the Sullivan Dry Dock and Repair Co., under contract with Local 13 of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers, laid off Fishgold for nine days in favor of a non-veteran with greater seniority. Fishgold sued for his pay during the lay-off period.

Golden said:

"Judge Abruzzio's decision in the Abraham Fishgold case is anti-veteran. In its attempt to place the veteran outside seniority protection for a period of a year, the veteran is exposed to employer discharge as soon as that year is up. It is in the second and succeeding years of the veteran's employment that he needs seniority most.

"The dicision is impractical for employers, since, if it stands, management will be required to remove from its payrolls all prewar employes—including World War I veterans—until all veterans of World War II are at work. Many of the employes so removed would be the only competent ones to do certain jobs essential to the operation of a plant.

"This decision can mean in many plants wholesale discharges of employes not veterans of World War II. This would tend to separate the veteran from the rest of the population and create artificial schisms. A national anti-veteran reaction could result.

"The decision is contrary to the union seniority and industrial relations practices well established through collective bargaining. It will be so unworkable that a better informed court unquestionably will reverse the decision."

Hit City Head's Ban On Labor Day March

The Alameda County (Calif.) CIO Council this week demanded removal of City Manager Charles R. Schwanenberg because of his refusal to allow a CIO parade here on Labor Day.

The council alleged Schwanenberg made the refusal because "sailors in the U. S. Navy are anti-labor and they would start a riot." Schwanenberg denied this, saying he refused a permit because he does not believe "it is advisable to hold public parades except of the military until the excitement of the ending of the war is over."

What else have you got for him... beside those big plans?

There's your son.

Proud of him? Sure you are . . . and you've got big plans for him, too.

But plans alone are not enough. A little cash is going to come in mighty handy to a young man starting his career in 1955.

Maybe those dollars you put aside now will give him a better start than you had. Maybe they'll help him get the extra training he'll need to be a doctor or a lawyer or an engineer. Surely they'll help him through the first tough time when he's "on his own."

He's your son . . . his future is yours. Back that future with series E War Bonds.

And 10 years from now his, "Thanks, Dad," will give you the biggest return you've ever had from any investment.

CIO BLASTS STALLING ON JOBLESS AID BILL

By C. W. FOWLER

CONGRESSIONAL dawdling on unemployment compensation was sharply hit by two CIO witnesses—R. J. Thomas and James B. Carey—in testimony before House and Senate Committees this week. The CIO goad was badly needed, since both House and Senate have been using the hot weather recess to forget about the workers and the veterans and their needs, though still ladling out the gravy to the employers.

Thomas spoke to the Senate Finance Committee, whose chairman, Sen. George (D., Ga.) is none too anxious to see the Kilgore bill pass, and Carey talked to Rep. Doughton's (D., N. C.) House Ways and Means Committee, where Doughton is distinctly hostile.

"All the reconversion thus far adopted has been designed to benefit business, apparently on the long discredited theory that if business make sufficient profits everything will be all right for everyone," Thomas told the Senators.

"So far Congress has taken no direct action to prevent the unemployment which now is upon us, or even to mitigate the effects of unemployment by acting to strengthen and supplement our inadequate state unemployment compensation laws."

Carey started his testimony with a quote from Lincoln—"Labor is prior to, and independent of, capital"—and then proceeded to show how Congress, particularly those members from Lincoln't old party has ignored this maxim.

"We were kicked in the teeth," he said. "We were told that workers have made so much money during the war that they won't need any decent unemployment compensation or migration allowances. Congress continued to pile up measures for the protection of capital."

Main concern in the Senate Finance Committee seemed to be the fear, shared by the Republicans with their round-faced, irritable little ally, Byrd (D., Va.) that war workers might balk at taking just any job the USES tried to force them into.

"That word 'suitable' is the one that bothers me," said Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), "I wish we had a definition of what 'suitable' employment means. The way it is now, any worker can just refuse a job and still get his unemployment compensation."

What Vandenberg forgot to point out, of course, is the fact that skilled machinists are not going to be too eager to take jobs in canneries that pay 40 cents an hour. He and his Republican friends would like to see this reversed—as Sen. Hawkes (R., N. J.) admitted during the hearing.

In fact, Vandenberg, Hawkes, Taft, Milliken (R., Colo.) and Byrd would all like to see unemployment compensation used as a means of forced labor, coercing workers into low-paid jobs by cutting off compensation to those refusing to accept them. This policy is closely modeled on that of the late Labor Front in Nazi Germany, where withdrawal of social security was the main means of dragooning labor.

The same thought is on the minds of the GOP and the reactionary Democratic members of the House Ways and Means Committee. Doughton repeatedly talked about " all the jobs" open in North Carolina—jobs at woodcutting, tobacco chopping, and the like, where the job-holder does well if he gets the minimum of 40 cents an hour. He couldn't understand, he said, why these war workers don't come to his state where there's plenty of work. Privately, Doughton has called the war workers a lazy bunch of good-for-nothings — but that wasn't for the record.

Kilgore's bill is by far the best of the two. It covers Federal workers, agricultural workers, and merchant seamen. It includes travel allowances for war workers. It amends the GI Bill of Rights by increasing veterans unemployment benefits up to a maximum of $25 a week.

The way the hearings are going in both the House and the Senate, however, the Kilgore bill (S 1274) will need a great deal of backing from labor and other progressive forces before it becomes law. Labor hasn't been heard from enough, though layoffs are mounting by scores of thousands every day.

EDWARD BYKOWSKI

Was This in Vain? Tell It to Me Bilbo!

ONE person who is doing something about Mississippi Senator Bilbo's vicious attacks on minorities is Edward Bykowski, a veteran wounded in the Pacific.

Still limping from his wound, Bykowski last week picketed the Senate Office Building in protest against Bilbo's "Dear Dago" and "Dear Kike" letters until the veteran was ushered out of the Capitol area by Capitol police.

After being ordered out of the Capitol grounds, Bykowski went out to picket Bilbo's apartment.

Bykowski, a former Navy pharmacist's mate with the Purple Heart, is a tall, pleasant looking American of Polish descent. For more than an hour he picketed Bilbo's office with a large sign with a bleeding purple heart painted on it and saying, "Was this in vain? Tell it to me, Bilbo—I fought for democracy!"

He wants Bilbo to retract his "dago" and "kike" letters.

"Bilbo," Bykowski said, "claims Negroes, Jews, Italians, Poles, in fact, anyone but Bilbo is undesirable. He has abrogated everything that veterans have died for, suffered the agonies of hell for.

"People ask me why I'm doing this. I'll tell you why. When I was aboard the Vincennes working in the hospital, I knew what it meant for all of us to stick together—Negro, Jew and Catholic. I've had men die in my arms and I wasn't happy to see them go.

"A little Negro boy we called Sunshine kept on passing the ammunition with his right arm after the Japs blew off his left. That's a Negro for you.

"Then there was Danny Boy. He died in my arms, saying, 'Keep on fighting, boys.' His hand opened up. He had been clutching the six point Star of David. That's a Jew for you.

"When I saw the things that Bilbo was doing after the things I'd seen, I swore that I would do my best to fight him because I felt he was destroying the very things we had fought for.

"In the hospital, I kept thinking about Bilbo. I'm using my mustering out pay for this and it's worth every penny of it."

Bykowski, whose own nickname is "Bigski," received compound fractures in four places in his left leg in the sinking of the Vincennes. He was released from the Naval Hospital in July with a 60 percent disability.

A member of Bilbo's staff assured Bykowski that the Senator would see him when he returned from Mississippi.

On his return to Washington later in the week, Senator Bilbo stated that he was "too busy gathering facts on the anti-poll tax, anti-lynch and FEPC situations" to discuss matters with the picketing veteran.

Ask Bilbo Ouster

In protest against Senator Bilbo's insulting remarks against minorities, the Arkansas State CIO Council this week wrote to Pres. Truman, and the New England CIO Office & Professional Workers wrote to the Senate demanding Bilbo's impeachment.

Wreckers at Work on Jobs Bill

REPUBLICAN and employer policy in the fight to wreck the full employment bill (S 380) was pretty clearly revealed by Sen. R. A. Taft (R., Ohio), chief reactionary spokesman in Congress, and by Ira Mosher, president of the NAM, both of whom testified before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee this week.

They were preceded by Secretary of Commerce Henry Wallace, who read a long statement in a dry monotone supporting the bill as the truly "conservative" way of preserving the American system.

Taft, looking unusually cold and fish-like in a new grey suit, attacked the bill on the ground that it meant spending Federal money. Mosher, a very quick and alert specimen of industrial go-getting, took the line that we of the NAM are for the bill in principle, but we don't think it will work.

Taft tipped his mitt—which incidentally clutches several million dollars worth of Ohio real estate—by saying that he would introduce several amendments and predicting that the bill "would be considerably modified" by the time it got to the Senate floor.

"If the backers of the bill are sincere," he said, using the old have you stopped beating your wife technique, "and they don't intend to relieve unemployment solely by Federal expenditure, then they ought to accept my amendments."

In other words, the test of the sincerity of the bill's backers, in Taft's view, is whether or not they will take his wrecking amendments without opposition. Obviously full employment will involve Federal spending when private enterprise can't do the job. That's what the bill is for—and Taft knows it.

Mosher's line is no more subtle than R. A. T.'s. His claim is that no agency, government or private, can plan anything in our economy. Even business, he admitted with a charming gesture, goes wrong on its predictions. Who can deny that government would do much worse?

The national budget feature of the bill, under which the President is directed to discover how much the government need intervene to produce full employment, would result in panic, Mosher proclaimed, because the President would be always either predicting "a boom or a bust."

If it was a boom, the market would go wild and the inevitable bust would follow. If it was a bust, gloom would deepen all over the country and industry's wheels would grind to a stop.

This nonsense was punctured by Sen. Glenn Taylor (D. Utah), who reminded Mosher that his pal Hoover had predicted booms daily during the 1928-32 crisis, and that the gloom just went on getting deeper every minute.

It's Bargain Or Bust, As WLB Fades

It's collective bargaining during the reconversion period that unions will have to depend on, rather than action by the Natl. War Labor Board.

This became evident in Washington this week when the WLB said that it would refer 3,000 pending cases back to the parties involved with the recommendation that they first try direct bargaining, or else submit them to voluntary arbitration or to a shortened WLB processing.

Minus the authority to impose sanctions on parties who refuse to obey WLB orders, the Board is condemned to a sterile existence in a period when its services could do much to ease the tension that is bound to arise with cutbacks and disputes over seniority and other contract provisions.

Under a new policy jointly announced by the WLB and the Dept. of Labor, parties to a dispute must both agree to accept any WLB decision as final and binding before the WLB will render a decision.

If the Labor Dept. certifies a case to the WLB in which there is no agreement to accept the WLB's decision, the Board "will work out a procedure adapted to settlement of that . . . dispute."

DON'T SIT ON YOUR HANDS!

Congress is coming back to work September 5, its summer vacation over and a long list of "must" legislation facing both House and Senate.

Full employment; unemployment compensation; social security changes; polltax repeal and permanent FEPC; better laws for veterans' aid; health; housing and the like are high on the people's agenda.

Despite the crying need for such legislation, despite appeals by President Truman, some forces in Congress are doing their utmost to delay and frustrate passage of the needed bills. These forces are on both sides of Congress; Republican and Democratic alike.

In the House, for example, Rep. Doughton (D., N. C.) uses his position as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to throw cold water on his own inadequate unemployment compensation bill—which he introduced with the greatest reluctance and only after considerable pressure. Rep. Knutson, from the Republican side of the committee, fights against any form of aid to the unemployed or to the nation's purchasing power.

In the Senate, Sens. Byrd (D., Va.) and Taft (R., O.) vie with each other in attacking the Kilgore unemployment compensation bill, which the CIO is supporting. On the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, Sens. Taft and Austin (R., Vt.) sing a duet of opposition to the full employment bill.

Predictions are freely made that both the Kilgore bill and the full employment bill will be thoroughly emasculated before they are passed. These predictions are being made while the bills are still in committee, before Congress has formally reopened.

The answer to these predictions lies in the hands of the voters back home. If they let themselves be heard in Congress now and throughout the rest of the session, they can upset the predictions and make Congress work for security and prosperity.

NO DOUGH TO SQUANDER

One of the most overworked myths of the easy optimism crowd is the one about workers' savings. According to these boys—who see no need for "hasty" action on unemployment insurance or full employment—the war worker's pockets are simply bulging with money that he's dying to spend on the first car, radio, refrigerator, etc., he runs into.

This line is being peddled in the newspapers, over the radio, in the big circulation magazines, and before Congressional committees. It is used with particular effect before Congressional committees holding hearings on the Kilgore bill (S 1274) to give war workers up to $25 a week for 26 weeks unemployment benefits.

The myth is completely belied by the facts, as President Murray showed in his testimony of last week on the full employment bill. Citing a study of typical steel workers in Braddock, Pa., Murray showed that each family had a savings backlog of not more than $300.

This amount is not large. It is not burning a hole in the pockets of its possessors. It is not going to be used for an immediate down payment on a new car or a fancy radio at a fancy price. It's going to be held, as Murray explained, as "rainy-day" money. The war worker who has this $300 in savings (not all of them have that much) is going to hang on to it in case he has to use it for bread and shelter in lean days ahead.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

Len De Caux writes this week again on his visit to the South Pacific.

THE OLD Art Young joke about the relative advantages of working in a nice, cool sewer is not so funny to hundreds of thousands of American who have been spending the last few years in some of the worst hell-holes of creation.

Now that the fighting has stopped, there is less of the fire and brimstone of hell in the islands of the Pacific. But otherwise, conditions continue sufficiently hellish to make a nice, cool sewer seem heavenly by comparison.

It's just 12 hours by plane from the comparative heaven of the Hawaiian Islands to one of the minor hell-spots like Kwajalein in the Marshall Islands.

Kwajalein is as hot, humid and bare as Hawaii is cool, breezy and shady green. In the fighting that wrested Kwajalein from the Japs, most of the vegetation was bombed off this small atoll, and army bulldozers have removed the rest. All that remains are one or two palm trees with half their leaves shot off.

There is no relief from the sweltering humid heat except army shacks and tents which seem only to concentrate and conserve it. After the first half hour in Kwajalein you feel like perishing from sweat-soaked suffocation.

The mildest and politest expression of the feelings of the men stationed here is found chalked on an airport bulletin board: "Welcome to Kwajalein Atoll. No Liquor At-oll—'one beer.' No Wimen At-oll. No Nuthin At-oll—'How True.' Kwajalein—We Hate The Place. You Too Can Be Rock-Happy. Spend A Week And Go Home as A Freak."

Some of the nearby atolls are still held by Japs, long isolated and left to eke out a miserable existence without supplies. Repeated bombings have destroyed their offensive power, but they still take occasional potshots at low-flying American planes.

Guam, too, has a few Japs left in its hills and caves, living off tropical fruits, and a nearby island is still Jap-occupied.

Originally American, taken by the Japs at the beginning of the war, but re-taken by American forces about a year ago, Guam is now headquarters of the U. S. fleet and a great naval base.

Guam is comparable to Kwajalein in climate, but is a large, well-wooded island, with hills and shade that furnish some relief from the humid heat.

When the marines fought their way onto Guam, the Seabees followed close behind and began the enormous work of construction that has transformed the island within a year into one of America's biggest and best-organized naval and military establishments.

With four-lane highways, busy as any in the United States, with its airports, harbor and big supply depots, and with new construction under way on every side, Guam has a working population (in uniform) as large as that of a big American industrial community.

Conditions here and in countless other Pacific islands bear witness to American organizing and engineering genius, to medical miracles in coping with disease and lack of sanitation, and above all to the enormous effort and skill of American labor, in and out of the armed forces. For this has been labor's war in every sense.

But with all the evidences of American civilization that our armed forces bring with them, most of the Pacific islands still remain hell-holes of heat and sweat and unnatural separation from women and home life.

The worker-fighters of this Pacific war are entitled to full compensation not only for risking life and limb, but also for sweating out some of the best years of their lives on these islands.

They will not take kindly to falling out of the frying pan into the sweatshop. In their longing for home, they have idealized conditions in the United Statees, and while they have envied homefront labor during the war, they will expect it to have kept these conditions up to snuff for their return.

Nor will they take kindly to bosses and politicians who undermine American living standards. To ideas of such people for "putting labor in its place" through union-busting, wage-cutting and a "fluid labor market," the returning GI's will have every reason to prefer CIO's program for full employment, higher wages and greater democracy.

4 MILLION LOSE JOBS

CIO Rallies Demand Work, Jobless Pay

BY FRED ROSS

THOROUGHLY aroused by unemployment close to the four million mark, the CIO is holding mass demonstrations throughout the country for jobs and is initiating action for more adequate unemployment compensation on a national and state basis.

One of the first mass rallies was held this week in New York City, where 60,000 workers called together by the Greater New York CIO Council demanded that Congress—when it reconvenes Sept. 5—immediately pass the full employment and the 65-cent minimum wage bills and provide for unemployment benefits of $25 a week for 26 weeks.

The 60,000 also demanded that Governor Dewey immediately call a special session of the New York legislature to supplement any Federal action and aid the State's hundreds of thousands of jobless—200,000 in New York City alone.

The keynote of the speakers—NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, Pres. Joseph Green of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers Union, among others—was that labor was in a fighting mood and was going to back up its demands for full employment.

VETS JOIN RALLY

The responsive crowd included not only displaced war workers but also veterans, 300 of them marching with the other workers. One of the demands of the meeting was that soldiers be paid extra war bonuses.

The day before, 30,000 Negro and white war workers in Camden, N. J., marched to City Hall Plaza there in a job demonstration which the AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods joined the CIO in sponsoring. President Green of the Shipbuilding workers also spoke at that rally as well as Chairman Carl Holderman of the N. J. PAC and Pres. Frank Hartman of the Camden AFL Central Trades and Labor Councils.

Direct action fruits of the two meetings were plans to send delegations of workers to Washington to demand speed on reconversion legislation—the Greater New York City CIO Council to send 500 on Sept. 7 and the Camden meeting delegating a committee of 200 to see Congress Sept. 5, the first day it meets.

LABOR DAY MEETINGS

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was given an early answer to his request to make Labor Day Full Employment Day. Incomplete reports show that job rallies will be held on Labor Day from points as distant as Detroit—including a parade down Woodward Ave., to Cadillac Square—and Winston-Salem, N. C., where a third of the war workers have been laid off.

At Minneapolis 600 CIO stewards and committeemen are arranging a rally for Sept. 6. Plans are "in the works" elsewhere throughout the country to tell Congress it must not stage a sit-down strike on reconversion legislation.

Meanwhile, estimates placed the number of laid-off workers as at least three and a half million within 10 days after the Japanese surrender.

JOB LOSS ESTIMATES

On the basis of reports from 73 labor markets, the War Manpower Commission estimated the number of unemployed at two million, which does not include a million and a half persons who were unemployed when the victory news arrived, persons in service establishments who lost their jobs when the war workers lost theirs, and men being discharged daily from the armed services.

The survey shows that Detroit, New York City, Chicago and Los Angeles—as already reported in The CIO NEWS—and Newark are the hardest hit cities. The survey covered every area with a population of over 75,000 and included:

Bridgeport: 15,400 laid off; Hartford, 20,000; New Haven, 7,000.

Baltimore: Approximately 32,000 laid off in aircraft and shipbuilding, as reported in The CIO NEWS August 27.

Indianapolis: About 15,000 laid off since the defeat of Japan.

Milwaukee: About 29,000 laid off, primarily in aircraft, machinery and ordnance.

Atlanta: Between Aug. 15-25 lay-offs in munitions of 13,500.

St. Paul, Minn.: Since the end of the war about 22,000 idle, mostly in aircraft, ordnance and machinery firms.

New Orleans: Between Aug. 15-25 about 8,900 were laid off in aircraft and shipbuilding.

Denver: About 11,000 layoffs, mostly in ordnance.

Portland, Me.: Lay-offs totaled 15,800 in 10-day period, mostly in shipbuilding.

Additional figures reported to The CIO NEWS showed that Florida was hard hit, with Panama City becoming a ghost town, after lay-off of 20,000, and 5,000 out of work in Jacksonville and 7,000 at the Miami Air Depot. The Greater New York City Council estimated that unemployment among Federal workers alone in the New York-New Jersey area would mount to 150,000 within 18 months.

Regional WMC offices report that 45,000 were idle in Texas, 15,000 at the North American Aircraft plant near Dallas. Unemployment figures were expected to mount to 391,000 within six to 12 months in six states—Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and South Carolina. Already, WMC says, 93,000 are idle in war plants in the six states.

State CIO Councils were rallying their resources. In an emergency session this week the Md.-D.C. CIO Council urged Governor O'Conor to call the legislature to liberalize the Maryland State Unemployment Compensation law.

The Ohio Council told workers not to sign applications for unemployment compensation until Governor Lausche signs a bill boosting unemployment compensation to $21 a week for 22 weeks—on which the legislature is expected to act favorably during the coming week.

Christmas Overseas

Do you want your servicemen and women to receive their Christmas gifts in good condition and on time? Then cooperation with Army, Navy and Post Office regulations in their selection and mailing is absolutely necessary, OWI warned this week.

Murray, Carey Urge Action To Build Sound, Lasting Peace

Action to build a sound and lasting peace, on a foundation that will guarantee a good standard of living for the common man, was urged this week in official Labor Day statements by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. The statements follow.

By PHILIP MURRAY

ON Labor Day, 1945, labor shares the pride of all Americans in the magnificent record of our armed forces, as signalized by the complete defeat of the Japanese and the Nazis. Labor has contributed mightily to these successes.

In the sphere of international relations, labor has also done its part for the continuing unity of the United Nations. The San Francisco Charter has laid a firm foundation for world organization against fascism, aggression and future war, while the World Conference of Trade Unions has made splendid progress in uniting the working people of all countries for these and other common purposes.

But on the domestic scene, unfortunately, American labor finds fewer grounds for satisfaction.

In its unparalleled war achievements, America has shown a capacity for organization and production that should assure the full employment of our people after the war in creating unparalleled prosperity for all. But, with reconversion already under way, there are many tragic signs that selfish privilege and governmental inertia are obstructing the fulfillment of this promise.

The mass purchasing power of American working people must obviously be one of the main pillars of our postwar prosperity. Yet today this purchasing power is being cruelly slashed by layoffs, loss of overtime, downgrading and generally reduced take-home pay, while the infamous incubus of the Little Steel formula smothers collective bargaining and holds wage rates far below sky-high living costs.

Congress meanwhile has been eager and quick to provide profit guarantees and other protections for business in reconversion, but has not lifted a finger to aid the worst victims of reconversion, the laid-off war workers.

There is also a lamentable lack of national planning for full employment, and a tendency to lift production and price controls in such a way as to restore the "normalcy" of unlimited grabbing for the few and depression and unemployment for the many.

On this Labor Day, the CIO calls upon our political and industrial leaders to join with labor and the whole American people in reversing these disastrous trends before it is too late.

We urge the immediate revision of our national wage policy to permit substantial wage adjustments, and to eliminate substandard wages below 65c an hour.

We urge Congress, immediately it reconvenes, to adopt President Truman's emergency proposals for $25 a week for 26 weeks for unemployed war workers, as embodied in the Kilgore-Forand bill.

We urge the speedy adoption of the guaranteed annual wage in collective bargaining agreements throughout industry.

So the American people may have freedom from fear and want, we urge expansion of our social security system, as proposed in the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill. And to end un-American discriminations, we call for a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission.

We also urge an immediate start on over-all planning for full production and jobs for all, for which a first step is passage of the Murray-Patman Full Employment bill.

At the same time, we warn against the national division threatened by plans for anti-union drives and by such anti-labor measures as the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill, and call instead for national unity and cooperation in promoting national prosperity.

In the difficult days ahead, American labor must above all build its union strength and increase its political activity, so that it may make its full contribution to complete victory over all anti-democratic forces and to a free and prosperous postwar America.

For the achievement of these goals, the CIO offers its closest cooperation to all other Americans who love their country and seek its welfare.

By JAMES B. CAREY

Our national Labor Day dawns to find us just emerging from an appallingly destructive war that still has its roots deeply planted in maladjusted world conditions. These conditions are chaotic, consisting as they do of human exploitation, immoral economic jungle-wars, racial discrimination and other vicious practices.

We have paid an appalling price for military victory. It is important to call attention to this price on Labor Day of all days, because it is workers who do the fighting and the dying, while other workers on the home front limit their comforts to bare necessities so that the periodical conflicts can be financed.

Hungry workers will always fight. Therefore the problem can be solved only by the determination of all peoples, in this country and abroad, to eliminate the major cause of war—the hunger of human beings for food, clothing and shelter.

All must be free to work out their own problems, and one of their freedoms is the right to cooperate with others to serve the common good.

The mechanical and scientific ingenuities that the peoples of the world have brought almost to perfection in war, must be directed to serving the needs of all. The price of future peace must not be an endless chain of death.

There Is No Freedom Where There's Slavery

This year means more to us than those that have gone before, for we won the fight to maintain the rights of free men and free women.

In dictatorship countries Labor has no rights; neither has it a voice.

In the United States of America, the Constitution gives us the right to work out our own destiny. Article III, Section I, reads:

> "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their conviction."

No other nation on the face of the earth has a clause like the above, and no other nation is more considerate of labor. This, and our other freedoms, are worth fighting and dying for.

Right to Living Wage a 'Must' Says Truman

"WE recognize the right of every American citizen to a wage which will permit him and his dependents to maintain a decent standard of living," President Harry S. Truman said this week in an official Labor Day statement hailing the contribution of working people to the victory over fascism.

High praise for the industrial production job came also from the Under Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson, Asst. Secretary of the Navy H. Struve Hensel, Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace and other high government officials.

Truman's full statement said:

"Six years ago the workers of the United States, and of the world, awoke to a Labor Day in a world at war. The democracies of western Europe had just accepted the challenge of totalitarianism. We in the United States had two years of grace, but the issue was squarely joined at that hour, as we now know. There was to be no peace, until tyranny had been outlawed.

"Today we stand on the threshold of a new world. We must do our part in making this world what it should be—a world in which the bigotries of race and class and creed shall not be permitted to warp the souls of men.

"We enter upon an era of great problems, but to live is to face problems. Our men and women did not falter in the task of saving freedom. They will not falter now in the task of making freedom secure. And high in the ranks of those men and women, as a grateful world will always remember, are the workers of all free nations who produced the vast equipment with which victory was won.

"The tasks ahead are great, and the opportunities are equally great. Your government is determined to meet those tasks and fulfill those opportunities.

"We recognize the importance and dignity of labor, and we recognize the right of every American citizen to a wage which will permit him and his dependents to maintain a decent standard of living."

Patterson said:

"American workers were members of the great team which made possible our brilliant military successes. It was they who gave our fighting men the tremendous volume of supplies and equipment which crushed the enemy under its weight. For their contribution toward victory, the men and women in our war industries deserve the highest commendation."

Hensel declared:

"The balance in the war against the world's two most militaristic nations, Germany and Japan, was tipped overwhelmingly in Allied favor by the weight of ships, munitions and equipment poured out from our shipyards and factories. Through three and a half years of this terrible war, American workers have stood steadfastly by their machines and tools as our fighting men have stood by their guns. The undeviating support of our soldiers of production has been a mighty bulwark in the fight for freedom."

Favor Mediation

An independent survey conducted by the Bureau of Natl. Affairs, a private agency headed by conservative columnist David Lawrence, showed this week that more than 85% of U. S. industrial concerns, labor unions and other industrial advisers favor creation of an agency to mediate postwar industrial disputes.

CIO, AFL and independent unions were covered almost equally, the BNA reported, with replies from local unions as well as from international union headquarters.

The first question was "In your opinion, will postwar machinery for mediating labor disputes be helpful?" AFL and CIO unions replies were reported 100% favorable.

Truman OK's Partial Child Care Plan

On the protest of hundreds of working mothers, President Truman this week requested Federal Works Administrator Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming to ask Congress for authority to continue child care centers for working wives of servicemen.

No provision was made for the many mothers who are widows, divorced, or for some other reason find it necessary to work to support their families.

Working mothers all over the country had protested at the plans for a war's end closing of the nurseries established under the Lanham Act to free mothers for war work. Federal funds were to be terminated Oct. 31.

In making his request, the President explained that recent appropriations were based on "the understanding that such assistance would be terminated when women workers were no longer needed for war production.

"In carrying out this understanding, problems have arisen where local communities are not able immediately to continue needed centers without assistance. A typical situation is that in which mothers who are the wives of servicemen must continue to work until their husbands return from overseas," Truman said.

South's Editors Hit Race Bias In Congress

Southern editors are overwhelmingly opposed to the recent expressions of racial prejudice in Congress and feel such statements do not represent the true feeling of the South, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare disclosed today, in revealing the results of a poll of 251 white newspaper editors in the 13 Southern states.

Eighty - seven and one-half per cent of Southern editors agree that Mississippi's Senator Eastland was not speaking for Southern editors when he stated that Negro soldiers had been an "utter and abysmal failure."

Praises Baden Appointment

The CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee in N. Y. City this week welcomed the appointment of Spruille Braden, U. S. ambassador to Argentina, as assistant secretary of state in charge of Latin-American relations.

Braden's strong disapproval of the present Argentine regime was clearly indicated in a speech he made in Buenos Aires after receiving his new job.

Salute to Victory!

Total victory in the greatest conflict of all time was forged by a United Nation unstintingly devoted to a common objective—winning the war in the shortest time possible.

On its victorious termination, we salute the men and women of the armed forces who fought so valiantly over the entire face of the earth.

We salute, too, the men and women who backed these armed forces by producing the munitions of war in unprecedented variety, quality and quantity, with record-breaking speed.

Now that peace is here, everyone who had a part in its winning may justly feel a high degree of satisfaction in a job well done.

GUAM—A LABOR MIRACLE

By LEN DE CAUX

Marines stormed its beaches July 21, 1944. Seabees less than a year later had made it the biggest U. S. port in a forward area. What happened and how is told by CIO Publicity Director Len De Caux, touring the Pacific with other labor editors.

"IT'S a labor miracle, what has been accomplished in a few months," said the gruff, stocky Marine officer.

He was referring to the transformation of Guam since the Marines stormed its beaches on July 21, 1944, and American control was secured by several weeks of heavy fighting.

The Japanese seized Guam right after Pearl Harbor, from an American garrison of less than 500. But they did little to develop the island during their occupation. They had only one airstrip, and that in poor condition, and most of their primitive facilities were destroyed during the bombardment and fighting leading up to American re-occupation.

Starting from scratch thereafter, American workers in uniform in a few months developed Guam into the chief nerve and supply center of the Pacific war, headquarters of the U. S. fleet under Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, main air base for the subsequent B-29 bombings of Japan, and one of the largest and most impressive modern military communities in the world.

Guam now has a huge harbor handling more cargo than any other port in a "forward area"; five large air bases; supply depots covering an area equal to 26 large city blocks; four big power plants; eight military hospitals with 12,000 beds; 150 miles of highway used by 35,000 vehicles; communications facilities to handle 12,000 messages daily; a modern telephone system; powerful fortifications, and housing, feeding, medical and recreational facilities for hundreds of thousands troops.

Marine Maj. Gen. Henry L. Larsen, who landed on Guam in the thick of the fighting and who has since become Island Commander, gave full credit to American labor for these extraordinary achievements.

"I can't speak too highly of what labor has done," he said. "It is workers in uniform who have done this marvelous job. It is their drive and energy, working often around the clock and getting every ounce of effort out of the equipment. It's not only the work they have done, but the spirit they have shown."

The Seabees, a majority of whom are union men, landed right behind the Marines. In a monsoon season, with heavy rains turning the island into a sea of mud, they started right in on construction, working night and day, seven days a week, through every danger and difficulty.

These workers in uniform owed much of their success to the tools and equipment made by union men and women in the U. S. Here, as elsewhere in the Pacific, you see constant evidence of how far American free labor outproduced the slave labor of Japan in the quality and quantity of equipment, weapons and munitions.

Much credit is due also to the 23,000 natives of Guam, known as Chamorros. After experiencing both American and Japanese rule, they showed a preference for the higher living standards and greater democracy of America that saved many lives and helped to speed victory.

The Japanese killed hundreds of the natives, imposed forced labor on them and generally proved to be most brutal rulers. The Chamorros had their revenge after the Americans landed, and it is estimated that half the Japs remaining in hiding who have been killed since the American occupation have been killed by native patriots.

Despite all the new evidences of American civilization, Guam is very far from an island paradise for most of the people on it.

Naval headquarters on top of the highest hill are relatively cool and supplied with all modern conveniences. For those privileged to sit on the terrace of the officers' club, sipping drinks in the cool of evening and looking down on the myriad twinkling lights of a magnificent expense of harbor, ocean and island, it may indeed seem a pleasant place.

But most of the troops live in the low-lying areas, where the heat and high humidity are extremely oppressive, and camps newly encroaching on the jungle are rough and primitive. So the GI's sweat and swear and toil and long for home.

For these GI's the war won't be really be over until they're actually on their way home. The news of Japanese surrender brought little evidence of celebrations on Guam. Here the favorite topic of discussion, argument and griping is the point system of discharge, as the customary military life goes on.

Nightly movies in every camp are the chief amusement and are always packed. Scenes of women and love-making, chief deprivation of these all-male communities, bring whistles and wolf-calls and much other audible comment. Mention of marriage draws cries of, "Oh boy, ten more points!" Homesickness is fed by scenes of everyday American life, which attract an audience no matter how lousy the particular movie.

Reactions to labor vary as widely as they do in the U. S. In some of the niftier officers' clubs, and from some of the hundreds of desk officers you can hear the same kind of anti-labor expressions as at an American country club — the Westbrook Pegler line, talk of "cleaning up on the unions" etc. But among the actual fighting men and the sweating workers in uniform, there are widely differing reactions.

On a visit to a Marine Division, recently returned from 83 days of hard fighting with many casualties on Okinawa, we ran into dozens of CIO and other unionists, who told us of their many discussions on labor with their buddies.

There fighting men, who have borne the brunt of the war and are still leading the toughest kind of life, are blunt, outspoken and independent. They look around by the boss or anyone else.

The chief impression we got of these Marines was that they were not the kind to fall for soft-soap or baloney, or to stand for much pushing around when they got back to civilian life.

The most effective anti-labor propaganda among them is the idea they have been stabbed in the back by home front strikes. But most of them know little about unionism, and their minds are open. They listen eagerly to the union men among them, and once they get an idea of what unions can do for them in improving wages and conditions and stopping the boss from kicking them around, they are likely to become the best of militant unionists.

Even among the Marine officers who have been in the fighting, we found more open-mindedness on labor than in most other quarters. A delegation of American industrialists had preceded our labor editors' group to this camp, and the officers who had met them were anxious to get our answers to some of the points they had raised. They admitted freely that most of the information they had received on labor was one-sided and biased, coming from such big business newspapers and magazines as percolate through, and they demonstrated an unusual degree of alertness, scepticism and clear-thinking.

One of these Marine officers remarked: "Why talk of labor as if it were something distant or separate? We've got a whole generation of American labor right here in the armed forces, the bone and sinew and blood of our war effort. We know what labor is and what it has done right here."

Three ways to handle your money

1. POUR IT DOWN THE DRAIN:

Sure, spend it like water. Easy come, easy go. Buy and buy, white market, black market, who cares? But, by and by, don't be surprised if you wind up broke.

2. SOCK IT IN THE WELL:

Not a bad idea, but not good, either. You put $75 down the well today... pull it up in 10 years...and what have you got? $75 and three frogs...which isn't much interest.

3. TURN IT INTO WAR BONDS:

Of course! Put your money to work! It helps the war effort, and the government needs every dollar it can get. It makes money for you: $75 in Series E Bonds now will come back in 10 years as $100. And you've got a swell "cushion" to fall back on in case of emergency. Buy all the Bonds you can—keep all the Bonds you buy!

DON'T FENCE THEM IN

By HELEN KAY

THE CIO has joined with the Office of Education and the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, to urge the teen-age boys and girls who have left school during the war years to return.

In a letter to all CIO Councils, John Brophy, director, urged "every CIO Council to use its influence with the labor and public press and with our union members to encourage the return to school of all our boys and girls. Our young people will best serve themselves and their country by stepping out of their wartime jobs to complete their schooling. Well-educated, well-informed citizens will be needed to solve the problems which lie ahead."

There are 9,720,419 young people of high school age in our population. During the school year of 1943-44 only 5,531,414 were attending school. The number in school in 1940 was 7,708,871.

Only 79% of our boys and girls of high school age were in school at the peak high school population. The war cut further into the enrollment by two million.

Most of these youngsters went to work. There were under a million child laborers from 14-17 years of age in 1940. The war years brought the figures up to 3,000,000 and more. There are no figures for those under 14 who were at work. Just this week the Labor Department wiped out its emergency order permitting 16-and 17-year-olds to take jobs on war contracts.

The CIO Teachers Union (Local 555 of the State, County and Municipal Workers) has advanced a program of a high school education for every American child. Up to the war, the plan was progressing.

In 1940 of those 25 years of age and over, only 39% completed four years of high school, while most had finished only eight years of schooling.

Of those between 20 and 24 years of age, 44% had completed a high school education, while the majority had completed 11 years of education, or had quit in the second or third year of high school.

The CIO Teachers Union has another angle. It is one of jobs. Jobs left vacant by child workers for adults, and jobs in education for adults. For with the growth of the high school population it is estimated that some 50,000 additional new high school teachers are needed. A sad commentary on this new need is the fact that there aren't that many students in teachers' colleges to fill those jobs. 318,000 teachers left jobs in teaching for war jobs or war services.

However, when the school bells ring this September, there will be teachers coming back to their jobs. Whole communities are seeking ways and means to get the youth back into the schools.

Some suggested appeals to the young are:

● Don't fence yourself in. Lack of a high school education will build a fence around your life. Amazing new developments have been taking place during the war in science, mechanics, transportation, industry, government, and world organization. Learn about these developments in high school so you will be a more able worker and citizen later.

● Invest in yourself: Learning in school can increase your economic security, make you a more useful citizen, give you better understanding of the world, develop your leadership qualities, and lay the foundations of healthful living.

● Soldiers are coming back from war to go to school. Thousands will be signing up for classes. If school can help them, it can help you.

Steelworkers To Demand Wage Boost; Murray Calls Formula 'Dead Dodo'

THE CIO United Steelworkers Natl. Policy Committee will meet in Pittsburgh Sept. 11 to draft new wage demands. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who also leads the Steelworkers, made the announcement at a recent mass meeting in Homestead, Pa.

This is the first such conference called under action taken at the Cleveland, 1944, convention of the union. There a resolution was unanimously adopted providing for election of delegates to the wage policy committee. Heretofore they had been appointed. Many of the districts have already met and elected their representatives and others are to complete that task before the Sept. 11 meeting.

The last wage policy committee met in Pittsburgh in December, 1943, and out of it, after extended hearings before the War Labor Board, came the equivalent of an eight - cent - an - hour increase through "fringe" issues. A demand for a 17-cent increase was denied on the ground that it would violate the "Little Steel" formula.

A few weeks ago President Truman issued a new directive which permits wage increases if agreed to by employers and employes and which do not entail price increases, and even permits wage increases which necessitate price increases in certain emergency situations.

"I have been howling to the high heavens for years for the Little Steel formula to be kicked out the window," Murray declared. "Let's agree now that the Little Steel formula is as dead as the proverbial Dodo. At least we are going to find that out very soon."

Wage increases must come because the cost of living continues to rise and the industry is reverting to the 40-hour week. This means a cut of 12 hours pay a week or something over $52 a month.

"You cannot take that cut and live decently," Murray declared. "Nor can any worker's family. It's the business of the employers who have grown fat during this war to dig down into their profits and give you some of that fat."

IUMSWA Names Hero Vets' Aide

FIRST SGT. DePASCALE

First Sgt. Louis DePascale, World War II veteran decorated four times for bravery, this week was named full-time assistant to Natl. Vice-Pres. John J. Grogan of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers to aid him in handling veterans' problems.

Before joining the Army, DePascale was active in Hoboken Local 15 of the union, serving as assistant executive secretary during the 1937 strike in the Port of New York, and in Brooklyn Local 13 of the IUMSWA.

Wounded in combat several times, he participated in the Normandy invasion and the North African campaign. His decorations include the Purple Heart, Silver Star and Oak Leaf Clusters. Receiving 111 points, he was automatically discharged by the Army.

TWUA To Organize 200,000 Canadians

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Emil Reive of the CIO Textile Workers this week at a Toronto meeting welcomed into the CIO-TWUA 15 locals of the Textile Workers Organizing Committee and of the Natl. Union of Textile Workers. The action marked the opening of a campaign to organize 200,000 workers in the Canadian textile industry.

The decision of the two Canadian unions to affiliate brought in 10,000 members. Sam Baron has been named Canadian director of TWUA and will be in charge of the organizational drive, assisted by Jack Robinson and George Ironside, Toronto; Arthur William, Oshawa, Ont., and A. Whitmore, Hull, Que.

"TWUA has demonstrated its ability to serve the interest of the textile workers in the U. S.," Carey told the 175 delegates. "The unoin's splendid leadership and accumulated resources now enable the Canadian textile workers to join in a campaign for a fuller life for all people."

Textile Workers To Abide by Pacts

The CIO Textile Workers Natl. Executive Board this week passed a resolution hailing the victory of the United Nations and stating that during the war the union maintained the no-strike pledge despite provocation by employers.

The board resolved that in seeking to improve the conditions of textile workers it "will steadfastly adhere to its contractual obligations and will adopt such policies as may be necessary to attain these essential objectives within the framework of the laws of the U. S."

UE Flays Gen. Hershey's Stand on Veterans' Jobs

THE National Servicemen's and Veterans' Welfare Committee of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, representing 200,000 men and women in uniform, this week sharply criticized the announcement of Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service head, that the right of veterans to return to their jobs will end with the war emergency.

James McLeish, committee chairman, sent a telegram to President Truman, urging him to issue an Executive Order "protecting the job rights of men in the service" and providing that veterans "who have left jobs to enter the armed forces . . . should have the right to return to their jobs according to the seniority they have accumulated, with full seniority credit for time in the service."

Hershey, in a speech, declared that the GI Bill of Rights was concerned with job opportunities and not with job return and added that the return of veterans to their old jobs was not guaranteed by Selective Service after the end of hostilities.

The UE Committee said that Hershey's interpretation "would seem to be contrary to the law since it was clearly in the intent of Congress to protect inductees during the postwar period."

Labor, too, can rejoice in the victory over the forces of aggression on this Labor Day!

The task before us now is to build a securer and happier peace. Now more than ever we must increase our efforts to bring into the folds of the CIO the millions of unorganized workers in order that the voice of labor will be effectively heard in the legislative halls of the Nation to guarantee full employment and to provide security during sickness, injury and old age.

Organized labor is the greatest guardian of our democratic political institutions and, with the organized workers from other countries the greatest bulwark for establishing and maintaining a full and lasting peace in which all men of all races, colors and creeds will be free from want, free from fear and will participate fully in the affairs of government and industry everywhere.

To this end on this Labor Day, 1945, the CIO rededicates itself.

ILWU Wins Hourly Raise, Pd. Vacation

Fifteen thousand Pacific coast members of the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union won a general five-cent-an-hour wage increase and a week's paid vacation under a Natl. War Labor Board order this week.

An employer demand that the Pacific Coast longshoremen return to the basic eight-hour day from their present six-hour day, was denied by the board.

The union won two-way travel time from the hiring hall to the job in the San Francisco Bay area, and in the Portland, Ore., area where employers had urged only one-way payment.

$21,000 Increase for Employees of Wanamaker

Fourteen thousand members of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes won wage increases totaling $210,000 annually under the contract recently signed with the Wanamaker Department Store, New York City. Two-thirds of the employes voted for the union in an election conducted last February by the New York Labor Board.

UAW in Drive To Boost Pay

THE CIO Auto Workers have begun a campaign for 30 per cent wage increases for workers in the auto industry, firing the opening gun by filing demands for the pay boosts with General Motors and Chrysler Corps.

UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas declared that similar demands would be made on other corporations as rapidly as contract requirements permit.

TRUMAN QUOTED

The UAW told GM that the union is thoroughly in accord with President Truman's policy of wage increases during the reconversion period provided they do not cause price increases.

GM was asked to set aside part of the increase for a fund to equalize wages throughout the corporation, and another part, equal to three per cent of the payroll covered by the UAW-GM agreement, for a Social Security Fund, which was approved by the union executive board.

UAW also pointed out in the letter that GM's profits before taxes in 1944 were $435,409,024—78 per cent more than the yearly average profits for 1936-1939. The union added that the corporation has available to it from government many millions in cash refunds on excess profit taxes and additional refunds in the event that profits fall below the prewar level.

On the other hand, GM was told, peace has brought total unemployment for thousands of its workers, while for others the war's end means a 30 per cent cut in take-home pay with the resumption of the 40-hour week.

Urge Jewish Group Recognize CIO Union

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO Auto Workers, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Pres. John Green of the CIO Shipbuilding Union this week urged the American Jewish Committee to recognize the CIO Office and Professional Workers as collective bargaining agent for its employes. Officials of the CIO union said that it had exhausted every other avenue before taking its case to the public.

On The Air With CIO

A broadcast on job discrimination against the Negro veteran was canceled by the War Department last week.

The program was to be a part of the "Assignment Home" series concerning the rights of veterans to jobs. This particular script, titled "The Glass," was about the problems of the Negro veteran who has fought for his country and comes home to face discrimination in getting a job.

Since similar programs had been okayed by the Army during war-time it seems strange that this particular program would be killed.

America United on Sunday, Sept. 9 (1:15 pm, EWT, NBC stations) will feature several well known scientists speaking on "Atomic Power." Senator Wagner will talk on National Health on Sept. 16.

* * *

Speaking on CBS stations last Saturday, CIO President Murray predicted a new "upsurge of interest and action on the part of all our people looking toward the solution of our national problems.

"This interest and action are the wholesome, healthy expressions of American democracy. They are the right, and the duty, of every American citizen. If he fails to exercise that right and that duty, he is falling down in his obligations as a citizen."

"The age of atomic power puts us on the threshold of mastery of the forces of nature," Murray said. "Must we admit that we can master these forces, turn them to men's benefit as well as to war and destruction, only to fail in mastering the social and economic problems that face us now?"

St. Louis Guild Plans Paper During Strike

THE St. Louis Newspaper Guild, CIO, this week approved a plan for publication of a daily newspaper during suspension of the three St. Louis dailies due to a strike of an AFL Newspaper Carriers local. Six hundred fifty Guild members are among the 2,700 newspaper workers locked out by the publishers following the strike.

Publication of the newspaper was previously approved by the American Newspaper Guild executive board in Chicago. Participating, besides the St. Louis Guild are the Typographers, Stereotypers, and Mailers Unions, all AFL.

The Guild and other affected unions have informed the publishers that none of their members will return to work until their demand for full lockout pay is met. The St. Louis Guild this week rejected a publishers' proposal to pay what they termed "laid off" employes through August 31 and to "arbitrate" the question of pay during idle time following that date. Pres. Milton Murray of CIO-ANG flew here to address the meeting and pledged support from ANG in the fight for full lockout pay for all members.

The carriers' strike, now in its fifteenth day, was called to force the publishers to abide by an August, 1944, Natl. Labor Relations Board ruling which established the carriers as a collective bargaining unit.

The Wise Man Questions Himself

This gem of wisdom from the mind of an ancient philosopher carries a world of sound advice.

1. What income should my family have if I were taken from them?
2. Is the education of my children provided for?
3. Is my own old age adequately provided for if I survive until that period?

Family breadwinners who answer these queries in good faith will know exactly what to do about their own life insurance program.

PAC Work Still Needs Women

By VERDA W. BARNES

Director, Women's Division, CIO-PAC

"WOMEN: A Major Problem for the PAC," an article by Bernard Berelson and Paul F. Lazarsfeld of Columbia University in the Public Opinion Quarterly, points out that "The CIO-PAC is up against a phenomenon that has alternately baffled and annoyed political strategists ever since women's suffrage became a fact. The phenomenon is—women."

A study made during the summer and fall of 1944 of nearly 2,000 women in New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Kansas City revealed some interesting and disturbing facts. In industrial cities women workers did not go to the polls in any greater numbers than did housewives. Only 10 per cent of the women in professional and semi-professional positions and the wives of men in such positions failed to vote, but twenty-three per cent of women wage earners and the wives of wage earners failed to vote.

The highest percentage of people who did not vote was found among the low-income housewives—many of them the wives of union members. Many of these union members were active PAC workers in 1944; our problem then is to get—with the help of the men—their wives, mothers and daughters registered and to the polls. If we do this, along with getting the women workers to vote, we will be tapping one of the major reservoirs of labor political power in the United States.

Labor Hears Farm Views

THE first summer school of the Ohio CIO Council held last week at Antioch College in the heart of the picturesque farming section of the Buckeye State was taught not only by labor leaders but also by representatives of the Grange and the Farm Bureau.

Speakers on the farm-labor panel included George Guernsey, assistant CIO director of education; Dr. Orville C. Jones, former Oberlin College theologian but now with the Ohio CIO Council; John W. Fichter of the State Grange, and Mr. Galbreath of the State Farm Bureau.

Kermit Eby, director of the CIO Dept. of Research & Education, and Guernsey taught the course on developing educational leadership in the unions.

Women Work to Eat, UE-State Survey Shows

THE theory that women in war jobs would want to return to their "place in the home" now that the war is ended has been blasted by a recent survey of women in CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers plants. The New York State Labor Dept. made the survey in cooperation with the union.

Ninety-three percent of the women interviewed said that they have to work to support themselves or others.

All kinds of women were among the 1,114 interviewed. Forty-five percent were married, 39 percent single, and the rest widowed or divorced. They were young girls under 18 and women over 70, women with children and without, women on their first job or with years of work behind them.

IN THE HOUR OF TRIUMPH

Behind us lie 3½ years of deadly struggle in which, with God's help, we have prevailed.

So, today, we celebrate a victory.

After the celebration, what lies ahead?

For most of us, the outlook is a bright one. If we will simply use the brains, the will, the energy, the enterprise . . . the materials and resources . . . with which we won our war, we can't fail to win the peace and to make this the richest, happiest land the world has known.

For most of us, the years ahead are bright with promise. But for others of us—and, ironically enough, their part in bringing victory was a major one—the years to come must bear a different look.

In America today are hundreds of thousands of injured men. Men with neatly pinned-up sleeves and trousers. Blinded men. Men with clever iron hooks instead of hands. Worst of all, men with hurt and darkened minds.

These men need our help. Helping them will cost a great deal of money. We can help them best by buying Victory Bonds.

Far away from America today are millions of Americans. As we would be, they're on fire to get back—to their wives, to the children some of them have never seen, to their jobs.

These men need our help. Helping them will cost a great deal of money. And we can help them best by buying Victory Bonds.

This is our day of triumph. But it's theirs too—the injured men, the men who are still far away.

Let's not forget them, in our just rejoicing. And the one way we can help most to care for our wounded . . . to bring our veterans home . . . to give them a fresh start in the country they fought for . . . to care for the families of those who died before the victory was won . . . is simply this:

Buy all the Bonds you can. Keep all the Bonds you buy.

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . A German philharmonic orchestra put in a request to an American commandant that they be allowed to resume rehearsals. Trying to reach a decision in the matter, the C. "But sir," he added, "I suggest that they be made to understand that they must include in rehearsals and concerts, the works of composers barred under Nazi rule—Mendelssohn, for example."

"A good idea!" agreed the C. O. enthusiastically. "I think it will be a distinct pleasure to hear a man who was an anti-Semite, playing music by a Jewish composer, on a non-sectarian violin."

Argentine fishermen reported that they had seen a very strange monster emerge from the ocean—a Nazi submarine. But soon after this story had been filed by an American newsman, the usual Peron censorship was clamped down, and the reporter had a tough time getting further details. Finally, he cornered an Argentine official and inquired:

"How many bearded Nazis were aboard the U-boat seen at Buenos Aires?" The official disclaimed knowledge of the event.

"After all, the story you heard, Senor, was one told by men of the sea," he replied. "Such men have all attended the same school, and are expert in inventing what you Americans call a 'fish story'."

"I see," dead-panned the scribe, "and were you their instructor at that school?"

"Other billions will be required to provide for contract cancellations and to meet other cost incident to the liquidation of our war effort.

"All this will cost money. We should make the Victory Loan the last of our organized drives, but for the benefit of the country and for the benefit of its citizens, we should continue the sale of United States Savings Bonds, especially under the payroll savings plan.

Laid Off—But Not Licked!

With nearly four million out of work due to cutbacks and millions more facing early dismissal, CIO increased the militancy of its demands that Congress pass adequate reconversion legislation (see pages 2 and 4). Labor Day rallies in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Detroit, Minneapolis, Buffalo and Schenectady, N. Y., Chester, Pa., and Bayonne, N. J., demanded passage of legislation to aid the jobless and to achieve eventual full employment. In N. Y. City, Paul Duplesses, Brooklyn shipyard worker and member of the CIO (below), typified the attitude of millions of CIO members. Slated for a layoff when the ship he's working on is completed, he took his place in a 60,000-strong rally to help fight for more jobs.

TRUMAN BACKS BILL TO HIKE JOBLESS AID

By C. W. FOWLER

PRESIDENT Truman's repeat call for passage of the $25 for 26 weeks unemployment aid bill was read to Congress this week as two committees were working overtime to wind up hearings in a fashion designed to bury the bill.

As evidence of Congressmen's haste—which contrasts with the refusal to even start hearings before the summer recess—CIO witnesses this week were being subjected to a hostile runaround as they sought to testify.

Meanwhile, reactionary Republicans such as Rep. Knutson of Minn. and Sen. Milliken of Colo. matched venom to the unemployed with Democrats like Doughton of N. C. and Byrd of Va. Their main concern—and not just in the back of their minds but out front where they talk—is the threat to substandard wages and to state patronage on unemployment compensation.

This point they take over wholesale from the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers whose latest "News" flatly admits that $25 a week for 26 weeks "is well above the wage scale in many sections" and charges it would "introduce loafing at the taxpayers' expense."

So far, the only counter to this line in the House and Senate committees has come from a few men—Reps. Forand (D., R. I.), Eberharter (D., Pa.) and Sen. Lucas (D., Ill.). Sen. Kilgore, coauthor of one bill (S 1274) with Forand, has testified vigorously for it before the Senate Finance group. In the House, Rep. Doughton (D., N. C.) continues to pour huge volumes of icy water on his own measure, which he introduced with the utmost reluctance before the recess.

Among the chief props used to fight the $25 proposal have been reports and wires from state governors and unemployment compensation directors opposing it. Sen. George (D., Ga.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has been reading these wires with relish all during the week.

However, a midweek count of state officials protesting the Kilgore bill shows that only 19 were against it. Six (Mass., R. I., Conn., Miss., Okla. and Wash.) were reported as favoring Federal aid, either through their governors or their compensation directors. The remaining 23, plus the District of Columbia, hadn't been heard from. Several of the 19 have openly threatened that any Federal additions to state scales would be subtracted from the state payments before they are made.

Truman's message provides good ammunition and further arguments for passage of the bill, but it must be followed up with action by the Democratic leadership in Congress. So far, the GOP and the low-wage Democrats have been allowed to carry the bill almost completely. Now comes Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) with his "compromise," which merely freezes existing state rates as a proposed solution of the impasse.

The strategy of the enemies of adequate benefits has been clear. First, raise a loud clamor against the whole idea of emergency compensation, on the ground that it isn't needed, that the unemployed should take any jobs offered, regardless of the wages, and that they're loafers anyway.

Then, when this clamor has grown sufficiently loud, put out a series of defeatist statements to the effect that the bill can't possibly be passed. Finally, the Vandenberg compromise—and everybody is happy, except several million laid-off workers.

Current reports are that the Senate bill will come out first, though this conflicts with another reported strategy of having the House Committee kill the Doughton bill and then using that as an excuse to pigeonhole the Kilgore measure.

It's the Profit, Not Labor That Costs Farmers Dough

The high cost of farm machinery cannot be blamed on labor costs, a Federal Trade Commission study revealed this week.

The idea, which is common among farmers, that labor costs are the reason for the high price of farm machinery is completely exploded by the study, which shows that labor costs range from only 5.9 to a maximum of 14.6 per cent of the price the farmer pays for his machine.

As an example, the FTC broke down the costs of a combine selling retail for $638. Labor costs were only $46.43, or 7.3 per cent of the price paid by the farmer.

Materials—wood, steel, iron, fabric, rubber, etc.—cost $174.27. Counting the work of mining the ore, cutting the timber, etc., plus the factory work, the labor cost was $221. This leaves $417 to be accounted for in factory overhead, manufacturer's and dealer's margin, freight, manufacturer's distribution and dealer's discount.

The retail dealer's margin is 19.1 per cent and the manufacturer's margin is 13.4 per cent compared to the manufacturing labor cost of 7.3 per cent.

Says Labor Remembers Hooverism

Mass unemployment is here with us now and demands Federal action in the shape of the Kilgore-Forand bill for $25 for 26 weeks bill to cushion its worst effects, Jacob S. Potofsky, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers told the House Ways and Means Committee.

Potofsky testified late this week after considerable delay traceable to the desire of many on the committee to speed up the job of filing the bill in the wastebasket. David J. McDonald, whose testimony was also postponed, was scheduled to appear as The CIO News went to press. Next week's issue will carry an account of his presentation.

"The emergency that all of us knew was sure to come is now upon us," Potofsky said. "Yet only now is Congress holding hearings on this essential legislation.

"It has been said that unemployment insurance is primarily a state question and that the proposed legislation is an interference with state's rights. This excuse for inaction harks back to a philosophy of government which I thought we had outgrown. Labor has not forgotten the economic—or the political—consequences of Hooverism. I am sure that the members of your committee have not forgotten them either."

Fur Union Leader Dies

Harry Begoon, secretary-treasurer of the N. Y. Furriers Joint Council, died suddenly of a heart attack on Labor Day. He had been an active leader in the CIO Fur & Leather Workers for years.

Industrial Peace Meet Date Is Set

A conference to work out means of peaceful handling of industrial disputes, suggested by President Truman, will be held in Washington, D. C., either Oct. 29 or Nov. 5, depending on when CIO officials return from the Paris World Trade Union meeting.

The date was decided this week at a conference called by Secretaries of Labor and Commerce Schwellenbach and Wallace, and attended by Presidents Philip Murray of CIO, and William Green of AFL, and by Ira Mosher of the NAM, and Eric Johnston of the Natl. Chamber of Commerce.

A sub-committee headed by Maj. Paul Douglas, a former professor of economics, University of Chicago, and Charles Symington, Baltimore manufacturer, will decide on details and scope of the meeting.

Named to serve on the subcommittee were: Ted Silvey, CIO; Robert Watt, AFL; Joyce O'Hara, C of C, and Ray Smethurst, NAM.

'Cost of Living' Ain't The Same as BLS Gets Change in Name

Labor this week won its long-time fight to eliminate the price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics as a measure of the cost of living.

Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach said the name of the product of BLS research will be changed to "consumers' price index for moderate income families in large cities," thus eliminating confusion about what the index is designed to measure.

Starvation 'Aid' OK with Kilgore Bill Opponents

The Kilgore bill (S1274), now having heavy going in the House and Senate Ways and Means and Finance Committees, provides for up to $25 a week for a maximum of 26 weeks.

This table shows at what levels the GOP and Democrat opponents of the Kilgore bill, which is backed by the CIO and by President Truman, want to freeze unemployment compensation.

In the Senate, Sen. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) has a "compromise" which would take the present state levels (from a low of $15 a week to a high of $25) and extend them to a duration of 26 weeks.

Study the table, find your state maximum—and redouble your drive for the Kilgore bill as an absolute minimum.

1—The Kilgore Bill (S. 1274) provides for supplemental payments by the Federal Government to bring the maximum up to $25 a week for 26 weeks. The $25 does not include dependency allowances, as in the case of Connecticut, Michigan and Nevada.

2—Present maximum for wage earner without dependents is $22, payable for a maximum of 18 weeks. An additional benefit of $2 is allowed for each dependent, up to an overall maximum of $28. Effective Jan. 1, 1946, the dependents allowances will be incorporated in the basic benefit, and the maximum, with or without dependents, will be $28. At the same time the maximum benefit period will be increased to 20 weeks.

3—Maximum benefit will be increased to $25 if the Readjustment Act (GI Bill of Rights) is amended.

4—Present maximum for wage earner without dependents is $20. An additional benefit of $2 is allowed for each dependent, up to an overall maximum of $28.

5—Present maximum for wage earner without dependents is $18. Additional benefits for dependents are allowed, up to an overall maximum of $24.

6—Present maximum allowance is $20, with a 23-week maximum benefit period, but if cost of living shows a specified percentage increase the maximum goes up to $25, with a reduction of the maximum benefit period to 18.4 weeks. Similarly, if the cost of living goes down, benefits are reduced to a maximum of $17, and the benefit period is increased to a maximum of 27 weeks. The change is in method of payment only, since the total maximum benefit is the same.

7—Effective Jan. 1, 1946, the maximum benefit period will be increased to 23 weeks.

TRUMAN'S MESSAGE PLUGS LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM LIKE CIO'S

A RENEWED plea for jobless benefits of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, plus passage of the full employment bill, the permanent FEPC and higher minimum wage rates marked President Truman's message to Congress this week.

Discounting fears of long mass unemployment, Truman said in the message: "Obviously, displaced war workers cannot find jobs until industry has been regeared and made ready to produce goods. During this lag, the govenment should provide help. The cost of this transition from war to peace is a much a part of the war cost as the transition from peace to war—and we should so consider it."

Truman's message urged passage of the benefits measure "not only as a matter of justice and humanity but also as a matter of sound business." It came as both the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means group were winding up hearings on the measure in an atmosphere of deliberately induced defeatism, and should act as a shot in the arm for the proposal.

Truman also pointed out that at least 15 million workers—in the merchant marine, in the government, and in small business—are not now covered by any sort of social security, and thus they miss out on even the inadequate state systems.

"The weekly benefit payments under many of the state laws are now far too low to provide subsistence and purchasing power for the workers and their families," he said. "Almost half of the states have the clearly inadequate maximum of $15 to $18 a week."

Another step to avoid depression is to raise the present 40 cents minimum under the wage hour act, Truman indicated. "The foundations of a healthy national economy cannot be secure so long as a large section of our working people receive substandard wages," he said.

"The existence of substandard wage levels sharply curtains the national purchasing power and narrows the market for the products of our farms and factories." While he did not call for a definite minimum, as the 65 cents bill now in Congress does, Truman asked for action to "eliminate substandards of living and assure the maintenance of the health, efficiency and general well being of workers."

He also urged that agricultural processing workers be included. "There now exists a twilight zone in which some workers are covered, and others, doing similar work, are not," he said.

Full employment and fair employment, as outlined in the jobs for all bill (S 380) and the permanent FEPC bill are additional musts, Truman said, emphasizing the need to carry out President Roosevelt's 1944 "economic bill of rights." The message quoted FDR's statemente of economic rights from the famous message of last year.

As an additional aid in getting workers back into jobs, Truman recommended continuing the U. S. Employment Service as a Federal service, rather than turning it back to the states as the present law requires. It should be kept as a Federal service until July, 1947, with a $10 million dollar increase in funds, he said.

2. Miss CIO got her prize from Pres. Walter McManamon of the Baltimore CIO Council. The people (below) were among thousands who heard Secy. of the Interior Harold Ickes (right) warn that "labor's stake in winning the peace is as great as its stake in winning the war." Theme of a rally that Ickes addressed was "jobs for all."

20,000 Jobs Seen If U. S. Runs Aluminum Plants

JOBS for 20,000 workers could be provided if the U. S. Government would operate at full capacity seven aluminum plants which it owns and which private industry neither wants to purchase, lease nor operate.

That was the statement made this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a letter to Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion Snyder, in which Murray urged that the government "utilize to the greatest degree possible" such abandoned plants.

Total cost to the taxpayers of these plants was $213,660,000. At peak employment they hired 16,200 workers, but this could be increased to 20,000 if the plants were operated at full capacity, Murray declared.

Thanks CIO For FDR's Memorial

"Deep appreciation" for the CIO's living memorial to her late husband was expressed this week by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in a personal letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The memorial will take the form of a completely equipped children's wing of the new Georgetown Hospital in Washington, D. C.

"I am deeply interested in the living memorial to my husband and deeply touched," Mrs. Roosevelt wrote. "It is a fine tribute to his memory and one which would have been very close to his heart."

WLB Wage Ruling

The Natl. War Labor Board, which is scheduled soon to go out of existence, announced this week that wage increases up to 55 cents an hour can now be made without board approval even though they push up prices. Previously increases between 50 and 55 cents could not be made without WLB approval if they would affect prices.

IT CAN'T BE DONE

BACK TO WORK WITH CONGRESS!

Congress and the voters both reported back to work on Capitol Hill this week. For the Congressmen, the return to work means action on a dozen immediate legislative issues affecting the welfare of the entire country. For the voters, the return of Congress means a renewed and redoubled campaign to see that the needed action is carried out.

Presumably the Congressmen have had a restful vacation. They should be ready to move quickly and decisively on such issues as unemployment compensation, jobs for all, a 65-cent minimum wage, polltax repeal and a dozen other equally important measures.

How restful a vacation the voters had is another matter. During the vacation, the people of this country saw the end of the war they had fought and worked so hard to win. Before the Congressional holiday was over, they also felt the beginning of huge cutbacks and layoffs that have put millions out of jobs. They felt the effect of reductions in hours that cut their take-home pay—with prices still at inflated levels.

Now Congress is back at work. Judging from the stalling and the downright defeatism of the two committees working on the Kilgore unemployment aid bill, and the opposition to the jobs-for-all bill already developed in hearings, it will take hard and sustained work by the voters to get their money's worth—and their vote's worth—out of their elected representatives.

President Truman's message calling for action on these and other bills is positive and useful. It must be followed up by leadership in Congress to see that his requests are carried out.

Whether or not this leadership will be forthcoming depends on the work the voters do now and in the next weeks. Congress has reported back to work. The voters must now report back to work on Capitol Hill with their representatives—to see that Congress acts.

PROFITS AT NEW HIGH LEVEL

Profit figures during the war period, released this week in the War Production Board's report on its activities, show increases that might well embarrass the Congressmen and the NAM spokesmen who are working night and day against the Kilgore unemployment aid bill.

They show that industry increased its profits by 350 per cent before taxes, and 120 per cent after taxes over the previous high figure attained in 1929.

These figures, the WPB report pointed out, were achieved despite industry's policy of minimizing profits through laying aside huge reserves. These reserves, the report indicated, actually increased the net worth of industry by another one-third.

CIO President Murray, in citing the study of steelworkers' families in Braddock, Pa., showed that workers have an average saving of around $300. At their present rate of cutback earnings, they have lost about one-third of their wartime incomes.

No one on either the House or Senate Committee has even breathed the thought that industry might be tempted to loaf along for a while on its profits and reserves, the way workers are supposed to loaf along if they get $25 a week unemployment compensation.

In addition to its profits and reserves, industry has another tidy little nest egg of about $25 billion coming to it in tax refunds and carry back and carry forward provisions.

How about a little carry back and carry forward for war workers—in the shape of the Kilgore bill for up to $25 a week for 26 weeks of unemployment?

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

Len De Caux writes this week again on his visit to the South Pacific.

IN war-devastated Manila, the CIO is a name to be conjured with.

Here amid the ruins of a great city, in buildings that were fought for floor by floor and room by room, in pock-marked, rutted streets, where pony-drawn Filipino "taxis" miraculously dodge American trucks and jeeps, and in unlighted hovels with several families to a room, you can see all the pangs of the re-birth of a nation.

With inflation running hog-wild and wages lagging far behind, with streetcars, lighting and most utilities out of commission, a proud and freedom-loving people are trying to rebuild and advance their democracy even before they can rebuild their city.

Amid all the frenzied politics of forthcoming elections, an earnest group of workers, labor leaders and intellectuals who kept the torch of freedom burning by underground activity and guerrilla fighting through the Japanese occupation, are now building a new labor movement—and using the American CIO as their model.

There are more self-proclaimed "labor leaders" to the square inch in Manila than in any place I have visited.

Former collaborators with the Japs, labor contractors, company unionists and discredited petty politicians "form" all kinds of alleged labor organizations, of which they themselves are usually the sole members, and whose sole purpose is to increase the price they demand for their personal services from employers or reactionary politicians.

Added to the destruction of unions and factories by the Japs, and the other hectic conditions of a newly liberated country, this type of racketeering has greatly increased the difficulties of the genuine labor unionists.

But they have been aided to recreate a real labor movement by scores of CIO members in the U. S. armed forces who have managed to contact them with advice, literature and other assistance.

About a score of genuine unions are now functioning and have formed a Committee on Labor Organization (CLO). Like the CIO, the CLO promotes industrial unionism and serves as the coordinating center of the reorganized unions.

★ ★ ★

Spearhead of this drive is the Philippines Newspaper Guild, whose president, Cipriano Cid, is also chairman of the CLO. He is a working reporter on the Manila Times. Another Guild member, Guillermo Capadocia, is full-time executive vice-president of the CLO and a leader of the Waiters & Bartenders Union.

Other officers of the CLO are Secretary Manuel Joven and Treasurer Martin Bautista, who is also president of the Seamen & Dockworkers Union.

The working newspapermen kept alive the idea of organization during Jap occupation through their social club, the Manila Press Club. Immediately after liberation, they organized the Guild as a regular trade union, with a constitution modeled on that of the American Newspaper Guild.

Strongest union in the CLO is the Printers Union, with some thousands of members in Manila. Other CLO unions include the Manila Railroad Workers, the Seamen & Dockworkers, the Shoe & Slipper Workers, Cigarmakers, Deep Sea Fishermen, Auto Transportation Workers, Cast Iron Workers, and Lumber Workers.

Important link with the farms of this predominantly agricultural country is the CLO-affiliated Tenant & Peasant Workers Union, with more than 10,000 members in three provinces of Luzon.

An achievement for which the CLO claims credit is a recent wage increase for some 100,000 Filipinos employed by the U. S. Army. By agreement with the Philippine government, a minimum wage of 1¼ pesos a day was originally set for Army work.

With soaring living costs, this was much less than a living wage and considerably below wages in private employment. After petitions by the CLO, its leaders now report an increase of the minimum to two pesos a day. The peso is pegged at 50c in American money.

The CLO is looking toward affiliation with the World Federation of Trade Unions and is anxious for literature and advice from CIO unions in the United States. Its address is 2070 Azcarraga St., Manila, P. I.

'Super-Seniority' Anti-Vet Ruling To Be Appealed

PRES. John Green of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers this week said his union will carry the fight against the Brooklyn Federal court ruling upholding "super-seniority" to the U. S. Supreme Court, pointing out that after cutbacks there will be more worker - veterans than jobs in some shipyards.

Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, has declared that the ruling is "anti-veteran," because it places the ex-serviceman at the mercy of his employer after the first year when he is unprotected by the Selective Service Act and separates the veterans from the rest of the population, making possible "a national anti-veteran reaction."

Green was confident that the Supreme Court will throw out the decision, which held that during the first year of his return to his job a veteran is entitled to work even though a non-veteran with greater seniority would have to be displaced.

The Shipbuilding Workers head declared that while the union will give the veteran full seniority "equity" in his job, the only solution of the problem is full employment.

Meanwhile, Bernard M. Baruch, adviser to presidents, condemned the efforts to separate the problems of the veterans from those of the people.

He said that "the solution of the veterans' problems . . . cannot be accomplished except as a program embracing the whole of human demobilization," as he called for the appointment of a Work Director to handle the reemployment problems of the ex-GI and the displaced war worker.

'U.S. Has Stake in Bargaining'

"AMERICA has a stake in collective bargaining it cannot afford to lose. For the right to join with fellow workers in free unions is as essential to our democracy as the right to vote," reported the August issue of the CIO Economic Outlook, in an article on "The Future of Collective Bargaining," which warns of dangers ahead in maintaining that right.

This argument is reinforced by two facts cited by the Outlook:

1. That a strong trade union movement is one of the best guarantees this country could have that a "truly American way of life" will be extended to all our citizens.

2. That a shackled labor movement has always been the first aim of the enemies of democracy.

Warning against the new signs that anti-union employers are hoping to smash labor organizations after World War II, as they did after World War I, the Outlook declared:

"Labor sacrificed the advantages of a strong bargaining position during the war period, through its adherence to its no-strike pledge 99.9 per cent of the time, and through its acceptance of the principle of wage stabilization. Labor's wartime record merits reassurance that industry will cooperate in expediting the changeover to peacetime production."

Leading the attack against labor's collective bargaining rights is the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill, the Outlook says. "The restrictive clauses placed around the closed and union shops, and even maintenance of membership in the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill would prohibit their successful operation," the Outlook warns.

Other instances of the rising tide against collective bargaining procedures are: General Motors' recent punishment of salaried workers for joining a union by putting them on hourly rates of pay. The welcoming of super-seniority for veterans and legislative protection for veterans against unions as a means of setting soldiers against workers. Passage by two states of so-called "right to work" amendments to their constitutions, which destroy labor's right to organize, and paralyzes collective bargaining procedure.

Listed as gains to American workingmen and to their communities since the right to organize has been written into federal law were material things: "The difference between hunger and food, sickness and health."

Some examples given: That steel workers in 1933, unorganized, got 50 cents an hour average. In 1940, organized, they were getting 77 cents. Auto workers, members of the CIO, in 1940 were getting 95 cents an hour average, an increase of 36 cents over 1933.

In addition to wages, there were vacations with pay for some 11½ million organized wage earners; union health insurance plans, sick leave provisions, etc.

Most important to workers was the gain from collective bargaining of security on the job, and orderly procedure of hiring and firing. The right to collective bargaining is as important to the worker, as the right to vote is to the citizen, the Outlook stated.

Picketing Vet Asks Talk with Truman

A LETTER to President Truman requesting an interview with him was sent this week by Edward Bykowski, the World War II veteran who has been picketing Mississippi Senator Bilbo because of his vicious letters on minority groups.

"As I read with tears in my eyes what you said in the papers the other day that 'the bigotries of race and class and creed shall not be permitted to warp the souls of men,'" Bykowski wrote Truman, "I knew that we both felt the same way about these matters.

"And so, my dear Mr. President, I humbly ask for a chance to talk with you for a few minutes about how we can best keep faith with your buddies and my buddies who gave their blood, their limbs and their lives for a free and just America."

"I came to Washington," he wrote, "after reading the nasty things that Sen. Bilbo had to say about the Catholics, Negroes, Italians, Jews, and Poles. I wanted to talk to him and explain that I have seen men of all nationalities die and be terribly wounded in the war. I wanted to tell him that he should not say bad things about these folks, because they had died for democracy, and that was not my idea of how to keep democracy alive in America.

"When Sen. Bilbo's secretary, Miss Topp, told me I could have an appointment with the Senator when he returned to the city, I decided to use my mustering out pay and my pension money to stay here until he came back. They now tell me he cannot see me."

Poll Shows Mothers, Kids Need Nurseries

A MAJORITY of the working mothers who leave their children in the federally sponsored child care centers, which are to be discontinued next month unless action is taken, need the service of these centers desperately, polls from over the country revealed this week.

President Truman last week requested Federal Works Administrator Fleming to take steps to continue the nursuries for working wives of servicemen. The centers were established under the Lanham Act for children of war working mothers.

President Truman's request left out of consideration the many mothers who are widowed, divorced or the sole support of their families for some other reason.

A poll of the mothers of children in the child care centers in Washington, D. C. showed that one third of them were wives of men overseas, and another third the sole support of their children.

An FWA poll in Cleveland revealed that 66.7 per cent of the mothers were the chief wage earners in their family.

In a poll taken in Albany, California where 192 children are enrolled in the nursuries, figures showed that of these 192, 101 have fathers still in the service, and in 23 cases the mothers are widowed or divorced.

1 Terrific destruction in Manila caused by the battle to oust Japanese occupation forces is viewed by Capt. E. N. HUNGER, FASCIST CLOUD ARE CURSE OF PHILIPPINES

By LEN DE CAUX

Starvation wages, wrecked homes, and the threat of dictatorship make life tough in the Philippine Islands. Cursed with reaction-controlled politicians, democratic forces face a stern fight, and look to U. S. labor for aid. The inside story is told by Len De Caux, CIO publicity director, just returned from the Pacific. This is the first of two articles.

TALKING of some of the things American GIs intend to do when they get back, quite a bunch of CIO members stationed in the Philippines intend to devote themselves to making the CIO more conscious of American labor's obligations to the Filipinos. All those I met insisted that I should report how much we have at stake in the explosive postwar situation in the Philippines.

So here are some impressions and facts gleaned from visits with Filipino labor, guerrilla and political leaders of all factions, as well as from U.S. army folks who have interested themselves in Philippine conditions.

ONE's first impression of Manila is that of entering an "occupied" rather than a "liberated" country. The boulevards leading into this city of half a million are covered by a constant stream of traffic, day and night. But the traffic is almost entirely American trucks, jeeps, etc. The Philippine pony-carts that serve as taxis are kept off the main streets. The harbor similarly is crowded with shipping that is almost exclusively American.

On every side are scenes of the utmost devastation, caused as much by American bombardment as by Jap demolition squads. Most of the fine government buildings, apartment houses and biggest office buildings are in ruins. The few that remain standing or have been rebuilt, are all occupied by the U.S. Army. Aside from the Presidential palace, the Filipino authorities have had to move into smaller buildings down alleys in the crowded and less desirable sections where most of the Filipinos live.

With streetcars, telephones, lighting and most other utilities out of commission, the U. S. Army depends on its own telephone system, its own electric lighting supplied by power from American ships, and the Filipinos just do without.

THE next impression that hits you in the eye is the extreme contrast between poverty and wealth, with little or no middle class in between. Most of the great mansions of wealthy Filipinos, Spaniards, Chinese and "white" Russians in the suburbs of Manila are now occupied by high American officers, their clubs, etc. But many of the original owners are now showing up again, with seemingly no lack of money.

On the other hand, 99% of the native population is living in direst poverty on the land or in the crowded slums of Manila and other cities. In Manila, a family of seven to one room is not unusual, houses are in the last stages of dilapidation, many of the gutters are open sewers, and streets and sidewalks are chiefly ruts, pools and gaping holes.

In the midst of all this devastation and poverty, the Filipinos maintain an amazing degree of cleanliness, self-respect, good manners and independence. Almost without materials, they are doing their best to rebuild their city, and they are vigorously reestablishing their democratic life. Politics are in a ferment, and more than 40 papers are published in Manila alone. In the provinces, the peasants are on the march, with mushrooming and militant organizations and frequent demonstrations. And in the cities, a new labor movement is in process of formation.

But American domination of the Philippines, militarily, economically and even politically, is still the outstanding fact. True, civil affairs are theoretically under the control of the Commonwealth government, with its own President and Congress, and complete political independence has been promised by July 4, 1946, under the Tydings-McDuffie act.

It is true too that American military occupation is temporary and an obvious war necessity. But this occupation, and the long U. S. monopoly over Philippine imports, are the dominant factors today in the country's political and economic life and will do much, in this formative period, to determine its future course.

So the Filipinos look eagerly to the American people for aid and understanding. But there is as sharp a division in what different groups want and expect as there is between the wealth of the few and the poverty of the many.

THE feudal landowners with their great estates and countless poverty-stricken tenants, sharecroppers and wage workers; the wealthy financial and industrial interests; the political stooges of these interlocking groups, most of whom were active collaborators with the Japs and now lean to fascism of the Franco variety (there is an active Falange in the Philippines)—all these look for aid and comfort to American capitalists and reactionaries, with whom they are closely linked.

They expect the American occupation forces to be used on their behalf; to suppress the democratic upsurge of the people's guerrillas who fought the Japs and are now demanding a new deal for the common people; to keep reactionary politicians in power; and so to arrange matters that, if independence must come (and many of the wealthy don't want it), they will still be in the saddle and able to remold the country along fascist lines.

On the other hand, the workers and farmers, and their guerrilla organizations that gave the Japs the fight of their lives all through the occupation, look hopefully to American progressives and believers in democracy, and particularly to the American labor movement.

They expect us to demand release of democratic guerrilla leaders, imprisoned by the U. S. authorities while rich collaborators with the Japs are petted and promoted. They expect us to urge the granting of immediate independence under Congressional Joint Resolution No. 93. They expect us to insist on financial and economic aid to rebuild an allied country that has suffered more from the war than has Japan; to aid in the development of Philippine labor unions; and generally to bolster the democratic forces there against feudalism and fascism.

American labor cannot dodge this responsibility. Not only must it recognize the debt that America owes to the Filipinos, but it must also recognize that fascist reaction in such a key country as the Philippines is a menace to American democracy. It must recognize that low-wage exploitation there will tend to undercut American wages.

It must recognize, as repeatedly pointed out in CIO resolutions, that we have everything to gain from independence and self-government for colonial peoples, with opportunity for industrialization and risnig living standards—which will result, in the Philippines, in a greater market for American goods and more jobs for American workers, and in the creation of a democratic bulwark against any possible resurgence of fascism and military aggression in the Far East.

THE real boss of the Philippines since the Japs were driven out is General Douglas MacArthur. Not only has he headed the American forces, whose military necessities permit interference with almost every aspect of Philippine life, but his long pre-war residence in the Phillippines, and his reported considerable investments there, have closely associated him personally with the country's financial, industrial and political leaders.

MacArthur is officially "neutral" in Philippine politics, claims there is no real difference between the two rival Presidential candidates, Pres. Sergio Osmena and Manuel Roxas, except that both cannot be President, and has met impartially with both. But his influence and involvement in Philippine affairs is such, and political tension is so high, that he has not escaped bitter accusations of partiality, usually to the effect that he has "built up" Roxas, the favored candidate of the biggest interests, and has been unduly harsh with the worker and peasant anti-Jap guerrillas.

Outstanding in the reactionary and pro-fascist wealthy group that controls mining, banking, shipping, brewing, landowning, sugar and other major interests, and that to date has put most of its money on Roxas with a few side-bets on Osmena, is the millionaire, Andres Soriano.

Soriano, who is also reported to have financial and brewing interests in the United States, Hongkong, East Africa and elsewhere, was a Spanish citizen until 1941, although he has lived all his life in the Philippines. Before the war he was an open Falangist and personal representative of Franco as Honorary Spanish Consul-General in Manila. During the civil war in Spain, he contributed large sums to the fascists, and in 1939 Franco rewarded him with the Grand Medal of Naval Merit.

Soriano's interests were long represented by the law firm of Manuel Roxas, now presidential candidate.

Sergio Osmena, successor to Manuel L. Quezon as President of the Philippine Commonwealth, is elderly, suave and dignified. When interviewed, he spoke cautiously and diplomatically and with a conscious effort to avoid partisan politics. Although a large landowner himself, he said he favored land reforms to break up large estates, higher wages and similar means of relieving popular distress.

Osmena would say no more on the burning question of the Jap collaborators who still infest public office than that it was "a very delicate question" and that some "just had to take positions" under the Japs.

FILIPINO laborites and progressives support Osmena, if at all, with little enthusiasm, as a lesser evil than Roxas. They regard him as too weak on the question of collaborationists, and demand that he give more vigorous democratic leadership against fascist reaction. As an example of Osmena's weakness, they cite his withdrawal of two appointments to his cabinet at the insistence of Roxas and influential collaborationists in the Philippine Congress.

Tomas Confesor and Tomas Cabili, both outstanding guerrilla leaders who opposed the holding of government office by any collaborationists, were given interim appointments as Secretary of Interior and Secretary of National Defense respectively. But when Roxas, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Appointments, threatened to reject their nominations, Osmena withdrew these nominations and appointed the two men instead to the Philippine Rehabilitation Commission in Washington.

Roxas, when interviewed, suffered from none of Osmena's inhibitions respecting partisan politics. Lithe, vigorous and youthful-looking, he attacked Osmena repeatedly from right and left, with all the fluency of an experienced politician. On the question of independence, he said there was some opposition to it, and gave reasons, but added that if he should advocate postponement his opponents would "seize on it" and crucify him politically.

Roxas dwelt on the archaic nature of the land system, its injustices to the peasants, and the necessity of reform to head off socialism and communism. He spoke of high living costs and said wages should be raised, but was not too specific or well-informed on the wage question.

Roxas said the tenants' share of the crop should be increased from 50% to two-thirds, and that large estates should be bought by the government, divided and sold on easy terms to the peasants. He claimed credit for the clause placed in the constitution by Manual Quezon authorizing expropriation of large land holdings and public utilities.

Despite such public expressions, which they regard as "pure demagogy" directed toward voters who have nothing to lose but their poverty, Filipino laborites and progressives are bitterly opposed to Roxas. They consider him not only the candidate of facist reaction, personally linked with all the wealthiest interests, but also as a notorious collaborator with the Japs.

Roxas remained in the Philippines after Japanese occupation and later became a member of the Jap puppet government of Jose Laurel. He drafted the puppet government constitution and was chairman of the important Economic Planning Board. When the Americans landed on Leyte, Roxas was publicly quoted as urging the puppet government to declare war on the United States.

But when most members of the puppet government were captured, Roxas was released on General MacArthur's personal guarantee, and testimonials to him were arranged from some Americal officers who had commanded Filipino guerrillas.

Roxas excuses his actions actions during the Japanese occupation on grounds similar to those of Marshal Petain in France, and claims to have been the "spiritual leader" of the anti-Jap guerrillas. He is now President of the Senate, owns three of the leading daily papers, and influences a number of others through control of a large part of the scarce paper supply.

7 Madison Square was the focal point for all CIO unions in Greater New York. Local 1225 came out in force from Brooklyn. The demands were: jobs for all, that Congress immediately pass the full employment and the 65-cent minimum wage bills and provide for unemployment benefits of $25 for 26 weeks. The 60,000 who rallied there urged their Governor to call a special session of the New York Legislature to supplement any federal action and aid the State's hundreds of thousands of jobless. There were 200,000 in New York City alone.

LAID OFF—BUT NOT LICKED!

THE first thing on their minds is, of course, another job. And they come down to the union to see what can be done. Every morning there's a new bunch waiting to get in when the union opens up at 8:45. Fifty a day make it now. So far 800 have registered with Local 1225 of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers. Three hundred were placed in jobs through the union's efforts. Others were shown how to apply for unemployment compensation benefits, and those in need were sent to Personal Service for help in getting immediate relief. Laid-off members of this local elected a job dispatcher and a committee to find jobs, and all available means of helping members through reconversion layoffs.

By noon the place looks like a storm had swept through it. About 5,000 workers from Local 1225 have been laid off to date. During the war the local had organized 140 shops in the Brooklyn area. These shops employed 12,000 workers. They were small shops mostly, working on secondary contracts. Now 22 are shut down completely. They were mostly small ones. Some may open again. The metal shops are waiting for brass. They don't know about the optical ones. But other shops which employed 1,500 are down to 250, like the Murray Switch Co. And the union had to do something.

They did. They elected Bob Pagnatto as Job Dispatcher. Bob went about calling up all the 140 shops, and getting their immediate status. Some jobs were opening up. Also the shop stewards put in calls, and that's how 300 people were placed.

Bob Pagnatto worked in one of those shops not long ago himself. He worked at Baumer Spring & Hinge, and he knows how immediate the problem is about jobs. "The cost of living was too high for us to have much in savings," he said. Each applicant is haunted by the fear of the hungry thirties. With some it's an immediate need for help. The grocers and landlords won't wait.

Even with a committee of laid-off members helping him, Bob has his hands full. "We've been trying to discourage them from coming so early," he said. "They begin to arrive as early as 8 o'clock. I have to wait until the bosses get in—which isn't until 9 or 10—before I can get anything done."

Pagnatto is worried about many things in addition to jobs. He's worried about pay cuts, which are cropping up in all shapes and forms in all shops. There are pay cuts for men as well as women. There are pay cuts through reduction in hours. There are pay cuts through transfers from one job to another, one classified as skilled, the other as unskilled.

A sample of this was David Thomas, who came to register. He is a screw machine set-up man (a machinist). He was working at American Safety Razor for $1.12 an hour. He was offered a job at 70 cents an hour. "They're building up to a depression," he said.

Pasquale Mazzucca was laid off at the Bridge Metal Plant in Brooklyn. He used to work 58 hours a week. "But with living costs so high, I couldn't save any money." He was offered a job at 65 cents an hour, for 40 hours a week. "How can I support five people on that? I wish the government would do something for working people—make work steady."

Pasquale was a skilled shoemaker. "Even with 15 years' experience in ladies' shoes, I was never able to make a living. I was always looking for a better job. And during the depression, I used to wait in lines for coffee and doughnuts." He picked up his hand to show how meekly some held their cups for their coffee and never said a word. "I want my coffee on my own table," said Pasquale.

That's what Local 1225 wants, too.

Congress has returned! It is hoped during their vacation they have realized that the pressing problem the people are confronted with is reconversion and jobs. There is an overwhelming demand for passage of the full employment bill. American workers and returning soldiers want work at a higher wage level. That is a MUST necessity. What private enterprise cannot do, the Government must do.

The unemployment insurance bill must be enacted as proposed by the CIO. The hypocritical chant about state rights is a subterfuge. The war was fought not on the basis of states rights but by Americans from every state for security and freedom. It is the Nation's obligation to see to it that the necessary transition security is provided for both returning soldiers and unemployed production workers.

Our gallant men of the armed forces crushed the enemy with weapons made and transported by the soldiers of production. America surprised the world in production for war. We can and we must create jobs and security for all in peace. We cannot go backward—it is forward America to the port of the Four Freedoms.

3 State CIO Conventions To Meet

Three State CIO Councils have scheduled conventions to be held within the next few weeks, following the relaxation of restrictions by the Office of Defense Transportation on rules governing conventions.

The Washington State CIO Council will hold its annual convention in Bellingham, Sept. 21, and the Vermont Council's convention will meet Sept. 22-23 in Rutland. On October 6-7, the Oregon Council will convene in Eugene, Ore.

Under the new ODT rules there is no limit on the number of persons who can attend a convention if they come from within the same state in which the convention is held. Only limitation on attendance is that not more than 25 persons may attend from outside the state, including speakers and guests.

30,000 Vote CIO In Bay State

Thirty thousand workers in the shipbuilding, textile and steel industries of Massachusetts have voted for the CIO in recent elections, reports the State CIO Council. Here are some of the outstanding victories:

The Marine & Shipbuilding Workers won an election at the Fore River shipyard in Quincy, one of the citadels of company unionism in the U. S., bringing 15,000 production and maintenance workers into the CIO, in an NLRB poll carried by a majority of nearly 2,000 votes.

The CIO Steelworkers won an election held among more than 2,300 eligible workers at the Whitin Machine Co., Whitinsville.

Leather Workers Vote for CIO

The NLRB has certified the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Union as collective bargaining agent for 31 leather companies represented by the Chicago Luggage & Leather Goods Manufacturers Assn. The CIO union carried 505 votes and the AFL Luggage Workers 157.

Seamen Get $45 Pay Boost

A BASIC wage increase of $45 a month covering some 100,000 seamen was ordered last week by the Natl. War Labor Board. It takes effect Oct. 1, when the decision of the Maritime War Emergency Board eliminating all bonuses is due to be applied.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union in a wire sent to NMU officials in all ports called the increase a "step in the right direction" but said "under no circumstances does it represent the union's full demands." The union will continue its struggle for the 40-hour week and other demands through collective bargaining, he declared.

"The union feels the Board did not do full justice to the seamen's demands," the wire stated. "The ships must sail. The boys must be returned. The union recognizes this responsibility.

"But we say the WLB let the seamen down. We intend to continue to fight until seamen get the same rights as workers ashore."

UNION DEMANDS

The demands of the NMU before the WLB included a 55 cents minimum hourly wage for ordinary seamen whose base pay had been 34½ cents an hour; comparable adjustments for other ratings, time and a half for Saturday and double time for Sunday.

In addition to the NMU, the WLB directive affects two other CIO affiliates—the American Communications Assn., and the Marine Cooks & Stewards—in addition to two AFL seamen's unions and the independent Marine Firemen, Oilers & Watertenders.

Hosiery Workers To Vote on Strike

STEPS are being taken to hold a strike vote in the entire organized full-fashioned hosiery and commercial finishing industries, the CIO American Federation of Hosiery Workers announced this week. The decision to hold the strike referendum was voted unanimously by the union's Natl. Executive Board.

The action was made necessary, AFHW Pres. Alexander McKeown said, because the major employers' group, the Full-Fashioned Hosiery Manufacturers Assn., had refused to meet any but a few minor demands of the union in negotiations for a renewal of the two-year agreement which expired August 31.

McKeown accused both the Association and independent manufacturers of being "blind to the real needs of the hosiery workers."

Fifty of the Federation's branches with nearly 20,000 members voted in a nationwide referendum to reject the meager proposals of the employers.

"The organized hosiery worker felt keenly that the few cents and minor concessions offered by the mills were totally inadequate to meet the rise in prices," the union stated. The workers have received no pay increases since the contract went into effect in 1943.

"Many of our workers have been and still are earning less than 60 cents an hour even though their jobs require considerable skill," McKeown declared.

The union is asking for a 10 cents increase and a 65 cents minimum. Employers have offered an increase averaging 3 cents and a 55 cents minimum.

Minn. Unions File Strike Notices

Six strike notices involving CIO unions in Minnesota, in protest against the stiffening attitude of employers since V-J day, were filed last week with state and federal authorities, reports the Minnesota CIO Council.

Unions involved are Local 1139, CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Local 1139, Local 25, CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; Branch 38, Federation of Hosiery Workers; and Local Industrial Union 478 in Austin, which filed three strike notices against a dairy, a grocery store association and eight restaurants.

STAINLESS STEELS FOR THE TOUGH JOBS OF INDUSTRY

Stainless steels do the tough jobs of industry. Their superior resistance to corrosion and oxidation and their remarkable strength-weight-ratio, make them valuable in many applications.

Navy to CIO 'Well Done'

Thanks for a well-done job were tendered the CIO this week by Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal in a letter to CIO President Murray. Forrestal wrote:

"On this day of final victory I am sending to the unions in your Congress which have worked most closely with the Navy a special letter of gratitude.

"May I at the same time extend to you and all of the national officers the Navy's thanks for a tough job well done."

WORLD UNITY NEEDS LABOR

The CIO will push demands for increased labor participation in world peace machinery at the Paris World Trade Union Conference, CIO President Murray wrote this week in New Times, official Soviet trade union journal. Major excerpts from his article are reprinted here.

By PHILIP MURRAY

IT WAS with deep satisfaction that the CIO participated in the London World Trade Union Conference and in the unanimity of its resolutions and decisions. Since that Conference it has been a source of gratification to me personally to serve on the Administrative Committee which the Conference designated to carry out certain tasks.

Murray Tells Soviet Workers CIO Pushes International Action To Build Permanent Peace

The unions affiliated to the CIO and its subordinate organizations have examined the documents, held meetings, and our National Office is receiving resolutions of approval. The recent visit of the Soviet Trade Union delegation, headed by Vassilli Kuznetsov, was a practical example for our members of the advantages of international cooperation. The membership of the CIO is determined to continue its building of international friendship.

At its meeting in July of this year, the CIO Executive Board discussed the Draft Constitution of the World Trade Union Federation, approved it, and voted to send to Paris a delegation consisting mainly of the Vice-Presidents of CIO. At the same time, the Executive Board instructed the delegation to vote for affiliation of the CIO with the Federation.

Our delegation will attend the Paris Conference, confident that the next step will be taken on the road to world trade union unity. A useful program of work has been laid out.

A strong World organization of trade unions will then be born, and the efforts of all of us must be devoted to making it as all-inclusive as possible. Disunity, the curse of previous world organizations, must be avoided.

It is with great satisfaction that I learn that in addition to the CIO delegation there will also be present at the Paris Congress representatives of five Railroad Brotherhoods: the Trainmen, the Conductors, the Firemen and Enginemen, the Signalmen, and the Train Dispatchers.

The Draft proclaims as a prime purpose of the Federation: "To organize and unite within its ranks the trade unions of the whole world, irrespective of considerations of race, nationality, religion or political opinion."

We must secure the adhesion to the Federation not only of the large industrial countries, but also as many as possible of the small countries, including the colonial and semi-colonial areas. Well learned by the world has been the lesson that oppressive conditions in one country act as a source of infection for all countries. The development of strong trade unions is the guarantee of progress toward higher living standards and eventual independence.

One of the most important matters to be brought before the Congress is the report which the delegates will receive of the work of the Administrative Committee appointed by the previous conference. Included in that report will be "Representation of World Labor in International Agencies and Organizations."

In San Francisco, in accordance with the instructions of the Conference, the Administrative Committee put forward its demands to the Steering Committee of the United Nations Conference. It met with little success. It will be the duty of the Paris Conference to discuss this result and decide what further measures should be taken to impress on the governments of the United Nations the need for the representatives of 60 million organized workers to have the right to participation in all world organizations which are deciding the fate of the workers.

The CIO expects that the Paris Congress will reiterate with all the force it can command the right of the World Federation of Trade Unions to be heard on all questions of international security, and to insure that the point of view of trade unions is directly presented by their own representatives in the Social and Economic Council. For this there can be no adequate substitute.

WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP

CIO delegates this week were preparing to fly or sail to France for the World Trade Union Federation Conference scheduled in Paris for Sept. 25. Pressure of work, connected with reconversion and other problems here, will keep CIO Pres. Murray and UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas away from the meetings, which are called to ratify the draft constitution and finally set up the WFTU.

Already in Paris is Sidney Hillman, head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who will lead the CIO delegation. Other delegates will include the CIO vice-presidents, who attended the London meeting last year, CIO Secretary-Treasurer James B. Carey and General Counsel Lee Pressman. Michael Ross, newly appointed director of the CIO's International Affairs Dept., will go ahead of the delegates to help in preliminaries.

One delegate will be going from Canada, according to an ALN report. Decision was taken after a vote in the Canadian Congress of Labor (CCL), which is made up of CIO and Canadian national unions, to attend. The delegate will be Pat Conroy, secretary of the CCL. The alternate will be C. H. Millard, head of the Steelworkers in Canada.

Labor in Brazil

Brazil's new reorganized trade union movement will be represented in Paris, according to a report from the news service of the Confederation of Latin-American Workers (CTAL). Three delegates will go from the Workers Unification Movement (MUT). This is the first time that Brazilian workers have been permitted contact with workers organizations in other countries.

Cuba Ratifies

Cuban labor has already ratified the draft construction of the WFTU drawn up at the preliminary meetings in London, Paris and San Francisco last year and early this year. Angel Cofino, who was Cuba's delegate to London and is a leader of the Cuban Confederation (CTC) will attend the Paris meeting.

Australian Delegate

The WFTU can make a big contribution to solving problems of women workers in industry, Mrs. Jessie Street, WFTU delegate from the Australian Amalgamated Ironworkers and Munitions Workers Union told ALN in a recent interview in New York.

Mrs. Street said that she hoped the WFTU would press for full carrying out of the World Charter's declarations of equality of opportunity for men and women. Women must be given jobs, she said, if we are to have full employment. "With the enormous demand for consumers goods, houses and social security in every country there should be no difficulty on the part of any nation in fulfilling this pledge."

CIO News Coverage

Full coverages of the Paris meeting will be offered CIO News readers through stories from Len De Caux, CIO publicity director, who will attend. De Caux has just returned from a month's trip to U. S. bases in the Pacific.

Farmers Hear of CIO

Farmers at the Tuscarawas County Fair in Ohio carried away some 100,000 pieces of CIO and PAC literature from the CIO-PAC booth there recently.

The booth displayed products made by CIO members in plants in Tuscarawas County. Through the distribution of literature at the booth many people received factual information on the CIO which they would not get in any other way.

As a result local leaders of the Grange and Farm Bureau have asked PAC people to speak at their meetings and the 16th Congressional District CIO-PAC plans to have similar booths at later County fairs in the district.

MAGNESIUM

destined to lighten labor and free moving machines from deadly weight

Magnesium is the metal that makes the front pages of today's newspapers because it is news. So light a metal—one-quarter the weight of steel and a full third lighter than aluminum—will long continue to be news because it is the Metal of Motion whose mission is to free the world from the hampering and fatiguing effects of dead-weight. Now that it has fulfilled its wartime duties it is readily available to all industry and to ease labor wherever tools are used.

Dow is the pioneer producer of this metal that is destined to change our lives, recovering it from ocean water at the great Texas plants and also from Michigan brine. Dow is likewise the developer of Dowmetal Magnesium Alloys and operates foundries and plants for their fabrication. These achievements with magnesium are noteworthy examples of Dow's capacity to advance industry through outstanding developments in chemical engineering.

Low Pay Shops, Laundries Fight Jobless Aid Bill

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer,
CIO Auxiliaries

HOW tough a situation faces women workers in the next few months is clear from the testimony on the Kilgore bill to increase maximum benefits to the unemployed to $25 for 26 weeks.

T. C. Sperry representing the National Retail Dry Goods Assn. opposed the bill because he said sales girls who had left retail stores for war jobs would get more from unemployment compensation under the bill than their pay would amount to in their old jobs.

DON'T WORK FOR FUN

Women care though—in spite of the misleading propaganda that women just work for pin money and have no business outside the home. Two recent studies by the U. S. Women's Bureau have underlined once again the fact that women work because they have to support themselves and to contribute to the support of their families.

In the Baltimore area of Maryland, 80 per cent of the women employed want postwar jobs and 9 out of every 10 must work to support themselves and others. Twice as many women as before the war want to work in manufacturing and Government jobs. Higher pay is the principal reason. Average weekly take-home in war plants was $34; in stores and laundries $21.

A N. Y. State survey, conducted in cooperation with the CIO Electrical Radio Machine Workers, reveals a similar situation. Seven out of every ten married women and nine out of every ten single women want jobs after the war. They need jobs to support themselves and to help their families.

ANOTHER BLOW

Unemployment and pay cuts resulting from transfers to substandard jobs are not the only headache women workers face. Discontinuance of the wartime child care program as of Oct. 31 is a terrific blow to the working mothers. Studies of the financial responsibilities of mothers using the centers have shown that over half of them are the sole support of their families. A high percentage of them also are wives of servicemen and very few will have their husbands home and at work by Oct. 31.

President Truman has announced that he has asked General Fleming to ask Congress for authority "to continue the centers necessary for servicemen's wives." We do not think that legislation is necessary. We believe that John W. Snyder, director of War Mobilization and Reconversion, could direct the Federal Works Agency to extend the time that centers may operate to meet war-created child-care needs. Write Mr. Snyder now at the White House, Washington 25, D. C., urging him to take this step.

Big Business Ganging Up On Labor, Says UE Pamphlet

BIG business is accused of planning to take advantage of reconversion unemployment to weaken unions, depress wages and increase prices, in a new 32-page pamphlet, "UE Fights for Job Security," issued this week by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The union estimates that 465,000 workers in the radio, electrical and machine industry may be jobless in the postwar period.

"Foreseeing that the reconversion period would present many difficulties to workers, UE made several offers to the largest companies in our industry to cooperate to minimize the effects of unemployment during the reconversion period and to promote fullest production and employment in the postwar period," the pamphlet states. "These companies repeatedly rejected UE's proposals."

Five of the largest companies —General Electric, Westinghouse, Western Electric, RCA and General Motors (Electrical Division) — employ 50 per cent of the workers in the industry, the pamphlet states.

"These large companies are interested only in maintaining high profits. This they are hoping to do, despite the pious protestations of one or another company spokesman, by cutting wages and by increasing the prices of their products.

"The results of such a policy are a low purchasing power and a low volume of production leading to continuing mass unemployment —conditions which big business expects to use to still further reduce wages."

After vigorously expressing opposition "to policies and plans which big business is making for the postwar world," the UE proposes a program "which will make full use of the productive capacity and manpower of the nation."

The program calls for:

1. A general 20 percent wage increase to make up for the reduction in hours, downgrading and higher cost of living.
2. A 65c an hour national minimum wage.
3. Unemployment benefits of $25 a week for 26 weeks through federal legislation.
4. Use of the facilities of government-owned plants to maintain high employment levels, by government operation if necessary.
5. A planned reconversion program which will ensure the speediest resumption of civilian production at wartime employment levels.
6. Passage of the Wagner-Murray Full Employment Bill to guarantee every worker the right to a job.
7. Establishment of River Valley Authorities for the development of economically backward river areas.
8. Strengthening of social security benefits through the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill.
9. Severance pay for laid-off workers.

The People's Health

THE plan for Federal Health Insurance has been outlined in an attractive 16-page pamphlet, "For the People's Health," issued by the Physicians Forum, Dr. Ernest P. Boas, chairman. Crocket Johnson, creator of the comic strip Barnaby, illustrated the pamphlet.

"For the People's Health" sets forth the plan for health insurance embodied in the labor-supported Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill and shows how it will provide for extension of the present Social Security law to include payment of doctors' and hospital bills and for construction of hospitals where needed.

"To have the full program of national health insurance and other benefits of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, you, and all the people you know, will have to get behind it," declares the pamphlet.

"For the People's Health was published as a public service by the Physicians Forum, 510 Madison Ave., New York 22, N. Y. It was prepared by the Pamphlet Press of Reynal & Hitchcock, Inc., publishers.

UAW Program Calls For 10 Million Cars a Year

JUST before V-J Day, a 16-page illustrated pamphlet giving the official UAW-CIO postwar program for the automotive industry was issued under the title, "When War Ends." Although its title is a bit out of date now, the proposals advanced in it are not. The program was worked out by the UAW executive board.

UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas warns in the foreword that the interests of worker and farmers are in grave danger as part of a deliberate plot by some industrialists, particularly the leaders of the automotive industry, "to foster and create unemployment, to do away with collective bargaining and to destroy the living standards won by our organized workers and working farmers to protect them in time of need."

Calling for the annual production of ten million cars by 1950, and the employment of one million workers in the industry, the pamphlet shows how this will result in the employment of another five million workers in related industries.

"When War Ends" was prepared for the UAW by Pamphlet Press, a division of the publishing firm of Reynal & Hitchcock. Copies (in quantities) may be obtained from the UAW-CIO Education Dept., 1324 Maccabees Bldg., Detroit 2, Mich. Quantities up to 500 may be obtained from Pamphlet Press, 8 West 40 St., New York 18, N. Y.

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . Some months ago YANK, the doughboys' magazine, asked this question of its GI readers: "What changes would you like to see made in postwar America?" . . . Just before V-E Day, a page of answers was published, the gist of which was that the Yanks on the war front wanted materialization on the home front of the issues they've been fighting for.

Our soldiers expressed a special desire for prejudice of all kinds to be blotted out for good, so that every American would get the kind of break promised in our Constitution. . . . When the issue containing the letters-of-answer arrived here, a U. S. official who is a real Yankee Doodle Dandy, read it with great relish. An aide remarked: "I see where some of the boys make a point of insisting that living standards for everyone be raised."

To which the official, chuckling with pleasure, replied: "Yes—our soldiers overseas better watch out, though, or some of our politicians might call them 'radical foreigners,' and tell them 'to go back where they came from'!"

In the recent British electoral campaign, Winston Churchill braved the boos and catcalls of a pro-Laborite section of London, to make an address on behalf of his Party's candidates. The Prime Minister pleaded for a return to Commons of many Conservative candidates, so that his hand might be strengthened in the war against Japan.

"What we need," added Churchill, "and must have, is a working majority—"

A member of the audience interrupted: "Better reverse that, Winnie! What we need is a majority working!"

FROM THE SCRAPBOOK . . . J. B. Priestly's words of wisdom: "We should behave toward our country as women behave toward the men they love. A loving wife will do anything for her husband except stop criticizing and trying to improve him. We should cast the same affectionate but sharp glance at our country. We should love it, but also insist on telling it all its faults. The noisy, empty 'patriot,' not the critic, is the dangerous citizen."

Washington Guide

Congress Back On the Job

Congress came back to work this week, after a summer vacation that left gigantic problems of reconversion and postwar security totally unsolved.

While Congress was away, the world took a complete new turn in history. The last member of the Axis surrendered. The era of atomic power was born. The war production program stopped. Cutbacks and layoffs began snowballing up to throw millions of men and women out of jobs, to threaten millions of returning veterans with unemployment.

Congress left for its most momentous vacation in history with nothing done or prepared to meet the crisis of unemployment and depression now facing us.

Hearings on the emergency unemployment aid bill (S 1274) hadn't started. Nor had work on the jobs-for-all bill (S 380). The 65c minimum wage bill (S 1349); social security improvements (S 1050); polltax repeal (HR 7); permanent FEPC (HR 2232); equal pay for equal work (S 1178); the Missouri Valley Authority S 555) are also still unfinished business.

Though little or no progress was made on these and other bills, the propaganda mills kept grinding away all summer on the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill (S 1171) aimed at destroying labor's right to organize and bargain collectively. And Congress left behind it, when the summer vacation began last July, at least one time bomb in Rep. Lea's (D. Cal.) rider to the WLB appropriation, taking more than a million food processing workers out of WLB's jurisdiction.

Perhaps Congress has come back refreshed and eager to work. Those Congressmen who were visited by their constituents during the vacation at least had a chance to learn the score. Having learned, Congress must now act.

How quickly and effectively Congress acts depends on the voters back home. Workers faced with layoffs and shifts to other cities may feel more pre-occupied with their own immediate problems and less concerned with things that are going on hundreds of miles away in Washington.

But remember this—what Congress does now and in the immediate future concerns you and your welfare more directly than ever before.

Compromise With Hunger?

Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.) has a "compromise" up his sleeve to end the fight in Congress over the Kilgore jobless aid bill (S 1274).

According to this plan, present state unemployment compensation levels would be frozen, but the duration would be lengthened to a uniform 26 weeks.

The "compromise" sounds good in newspapers. Actually, as a table (see page 2) of current state benefits shows, it simply freezes present inadequate rates.

Only one state (Washington) has a current level of $25 a week for 26 weeks. Most of the highly industrial states (N. Y., Mass., Ohio, Mich., Penna., Ill., W. Va., Ind. and others) have a top of $20. Many states where war industries have shut down (especially in the South) have around $18, with $15 the lowest figure. Duration varies between 14 and 20 weeks.

Connecticut, Michigan and Nevada have allowances for dependents. According to the Federal Security Agency, no other states have. The top, with dependents, is $28 in Mich.

The Vandenberg compromise begins to look a little less inviting on close examination. What it would actually do is freeze present rates and thus make it harder than ever before to raise them in the future.

This plan, backed by the GOP and by reactionary Democrats, would be used against attempts to amend the Social Security Act and to put social security on a uniform, national basis. It would consolidate the present state systems that penalize workers who went to areas without previous industrialization because war needed them.

It would also work severe hardships on returning veterans who may find themselves unable to get jobs or who are now being laid off after a brief experience of working.

It would work especially severe hardships on widows of servicemen and wives of disabled veterans who have been laid off jobs where they were the main support of families.

But most important of all, it would help preserve low state compensation levels and it would help preserve low state wage scales.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobs-less aid (S-12-74; HR 38-91)	Provides up to $25 a week for 26 weeks for unemployed war workers, including U. S. employes, seamen.	S 1274 in Senate Finance Committee; HR 3891 in House Ways and Means. GOP "compromise" reported planned to freeze current State rates, extend duration.	Wire Senators and Representative to support S 1274, reject "compromise."
Jobs for all (S 380)	Empowers U. S. to see that all have jobs, either by private enterprise or with U. S. aid if needed.	S 380 in Senate Banking and Currency Committee.	Urge Senators, Representative to support.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present 40c minimum in wage hour act to 65c.	Senate Labor Sub-Committee (Sen. Pepper, D., Fla., chairman).	Urge Senators and Representative to support.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Enables 10 million white and Negro Americans to vote, including veterans returning to polltax states.	Passed House by 2 to 1; now tied up in Senate Judiciary Committee.	Urge Senators to get HR 7 out on floor, vote for cloture to end filibuster and pass bill.
Social security (S 1050, HR 3293)	Extends present coverage, increases benefits, adds new health, welfare protection to Social Security Act in need of overhaul after 10 years.	Still stalled after two years of dawdling in committee, with Senate Finance as worst bottleneck.	Urge immediate hearings, action to get bill on the floor.
Ball, Burton, Hatch (S 1171)	Would wipe out Wagner Act and other labor laws.	Senate Labor Committee, with new press drive shaping up for quick hearings, vote.	Tell your Senators and Representative to stay away from this one.
Equal pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work, no discrimination against women on lay-offs.	Senate Labor Committee (Sen. Murray, D., Mont., chairman).	Urge Senators to support as vital to women (especially widows of servicemen, wives of disabled men) who have to work.
FEPC (S 101, HR 2232)	Make FEPC permanent U. S. agency.	Stalled in House Rules; Discharge Petition 4 out on House floor.	Urge Representative to sign DP 4, work and vote for bill.

Coming Up: Issues To Watch

TAXES: The Washington Guide has been warning its readers about next year's tax bill for months. During this time, corporations have been given sizable slices of tax gravy, in the form of a sweeter deal on their excess profits refunds and on their carry back and carry forward.

Now comes Secretary of the Treasury Fred M. Vinson with a warning that individual taxpayers can expect little or no relief in the near future.

In an article in "Look" Magazine for Aug. 21, Pres. Murray calls for a tax plan to "give the government sufficient revenue to carry out its obligations to the people . . . protect the incomes and living standards of the great mass of workers and farmers and their families, whose purchasing power keeps industry going."

SURPLUS PROPERTY: Stuart Symington, St. Louis manufacturer now heading the Surplus Property Board, had this to say on disposal of some 100 billion dollars worth of the taxpayer's property the other day:

"The limiting provisions of the act (governing disposal) were intended to achieve social or economic objectives that are laudable.

"In many instances, however, it may not be possible to comply with these provisions of the act and at the same time to dispose of surplus property so as to create immediate opportunities for employment."

Symington then goes on to ask for changes in the act, aimed to boost what he calls "the health of the economy in the long run" rather than "providing immediate employment and preventing delays in reconversion."

CHILD CARE: another key issue Congress will have to face is what to do with the child care facilities now that Lanham Act projects are being cut out in the general economy drive.

During the war, these facilities enabled hundreds of thousands of mothers to make a big contribution to war production. They could work on a war job knowing that their children were being well cared for, fed and looked after.

Now the war is over, thousands of mothers—especially widows and wives of disabled men—will have to go on working. Other thousands will have to work to bridge the gap between low wages and high living costs.

They will need assurance that their children are being cared for while they work.

VETS JOIN PICKET LINE

World War II vets employed by the Murray Mfg. Co., Cleveland, donned uniforms again this week to join a UAW-CIO picket line protesting the firm's dismissal policies. 39 out of 45 vets were bumped from their jobs, along with 700 other workers. They're all working together to secure a square deal.

It's a Tough Life On State Benefits

JUST how tough life is going to be for families forced to subsist on meager state unemployment compensation benefits was graphically portrayed this week by a survey conducted under the guidance of the Washington, D. C., Board of Public Welfare.

In a one week's budget test of 45 families whose heads are members of the D. C. Congress of Parents & Teachers, the Board found that family spending for the necessities of life ranged from 6 to 291 percent above the allotments allowed people on relief.

D. C. weekly relief allowances for families of three to seven are:

Family of 3	$21.35
Family of 4	24.40
Family of 5	27.70
Family of 6	30.40
Family of 7	34.70

Weekly maximum unemployment compensation benefits allowed by the states range from $15 to $28. Many people will not be eligible for the maximums.

The D. C. survey found that:

1. Thirteen families of three persons each spent from $28.55 to $48.01 a week—34 to 125 percent more than the relief budget. They spent from $9.20 to $20.27 per family for food, exceeding the relief allowance by from 6 to 133 percent.

2. Twelve families of four persons each spent from $26.47 to $76 a week, as compared with $24.40 allowed relief clients—an increase of from 8 to 211 percent.

JOBLESS AID BILL IN RUGGED FIGHT

By C. W. FOWLER

THE fight for adequate unemployment compensation moved to the Senate floor this weekend, with debate on the bill set for Tuesday, September 18, and a petition under way for early House action.

Though emasculated in the Senate Finance Committee majority report, a sizable minority is expected to sign a dissenting report carrying the basic points of the Kilgore - Forand bill (S 1274) and to develop strong support when the bill hits the floor.

This is what the Senate Finance Committee, headed by Sen. George (D. Ga.) did to the measure requested by Pres. Truman and backed by CIO and AFL:

1. Eliminated Federal aid designed to bring payments up to a maximum of $25 a week.

2. Extended present inadequate state benefits (as low as $5 a week in some states) to a theoretical maximum of 26 weeks. The joker in this, however, is a clause limiting the extension of time to not more than 60 percent of the maximum already provided.

3. Made state acceptance of this limited extension permissive rather than mandatory. In the Kilgore-Forand bill, states failing to accept Federal funds could be by-passed by the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

4. Included maritime and Federal workers—but also with a joker placing Federal workers under state systems rather than on a nationwide basis. This means that a Federal employe, laid off a job in Mississippi, is at the mercy of Mississippi's benefits scale. Maritime workers come under the District of Columbia scale, which is a break for them.

5. Kicked out over a million food processing workers covered in the original Kilgore-Forand bill. Pres. Truman, in his message of last week, made a special plea for these workers, pointing out that they were discriminated against all down the line.

This job of hamstringing the bill, done by a combination of Republicans and tory Democrats, will be countered in the floor fight by progressive Senators supported by a mass outpouring of CIO delegations to Washington beginning this week.

"Legal basis" for the wrecking job was the plea of state's rights, with Sen. George banking heavily on telegrams from state governors and unemployment compensation officers declaring that the law prohibited them from accepting Federal funds to bring benefits up to a top of $25 (see box above for analysis).

George had wires from 21 states claiming that they could not take the additional Federal money. At the same time, George played down the fact that 17 states indicated they could, while 10 had not replied.

George was reported to have used outright suppression to falsify this picture when he buried a wire from Governor Coke Stevenson of Texas contradicting the assertion of his own unemployment compensation man that the use of Federal funds was illegal.

This suppression become all the more flagrant when we note that Stevenson's unemployment man is Claude Williams, who started the false issue of "illegality" in accepting Federal aid.

The 17 states that have supported Federal aid—key to the Kilgore-Forand bill—are: La., Neb., N. Y., N. H., Calif., N. J., N. C., N. D., S. C., Conn., Tex., Wash., Wis., Ariz., Ill., Mich., with Mississippi reported supporting the bill and Massachusetts and Minnesota leaning toward it.

SPIKE 'STATES-RIGHTS' STAND

PRINCIPAL argument of the anti-jobless-aid members of the Senate Finance Committee has been the claim that state law prohibits unemployed workers from accepting Federal supplements to state benefit scales.

According to this claim—carefully built up by Sen. George (D. Ga.) with the help of the newspapers—any unemployed worker taking a Federal supplement must have that amount deducted from his state payment, and therefore the Federal supplement will do him no good.

The argument is false, informed lawyers say, because:

1. States can enter into agreements with the Federal government, which is what the Kilgore-Forand bill calls for.

2. Clauses in state laws—which are similar throughout the country—prohibit unemployed workers from receiving duplicate compensation only, not supplementary compensation.

These clauses, it is pointed out, are designed to prevent individuals from receiving payments when they are not entitled to them. They do not bar supplementary payments by the Federal government agreed to by the states.

Tell-It-to-Congress Groups Trek to D. C.

WORKERS who helped win the war started to stream into Washington this week to tell Congress they want action now to make sure that America wins the peace.

The first of nearly a score of delegations that are scheduled to talk to Congress was a joint CIO-AFL group of 50 workers from Union County, N. J.

Others are due within a fortnight from New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the New England States.

The Union County delegation told their Senators and Congressmen that among 70,000 workers in the eastern end of their county, 25,000 have been laid off. Speaking in the name of more than 40,000 union members, the delegation said:

"The Army-Navy "E" flies proudly over our factories. We have done our wartime job sticking to our machines, fulfilling faithfully our no-strike pledge.

"Our workers deserve the better world they have worked for. They did not deserve the mass layoffs and insecurity following V-J Day."

passage of legislation to establish the unemployed, to enable the employed to maintain high take-home pay checks and maintain a high level of national income, our nation will be doomed to another depression, which will greatly exceed the cost of the ounce of prevention."

Needed-Human Side To Reconversion

WORKERS throughout the nation are waiting for Congress to carry out its committment—originally made in 1944—to provide for them as well as industry in reconversion, David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the CIO United Steelworkers, said this week in testifying on the Kilgore - Forand unemployment aid bill.

"We have witnessed the legislative record, law after law protecting industry's reconversion interests, granting substantial concession's to industry's alleged requirements," he said. "We have studied the emergency unemployment compensation bill passed for industry—the so-called 'carry-back' and 'carry-forward' tax provisions."

While watching this record of aid to corporations, labor has still to see real progress made on the "human side of reconversion," McDonald pointed out. Instead, it has seen so far only "loose talk" about workers' allegedly huge savings from wartime pay.

Knocking this false idea on the head, McDonald cited the Steelworkers' study of a typical steel community made in Braddock, Pa., which showed the average steelworker's savings to be only $313. This is not enough to start industry going again, since the worker, faced with uncertainty about his job, will have to use it to supplement inadequate state unemployment benefits.

"HR 3891 offers one answer" McDonald said. "It enables a worker to retain his dignity, to avoid the modern versions of apple selling, to make a comeback as postwar industrial activities get going at a high level.

"It is a device to safeguard and strengthen the democratic, orderly processes which we fought vigorously to preserve."

Survey Shows You Can't Live Decently On 40c an Hour

A 63-page Labor Dept. survey, probably soon to be published, is an eloquent statistical argument for the CIO-supported minimum wage bill (S 1349, HR 3914) which would lift the pay floor from 40 to 65 cents an hour now and to 75 cents in two years.

The survey displays minimum wage budgets showing that a minimum of from 60 to 80 cents an hour is needed now to provide a subsistence standard of living for unskilled workers, and adds that the cost of living will likely rise.

The report declares "the powerful inflationary forces of a wartime economy have countered our efforts to raise the minimum standard of living so that the 40-cent minimum today represents in purchasing power no more and possibly less than the 30-cent statutory minimum did in 1939." The report quotes facts and figures showing that:

1. The wartime rise in the cost of living for low-income groups is greater than for other groups because food and clothing prices, which represent a greater part of the low-paid workers budget, have risen more than the average of all other items.

2. Of the 12,200,000 wage earners in manufacturing industries in the summer of 1945, 330,000 (or 3 percent) received less than 50 cents, 1,230,000 (or 10 percent) received between 50 and 60 cents, and a total of 2,380,000 (or 20 percent) received less than 65 cents an hour.

3. Profits of 13 low wage industries in 1944 were greater than the average for all leading corporations. The low-wage industries included tobacco products, cotton goods, silk and rayon, knitted goods, miscellaneous textile products, clothing and apparel, shoes, lumber, furniture and wood products, telephone and telegraph, and restaurants and hotels.

Taft Takes a Shellacking In Jobs-for-All Fight

ATTEMPTS in committee to hamstring the jobs-for-all bill (S 380) were turned back this week in a series of tie votes rejecting weakening amendments proposed by Sen. Taft (R., O.).

Taft's amendment were mainly aimed at striking the word "assure" from the bill's purpose of providing jobs for all, substituting a weasel word such as "promote" or the like.

The strategy of Taft and his allies is to turn the bill from a program fixing U. S. government responsibility for full employment and production to a vague statement of intention that will remain merely a pious wish.

Other amendments supported by Sens. Wagner (D., N. Y.), Murray (D., Mont.) and Tobey (R., N. H.) were agreed upon as strengthening the measure. These included use of the word "responsibility" in place of "policy" for full employment, added full production to full employment, changed "able to work and seeking work" to "able to work and desiring to work" and eliminated a clause that could have been interpreted to shut housewives out of the full employment picture.

Meantime, broad liberal support for the bill came from a meeting of church, fraternal, women's, farmers and labor groups here in Washington, which urged Congress to pass the bill "containing as a minimum these positive commitments."

In acknowledging defeat of his amendments, Taft promised that he would carry the fight to the floor. Anti-full employment strategy there will be to bog debate down in a long series of apparently picayune quarrels over wording, designed to confuse the voters.

This is a familiar reactionary trick, and has the aim of wearing down proponents of progressive bills by long and tedious arguments over phrases. Changes which appear harmless are argued ad nauseum, with the plan of wearing patience thin and then slipping a seemingly innocuous but actually dangerous change through the completed measure.

Crack Down On Jim Crow

Alleged Jim Crow practices in the AFL Seararers' International Union brought an order from the Fair Employment Practice Committee this week, directing it to revise its policies and practices so that seamen shall be hired without regard to race, creed or color.

The FEPC also directed the union to "cease specifying the race or color of seamen requested by it from the rotary hiring list of the War Shipping Administration."

The order prohibited the union from continuing its practice of refusing to accept men for jobs because of their race when they are referred to the union.

Hail V-J, Ask Jobs

Demands for full employment were coupled with celebration of the victory over Japan in a CIO demonstration last week at Syracuse, N. Y. Four CIO floats and hundreds of people marched in a parade.

A committee, headed by CIO Sub-Regional Director John J. Maurillo, has urged the Mayor of Syracuse to establish a full employment committee representing labor, management and the public.

STEEL, UE WAGE DEMANDS

$2 A DAY PAY BOOSTS ASKED

By FRED d'AVILA

SPEAKING for nearly 2,000,000 workers, five CIO unions this week filed notice with employers that they will push militant demands for wage increases to maintain a decent standard of living for their members in the face of an estimated 48 percent rise in the cost of living since 1941.

Biggest unions involved were the United Steelworkers and United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, both of which decided at Executive Board meetings to ask for $2 a day raises.

Other wage demands were announced this week by the United Rubber Workers, the Oil Workers and the State, County and Municipal Workers.

In Pittsburgh, Philip Murray, president of the Steelworkers and of CIO, announced the union's wage policy following a meeting of the Steelworkers Executive Board and the Wage Policy Committee.

"With wages practically frozen during the war," Murray declared, "the Steelworkers have been faced with a steadily rising cost of living which seriously undermined their living standards. With V-J Day, there has been a drastic reduction in working time which has meant a severe loss in weekly take-home pay."

Pointing out that steel profits have skyrocketed and that labor productivity has increased, Murray said:

"Frequent have been the expressions from high government officials that in the interest of our national welfare and to assure a firm foundation of postwar prosperity, it is essential that the mass purchasing power of the people be steadily increased.

"A substantial wage increase for the Steelworkers is now necessary to assure a decent standard of living for them and the members of their families and is vital for our nation."

Murray said the steel companies have been invited to a collective bargaining conference, tentatively scheduled for September 25.

A statement by Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald and Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak said:

"A $2-a-day increase is of urgent importance for the security and health of workers whose incomes have been seriously reduced as a result of the cut in working hours since V-J Day.

"The UE, in common with the entire CIO, realizes that a $2 daily wage increase is of crucial importance not only to our membership. The entire economy of the nation will suffer if wage-earners are not paid wages sufficient to permit a decent standard of living.

"Small businessmen and merchants, doctors, dentists, farmers, housewives, all will suffer if the wage-earner is not given sufficient wages to pay his bills and live at a standard of health and decency."

In Washington, the United Rubber Workers announced similar wage demands at an Executive Board meeting. A statement by retiring Pres. Sherman H. Dalrymple and by L. S. Buckmaster, vice-president, who succeeded Dalrymple, asked for:

A 30 cents an hour raise, a basic 30-hour week with time and a half for hours after six each day and after 30 each week, time and a half for Saturdays, double time for work on Sundays and six holidays, straight time pay for six holidays when not worked, and 10 cents an hour extra for night shifts.

"The General Executive Board is convinced," Dalrymple and Buckmaster said, "that the wage policy will contribute to a sound economy, insure purchasing power and will not affect the prices of the commodities produced in view of the stability that can be maintained in the price of rubber."

In Fort Worth, Tex., Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, announced that the union will reject company-offered increases of only 10 to 15 per cent as hours are cut back, and said the union will press for "52 hours pay for a 40-hour week or less."

"The oil companies," Knight declared, "enter the reconversion period with enormous financial reserves, an assured market and few of the headaches that characterize other industries which mobilized for war.

"A heavy responsibility rests upon the leaders of the industry to cut the work week back to the normal 36 hours as rapidly as possible to create jobs for tens of thousands of employes who are coming back from the armed services."

In New York, the State, County and Municipal Workers called on Governor Dewey to grant a $400-a year-wage increase to all state employes, establish a $1,600 minimum, reduce the work week to 36 hours for clerical employes and to 40 hours for all other workers, and pay time and a half for overtime.

'U. S. Needs Fair As Well As Full Employment'

"The United States needs not only full employment, but fair employment." That point was driven home this week by George Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, speaking at a two-day working conference of the Natl. Council for a Permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee, meeting in Washington.

Weaver pointed out that President Truman, at the Potsdam meeting of the Big Three emphasized the fact that the Allies must make certain all Nazi racial laws are revoked. Weaver said that the policy should be carried out, too, in the U. S., by passage of permanent FEPC legislation which would help to guarantee equal job rights for all people.

The FEPC conference was called to plan nationwide political strategy for the early enactment of permanent FEPC legislation.

Philly Job Rally Packs Big Hall

"Jobs for all—now" took the spotlight in Philadelphia this week, with Mayor Bernard Samuel proclaiming Wednesday as Full Employment Day and with most of the area's major politicians attending a rally of 7,000 workers in Convention Hall.

On the stage also were both Pennsylvania Senators, Joseph F. Guffey and Francis J. Myers, and five of Philadelphia's six Congressmen.

The mass meeting heard CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey warn that "we in labor are not going to stand idly by while profiteering lunatics destroy America—our America as well as theirs. We have set our sights on full employment and full production and we are not going to shrink from our goal."

CIO's Full Employment rally drew this crowd of 7,000 people to Philadelphia's Convention Hall this week.

SPADEWORK FOR PROSPERITY

In the wage movement now being launched by its biggest unions, the CIO is doing the basic spadework without which there can be no sure foundation for national prosperity.

Every competent authority agrees that our prosperity will depend upon steadily increasing mass purchasing power. But for some time the whole trend, so far as wages are concerned, has been in the opposite direction.

Frozen wage rates during the war lagged far behind soaring living costs and since V-J Day, with all the cutbacks in war orders, take-home pay has been reduced by shorter working time in most cases to less than a living wage.

Meanwhile corporation profits and reserves have reached record heights, aided by the greatly increased productivity of labor during recent years, for which the workers have received no increased compensation.

The United Steelworkers of America therefore has decided to demand a general wage increase of $2 a day throughout its industry.

The United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has also asked its locals to open negotiations for a $2-a-day increase. The UAW-CIO is making similar wage demands, and other CIO unions have already started, or are about to start, their own wage movements.

The CIO is thus taking the lead in a movement which is not only necessary immediately for a decent standard of living for its members, but is also essential for farmers, businessmen, professional people and all others whose incomes depend upon the workers having adequate purchasing power.

The success of this wage movement will determine the success of all other plans now being made to usher in an era of expanding prosperity for all the American people.

"TOMMYROT" AND "SHAME"

The British have a habit, at public meetings, of expressing their reactions to a speaker's words by cries of "Hear, hear," if they approve his statements, or of "No" or "Shame" if they disagree or disapprove.

George Meany, AFL secretary-treasurer, was therefore left in no doubt as to the reactions of the delegates to the British Trades Union Congress, whom he recently addressed.

According to the Associated Press report, his unmeasured attacks on the CIO, the Soviet trade unions and the new world labor organization drew shouts of "Tommyrot" and "Shame" from the British unionists, in "the most tumultous session."

British labor has had many opportunities during the war to learn about the magnificent war record and progressive character of the CIO. It has also maintained close relations with the unions of the USSR.

So when Meany exhibited his factional spite against the CIO and his profound ignorance of the Soviet trade union movement, with which the AFL leaders have blindly refused even to meet, the British unionists know he was talking "tommyrot."

They also considered it a crying shame that a leader of American labor should thus slander and try to disrupt the movement of uniting world labor in one strong organization, which promises so much for the welfare of all workers and for future world peace and democratic progress.

At the Paris convention to establish the World Federation of Trade Unions, the labor movements of all countries will give the appropriate answer by creating the all-inclusive unity of world labor—inclusive also of the AFL, if its leaders can be induced to forego their present narrow isolationism.

Looking Ahead

By Len De Caux

WHEN you disagree, but can't think of a good comeback, the easiest course is to say, "Oh Yeah!"

It's a mock agreement that actually opposes, and is the greatest mental labor-saving device since the adding machine.

One of the toughest questions I was asked by GIs on my Pacific trip was: "What are the arguments advanced against the Full Employment bill and the jobs-for-all program?"

I could think of some of the cracks made by our tories but of little or nothing that could be called an argument.

And now that President Truman, in his message to Congress, has so eloquently summed up the demand of most Americans for adequate jobless benefits, full employment legislation, higher wages, a permanent FEPC, a big housing and public works program, etc., the opposition still seems at a loss for arguments.

Its chief reaction to such an obviously popular program is to "praise it with faint damns," or just to grunt, "Oh Yeah!"

But let's not kid ourselves on the extent and power of this opposition, in and out of Congress. What it lacks in arguments, it more than makes up in money, venom and determination.

It has already shown its strength in the Senate committee considering Truman's proposal for jobless benefits up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, by voting down any Federal supplements to the pitiably inadequate state benefits.

But, typically, most of the robbers of the unemployed claim they would have loved to vote the higher benefits, and had to cook up a phony argument about states not being able to accept the Federal supplements, to justify voting against them.

The fight for passage of the full Kilgore jobless-aid bill must now be carried to the floor of Congress. Opposing Congressmen must be shown, not only that the people want it—which they know—but that they're determined to have it passed, or know the reason why.

The Twohey Analysis of Newspaper Opinion shows most of the daily press opposed to higher jobless benefits and from 68 to 78 per cent disapproving the Full Employment bill.

But most of these big-business organs now avoid the stupid line about higher benefits "encouraging idleness." Still less do they frankly voice their masters' feeling that breadline-unemployment makes for more docile workers and lower wages.

Rather, they say that "we are not alarmed" about unemployment; it's much exaggerated (this, despite the layoff figures in their own news columns); the laid-off workers have lots of savings, are just taking "vacations," etc.

Similarly, the editorials against the Full Employment bill pay lip-service to its aims, but claim it is "impractical," based on a "defeatist philosophy" (a strange definition of defeatism!), or a "New Deal totalitarian measure."

This foreshadows opposition tactics in Congress, which will be to praise the objectives of the Full Employment bill, but to deprive it of all meaning, on the pretext of making it more "practical" and eliminating "government interference."

But the fact that most opponents of Truman's proposals are forced to approve them "in principle" rather than to meet them head-on, should give encouragement (as well as a warning against slippery tactics) to labor and progressives.

It is a recognition that there is an overwhelming popular demand for such a minimum program, to cushion reconversion for low-income groups and to lay some basis for postwar prosperity.

Of course, Truman's message falls considerably short of the full CIO program for jobs for all, though it does include some of its major immediate planks.

But even this limited program will be no more than an expression of pious aspirations, if the administration does not roll up its sleeves and fight for it, and if labor does not mobilize all its strength behind it.

To get real action, the CIO must organize as never before. It must build its unions to gain higher wages through collective bargining. It must get behind its Political Action Committee to end substandard wages through amendment of the wage-hour act.

A powerful labor movement is all-essential for the enactment of Truman's proposals and to push ahead with the other measures necessary for a prosperous and expanding economy.

AFL's Stand On WFTU Irks Citrine

By ANTHONY JENKINSON

BLACKPOOL, England, (ALN) — In one of the most forthright speeches of his career, Sir Walter Citrine, general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, this week delivered a vigorous reply to the argument against AFL participation in the World Federation of Trade Unions advanced by George Meany, AFL fraternal delegate to the 77th TUC convention here. The TUC convention voted general approval of the WFTU draft statutes, with a number of recommendations for amendments.

WANTS INTL. UNITY

"It must be understood in the U. S. that the TUC believes in international trade union unity," Citrine said amid loud applause. "We have no strictures to make against the CIO," he declared. "We find the same sincerity of purpose as in our own ranks." Dealing with the AFL attitude toward Soviet trade unions, Citrine stated:

"We have known since 1917 that there were no private employers in the USSR. The Russian unions must therefore necessarily differ somewhat in structure. They have different kinds of problems to deal with. I don't think any of us have the right to charge that the Soviet unions do not look after the rights of their members.

"I think it would be excellent if the British government would plan economically and socially as does the USSR. I don't think there are no mistakes made in Russia, but nobody can say it isn't a good thing to plan these days. It would be a good thing if British unions were taken into confidence on the highest government levels as are the Russian unions."

After stating that the London world labor conference last February was "the most representative I have ever attended in my life," Citrine charged that the AFL was "trifling" in complaining that the International Federation of Trade Unions did not call the conference, pointing out that the AFL made it clear that it would not have participated even if the IFTU had called the conference.

BOO MEANY

Citrine's remarks were occasioned by Meany's speech here this week, in which he reiterated that the AFL's refusal to participate in the WFTU was based on "the inclusion of representatives of the CIO and of the pseudo-trade unions of Russia." Meany's statement was greeted with cries of "shame" and "tommyrot" from the delegates. Ebby Edwards, chairman of the conference, had to appeal to the delegates' sense of fair play and the rights of free speech in order to allow Meany to continue.

In other important actions, the conference urged the government to retain the factories it ran during the war; demanded equal pay for women workers; praised the work of shop stewards and joint production committees in the war and proposed their incorporation into regular trade union machinery; urged the public ownership of all forms of transport; condemned the 1927 Trades Disputes Act, limiting affiliation of unions.

World News Roundup

PRELIMINARY approval of the draft constitution of the World Trade Union Federation rolled in from a dozen national trade union centers this week, as delegates took ship and plane for Paris for the Sept. 25 ratification meeting.

Meeting in Blackpool, England, the Trades Union Congress had approval of the draft on the top of its agenda. The officers report showed that the TUC General Council has "provisionally endorsed the WFTU draft constitution subject to satisfactory agreement being reached in regard to the trade secretariats at the forthcoming conference in Paris."

According to the report, the TUC will have seven million members in the new world labor body, paying $96,000 in annual dues; the CIO will have six million, paying $88,000; and the All Union Central Council of Trade Unions (USSR) will have 28 million members, paying $170,000.

Ebby Edwards, who came to the U. S. to attend the Oakland (Calif.) meeting where the WFTU constitution was drafted, chaired the Blackpool convention. George Isaacs, who was a co-chairman of the London meeting in January, is now Minister of Labor in the new Labor governments.

At the same time Allied Labor News reported that the Intl. Federation of Trade Unions has also voted "general approval" of the WFTU constitution. The IFTU is generally expected to dissolve following affiliation to the WFTU.

16 In Latin-America

Reporting in "CTAL News" this week, the Latin American Confederation of Labor (CTAL) said that all except two of the 18 members of the CTAL will send delegates to Paris. The holdouts are Peru and Nicaragua "where special conditions have postponed nominations." Two other countries (Argentina and Paraguay) will send underground representatives.

A plea for lower dues to the WFTU came from the other side of the world in a statement from S. A. Dange, head of the All-India Trades Union Congress (AITUC). Dange's plea was based on the fact that "the Indian's average wage is less than one-tenth that of the European worker and consequently trade unions funds are also on a low scale." Dange added that the AITUC approves the draft constitution and will affiliate to the WFTU.

EX-GI JOE AND THE CIO

ANOTHER decision by arbitrators this week denied veterans super-seniority while holding that they are entitled to be restored to their old jobs with seniority which includes time spent in the service.

The case arose under a contract between the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Los Angeles, Calif., and Local 100, CIO Rubber Workers. It involved two employes, John Braaksma and Ernest S. Wood, a veteran, who both claimed they should hold jobs on the first shift as rotary machine operators.

The board of arbitrators decided that Braaksma was entitled to the first shift job because he had greater seniority than Wood, even allowing for the latter's period in the armed forces in computing his seniority.

In a decision involving the Sun Shipbuilding Co. and the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, the board decided that Samuel McCorkell, a veteran, was entitled to two weeks' vacation with pay under the contract and that the company was refusing to allow him his seniority for time spent in the service in computing his vacation time.

'Super-Seniority'

The Rev. George G. Higgins, of the National Catholic Welfare Conference Social Action Department, this week added his voice to those protesting the Brooklyn Federal Court ruling upholding "super-seniority" for veterans.

President John Green of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers union will carry the fight against the decision—which involved a yard under contract with his organization—to the Supreme Court, and Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans' Committee, has declared the ruling is "anti-veteran."

Like Golden, Father Higgins feared that setting veterans apart from the rest of the population by giving them job preference in all cases would cause national anti-veteran reaction.

The priest also pointed out that the ruling would play havoc with U. S. industrial relations. He said the veteran under the super-seniority theory would be protected in his job for only one year, as guaranteed by the Selective Service Act, but that during the subsequent years he would be at the mercy of his employer.

Father Higgins said that to give a veteran super-seniority is "an insult to his patriotism, an injustice to the civilian worker and an almost infallible guarantee of industrial strife. I refuse to believe that that's what the typical veteran wants."

Apple Stands

Apple stands manned by veterans of World War II were set up this week in front of the Selectar Manufacturing Co., Long Island, N. Y., to remind the company that the vets didn't fight the war to make the country safe for union-busting.

The 16 vets are among 300 members of Local 1227, CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, who were laid off after V-J Day. Other laid-off workers are picketing the company and its offices in New York.

Picketing began when the firm informed the union that it was ready to rehire 75 workers, but only on condition that it could pick the workers it wanted, in violation of the seniority clause in the contract.

Jobs-For-All Bill

The GI okay is placed on the Full Employment bill, S 380, in two leading articles in The Stars and Stripes, Mediterranean edition, written by Sgt. Lyle Dowling, formerly executive assistant of the CIO Electrical Radio and Machine Workers.

In addition to the legislative measure providing jobs for all, the articles advocated increased mass purchasing power through higher wages, lower taxes on low-income groups, and extension of credits to such nations as Italy, to enable populations abroad to buy goods they need and which U. S. industry needs to sell.

Veterans Benefit

Veterans, upon their return to employment, shall receive the vacation pay which they would have received had they not entered military service under the new contract signed by the Barnard & Lees Manufacturing Co., Moline, Ill., with Local 814, CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

WAR-WRECKED PHILIPPINES LOOK TO U.S. LABOR'S AID

By LEN DE CAUX

Progressive forces in the Philippines, that helped kill 25,000 Japs and traitors, face bitter pro-fascist and feudal opposition. What's cooking—how labor and liberals look to us for help—is told by CIO News Editor Len De Caux, just returned from Manila, in the second of two articles.

MOST of the big-shot Filipino politicians who collaborated with the Japanese, but still hold public office, now claim to have been secretly working with the anti-Jap guerrillas. But whatever the merits of such widely disputed claims, there is no question that the real brunt of the resistance was borne by the guerrilla bands of peasants and workers, who killed thousands of Japs and suffered endless persecution, torture, imprisonment and bloodshed at their hands.

Outstanding for its militancy among the guerrillas was the Hukbalahap, the People's Anti-Japanese Army. It was described by Maj. Gen. G. H. Decker, chief of staff of the U. S. Sixth Army, as "one of the best fighting units I have ever known." Organized in March, 1942, the Hukbalahap fought the Japs from the start and was joined by a number of Americans left in the Philippines as "the only organization that was really fighting the Japs."

The Hukbalahap grew into a disciplined force of some tens of thousands of fighting men, armed chiefly with weapons captured from the Japs or left behind by the retreating Americans. By February, 1945, the "Huk" had fought 1,200 engagements with the enemy and could claim to have killed more than 25,000 Japanese, spies and traitors.

Unlike most of the other guerrillas the Huk operated chiefly on the plains of the chief rice-producing areas of the Philippines, using the mountains only for temporary retreat. Made up mostly of peasants, it was largely successful in preventing the rice and other crops from falling into Japanese hands. It was able to rescue over 20 American aviators.

But at the same time, the Huk antagonized the fuedal landowners by its policy of requiring a major share of the crops to go to the peasants instead of the landlords, and by its democratic policies of establishing mass peasant organizations and holding elections to set up village, town and provincial councils.

THE opposition to the Huk from feudal and fascist elements is believed partly responsible for the raw deal it has received from U. S. Army authorities and the Counter-Intelligence Corps. In February, 1945, American MP's arrested Luis Taruc, commander-in-chief of the Huk, and Casto Alejandrino, vice-commander, on wild charges made by such elements. They were released when these charges could not be proved, and after protest demonstrations by tens of thousands of peasants, but were again arrested in April for alleged "seditious speech," and are still imprisoned.

Letters of Taruc from jail, read by the writer, testify to the high social and democratic idealism of these Huk leaders and their bitter sense of injustice at such treatment from their American allies, on whose behalf they fought so bravely.

Besides such arrests of Huk leaders, the U. S. Army authorities are charged with many other attempts to crush it by raids, disarming, etc. Some parts of the Huk army have been incorporated in forces under American command and then assigned to labor battalion work.

One of the leaders of the Huk whom the writer met is Dr. Vicente Lava, a Filipino chemist and author of textbooks on physics, who has studied and taught at American universities and is a member of the New York Academy of Arts and Sciences. When the Japanese came, he went off to join the Huk as the only group he knew to be fighting them.

Quiet, serious and liberal, Dr. Lava is now devoting his efforts to plans for the democratic industrialization of the Philippines and is one of the outstanding leaders of the Democratic Alliance.

The Democratic Alliance is a popular front of farmer, labor and small business groups with a consistent anti-Japanese record. It has a political program calling for national unity against fascism; opposition to collaborators; civil liberties and democratic rights; immediate relief for the needy; social and economic security; rehabilitation of the national economy, and friendly relations with the United Nations.

The Alliance is supported by five leading guerrilla organizations, including the Hukbalahap, by the big peasant organizations, and by the Committee on Labor Organization (CLO) in the labor field. It expects to run candidates in the coming elections.

THE CLO is by far the largest labor body in this agricultural country, where unions were completely destroyed by the Japs and are now only in the early stages of re-formation. It is, in fact, apparently the only bona fide labor movement functioning at present.

Before the war there was a National Federation of Labor, headed by Angel Marin, which was closely associated with the government and big employers and was conservative to the point of company unionism. But most of its leaders became discredited during the war, due to their record of collaboration with the Japs, and their present efforts to reorganize appear to be meeting with little success.

This group has no headquarters and apparently no income from dues. Its leaders are charged by the CLO with being company unionists, politicians seeking to build support for Roxas, and labor contractors who reckon as "members" the workers they supply on commission to employers.

THE CLO is modeled in many ways on the American CIO, and has, in fact, been greatly aided in its formation by dozens of CIO members in the U. S. armed forces who have given advice and assistance to the Filipino labor unionists.

A moving force in the CLO has been the Philippines Newspaper Guild, with a constitution modeled on that of the American Newspaper Guild, with which it has established contact, and some 250 members in the editorial and business offices of Manila's 15 daily newspapers.

The president of the Guild, Cipriano Cid, modest, alert and earnest, is chairman of the CLO. The full-time executive vice-president of the CLO is Guillermo Capadocia; the secretary is Manuel Joven of the Oil Workers, and the treasurer, Martin Bautista, president of the Seamen and Dockworkers Union.

The CLO has some 20 unions affiliated with it, including the strongest in the country, such as the Printers, Seamen & Dockworkers, Manila Railroad Workers, and the Tenant & Peasant Workers Union. It has headquarters at 2070 Azcarraga St., Manila, P. I., and expects to affiliate with the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Chief concern of the CLO at the present time is to relieve the acute distress of the Filipino workers, crushed between low wages and inflationary living costs. Philippine government figures, from the Emergency Control Administration (ECA), show that the present purchasing power of one peso is equivalent to that of 13 centavos last June. (There are 100 centavos to the peso, and the peso is pegged at 50 cents in American money.) A canta (2 kilos) of rice cost 28 centavos before the war, but now costs three or four pesos.

Wages lag far behind the sky-high and still soaring living costs, averaging around 3 to 5 pesos in private industry, and much less for the 100,000 Filipinos employed by the U. S. armed forces. The minimum for these army employes was set at 1.25 pesos a day, by agreement with the Philippine government, with some limited purchases allowed at controlled prices at army stores.

But in recent weeks, due largely to CLO efforts and to a strike of thousands of army workers in Luzon, the army has put into effect an increase of 75 centavos for all ratings, establishing a minimum of two pesos for an eight-hour day.

FILIPINO laborites and progressives are looking to American labor for assistance in obtaining immediate Philippine independence under Congressional Joint Resolution No. 93; a pledge that U. S. aid will not be diminished by independence; loans for rehabilitation and development from the Bretton Woods fund and the Export-Import Bank; release of Taruc and Alejandrino, and Congressional investigation of Counter-Intelligence Corps activities.

The CLO is also looking in particular for assistance and advice from U. S. unions to make up for its own lack of experience in union organizing and collective bargaining, and for literature and other aid in its educational activities. One project it would like to develop is the sending of some Filipino unionists, on a scholarship basis, to study labor organization at American trade union schools.

CHALL

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

RENOVO lies small and grimy, belching smoke at the bottom of a scalloped bowl of green mountains in North Central Pennsylvania. It's a company town controlled and run by the not-so-hidden hand of the Pennsylvania R. R.

Years ago the PRR built the long, low red brick repair shops at Renovo, on the line between Buffalo, N. Y., and Williamsport, Pa. In the early days it was a booming repair center, employing thousands of workers.

Today only a thousand or so work at Renovo, but it is still an important repair shop where the rights won by labor in recent years are unknown. As such it is of great interest to the CIO United Railroad Workers, for the URRWA is challenging at the polls the feudal privileges of the PRR and the Brotherhood of Railroad Shop Crafts, the company's petted child, born—or rather re-born—in 1938 out of the old Employe Representation Plan.

All dolled-up in the clothes of an independent union, the SCB (Shop Crafts Brotherhood) is fighting to maintain its status as collective bargaining agent for 50,000 shop workers in seven groups, in a series of system-wide elections being held in PRR shops in 14 states.

Elections are being conducted by the Natl. Mediation Board, administrative agency of Looking down the main street (left) of Renovo, PRR-dominated town. The car repair shops where some thousand workers are employed, lie at the foot of the mountain to the left. Workers there voted this week on whether they wanted the CIO or company-dominated brotherhood to represent them.

Some of the workers were afraid a company stooge might blab if they were seen taking a copy of the Rail Shop Edition of The CIO NEWS, but not this fellow. George Rose (back to camera), a machinist and official from the big Car Shop local in Altoona, mentally chalks up another pro-CIO vote in the election ending Sept. 20.

Here is one of the several hundred women workers in the repair shop taking a copy of The CIO NEWS as the employes stream down the bridge steps at four o'clock when the first shift comes off the job. She looks like another good CIO vote in the election which can end the reign of the company union.

PRR election in Renovo, where d a thousand workers, including undred women are eligible to vote, Sept. 11-12. As part of its election the PRR shops, the CIO Railroad sent a motor caravan to Renovo oona, Pa., 86 miles away. The cars a modern highway, smooth as on looped up and down and around slopes of the mountains.

xpected trouble. The first day the CIO was in town with its loud speaker, it looked as though they might be right.

At noon, as the workers began pouring over the long iron bridge built high over the network of railroad tracks and leading from the town to the shops, the CIO sound car, driven by Vincent Consiglio, URRWA organizer, began touring the street at the foot of the stairs leading to the bridge. Suddenly a fire truck appeared and blocked the street, sirens blowing, bells jangling, horns honking to drown out the words of the CIO speaker.

It made such a racket that practically everybody in town rushed out on the streets. The loudspeaker continued above the noise and although some of the speech bringing the CIO's message to the workers was lost, enough could be heard to be effective. Even if the workers and the townspeople crowding the sidewalks heard nothing, everybody knew that the CIO was in town and that the company was trying to stop them. It made many of them hopping mad, the CIO men heard later.

Ransom Reeder, URRWA director in the Altoona area, one of the leaders who spoke over the loudspeaker, told a company stooge that the CIO appreciated having the crowd called out, as this trick gave the CIO a big boost.

The attempt to prevent the electioneering was not repeated. Apparently the company stooges decided their tactics were bad. Last Monday when the caravan of local URRWA officials from Altoona came back, and cruised up and down the red brick street with the loudspeaker as the workers went back and forth to work over the big iron bridge, the opposition was represented only by two fat cops standing on the corner looking indifferent. Again the whole town turned out on the streets to listen and watch.

ONE BY ONE, officials from the Altoona locals took the "mike" to talk to the Renovo workers and ask them to vote for the CIO. They told how their national union was asking for a 20c hourly wage increase and other demands which would bring benefits to PRR shop workers enjoyed by members of strong CIO unions.

They gave their records as local union officials and told how many years they'd worked for the PRR. These service records were impressive. A group of officers and shop stewards from Car Shop Local 1339 who spoke from the CIO car had such service records as these:

C. F. Troutman, 29 years; Andrew Martin, 25 years; Jack Reeder, 21 years; David L. Weiner, 20 years; Grover C. Ritchey, 30 years; R. H. Little, six years, and George B. Rose, 27 years.

Service records of speakers from the two other locals were: South Altoona Local—C. I. Romine, 35 years; Paul L. Wagner, 27 years; Roy Steel, 35 years. Juanita Local—W. S. Moyer, 20 years; John Toman, 21 years; Willard Emeigh, six years.

Other speakers with the CIO caravan included URRWA Area Director Ransom Reeder, Field Representatives Vincent Consiglio and Thomas Brennan, and Joseph Blank, part-time organizer in Renovo, who has worked in the shops 18 years.

ALTOONA, home town of the members of the three-local caravan to Renovo, is also the national headquarters of the CIO United Railroad Workers. While the Altoona locals' men were campaigning in Renovo, campaigns in other rail shop centers were being carried on, under the direction of A. B. Martin, URRWA national director.

At 2 o'clock in the morning, the day the CIO caravan left Altoona for Renovo, Director Martin took the train for Cleveland, first stop of his tour of other rail shop election towns.

A regular beaten track through the coal dust that coats the sidewalks of Altoona runs between the union office and the small hotel nearby where Martin lives with his wife and 15-year-old daughter, Shirley. They are a closely-knit family. All three eat, sleep and breathe rail shop unionism. It's the center and moving force of their existence.

Mrs. Martin spends most of her days and a good part of her evenings working in the union office, without pay. Shirley goes to high school and does her homework in the hotel room in the midst of union conferences. Some union organizer or member is always dropping in to talk things over.

For many weeks these talks have been about the PRR election, the biggest event so far in the union's brief history. The CIO rail shop organizing drive started in February, 1943. Two and a half years later the URRWA is storming the company-union citadel of the big PRR.

Abe Martin, a man of strong, sturdy frame, heavy gray hair and striking black eyebrows, will break forth in a stream of rail shop facts and statistics at the drop of a hat. He's completely sold on the idea that the CIO can and must build an industrial union of rail shop workers a million strong and rid the industry of company-dominated unionism.

He's very hopeful of winning the PRR election. With that battle won, he says, the rest will come much easier.

The union is demanding 20 cents hourly increase in pay and after the election will press its fight for this and other union demands.

Resigns URWA Presidency After Ten-Year Tenure

Dalrymple Resigns As URWA Head

ROUNDING out a decade as president of the CIO Rubber Workers, S. H. Dalrymple this week resigned at a meeting of the union's General Executive Board at Washington and was succeeded by Vice-Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

Joining with the CIO unions demanding wage increases to meet the loss to the workers suffered by cutbacks in hours, the URWA board not only called for an hourly wage increase of 30 cents but also for the return to the six-hour day and 30-hour week, in effect in many plants under contract before the war.

Dalrymple's resignation was effective Sept. 15. On Sept. 12 he completed 10 years' service as president of the union which he headed since its inception.

Dalrymple headed the Rubber Workers during the Goodyear strike in 1936 and the Firestone strike in 1937, epic conflicts which established the union as the representative of the men who make tires and other rubber products, and during his tenure the membership grew from 3,080 to 200,000 members. The URWA now holds bargaining rights in 220 plants covering 250,000 workers.

WANTED TO RESIGN

Dalrymple said that he has wanted to resign for a couple of years to give somebody else a chance to be president.

Buckmaster also has been active in the Rubber Workers since the inception of the union. Working 18 years in the tire industry after serving in the Army during World War I, he was president of the Firestone local at Akron for a six-year term which included the period of the strike and has been vice-president of URWA since 1941.

The new president said that continued operation of the government-built synthetic rubber plants would assure that foreign cartels controlling crude rubber would not be able to charge high monopolistic prices to U. S. rubber manufacturers.

Civil Service Thanks UFWA For Job Plan

The CIO Federal Workers Union this week received formal recognition for its contribution to the reconversion policies of Government departments in a letter to UFWA Pres. Eleanor Nelson, from Civil Service Commissioner Flemming.

UFWA several months ago sent to the commission the union's plan providing a complete ban on outside hiring until returning veterans and present war service workers have been placed, and making mandatory the transfer of workers from contracting to expanding Government agencies. The Civil Service Commission later issued an order on re-employment which carried the fundamental principles of the UFWA plan.

Consider Plight Of Plantation Workers

The plight of the plantation worker in Arkansas was a major subject of discussion at the recent convention of the Arkansas State CIO Council, in Little Rock. The convention set up the Arkansas Workers Research and Advisory Committee, headed by Harry Koger of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers Union, to get the cooperation of "progressive, honest planters and various liberal groups in bringing about improved economic conditions for underpaid and exploited plantation workers."

Auto Makers Seen Testing UAW Power

CIO United Auto Worker strikers at the Kelsey-Hayes Co., Detroit, Mich., regard the two-week-old strike as a test by the Big Three auto makers—Chrysler, Ford and General Motors — of the strength of the UAW.

The strike started Sept. 8, after the regional War Labor Board ordered the reinstatement of only nine of 13 men fired by the company last April. Three of the men not ordered rehired were the most active union committee members.

Realizing what was at stake, UAW members authorized the strike by secret ballot in a 5-1 vote.

Strikers point out that the plant supplies parts of the Big Three and that "naturally Ford and the rest would like to see the Kelsey union crack wide open and turned into a company union outfit where neither seniority nor real union conditions would exist anymore."

PeaceAgreement Signed by UE, Five Firms

Local 475, CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and five Brooklyn manufacturers this week blazed the trail in management-union cooperation by signing an agreement to establish a joint advisory industrial council.

The council aims to solve employe-management problems and to arrange for "voluntary arbitration" of differences so as to eliminate "unnecessary intervention of governmental agencies." The local holds contracts with the five companies—American Machine & Foundry, International Protector, Intertype, Mergenthaler Linotype and A. Schrader's Son—and has been involved in no strike or lock-out at the firms since its organization in 1939.

Court Orders Bosses' Group To Obey NLRB

In what is believed to be a precendent-setting decision, a U. S. circuit court of appeals in San Francisco this week ordered an employers' group—the Los Angeles Merchants and Manufacturing Association and its subsidiaries—to cease violating the Wagner Act.

The ruling climaxed a six-year court battle by the association against an NLRB order. The NLRB had found that the association and its subsidiaries had set up 434 company unions from 1937 to 1939 and had boycotted employers who refused to cooperate.

UFW Forms Council

A Southern District Council, the union's first, has been formed by the CIO United Furniture Workers, to speed up organization in the furniture industry in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, eastern Tennessee and southeastern states. Intl. Representative Bernard Hiatt was elected temporary president.

Co. as the result of a ruling of the Unemployment Compensation Commissioner. We will continue to fight for these things to protect our CIO members who are laid off due to cancellation of war contracts.

W. A. Copeland, CIO Sub.-Reg. Dir., reports: Ingram Spinning Mills, Nashville, Tenn., CIO, Textile Workers 160, no union 81. TWUA Reps. Grant Williams and Betty Johnson were in charge.

The Wage Policy Committee of the United Steelworkers of America convened in Pittsburgh on September 11 and adopted a wage program demanding a $2.00 per day increase and notified employers, requesting that negotiations commence. This will undoubtedly set the general pattern for the CIO and is necessary to assure the purchasing power that will aid in full employment and postwar prosperity. The USA-CIO will receive the support of all members and unions of the CIO.

The Consolidated Edison Company of New York and the certain AFL so-called unions are having a difficult time in their effort to nullify the contract and destroy the bargaining rights of the Brotherhood of Consolidated Edison Employees because they affiliated with the CIO. This anti-union conduct of this AFL affiliate is consistent with their dealings in the past with the company.

All this will be exposed and the fight for free and clean unionism and the guarantee of these Consolidated Edison workers' God-given right to affiliate with the CIO will be supported. Larger corporations than the Consolidated Edison have tried these tactics and failed when they met up with the CIO. All the CIO unions in New York and several AFL unions are supporting these workers in their fight.

At this writing we are preparing to leave for Europe to attend the World Trade Union Conference in Paris and the writer will report in this coluumn from time to time on developments there.

Council Pledges Aid To N.Y. Utility Workers

The N. Y City CIO Council this week named a special committee to help carry the CIO Brotherhood of Consolidated Edison Employes' case to the public, as members of the union prepared to take a strike vote Sept. 27.

The Brotherhood recently voted in a referendum to affiliate with the CIO and is now a part of the CIO Utility Workers Union. The Consolidated Edison Co. has repudiated the contract with the union, claiming that the identity of the Brotherhood has changed. Pres. Joseph A. Fisher of the CIO UWU, charged that the company is seeking to evade payment of several million dollars in wage adjustment to its employes.

CIO Newsmen Aid In Winning Pay In Lockout

The St. Louis Newspaper Guild, CIO, played an important part in obtaining the promise of the publishers of the three dailies of the Missouri city this week to pay 2,500 newspapers workers full pay for the time lost during a three-week lockout during a strike of house-to-house newspaper carriers.

The Guild joined with three AFL printing trades union in telling the publishers that not one of their members would return to work until all members were assured of full pay, and in publishing a daily paper, believed to have been a persuasive argument in convincing the publishers to come to an agreement with the carriers, affiliated with the AFL Pressmen's Union.

UOPWA Head Files $100,000 Libel Suit

President Lewis Merrill of CIO Office and Professional Workers, this week filed a libel suit for $100,000 against David Sher, chairman of the administrative committee of the American Jewish Committee.

Merrill said he was basing his suit on libelous statements Sher made in a speech to the committee's employes during working hours in which he attempted to dissuade them from joining the union.

NO CHILD CARE—NO JOBS

By SARA LEE DILL

"I JUST don't know what I'll do if the nursery school closes." Working mothers interviewed this week by The CIO NEWS in Washington, voiced the sentiments of mothers all over the country who find it necessary to work because they are for one reason or another the sole support of their children.

The future of the desperately needed child care centers, established under the Lanham Act for children of war working mothers, is being decided as this is written, in meetings of the Lanham Committee with the officers of the Federal Works Agency.

SMALL, dark Mrs. Winona Pourier, mother of Gabrielle, four, is one of the mothers whose husbands are still overseas. She lives with her sister, Verone Moser, and her small son, John, three.

"We have to work," Mrs. Pourier explained. "I have no idea when my husband will come back. I don't know what we'll do if the nursery school closes. One of us will have to quit working. We have no parents to go to. We're really desperate."

Mrs. Mathilda Botsford's husband is a life invalid. She is the sole support of four-year-old Charles.

"The nursery school is very necessary to me," she said. "It's nice for Charles. He's happy there and I hate to put him somewhere else. In a private home he would not have the care of trained people that he has in the nursery school. He's been going there ever since it opened two years ago."

Mrs. Laura Walters is the working mother of three children, Howard, ten; Wallace, eight, and Martha Lou, five. Her husband is in the Army in England. Her two school-age children will go to the child care center before and after school and during lunch hours in the winter.

"There is no place for the children," she said. "I have to continue working. We can't live on a private's pay. My husband has been ill all the time he has been overseas and I'm not sure he'll be able to work when he returns."

Mrs. Winona Pourier (right) with daughter, Gabrielle, four and nephew, John Moser. Mrs. Pourier's husband is overseas. John's mother, Mrs. Pourier's sister, is divorced. It is necessary that both women continue working.

Classes Help Auxiliaries Build CIO

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer

THE first city-wide CIO Auxiliary study course opened September 10 in Cleveland with 25 women registered. Sam Sponseller, CIO Regional Director, is teaching the first two sessions of the course which deal with the history, structure and policy of the CIO. There will be six sessions of two hours each.

In addition to studying the CIO itself, the class will devote two sessions to the History and Role of Women in the U. S. A., with Abbie Graham, author and educational director of the Cleveland YWCA, as teacher of the two sessions, and to parliamentary law led by Elizabeth Gorman, CIO endorsed state representative.

The idea of a city-wide auxiliary school grew from discussion at the June board meeting of the CIO Congress of Women's Auxiliaries. At that time, Faye Stephenson, president of CWA, and Lucile Wenzel, president of the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Auxiliaries, volunteered to see what could be arranged in Cleveland.

Other cities are already planning similar leadership training classes. Helen Blanchard, CWA Director of Organization, feels that education should go hand in hand with organization and expects the new Dayton Auxiliary Organizing Committee to follow Cleveland's example. Minneapolis auxiliaries, working through the Hennepin County CIO Auxiliary Council, are planning classes, too, as a result of their meetings with CWA President Stephenson in July.

WOODWORKERS INTERESTED

The B. C. Lumber Worker, organ of the Woodworker locals in Canada, carried a story in August describing plans for the Cleveland class and suggesting the possibility of a similar course for the fourteen Canadian auxiliaries of IWA.

Auxiliaries have always been conscious of the need for education. Many of them have taken advantage of labor schools in their communities. The New York NMU Auxiliary, for instance, pays tuition for two members each term to attend the George Washington Carver and the Jefferson Schools in New York.

Auxiliaries have also frequently sent one member to attend a labor summer school session. Bertha Perrin, president of the Ohio CIO Auxiliary Council, who attended the Ohio labor summer school at Antioch College, writes:

"Mere training to earn a living or to keep a house is not enough. Women today have more personal lives to lead. The world is counting on us for wisdom based on a broad understanding of the problems of today.

"Auxiliaries of the CIO can cooperate with all organizations and individiduals whose primary concern is the welfare of the people. To do that most effectively our women need the best education they can get."

Mrs. Perrin is absolutely right. The most important way in which auxiliaries can help the CIO right now is in building community support for and understanding of our CIO program. Classes like the one in Cleveland can equip many women for the job.

20TH CENTURY WORK GLOVES

NOW!

10 millions face unemployment now.

These are simple truths which every CIO member must recognize. You can no longer coast along, waiting for Congress to act when it pleases. Its failure to plan for an orderly transition from war to peace has placed you in great peril.

You must make Congress act, to ease the reconversion crisis and assure jobs for all.

Your Congressman will respond to your pressure. You can exert that pressure through your PAC, your political voice.

Your PAC is fighting for broader unemployment insurance, a 65 cent-75 cent hourly minimum wage, the full employment and social security bills, a permanent FEPC, an upward revision of the national wage policy. Mass meetings, leaflets, posters — all information media—are today being used to bring your demands to Congress.

This program requires funds. Last year CIO-PAC appealed for a $1 voluntary contribution to re-elect Roosevelt. Now, we appeal to you again for funds. One dollar for the battle against unemployment.

One dollar.

ONE DOLLAR FOR JOBS

CIO Sponsors Film on Annual Wage

As part of the CIO's campaign for a guaranteed annual wage, a colored-slide film with recorded dialogue and music is being made in Hollywood for the CIO Department of Education and Research, Kermit Eby, the department's director, announced this week.

George Guernsey, assistant director of education, has just returned from Hollywood, where he negotiated arrangements with United Film Productions to make the slide film, and supervised writing of the script.

The slide film can be run cheaply and easily in theaters, halls or homes anywhere, Guernsey says, and will be available for public use through the CIO. Further information on renting or purchasing the film when it is ready, may be obtained from the CIO Department of Education, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C.

On The Air With CIO

Should holding companies, investment banking groups, large industrial empires and other businesses be allowed to control radio stations? If they are, how should this control be limited in the public interest?

FCC asked these questions in a recent report and urged Congress to "consider the advisability of further defining the qualifications of licensees and particularly to determine to what extent" these Big Business groups should be permitted to run broadcasting stations.

These questions arose from the recent FCC decision approving 4-3, the transfer of the Crosley Corp.'s. station WLW, Cincinnati, to the Aviation Corp. of America. The FCC minority said the corporation "is a large holding company of a type which has been traditionally a matter of concern because of their use as an instrumentality for gaining control over large segments of the economy of the country without corresponding responsibility."

The Kilgore Unemployment Compensation Bill will be the subject for discussion on the America United program Sept. 23 at 1:15 p. m. EWT on NBC stations. Senator Alvin Barkley (D., Ky.) and Eugene Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post, have been invited to speak. The America United program for Sept. 30 will be broadcast from the World Federation of Trade Unions meeting in Paris.

Suggesting that a board composed of high government officials control the use of atomic energy and put it to the proper use for the people of the country, Sen. Brian McMahon of Connecticut, on CIO's America United program, last week said that if atomic energy finally supplants use of electric power, coal and oil, it will have a terrific effect on our economy.

It "can't be turned over for private exploitation and private use just for the enrichment of a few. It is too big," he pointed out. "It is too important, and it must be, when it arrives, integrated into our economy. Otherwise, I am afraid that our system as we know it would be destroyed."

Dr. Harlow Shapley, head of the Office of Scientific Research and Development, and the scientist in charge of the Atomic Bomb research, pointed out that "the thing is so internationally known and can become so internationally potent that national, and American control of it, is not to be thought of."

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . A group of Senators were discussing the Full Employment Bill . . . "I believe it is possible to have jobs for all," affirmed one politico, "but we've got to plan for it." . . .

"I'm still a bit afraid of that word 'planning'," ventured a rather cautious Senator, "because the opposition uses it to stigmatize the bill. According to them, it's every kind of ism, including rheumatism." . . .

"That always hands me a laugh," stated a third member of the Upper Chamber. "The guys who yell loudest against planning for full employment, are probably the very ones who complain to the wife that she never plans her budget properly, and never thinks of looking ahead in order to prevent emergencies."

Two Congressmen were having a set-to, over the merits of one of their political brethren.

"He's a professional patriot," thundered one Representative, "which is another way of saying that he's the worst kind of hypocritter!"

"You're absolutely wrong!" cried his opponent angrily. "I say that John is an honest-to-God patriot, and it's a pity that we don't have more like him! Why, he's a man who virtually idolizes the American Eagle—"

To which the other interrupted: "Yes, the American Eagle—on the back of every American dollar!"

CRACKING THE QUIP . . . They say that Col. Juan Peron, worried and nervous over the rising tide of opposition to his regime, paid a visit to a doctor. The medic diagnosed his case as one of nerves, wrote a prescription costing two bucks, and asked for a five dollar fee.

"I've only five dollars with me," said Peron. "Lend me the money for the medicine, Doctor."

The medic gazed at the Pampas Fuehrer for a moment, then said, "I've made a mistake in my diagnosis. Your nerve is all right, but you have an enlarged gall."

I love to hear the alarm clock in the morning. I'm unable to understand those who can't bear the sound of it, and who each morning feel like hurling it out the window or smothering it under the pillow—just to sleep another half hour. For me the alarm clock is the symbol of life; it is a signal that the great city re-awakens, that a new day begins, that streets and buildings will soon again be filled with people.

I love to hear the alarm clock in the morning . . . I am a night-watchman.

Floor Fight On Jobless Aid

The GOP-tory Democrat combination on the Senate Finance Committee, headed by Sens. Taft (R., O) and George (D., Ga.) have chosen to make a floor fight on S 1274, the Kilgore bill for emergency unemployment compensation.

They made this choice by emasculating the original Kilgore proposal in their report, completed as The CIO NEWS went to press.

Their report—which will be countered by a minority report—cuts the heart out of the original bill by:

1. Killing the maximum of $25 and weaseling on the duration under the present stringy state laws.

2. Leaving more than 1,500,000 food processing workers out.

3. Subjecting Federal and maritime workers to the inadequate state laws now in existence.

The floor fight is set to begin this Tuesday, Sept. 18. Get your wires and your delegates in now.

Petition For House Action

The fight for House action on the jobless aid bill came closer to a head this week with action by Rep. Michael Bradley (D. Pa.) to start a petition supporting the Kilgore-Forand bill (S 1274, HR 3891).

Bradley's petition urges the House Ways and Means Committee to report out a bill containing the main features of HR 3891. It says in part:

"We the undersigned members of the House of Representatives urge the House to proceed at once with the passage of adequate unemployment compensation legislation to meet the present emergency.

"We believe the great majority of the members of Congress, if they realize what are the facts and what is involved for the country, will support this legislation."

House action on the bill is being held up, the GOP-tory Democrat coalition hoping to see it defeated first on the Senate floor. Senate action is set to start Sept. 18.

Wire your Representative to sign Rep. Bradley's petition, support HR 3891 in committee and on the floor.

Words And Music By GOP-Democrats

Anyone lacking further proof that a reactionary Republican and a reactionary Democrat make the coziest of bedfellows in politics ought to look in at the hearings on the unemployment aid and the jobs for all bills.

Every venomous remark against workers, every accusation that being unemployed means you're a loafer and a bum was echoed and reechoed from both sides of the committee tables.

For a Republican like Sen. Taft, who sneers "the trouble with a program is that nobody pays any attention to it," you have a Democrat like Sen. George who deliberately suppresses evidence supporting the administration's bill.

On the House side, a Republican like Knutson (Minn.) who favors bullwhips for the unemployed is matched by a tory Democrat like the 82-year-old Doughton (N. C.) who told CIO legislative people that he thinks the unemployed are tramps.

More Insults From Bilbo

More insults to the labor movement and to decent people generally were presented by America's shame, Sen. Theo. G. Bilbo in response to a letter from CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Replying to Carey's recent letter to Congress asking support for a permaent FEPC, Bilbo wrote:

"Now just where do you get this idea? Who told you so? This damnable, un - American, unconstitutional, communistically inspired piece of legislation . . ." etc.

Bilbo's reply, of course, is typical. The purpose of reporting it is not to drive home the notorious fact that Bilbo is Bilbo.

The way to deal with Bilbo, as the CIO has pointed out, is to repeal the polltax by getting HR 7 passed in the Senate.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	Provides up to $25 a week for 26 weeks for unemployed; travel aid; includes veterans, seamen, food processing and U. S. workers.	GOP-tory Democrat conspiracy led by Vandenberg (R. Mich.) and Doughton D. N. C.) trying to kill S 1274, HR 3891 in Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees.	Rush wires, delegates to Washington; demand full passage S 1274, HR 3891 as written; reject "compromise" of Vandenberg as completely phoney.
Jobs for all (S 380)	Gives U. S. responsibility of seeing all have jobs, either by private industry or U. S. aid.	GOP led by Taft (R. O.) in Senate trying to wreck bill with weakening amendments in Senate Banking Committee.	Rush wires, tell S 1274 delegations to urge support of S 380 without weakening amendments as proposed by Taft, Vandenberg.
Wage floor, (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present 40 cents wage-hour minimum to 65 cents.	Senate Labor sub-Committee (Pepper, D. Fla., Chmn.)	Tell delegates on S 1274 to include this in minimum program to Congress.
Social security (S 1050, HR 3293)	Extends, increases present coverage; adds health, welfare benefits; amends present act badly in need of it after 10 years.	Senate has stalled two years without even holding hearings on the bill.	Demand an end to the two years' stalling; early hearings, favorable report and vote.
Materity, child care (S 1318, HR 3922)	$100,000,000 for maternity, child health and welfare, aid to crippled children, day care for kids of working mothers.	S 1318 to Senate Labor-Committee; HR 3922 to House Labor Committee. Both have CIO support.	Write both Senators and your Representative to support. $100,000,000 for health of our children is little enough.
"Equal rights" (HJ Res 49)	Smashes laws protecting women workers from unhealthy, dangerous working conditions; abolishes maternity aid, child welfare; aimed as wedge against all social legislation covering men, women both.	House Judiciary Committee, seven dissenting, has reported it out. Senate Judiciary has now lifted ban on consideration of comments. Hearings likely to start soon.	Write your Congressman and Senators to oppose as dangerous step to end all protective laws affecting both men and women workers.
Ball-Burton-Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act, ends free collective bargaining, prohibits union shop, etc.	Senate Labor Committee, with big new drive coming up for early hearings.	Repeat to your Senators and Congressman: keep away from this one.

Issues to Watch And What to Do

CHILD CARE: Sen. Pepper D., Fla.) and Rep. Norton (D., N. J.) have a new bill (S 1318, HR 3922) in the Senate and House Labor Committees for aid to young mothers and children that CIO is strongly supporting.

The bill provides $100,000,000 a year for aid, divided 50 million for maternity and natal care; 25 million for aid to crippled children; rest for day care for children of working mothers.

CIO is fully supporting this bill. Cost is less than one battleship. Returns are a generation of healthy, well cared for children.

TAXES: This is a straight quote from an AP story on the financial page of the Washington Post. It needs no comment. Headlines: "Improve Tax Outlook Sends Stocks Higher."

Story: "Stock market prices advanced fractions to around three points and closed near the best level of today's session with new 1943 highs sprinkled liberally throughout the list.

"Buying orders predominated because of an improved tax outlook due to a House committee's promise to enact measures to reduce 1946 payments."

This same day the House Ways and Means Committee voted unanimously to start work on a new tax bill within 10 days. (See column one, this page.)

* * *

MORE ON TAXES: Just one day before the Ways and Means Committee made the announcement that sent stocks up, 10 business organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce and the NAM, set up a "Clearing House Conference on Tax Preblems" as a permanent affair.

According to the report, "business and industrial interests have acted independently in urging adoption of various tax programs." This is now to be ended in a grand display of unity.

Beardsley Ruml, author of the Ruml plan tax steal of 1943, which forgave millions of taxes for the rich, will be active in the new group.

ADD NEW LOWS: Exchange of stirring sentiments between Reps. Knutson (R. Minn.) and Landis (R. Ind.). Knutson was in the middle of a long tirade against the British labor government when Landis popped up with this gem:

"Is it not a fact that there will always be an America if we do not give away the country?" Knutson: "May I say to the gentleman he never uttered a greater truth in his life."

LOWDOWN ON DETROIT

UAW Plans for 30% Boost in Wages

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LABOR unrest, as the press vaguely calls it, continued to seeth beneath the surface or to break out in fresh strikes this week in the Detroit area as top international officials of the CIO United Auto Workers Union returned to the city from a 10-Day Executive Board meeting in Flint. They laid plans there for the long, hard fight ahead for a 30 per-cent pay boost in the automotive industry. They brought back with them the Union's new wage plan adopted unanimously by the Board at the Flint meeting and released in Detroit by UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas.

1. Automobile manufacturers will be asked to negotiate on an industry-wide basis an agreement providing for pay increases amounting to 30 per cent of the payroll. Part of this will be used to correct inequalities, part for health insurance and death benefits for UAW members, with most of it going for an across-the-board increase in hourly pay rates.

2. If management refuses industry-wide negotiations the UAW will choose one major auto manufacturing concern as a test, and if negotiations fail, that corporation will be struck nationally at the most opportune time.

3. This will give the corporation's competitors a chance during the testing period to capture the market from the struck corporation.

4. No strikes to raise wages will be called outside the test corporation if such strikes would in any way tie up the manufacturing competitors of that corporation.

5. If negotiations with other companies lead to offers of less than 30 per cent these can be accepted only if they contain a stipulation that negotiations will be reopened in the event that more is obtained on the national level. (Studebaker has already agreed to a 12 percent pay increase on this basis.)

6. The international union will take aggressive action against strikes which endanger in any way the success of the outlined program.

7. Strike action will conform to the Smith-Connally Act calling for 30 days notice and with the provision of the UAW constitution which requires a strike referendum of the membership.

Following the adoption of the wage plan by the UAW International Board members, the UAW Chrysler Department's Wage Policy Committee met in Detroit this week under the chairmanship of Norman Matthews, UAW Chrysler Director, and voted approval of the plan for all Chrysler workers.

Matthews said the committee will report back to the membership of the local unions they represent, and then make plans for taking a strike vote to enforce their demands if necessary. The Wage Committee of the UAW's Ford Department will meet in Detroit, September 29-30, under the chairmanship of Richard Leonard, the Department's Director, and is expected to take similar action.

The General Motors Department, headed by UAW Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther, previously presented the terms of the wage plan to General Motors in a letter to GM Pres. C. E. Wilson, and machinery for taking a strike vote to back the demands is being set.

A clear statement of what lies behind the UAW's demand for a 30 per cent wage increase was given this week by UAW Vice-Pres. Richard T. Frankensteen in a radio interview over the ABC Station in Detroit.

"For the auto worker the answer is pretty plain," Frankensteen told the radio audience. "Since 1942 his wages have been frozen. His cost of living has skyrocketed by 50 per cent. The corporations for which he works have been piling up staggering profits. Now that the war is over, hundreds of thousands have been laid off, and the weekly take-home wages of those kept on the payroll have been cut to the bone.

"When War Production was in high gear, the auto industry paid out fifty million dollars per week in wages. Now the weekly wage bill is down to less than twenty million."

Frankensteen pointed out that the UAW was definitely opposed to price increases and declared that they were not necessary. The industry has comfortable rolls of profit fat out of which wage increases may be paid. In addition the increasing efficiency of production means actual cuts in labor costs even while wage rates are going up, he said.

Figures released recently by WPB Chairman, J. A. Krug, showed that 42 industries expected that output per worker would be 40 per cent above pre-war averages, the UAW Vice-President stated.

Taking up the question of strike action about which there is much public confusion, Frankensteen said that although UAW locals in General Motors, Chrysler and Ford are planning to take strike votes under the Smith-Connally Act, the impression that such votes would mean immediate strike action is false.

"The union will strike only as a last resort if our demands are denied," Frankensteen declared. "Every effort is now being made to settle the Kelsey-Hayes strike in Detroit which will mean a quick return to work for thousands of Ford workers throughout the country. But only if we act unitedly to meet the festering grievances of the men and women in the shops can we establish real discipline and responsibility in the union," he said.

The public should know, Frankensteen declared, "that the real shut-down of automobile production lines has never come from labor. Even the big strikes of 1937 failed to cut total production in that year by a single car."

It was the empty pocketbook of the average American which brought about the real stoppage of production, he said. In the 11-year period before the war we lost production of 30 million cars because the American people were too poor to buy what the industry could produce. It would take a strike of 500,000 men lasting five years to equal that, he pointed out.

Wage increases to workers now will help build the purchasing power necessary to keep all our industries at full production in the years ahead, Frankensteen said.

PHILIP MURRAY
Issues Call for Action

Labor Meet Called Nov. 5

The labor-management conference called by President Truman to discuss, among other things, industrial peace, will be held in Washington Nov. 5, it was announced this week by Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach.

From 30 to 50 delegates, equally divided between labor and business organizations, are expected to attend. Sec. of Commerce Wallace, with Schwellenbach, will participate.

Meanwhile, Schwellenbach was armed with new powers this week as President Truman transferred the functions of the War Manpower Commission, including the U. S. Employment Service, and of the War Labor, to the Labor Dept.

Schwellenbach said he expects to develop the conciliation function of the Labor Dept., following transfer of the WLB, and put himself on record as opposed to compulsory arbitration in settling employer-labor disputes.

Neither the Natl. Labor Relations Board nor the Fair Employment Practice Committee was transferred by Truman to Labor Dept. jurisdiction, although such action is expected at least for the NLRB in the near future, it was indicated.

With the shuffling of agencies, came personnel changes.

Dr. George Taylor submitted his resignation as WLB chairman.

William H. Davis retired as director of the Office of Economic Stabilization, with OES functions to be assumed by the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

Edgar L. Warren, 42-year-old Chicago WLB official, was named head of the Labor Dept's. conciliation service. One of his first jobs will be the auto workers' wage dispute.

HOW ABOUT IT, MR. TRUMAN?

By FRED d'AVILA

A 1,000-strong flesh and blood CIO demonstration that took legislative action out of the dry dust stage served pointed notice this week on the Truman Administration and the Democratic Party that CIO wants speedy passage of reconversion legislation and will hold responsible those who do not militantly support it.

The flesh and blood came from New York State, more than 1,000 CIO paraders carrying flags and banners and signs demanding jobs; chanting "Solidarity Forever," while they were held up an hour and a half by Capitol grounds police; and descending on Congress to plug CIO's program.

The delegation, which jampacked the House Caucus room, was armed with a statement from CIO Pres. Philip Murray which said:

"Three of the leading measures called for in President Truman's message of Sept. 6 are threatened by lack of any organized effort by the Administration or its supporters inside or outside of Congress.

"These are the Full Employment bill, the Unemployment Compensation bill and the 65-cent Minimum Wage bill. If these three measures are not passed in substantially the form asked for by the President, it will represent a body blow to postwar recovery and a repudiation of the President's leadership.

"I do not consider that the Administration and the leadership of the Democratic Party in Congress have shown sufficient exertion to date on these crucial measures."

The delegates, who flocked to Washington by train, private car and airplane, gathered at Union Station Wednesday morning to march to the Capitol, but were halted abruptly by Capitol grounds police despite the fact that they had a letter from Senator McKellar giving them permission to parade.

For an hour and a half, while rain threatened, they held their ranks as Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers Union and a New York City Councilman, marched up and down exhorting the paraders to "hold that line" until a "jurisdictional dispute" between police forces was straightened out.

White and Negro workers, those who had jobs and those who had just been laid off, veterans of the Armed Forces and of the Merchant Marine, men and women — all maintained patient good humor while they waited for the "beef" to be adjusted.

The go-sign finally came, and the paraders streamed out for more than a quarter of a mile from the Station to the Senate Office Bldg., where banners were discarded and the delegates broke ranks to march to the House Caucus room and get down to the business of telling N. Y. Congresmen just what the people wanted.

Fifteen N. Y. State Congressmen—Cole, Traynor, Delaney, Marcontonio, Rabin, Keogh, Hefferman, O'Toole, Rooney, Hancock, Andrews, Kearney, Butler, Hall and Rafiell—attended the meeting and listened attentively to CIO representatives.

The Congressmen heard Quill sharply protest treatment by Capitol grounds police and declare that "this is not the proper treatment for American citizens visiting the Capital of the U. S."

They heard Robert K. Lamb, legislative representative for the CIO United Steelworkers, outline CIO's program, and warn the delegates that if the people back home do not get to work much of the labor's hard-won legislation will be "mowed down."

They heard Congressmen Cellar and Marcantonio promise the delegates that they would get good treatment . . . or else . . . by Capitol grounds police.

"No one, whether he wears a badge and uniform, or a black tie and a gray shirt, has the authority to deny the right of petition," Cellar warned, in supporting the CIO legislative program.

And Marcontonio, pounding a table in front of him, warned that labor is "up against the most serious crisis it and the country have ever faced."

"Appeasement," Marcantonio said, "did not pay against fascism. Appeasement and pussyfooting will not pay against domestic fascism seeking to undermine the progress and undermine the democratic institutions of this nation of ours."

With the standing-room-only sign hung outside the caucus room, the delegates split up into parties to visit President Truman, Democratic and Republican leaders in Congress, Senators and Representatives from New York, and other Federal officials.

To Truman they carried petitions bearing 200,000 signatures urging support for the Kilgore-Forand unemployment compensation bill and measures to provide full employment, a permanent Fair Employment Practice Committee, a 65-cents-an-hour minimum wage, a liberalized GI bill of rights, and continued price control.

They left a statement with Senator Bilbo telling him, in his absence, that "the atmosphere of mutual hatred, suspicion and race bias, which you seek to create, is an obstacle to the unity which the American people must achieve to win a sound program of reconversion."

The delegation was organized by the N. Y. City CIO Council, under the leadership of Quill, Sec.-Treas. Saul Mills and Milton Kaufman; the N. Y. CIO Regional Office, whose director is Pete Mosele, and the N. Y. State CIO Council, headed by Louis Hollander.

As the CIO NEWS went to press, delegations from Delaware and Maryland streamed into the Capital.

More than 1,000 CIO members from New York State came to Washington this week to demand action on CIO's legislative program. The parade (above) stretched from Union Station to the Senate Office Bldg. It was held up an hour and a half by a "jurisdictional dispute" between two of Washington's three police forces.

Some of the signs (above) carried by delegates. Others read: "Jobs for All—Paylines, Not Breadlines," and "Severance Pay for War Workers, Extra Bonus for Vets." The delegates sang "Solidarity Forever," while they waited for the go sign.

Fiery Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers Union and a N. Y. City councilman, led the delegation. He blasted the blockade of Capitol grounds police, told attentive N. Y. Congressmen (above) that the next delegation will be 30,000 strong, said that "it is time that the few remaining tramps and fascists should realize that this is America—not Berlin."

Delegates in the House Caucus Room (below) after Senate Sgt. at Arms Wall Doxey ordered Capt. Brown to let the parade proceed. Capt. Brown held up the march an hour and a half despite a letter from Senator McKellar authorizing the parade. Quill quoted Brown as saying he "didn't give a damn who wrote the letter—McKellar or even Truman himself." "I suspect," said Quill, "that the Captain was unduly disturbed because a Negro veteran was carrying a flag."

THE NEEDED LIFT!

'NOT SUFFICIENT EXERTION'

Best editorial covering the current situation in Congress was written by CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week when he told more than 1,000 New York state and city CIO visitors to Congress this:

"Three of the leading measures called for in President Truman's message are threatened by lack of any organized effort by the Administration or its supporters inside or outside of Congress.

"These are the full employment bill (S 380); the unemployment compensation bill (S 1274): and the 65c minimum wage bill (S 1349).

"If these three measures are not passed in substantially the form asked by the President, it will represent a body blow to postwar recovery and a repudation of the President's leadership.

"I do not consider that the Administration and the leadership of the Democratic Party in Congress have shown sufficient exertion to date on these crucial measures.

"Your New York state delegation and the other CIO state groups coming to visit your Senators and Congressmen during the next three weeks have a major responsibility to tell Congress that the people back home expect speedy action in support of the President's message.

"You also have a great responsibility on your return home, to report to your communities the failure of Congress to date to rise to the tremendous job which faces it.

"The next 100 days should be as important for progressive legislation as any period in our history since 1933."

There it is, with the responsibility for stimulating Congressional action laid where it belongs—at the doors of the workers, the voters, the people.

NEEDED—REAL JOBLESS AID!

CIO Pres. Philip Murray issued a stern warning to Congress and the Administration this week when he described the vote on the Kilgore-Forand unemployment aid bill as "a grave disservice to the country in this crucial reconversion period."

Following is his statement, in which he also urged the House Ways and Means Committee to report the bill out as written:

"The emergency unemployment compensation bill as voted yesterday (Sept. 20) by the Senate is a travesty of the measure recommended by President Truman in his message to Congress last week.

"The Senators who voted to return USES to the states and who voted against maximum emergency unemployment compensation benefits of $25 a week voted for starvation wages, low living standards, and a Hoover depression which will make the crisis of 1933 seem trivial in comparison.

"They have rendered a grave disservice to their country in this crucial reconversion period. Many of them are apparently unaware that there is only a year until the national elections of 1946. The working people of this country will remember their refusal to assure a basis for full employment by providing adequate purchasing power during the reconversion period.

"I call upon the members of the House of Representatives to repudiate the meaningless bill passed in the Senate yesterday and to restore the provisions for a genuine emergency unemployment compensation bill as included in the Kilgore-Forand measure. I call upon the Ways and Means Committee to report the Forand Bill immediately."

Looking Ahead

By FRANK DONNER

CIO's Ass't. General Counsel writes this week in place of Len De Caux, on his way to the Paris World Trade Union meeting.

Once upon a time there was a man who had a suit. It was a good suit. It had stood quite a lot of punishment. Of course, it was not the last word in suits. It would have to be replaced some time. Meanwhile, there was no hurry.

One day the man read in the newspapers that a tailor had made him a new suit. This surprised him. It was news to him. He went to see the tailor and asked him about it.

"Oh, yes," said the tailor. "It's a beautiful suit."

"How do you know whether it fits me?" asked the man. "You haven't asked me for my size or anything. You never even spoke to me before, except maybe behind my back."

"Oh, no," said the tailor. "If I had told you about it, you might have made suggestions, and that would have confused me."

"Well," said the man, "let's see the suit."

So the tailor went to a closet and, sure enough, there was a suit. It was a very queer suit. The jacket was very fancy in front but it was all open in back. The vest was made of cast iron, without any give to it. The pants were made of leather, lined with razor blades, with two long knives sticking inwards in the seat. The whole thing had a pattern of black and white stripes.

The man looked at the suit very disapprovingly. It looked as though he would not be able to take a step in it without getting stuck. He thought the open back of the jacket would leave him awfully cold. He figured that the iron jacket would cramp his style quite a bit. It would keep him from doing lots of things he was used to doing. Also, he did not like the pattern.

All this seemed so obvious to the man that it was not long before he said, in a firm voice, "I don't like that suit."

"Now don't start yelling the minute you look at it," said the tailor. "At least it's a good basis for discussion. You might find some things that are all right."

"Name one," said the man.

The tailor didn't answer.

MORAL: Believe it or not, some proposals—even when made by three such eminent Senators as Ball, Burton and Hatch—have no merit at all.

CRISIS FOR JOBLESS AID BILL—GET BUSY!

By C. W. FOWLER

OUT of a welter of Senate moves and countermoves on unemployment compensation, this one basic fact emerged this weekend — the labor movement has taken a severe setback in its attempts to get the original Kilgore-Forand bill safely past the GOP-tory Democrat combine that's been against it.

As The CIO NEWS went to press, this is how things stood in the Senate: 1) The original Kilgore bill providing for benefits of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks, was scuttled. 2) In its place was emerging a bill along the lines of the Vandenberg "compromise," which is actually no compromise at all but merely freezes current inadequate benefit rates while extending their duration.

In addition, the bill as coming out of the Senate, leaves the whole business in the hands of the state unemployment machines, including the Federal workers who are now included for the first time. Thus, a U. S. worker in an ordnance plant in Mississippi would get as little as $15 a week maximum benefits, while another worker who had done exactly the same work in another state could get a top of $20.

Only the merchant seamen got a slight break in the bill, which put them under the District of Columbia benefit scale—with a maximum of $20. They, too, might easily have been treated the way the millions of government workers were.

On motion of Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.) the bill also turns the U. S. Employment Service back to the states. This was done against Truman's specific request in his message, where he said it would harm both war workers and veterans alike. The USES, of course, involves considerable patronage, which the state's rights boys want retained in their own little baliwicks.

In voting the present bill, which now goes to the House, the Senate rejected attempts by Sens. Kilgore (D. W. Va.), Wagner (D. N. Y.) and Barkley (D. Ky.) to restore the original provisions by amending it on the floor. Travel allowances of up to $200 were retained, though not without a stiff fight from the polltax Southerners.

Some pretty desperate maneuvering went on to prevent a strong minority report from being issued after the majority report was bulldozed through by Sen. George (D. Ga.), who fought the Kilgore-Forand measure all the way through.

As the result of this maneuvering, it was reported that only one of eight members of the Senate Finance Committee kept up his courage sufficiently to be willing to let his signature remain on the tentative minority report.

Votes on the amendments offered by Barkley, Lucas and Kilgore were overwhelmingly on the reactionary side. The Barkley amendment, which would have restored the top of $25 a week for 26 weeks was beaten by 51 to 29; the Kilgore move to substitute his original bill for the bill proposed by George's committee was shouted down in a voice vote; while the Lucas amendment handing USES back to the states was voted in by 56 to 23.

The bill now goes to the House, where Rep. Doughton, 82-year-old polltaxer who runs the Ways and Means Committee, is even more hostile than Sen. George was on the Senate side.

As CIO President Murray told the N. Y. CIO delegates to Congress this week: "You have a great responsibility on your return home, to report to your communities the failure of Congress to date to rise to the tremendous job which faces it. The next 100 days should be as important for progressive legislation passed as any period in our history since 1933."

War Nets Big Steel Firms 113% Profit Gain After Taxes

PROFITS after taxes in the steel industry rose 113% between the comparative five year periods of 1935-39 to 1940 through 1944, the CIO United Steelworkers Union revealed this week in publishing a study, "Five Years of War Profits," prepared by the union's research department.

Commenting on the study, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who is also president of the United Steelworkers, said:

"Never before have the steel companies been so rich. For five years of war production the steel industry has charged the American people over two billion dollars in open and concealed profits. About one billion of these war profits have been kept by the industry—added to its total financial resources, while other millions have been concealed. Seven hundred and sixty-five million additional dollars—more than three-quarters of a billion—have been paid out to stockholders.

"Contrast this with the financial position of America's 475,000 steelworkers. In five years of war work, they have accumulated only a total of $285 in savings, or $600 a worker."

Summarizing the study of steel profits, the Steelworkers declared:

"Profits before taxes during the five war years, 1940 through 1944, rose 276 per cent over the peacetime level of 1935-1939, from $933 million to over three and one-half billion.

"Profits after taxes rose 113 per cent from $576 million to one billion and $225 million.

"Total assets rose 22 per cent, from $4.86 billion at the beginning of 1940 to almost six billion by the first of 1945.

"Dividend payments rose 82 per cent, from $419 million to $765 million.

"Net current assets (working capital) between January, 1940 and January, 1945, rose 68 per cent, from $1.2 billion to two billion.

"General reserves rose 283 per cent, from $103 million at the start of 1940 to $395 million by the first of 1945.

"Undistributed profits rose 81 per cent from $585 million at the start of 1940 to one billion dollars five war years later.

"Total financial resources (excluding statutory and potential tax refunds) rose 131 per cent in five war years, from $689 million to $1.6 billion.

"Funded debt decreased 28 per cent from $903 million to $652 million.

"The excess of net current assets over funded debt in five war years rose 353 per cent from $308 million to one billion and 383 million.

"The industry earned over two billion dollars in open and concealed profits in the five war years.

"Open profits acknowledged in 1944 were $190,366,000, and concealed profits in 1944 were $271,165,000, making a total of $407,531,000 in actual profits after the payment of all taxes.

"Tax refunds amounting to $149 million, or 29 per cent more than peacetime profits, can be collected by the steel industry in 1946 if it breaks even.

"1945 profits continued high. As this study goes to the printer, the steel companies report greater profits in the first half of 1945 as compared to the first six months of last year. These reported profits are (1) after all taxes and (2) do not reflect concealed earnings which, as revealed in this study, are important in steel as compared to acknowledged profits."

JOBS-FOR-ALL BILL WEAKENED

WORKING at the same time that the full Senate was mangling the Kilgore-Forand unemployment aid bill, the Banking and Currency Committee this week produced its final report on the jobs-for-all measure (S 380), around which a struggle has been carried on for the past several weeks.

In its reported form, the bill now goes to the Senate floor with the basic clause declaring that the people have a right to work watered down to a declaration of a right to an "opportunity" for work.

This represents a victory for Sen. Taft (R., O.), principal GOP strategist in the campaign against the bill, which he won by a tie vote defeating a motion to restore the "right" to a job clause.

Taft was defeated, however, on another basic change proposed by him which would have prohibited the government from stepping in with funds to help provide jobs where private industry has failed.

The bill comes up on the Senate floor this week. Action is also being pushed for a report on the bill by the House Commitee on Expenditures in the Executive Department, where it has been referred. Rep. Manasco (D., Ala.) is chairman of this group.

WINS LONG FIGHT: Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union this week signed his final citizenship papers in San Francisco, with his daughter Betty and Naturalization Clerk Walter Castognetto looking on. He recently won a fight, carried to the Supreme Court, against employer interests seeking to deport him as an "undesirable" alien.

See Committee OK on Bill to Kill Polltax

Best information on HR 7, the polltax repeal bill, is that it will be reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee early this week. The vote is expected to be close, but it will support the bill.

Next job is to get it past the threatened amendment that Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) wants to introduce in the bill's place. Constitutional amendments take about 20 years to be ratified—an historical fact that O'Mahoney is aware of.

After that, the bill will have to go past the filibuster that Bilbo and similar polltaxers will put up.

Get your Senator prepared to vote for cloture to gag the filibuster, to vote down the amendment trap and pass the bill.

Does He Part His Hair In The Middle?

One of the rawest deals yet pulled in Congress was attempted by AFL lobbyists this week, when they tried to block the nomination of Raymond S. McKeough to the U. S. Maritime Commission.

Their objection to letting the Senate Judiciary Committee recommend his confirmation was a simple one; McKeough (a former Congressman) had worked for the CIO. That was all.

This attitude so offended some Senators—including an AFL man among them—that they were reported ready to write to Bill Green himself about it. The objecting to McKeough was done, incidentally, by Lew Hines, AFL's chief agent on the Hill. Hines scarcely bothers to tell Green what Hines is doing from day to day.

FAMILY IN OIL

By CHARLEY ELLIS

MEETING nights of CIO Oil Workers Local 128 have a different flavor these days— added when the local began to hold family night meetings and invited wives of members to attend.

You get a taste of the new flavor when you enter 128's big meeting hall in their own headquarters.

While you're looking around for a likely place to sit down, you see some big, husky oil worker being hauled off by his wife to a seat in the front row.

"C'mon, let's go up to where we can hear everything," she says. And the boys in the rear of the hall with whom he had been chatting, laugh as he protests—but moves.

That's family night in Oil Workers 128. It comes the third Monday of every month.

Four women were present when the experiment began on the third Monday of November, 1944. The next month eight attended. At the last meeting, 50 women sat in with their men in the open meeting after an earlier auxiliary meeting in which they disposed of their own business.

It began when Mrs. Warren asked one woman why her husband didn't attend meetings. When the answer was: "Why my husband never goes anywhere without me," Mrs. Warren got the idea for family meeting nights. And it works.

Of course when the gavel pounds adjournment, the girls get up, hustle about serving coffee and cake to everybody, making all feel like it was a friendly sociable at someone's home.

CIO'S TAX PROGRAM URGES 'BREAK' FOR LOW INCOMES

A NATIONAL tax program to help restore "the drastic cuts in the purchasing power of American workers which came with V-J Day" was presented to the U. S. Treasury Dept. and to Congress this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

In brief, the program calls for a new plan of taxes to relieve some of the burden on low income groups; avoidance of sales taxes; payment to workers and others of benefits similar to those industry has received; and aid to small business.

The CIO agrees with recent expressions of President Truman and congressional leaders that the subject of taxes involves a need for immediate revision, leaving to a subsequent date the question of a more thorough and comprehensive overhauling of the tax system.

The most important and immediate problem which confronts the nation is that of restoring the drastic cuts in the purchasing power of American workers which came with V-J Day. The situation actually threatens to defeat our national objective of full production and full employment for reconversion and postwar.

Take-Home Pay Cut

Government officials have blandly admitted that though several millions of workers have already become unemployed, their numbers will be increased by several million more by the spring of 1946.

For those who still remain on their jobs, the working time has been severely reduced with resulting drastic losses in weekly take-home pay. With reconversion from war to peacetime production, basic wage rates have also been sharply reduced. All available governmental studies explode the myth of large savings by workers. A study of the Securities and Exchange Commission has revealed that the overwhelming percentage of accumulated savings are in the hands of business or income groups earning more than $5,000 a year.

At the same time the War Production Board has recently reported that American industry for the war period has increased its profits 120 per cent despite heavy wartime taxes. Profits before taxes rose 350 per cent. The War Production report goes on to state that the net value of all industry increased about one-third, net working capital doubled, and that industry today is in a condition of unparalleled financial health and hardihood.

As an example, the profits before taxes for the steel industry during the five war years 1940-1944 rose 276 per cent over the peacetime level of 1935-1939, from $933 million to over $3½ billion. Total assets rose 22 per cent; undistributed profits rose 81 per cent and total financial resources rose 131 per cent.

Nor should there be forgotten the special treatment that has already been accorded to industry, the benefits of which will first be enjoyed after the war. Special legislation permitted industry to accelerate depreciation for new plants over a five-year period at a time when war profits were soaring. A special postwar tax credit of 10 per cent of excess profits taxes has been accumulated. These funds are now available for deduction from 1945 tax payments. Under a carry-back and carry-forward arrangement, corporations may for two years receive tax refunds that in many instances will not only reimburse them for losses but even exceed their annual net profits for peacetime operations.

THE FOUNDATION for a successful reconversion is necessarily the mass purchasing power of the people. Without the demand for products thus assured, industrial activity at a high level will be short-lived. In the face of the savage reduction of the purchasing power through unemployment, loss of working time and reduced basic wage rates for millions of workers—immediate tax revision must be directed toward offsetting the tragic results which may flow from these conditions.

Tax Legislative Needed

To accomplish this end, the CIO urges the following immediate tax legislation:

1. The present 3 per cent "normal" tax should be repealed. It is grossly unfair in that it is a flat rate applied to all levels of taxable income with no allowances for dependents. The relief thus afforded would benefit primarily low income taxpayers—which is essential under present conditions.

It is this type of relief which is essential rather than an immediate decrease in taxes for all income groups, which would create windfalls for those who can afford to bear their present tax burden.

2. The exemption for single persons should be raised to $1,250. The exemption for a married couple should be raised to $2,000. The credit for each child or dependent should be set at $500.

For a family of four the exemptions plus credits would be $3,000. This would still be less than the tax exemption which the average family had before the war when the marital exemption plus two children amounted to $3,300.

Both for the single individual and for married couples with children, the exemptions that suggested are essential to provide a basic income necessary to maintain a minimum standard of living at a level of health and decency.

Promote Full Employment

Further, in the long run the protection of this minimum income will help promote a high level of production and full employment by protecting the purchasing power of low income groups. Excessive tax rates on low income groups, by restricting purchasing power, will pave the way for rising mass unemployment and low level production with resulting greater government expenditures and less revenue in the postwar years.

3. All sales and excise taxes take money away from families with very small incomes and cut the buying power of the people. All federal excise taxes, excepting those on liquor, tobacco and gasoline, should therefore be repealed.

4. Coporations are now entitled to a carry-back and carry-forward of operating losses and unused excess profits credits so that their taxes can be computed over a five-year period.

Individuals should receive the same type of protection. This would protect workers who have suffered a severe cut in their income during this reconversion period. The carry-back and carry-forward for individuals could be limited to that portion of their personal exemptions and credits for children and dependents that is not used in the current taxable year.

Thus, suppose a family of four has been entitled to $3,000 of exempt income. In 1944 the income of this family may have been $4,000, but this year, in 1945, it may be only $2,000. At the present time this family would have paid tax on a thousand dollars for 1944 but no tax for 1945. But in 1945 the income was $1,000 less than the exemption.

Under our proposal the family should be able to "carry-back"—just as in the case of corporations—this $1,000 exemption to 1944 so that it would get a refund of the tax paid in that year. This would provide relief to the families during the reconversion period when their income is being slashed as compared to the income which they received during the war period on which high taxes have been paid.

Income Tax Policy

5. Individuals should be compelled to pay taxes based on the size of their income no matter what its source. In accordance with this principle outstanding inequalities that now prevail under the tax law should be eliminated and all existing loopholes closed.

To accomplish this the following should be done:

(a) All income from outstanding tax exempt federal, state and local securities should be made to bear their share of the tax burden.

(b) Mandatory joint family returns should be adopted to eliminate the favoritism which permits married couples in the upper income brackets to dodge their full share of the tax burden.

6. Special tax relief should be extended to small business. This can be done by lowering present rates on corporate net incomes that are below $100,000. Further, corporations with incomes below $100,000 should be permitted to elect to be treated as an individual enterprise or as a partnership.

7. Further tax relief for individuals and for corporations should await the formulation of a comprehensive tax program. It is still uncertain as to what the financial needs of the government will be during reconversion and the early postwar years. No fears need be entertained that industry may thereby be injured as to endanger quick reconversion to full production and full employment. All government and private reports covering the financial status of American industry substantiate that conclusion.

Immediate tax relief to high income groups or industry is not an urgent requirement. This task should be approached with great care and only within the framework of the entire reconversion and postwar national economy, which is still in the process of formulation.

CIO's Main Tax Points

1. Repeal the present three percent "normal" tax as a means of relief "primarily for low income taxpayers—which is essential under present conditions."

2. Raise the present exemption for single persons to $1,250 for married persons to $2,000 and $500 for each dependent.

3. Avoid sales and excise taxes and repeal all those now in force except levies on liquor, tobacco and gasoline.

4. Apply "carry-back and carry-forward" to individuals to afford relief during a period of declining income due to reconversion.

5. Correct certain "gross inequities" by instituting mandatory joint returns by husband and wife and taxing all currently tax exempt bonds.

6. Relieve small business by lowering present corporate rates on corporation incomes below $100,000.

7. Hold further tax relief for individuals and corporations until "the formulation of a comprehensive tax program," in order to meet the needs of the government during the reconversion period.

1 The Ball, Burton, Hatch Bill is slanted in favor of employers. Bias is clear when it is seen what happens when workers request a wage increase, or employers seek a wage cut. If a dispute arises after the demand for a wage increase, workers must accept the status quo during the period of elaborate and time-consuming conciliation and arbitration set up by this bill. Wage rates remain the same in the plant; the increase does not go into effect. However, when an employer imposes a wage cut, it is that situation which remains frozen through the interminable procedures set up by the bill. Workers would be as unprotected as they were when they went back to work at Youngstown's Sheet and Tube back in 1937. The legend tells the circumstances. The bill would turn the clock of history back.

2 Like our own democracy, collective bargaining is based on closed shop unless the union negotiating it not only re "There is no good reason why the majority rule principle s the determination of the sponsors that it be made difficult to of labor leadership I have never heard members of a labor or against their will." For two years they waited while litigation bound them to the open shop and low wages. Employers were challenging the newly-passed Natl. Labor Relations Act. In essence, justice delayed is justice denied. The BBH Bill would harass labor continually by taking every opportunity to bring labor disputes into the courts. Under the NLRB, cases do not go to court until there has been a refusal to bargain. BBH would nullify this and make for endless litigation.

The Ball, Burton, Hatch Bill would outlaw the presented, but had as members, two-thirds of the employes. hould be abandoned in bargaining for the closed shop except obtain," charged CIO Pres. Philip Murray. "In all my years ganization complain that a closed shop was imposed upon them gning of a contract involving union shop, dues check-off, and gh fighter tougher. And would deal a blow to democracy.

3 Jailed pickets. These were Ford workers in Kansas City back in 1937. The injunction was used against their civil right to picket. The Ball, Burton, Hatch Bill provides for the issuance of injunctions and nullifies the Norris, La Guardia Act which prohibited the use of injunctions against striking workers. Labor's anti-injunction fight has a long and bloody history behind it. The injunction was first used to break the Pullman strike led by Eugene V. Debs back in 1896. Only in 1932 did the Norris, La Guardia Act finally forbid its use in connection with labor disputes. The Ball, Burton, Hatch bill would negate the years of struggle against the injunction and would bring back anti-democratic methods, challenging the civil rights of striking workingmen. Management would jail workers and crush unions to increases profits.

H—AN EVIL MEASURE

6 Ball, Burton, Hatch would deny the right to collective bargaining of those engaged in "the employment of agricultural labor by farmers and cooperative associations." This invites renewed attempts to exclude about one million cannery and food processing workers from bargaining protection.

7 BBH would amend and shrivel the scope of the Wagner Act. The Wagner Act provides that workers engaged in interstate commerce are entitled to the benefits of the Act. BBH exempts employers of 20 or less. In this way more millions of American workingmen are excluded. BBH challenges the whole structure of free, collective bargaining. It weights the scales in favor of the employer; negates already existing procedures. Philip Murray charged it was full of "bias, compulsion, confusion, and a resort to the use of anti-democratic devices and concepts." (Captions by Helen Kay).

World Trade Union Meet Opens in Paris

By ANTHONY JENKINSON
By Cable from Paris via Allied Labor News

AMENDMENTS to the World Federation of Trade Unions Constitution offered by the British Trades Union Congress will be one of the main subjects considered by the World Labor Conference administrative committee here this week.

Other problems scheduled for discussion are applications for WFTU admission from organizations not represented at the London conference, including North China, Austria, Poland and Indo-China and reduction in WFTU dues for smaller countries.

The administrative committee will meet until the opening of the full conference here September 25. The administrative committee won't make decisions, but will make recommendations to conference committees.

The main issues facing the conference arise from questions raised in TUC amendments; will the conference set up a permanent organization as the French, Soviet and Latin-American union representatives advoate or provisional organization only as desired by the TUC, the IFTU and will Secretary Walter Schevenels and others of the old IFTU staff form the main WFTU staff?

A sharp fight is expected on these issues and the question of the independent trade secretariats. The International Mineworkers Federation is the only secretariat which has approved the draft proposals. The Metalworkers asked that they be discussed more at Paris and the Transport workers flatly rejected them. The TUC and the IFTU both urged that the proposals be reconsidered.

The Canadian AFL may not attend the conference. Addressing the TUC convention in London, John Noble, Canadain AFL leader, supported the AFL position on WFTU and said: "It may well follow that our movement will find it impossible to participate in the formation and continuation of this world body."

Confederation of Latin American Workers President Lombardo Toledano told a press conference here that he will propose that the conference urge that the United Nations recognize the exiled Spanish Republic government and break diplomatic and economic ties with Franco and Peron.

Toledano said he will urge that unless relations are severed, the WFTU should order a world strike against shipments to Spain.

EX-GI JOE AND THE CIO

MEYER Bernstein, veteran of several Pacific campaigns, has been named as assistant to Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee.

Although only 31 years old, Bernstein is also a veteran of the labor movement, having served for several years prior to 1941 as a researcher, and as organizer and intenational representative for the CIO Steelworkers.

Enlisting in the Army three days before Pearl Harbor, he served ironically in the Thirty-seventh Division from Ohio which as a National Guard outfit had helped to break the Little Steel strike. Bernstein's captain had done guard duty opposite him while Bernstein was picketing at Massillon.

Bernstein was transferred at the Fiji Islands to the Seventieth Bombardment Squadron of the Forty-second Bombardment Group after serving as a Browning automatic rifleman and later as cryptographer with the Thirty-seventh Division.

As intelligence specialist, and later as intelligence chief of the section with the rating of sergeant, Bernstein's job included snapping pictures while the bombs were landing—and while the Japs were filling the air with flak.

For his participation in a number of campaigns—including Guadalcanal, Northern Solomons, New Britain and Bismarck Archipelago—and in the antisubmarine patrol, he received a half-dozen stars, and for combat flying he was awarded the Air Medal.

Returning to the U. S. after almost two years in the Pacific, he was honorably discharged this month with a grand total of 103 points.

Voice Protest

The newly-formed Veterans' Committee for Equal Rights is planning to set up chapters throughout the country to protect veterans from discrimination because of racial backgrounds.

The committee grew out of protests made by 458 combat veterans at the Baxter General Hospital, Spokane, Wash., against the refusal of a Veterans of Foreign Wars post in that city to admit to membership a wounded Nisei (Japanese-American), Pfc. Richard H. Naito, who was named treasurer of the group.

WORLD NEWS ROUNDUP

WORLD labor news hit the big circulation magazines this week with a piece in the Sept. 21 Colliers on the World Federation of Trade Unions meeting in Paris beginning Sept. 25. The piece is signed by Sidney Hillman, who is leading the CIO delegation to Paris.

Hillman's article says that objectives of the WFTU include catching and punishing war criminals, seeing to it that the Axis pays for war devastation, supervising German reparations labor, fighting recognition of fascist Spain and Argentina, ending colonial exploitation, etc.

He has some sharp remarks on the way the WFTU representatives were barred from real participation in the talks of the social and economic commissions at the United Nations meeting in San Francisco.

Ammunition, the UAW-CIO's excellent monthly magazine, has a long article giving the backgorund of the Paris conference. It's in three parts, the first describing the French trade unions, their fight against the Nazis, the second discussing unity of anti-fascists in Italy, the third discussing evils of colonialism.

Tune in on your CIO America United radio program at 1:15 p. m. E. W. T. Sunday, September 30. The CIO Publicity Department, whose Director Len De Caux is in Paris, will bring a program on the Paris meeting from France at that time.

Japanese workers in war industries made around $5 a month for unskilled labor, up to $20 for skilled workers, Al Parke reports for Federated Press. (FP's editor was one of those invited to the Pacific trip by the Navy last month).

"Overtime began after an 11-hour work day and there was no weekly day off, only two or three days a month," Larke writes. "The money didn't buy much. A sleazy cotton suit cost 20 yen—one fourth of an unskilled worker's beginning wages for a month's work. Tennis shoes cost 15 yen. One egg cost 1.5 yen . . . therefore if you were highly skilled, worked 11 hours a day, 28 days a month, and had a large family, you would earn 50 eggs a month at black market prices."

More and more AFL workers are getting indignant at the top officialdom for refusing to join the world trade union federation. Latest to protest are the members of Local 107 of the AFL Paper Workers, in New York.

Meany's violent attack on the WFTU and on the CIO, the Soviet unions and the British TUC, made at the TUC convention last week, was met with protest from the "Committee for AFL Participation in a WFTU" headed by Courtney Ward of the Cleveland AFL.

"The falsehood that Russian trade unions are not free and democratic is a remnant of anti-Soviet propaganda," Ward said. "We shall not fall victim to such fantastic accusations which are not based on fact."

'Tween-Meal Snacks Help Cut Accidents

Accident and absenteeism rates have decreased as much as 30 per cent in plants which make between-meal snacks available to workers, Dr. Robert S. Goodhart, chief of the Dept. of Agriculture Industrial Feeding Programs Division, said this week.

JOBS FOR ALL AT HIGH PAY!

Pepper Says Full Employment Minus High Wages Equals Exploitation; Urges 65 Cents an Hour Minimum Now

By CLAUDE A. PEPPER
Democratic Senator from Florida

FOR over a year now the press has been busy worrying the bone of "full employment." It has become a watchword. Most people think it is a good thing, but they do not know what it really means. Practitioners are opposed to it. What Congress thinks is a question; but the fact remains that a sizeable group of Senators and Congressmen, among whom I am pleased to number myself, not only approve the idea of "full employment," but are working to make a reality out of that idea. We are promoting a broad form of legislation which would actually create great opportunities for more jobs in this nation.

But this is not enough. One of the things wrong with the slogan "full employment" is that it is only a half-slogan. A nation employed on substandard wage scales is not fully employed. A nation whose workers are paid so little that they cannot purchase the goods and services they produce is not a fully employed nation. A nation whose people do not earn money to maintain their health and their welfare is not only not fully employed, it is not even democratic, in the sense of democracy as a way of life.

The aim must be: "full employment at high wages." That is the goal set for the American economy by the progressive forces in Congress. It is for this reason—for the reason that without a high level of minimum wages, "full employment" can only become a disguise for human exploitation—that I introduced S. 1349 into the Senate on August 1. Nine other Senators asked to join me in sponsoring the bill, thus indicating their understanding of the need for higher minimum wages if America is to become and remain truly prosperous in the days of peace.

S. 1349 is cast in the form of an amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. This Act set up the Wages and Hours Administration.

The amendment does the following as it stands at present:

2. Requires the minimum wage rate to be 70c during the second year.

3. Sets 75c an hour as a minimum after the expiration of two years.

4. Makes the Act effective 4 months after passage.

5. Broadens the coverage of the Act to include food processing workers and merchant seamen.

6. Provides for the recommendation by the industry committees of minimum wage differentials for jobs which should pay more than 75c an hour.

It also defines the classes of workers who are exempted from coverage under the Act. I find these exemptions extremely unfortunate. However, we are restricted by court interpretations and as long as intrastate commerce, industry and agriculture are not considered subject to federal legislation, but only of state interest, and as long as the Constitution is invoked to prohibit Federal standards in such employment, just so long will America fall short of reaching "full employment at high wages for everyone."

Nevertheless, S. 1349 is unquestionably a great stride in the right direction. It is one of the most essential bills before Congress. It must be passed. Then, using it as a base, we can push father and farther toward final achievement of the goal of universally high living standards in the United States which we are confident our tremendous production capacity can fulfill.

Making Congress Work

PROGRAMS of action designed to halt the rising wave of unemployment and pave the way to full peacetime employment at high wages have been instituted by CIO Political Action Committee groups throughout the country, a survey by National CIO-PAC officials revealed this week.

From Maine to California CIO groups were calling on local unions, city and state governments with concrete plans for relieving the present crisis. In every instance, although state full employment plans were not neglected, the action progams centered around the CIO legislative program and the need for its immediate enactment by Congress.

In Hartford, Conn., hundreds of workers staged a successful demonstration in protest of discharges, climaxed by a parade to the City Hall, where they demanded action from the major.

Georgia's Congressmen, before returning to work in Washington, heard many CIO delegations urge their support of the Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill; the Pepper-Hook Minimum Wage Bill; improved unemployment compensation benefits, including expenses for transportation back to former residences; general basic wage increases and general reduction of rents of Federal housing projects in proportion to the reduction in take-home pay.

The Ohio CIO-PAC was instrumental in making Governor Lausche reconvene the state legislation for a special session to pass on improved unemployed compensation benefits. George DeNucci, CIO-PAC official, wrote the CIO membership to hold up registering for benefits until the new law was passed.

The St. Louis IUC has adopted a novel technic in rousing the city's population to the dangers of unemployment and the need for passage of the CIO program. It hired an airplane to fly over the city streets and drop thousands of copies of the "Unemployment Now" leaflet.

In California the state CIO Council has placed before Gov. Earl Warren a program designed to assure jobs for all and increased trade for California industry. The CIO proposals, suggested for the forthcoming special session of the state legislature, feature a state full employment bill.

OUR PLANT

NOT THE SMALLEST and NOT THE LARGEST

BUT

WE AIM FOR THE HIGHEST PRECISION STANDARDS

At C. M. Smillie Company the objective is not to be the largest in our field. Nor do our present facilities label us as small. We aim at maintaining a reputation for excellence that will be known and valued throughout industry.

Since the founding of the C. M. Smillie Company in 1889, craftsmanship and ingenuity have been the watchwords. To this have been added modern plant facilities including amazingly accurate machines and scientific equipment that coupled with engineering and planning have produced thousands of parts of the highest accuracy.

The C. M. Smillie plant has caused many visitors to remark "the finest plant of its size." We appreciate this. But the efficient layout, the modern machines for every type of operation, a complete tool and gauge department, and inspection equipment—all reflect our basic aim—to operate so as to produce the very best in precision parts that can be made.

After Victory, this extra measure of value in Smillie precision will help to achieve your product leadership.

Florida Rally for Full Employment

More than 3,000 people attened a full employment rally last week in Miami, called by the Florida State CIO.

The meeting, which was said to be the first big labor gathering in the state, heard speakers from the Miami Chamber of Commerce and the Business and Professional Women's Club, as well as CIO representatives.

A warning that what the nation needs is full employment was sounded by Staff Sgt. Donald Harris, hero of 33 missions in a Flying Fortress, who said that veterans do not want jobs at the expense of workers who gave them the planes and guns to beat the Axis.

Everybody's happy as who wouldn't be, while Einar Bredenberg, member of the CIO Steelworkers, left, receives from Harold Bernard, USA Connecticut representative, a check for $6,136, back pay awarded him by the Natl. Labor Relations Board for being discharged unfairly two years ago by the Wire Rope Corp., New Haven, Conn.

Strike Action Is Considered At Monkey Ward

The CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes Union is considering strike action against Montgomery Ward & Co., if management fails to bargain collectively in good faith after the Army returns the company's seized properteis.

This was made clear this week in an editorial entitled "Will It Be War or Peace at Montgomery Ward's?" in the National Spotlight, organ of the union's Montgomery Ward Organizing Committee.

The properties were taken over by the Army last December for non-compliance with War Labor Board directives. The editorial stated that the union is not blinding itself "to the company's record—a record of a concentrated campaign aimed at destruction of the union."

Already the largest locals in the union, Local 20, Chicago, and Local 332, Detroit, have pledged full support to the international in any action that may be required, including a strike.

Low Pay Keeps Social Agencies Understaffed

A national drive to lift substandard salaries in the welfare and non-profit field to a minimum of $200 a month for professional social workers and $30 a week for clerical employes was launched by vote of the National Social Service Committee of the CIO Office and Professional Workers of America, meeting this week in New York City.

The drive is in line with the program of the entire UOPWA and CIO to lift salaries, and is essential in this field, the social work group pointed out, to insure adequate staffing and standards of service.

Returning veterans were urged by the commitee, which represents 10,000 organized employes in private social work and non-profit agencies, to enter the welfare field, which it declared is now seriously understaffed.

Outlook Tells Why Bosses Like B-B-H Bill

How collective bargaining as it developed under the Wagner Act would be wiped out by the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill is vividly described in the current issue of the Economic Outlook, CIO Department of Research and Education publication.

The Outlook says that the bill is the darling of employers, who are always prating about the "right to work" and "freedom of speech," because it would virtually outlaw strikes, prohibit boycotts and abrogate the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which prevents employers from getting injunctions against unions.

Other features of the measure the union-hating bosses like are the provisions prohibiting the union shop and maintenance of membership unless 75 per cent of the employes belong to the union, and allowing management to contest elections in the courts, the Outlook points out.

Rodgers Winner In Guild Election

William W. Rodgers this week was re-elected secretary-treasurer of the CIO American Newspaper Guild in a referendum election. Rodgers, who has held the post since 1941, drew 5,399 votes to 3,951 for Charles L. Whipple, Boston Globe rewriteman. Rodgers carried 71 locals, Whipple 10, with one local tied.

For CIO 100%

The Drug Trade Salesmen's Union, a subdivision of the CIO Wholesale and Warehouse Workers Union, Local 65, has been certified by the Natl. Labor Relations Board as collective bargaining representative of the salesmen of McKesson & Robbins, Inc., Brooklyn Division. The vote in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election was 9 to 0 for the union.

Two Electric Titans Scoop Up Profits

DESCRIBING the earnings of the General Electric Co., and Westinghouse Electric Corp., as "tremendous," the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, representing 200,000 hourly and salaried employes in these corporations, urged the War Labor Board at hearings this week in Washington to order the companies to raise minimum levels of pay and grant others demands of the union.

The board was given facts and figures to show that the companies can afford to abolish wage differentials based on sex, grant severance pay for laid-off workers, paid holidays, provide protection of jobs and wages of veterans and raise the minimum hiring rate to 72 cents-an-hour.

UE officials stated:

The Westinghouse reserves and undistributed profits in 1944 were 127 million, compared to 43 million in 1943, and were more than ample to meet reconversion costs placed at only 26 million in 1944 stockholders' report.

GE's profits after taxes were 62 million dollars in 1944, a 42 percent increase over its 1936-39 average yearly earnings; that its profits were so high that when Army and Navy contracts were renegotiated in 1943 and 1944 it refunded a total of 116 million to the U. S.

At Pittsburgh UE accused the Westinghouse of using a company union-inspired strike by its office employes as an excuse to lock out its production workers, who are demanding a $2 daily wage increase. About 25,000 production workers have already been affected by shut downs at East Pittsburgh, Lima and Cleveland, O.

Vote to Join CIO

The employes of the Commercial Cables Co., one of the major international communications companies and an affiliate of International Telephone and Telegraph Co., this week voted by a two-to-one majority to affiliate their staff organization with the CIO American Communications Association.

UE, URWA, Georgia CIO Plan Parleys

With the relaxation of travel restrictions, two more CIO international unions and one more State Council have announced plans to hold conventions. The Rubber Workers will open their convention Dec. 10 at Chicago, if hotel accommodations can be obtained, and the Electric, Radio & Machine Workers will meet next January at a place to be announced later. The Alabama CIO will convene Oct. 19-21 at Birmingham.

Labor and humanity have lost a life-time champion in the death of Monsignor John A. Ryan. For years he has been a forthright champion of the rights of working men to organize and for the things now expressed as the four freedoms. Under his guidance the Catholic Welfare Society many years ago declared in favor of human security. The common man everywhere, regardless of denomination, will mourn his loss, but his deeds will live throughout eternity.

Meaney lies again! The illustrious secretary-treasurer of the AFL, George Meaney, just recently addressed the British Trade Union Congress and made a vicious attack on the CIO and blunderingly tried to explain why the AFL is playing the role of the ostrich in refusing to associate with trade unions of the world to build a permanent world peace and raise the elevation of the workers everywhere.

He must have thought he was addressing a certain type of business agent, some of whom are now sojourning in Sing Sing. We regret he indulged in this unwarranted tirade and so belittled himself. Real progressive trade unionists know the union movement is the real rock upon which democracy can be established everywhere and perpetuated.

His associates attempted in the best way they could to undo the harm he had done. Many members of the AFL expressed themselves in opposition to his statements and feel a sense of remorse that he ever uttered them.

The need of the world today is the cooperation of the people everywhere. That can be done better by association than by isolationism. The CIO will continue to foster international cooperation in its endeavors to strengthen democratic forces of the world, and will hope and trust Mr. Meaney and associates will see the light as many of the local representatives and rank and file of the AFL do.

When this column goes to press I will be nearing the shores of Europe to attend the World Trade Union Federation Conference in Paris, France. We will meet delegates from almost every country in the world and will endeavor to adopt a program that will serve the cause of the common man everywhere which is to eliminate bigotry in all its forms and build a better and securer life based upon human understandings, upon which the foundation of peace will be built and preserved.

4,600 Oil Workers Get $600,000 Boost

Six hundred thousand dollars a year was put into the pockets of 4,600 members of Locals 23 and 254, CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, at the Texas Co. refinery at Port Arthur, Tex, when the War Labor Board revoked its power to halt wage increases. Texas Co. and the OWIU signed a contract July 14 providing that the wage increases were to go into effect as soon as wage controls were withdrawn.

The 400 members of the Oil Workers at the Socony-Vacuum (Standard Oil) Co. refinery in Trenton, Tex., went on strike this week to force wartime pay for peacetime work. They want a 30% raise because their 48-hour week has been cut to 40.

Steelworkers Sign 2nd Annual Wage Contract

A second contract guaranteeing the annual wage has been signed by the CIO Steelworkers, with the Stratton-Wood Hardware Co., Memphis, Tenn. It is further proof that management is becoming aware of the merit of this proposal advocated by Philip Murray, Steelworkers and CIO president.

The other contract containing the annual wage guarantee was signed with the Wildman Mfg. Co., Norristown, Pa. The Marquette Cement Co. and Orgill Brothers Co., both of Memphis, also have signed contracts with the Steelworkers embodying guaranteed annual wage features.

Mothers Ask Action On Child Care

By ELEANOR FOWLER

Secretary-Treasurer CIO Auxiliaries

THE MOST encouraging part of the whole fight for the continuation of wartime child care centers through this winter is the way the mothers have gone into action. Many of them have had little or no organizational experience before; but spontaneously, all over the country, they have banded together to fight for the right of their children to properly supervised care as long as they must work.

They have gotten in touch with their Congressmen, their town or city, county and state officials to plead their cause. Many of them have known almost nothing about how their government functions or when or how local men are chosen for office. They are busy finding out now and are full of good resolutions on action when election time rolls around.

We women in CIO can help these women to carry out their resolutions. We can see that they get all the information they need for effective political action and we can enlist their sympathy and support on many issues besides child care.

The organizational efforts of these war mothers have followed a very sound pattern. First they have set up their own mothers' committee. Then they have turned to the community to ask for support. In a number of places this has resulted in formation of broad citizens' committees to push for extension of Federal assistance to June, 1946.

BROAD BASIS

I had the privilege of attending the Washington meeting at which the District of Columbia Citizens Committee was formed. Representatives of such diverse organizations as the Board of Trade, the Federation of Churches, the Council of Social Agencies and the CIO voted unanimously to work together to get the emergency program continued through the winter.

The degree of effectiveness of the West Coast mothers can be judged by the fact that most of the West Coast Congressmen met recently with General Fleming to press for continued Federal aid until June, 1946. General Fleming's attitude is that he can do nothing unless directed by Congress.

The Congressmen have, therefore, set up a Committee to call on the House Appropriations and Public Buildings and Grounds Committees to urge them to okay using Lanham Act money to continue child care.

Federal Works' own figures show that over 43 per cent of the mothers using centers are wives or widows of servicemen and that that percentage is increasing. In some centers it runs up to almost 60 per cent.

The mothers are urging that the committee at least hear the mothers themselves before it makes any decision unfavorale to continuing the centers. Each one of us should give our support to the working mothers by writing to her own Congressman urging him to press for keeping centers open and writing to Chairman Fritz Lanham, House Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, to support the mothers' request for hearings.

'Look' Tries To Bury PAC—It's No Go

By FRED ROSS

THE article on Sidney Hillman in the current issue of Look, the picture magazine, is a clever piece based on the fallacious assumption that PAC died with President Roosevelt.

As though the friendship of Roosevelt and Hillman needed to of proved, Look's Richard Wilson dusts off the hoary legend, "Clear it with Sidney." Which is as handy a springboard as you could find if you wanted to do the kind of piece that Wilson—and his publishers—wanted to do.

But it so happened that the American people wanted victory over Fascism and a prosperous postwar world, and that reactionaries, isolationists and pro-Fascists—and most newspaper publishers—wanted simply to get rid of "that man," no matter what the cost.

The motley crew had the power and the money, and they would have succeeded if PAC and the CIO had not turned out the vote in 1944. PAC reminded the American people how good for them was FDR's program and what the game of his enemies was.

PAC could do the job, because its hard core was American workers in CIO unions, who were close to the rest of the population because they were part of it—the part that was mostly keenly aware of the issues.

That's why the fate of PAC is not tied to any one man. PAC championed the cause of most Americans and will continue to do so. As the Look piece quotes Hillman as saying:

"PAC is not a political party . . . it will support any candidate of either party—if he is in accord with PAC objectives."

There is another motif in Wilson's tale, although he plays this one very gingerly—perhaps realizing that it didn't work against Roosevelt and PAC, and that it failed Churchill. It's the old, old business of red baiting.

Wilson says is so many word that Hillman is not a Communist, but that "he travels along with the Communists." His Russian background is also stressed. You see that for all his incisive writing, his economy with words, Wilson is trying to revive an old wives' tale.

Look really gives the show away in "Behind the Scenes With Look," where it does a transparent act of self-justification by saying that nameless political experts agreed with it that the article was "fair, objective," after Hillman called it "fundamentally unfriendly."

Msgr. Ryan Dies; Work Is Praised

CIO President Philip Murray and other labor and progressive leaders this week paid tribute to Msgr. John A. Ryan, who died Sept. 16 at St. Paul, Minn.

Murray said: "Millions of organized workers throughout the Nation mourn the loss of this great priest and distinguished public servant to whom the Divine Lord gave great wisdom to espouse humanitarian causes."

Msgr. Ryan was director of the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. Dr. Ryan's first published work, "A Living Wage, Its Ethical and Economic Aspects," initiated the first systematic discussion of the living wage in the United States. He was the author of the Minnesota minimum wage law.

He advocated a system of industrial democracy which would restrict the dividends of investors and give the surplus gains to the workers and managers. Dr. Ryan was a member of the Industrial Appeals Board under the National Recovery Administration and later was chairman of the Federal Advisory Council of the U. S. Employment Service.

CIO Blasts Housing Inflation

The CIO this week wrote to all Congressmen urging them to "use your influence with the proper authorities" to postpone revocation of War Production Board Order L-41 governing prices and allocation of building materials.

The letter to the President and to Congress, sent by CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowen, said:

"With the revocation of this order the real estate lobby, which all through the war opposed stabilizing controls, has won an important round in its battle for reconversion inflation.

"In our opinion, it opens the door to an inflationary scramble for materials, to inventory hoarding, and precludes price control on new sales and on rental housing. There is a very real danger that urgently needed homes which should be sold at not more than $6,000 will actually be unloaded at prices ranging from $9,000 to $12,000 apiece. Such a speculative orgy will only end in the 'Boom or bust' catastrophe of post-World War I.

"In order to avoid this threatening spiral of inflation, which will affect all the people of the nation, we are urging that the revocation of WPB Order L-41 be postponed for at least three months beyond October 15, when it can be assumed that the shortages in materials, supplies and labor will have eased considerably."

Workers Ask Say On World Oil

Petroleum Administrator for War Ickes, who is also Secretary of the Interior, was asked to include an oil worker in the delegation now in London to negotiate an Anglo-Amerian oil treaty.

Six representatives of the major oil companies have been appointed as delegates by Ickes. President O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers International Union, in a letter to Ickes, pointed out that the Nation's oil workers have at least as big a stake in such a treaty as the oil companies, and should have representation.

Winter and Summer, TWUA Education Motto Is 'Make It Practical'

THEORY is reduced to a minimum in the education programs of the CIO Textile Workers, whether the classes are at the summer institutes conducted by the national union or at autumn sessions such as the Fall River, Mass., local is conducting now.

At the two one-week institutes held at Textile Lodge, Webster, Mass., the eduactional and recreational home of the TWUA Central Mass. Joint Board, mock union meetings were held to give the students a working knowledge of parliamentary law and public speaking.

There were also simulated grievances sessions, with some of the students—who came from 50 locals in New England—and others vividly reenacting the role of management. Other courses ranged from job analysis and job techniques to the history of the U. S. labor movement.

Similar institutes were held also this past summer at the University of North Carolina and at Hudson Shore Labor College, and were attended by a total of 100 members of the union, who in each case came from the states in the vicinity. Larry Rogin, TWUA educational director, was in charge.

An example of the practicality of the winter programs is the new course planned by Dolores Marconi, Fall River local's educational director, on how to prepare grievance reports. A course on chorus singing, and discussion groups have been added to utilitarian subjects given last year and including first aid, needlework and Americanization.

But education is too narrow a word for the work at Fall River, which includes bowling—the TWUA has the largest bowling leagues in New England—and a health program through which 6,000 textile workers have received free chest X-rays.

Oil Workers' Booklet Tells Union's Story

A trim booklet with a St. Patrick's Day green and a black and white cover, called "So You're a Member of the OWIU," has just been issued by the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union. The 16-page illustrated pamphlet tells the fundamental facts concerning the Oil Workers, what a member owes to it and what it does and hopes to do for the worker, and how the dues are spent.

Cracking the Quip

By ARTHUR WHITE

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . Former political prisoners of the Nazis, victims of the whip and the concentration camp, have been helping the Russians round up ex-Nazi Party members, street by street . . . Recently one of the Nazis was captured and when brought to Red Army quarters, the totalit-Aryan was questioned as to his affiliations.

But his captor interrupted by answering for him:

"He is a Nazi Party member. However, I would like to point out that for a long while he secretly disagreed with the Party's policies. He never assaulted anyone, never committed a murder, and never committed rape. In fact, I believe this man should be given another chance, because after the first year of the war, he was definitely anti-Hitler . . ."

"This is a most surprising statement," said a Russian Intelligence officer dryly, "and almost seems too good to be true."

"Oh, it is not true," grinned the German's captor, "I am just saving him the trouble of telling all the lies he was planning to tell."

CRACKING THE QUIP . . . Our favorite yarn about filibusterers (like Sen. Bilbo) is the one concerning the isolationist who, when lend-lease was first proposed, declared his opposition thusly:

"I'll never agree to what the administration is proposing."

"What do you expect to do?" asked a colleague.

"I'll filibuster any bill out of existence," declared the isolationist hotly. "If I can't speak standing, after a certain point, I'll speak sitting, and if I can't speak sitting, I'll speak lying!"

"Which the Senator will do in whatever position he speaks," whispered an observer.

The eight-year-old daughter of a union official was thrilled with the birthday gifts of a watch and a bottle of perfume, given her by her dad—things she had always wanted. She chattered about them all day long, until her mother gently admonished her:

"Everyone knows about your presents and everyone is happy for you. But, we are expecting guests for dinner. Please don't go on talking about your watch and perfume all the time."

Came a lull in the conversation and, unable to restrain herself any longer, she burst forth with: "If anyone hears anything or smells anything, it's me!"

Aid Bill KO'd By State Lobby

One of the slickest, best organized and most persuasive lobbies in recent capital history is as much responsible as any other factor for the wrecking job done on the Kilgore-Forand bill for unemployment compensation of up to $25 for 26 weeks.

This lobby is led by the "state's rights" boys, who persuaded so many Senators (and all the newspapers) that states could not accept Federal aid in providing for unemployed war workers.

It is so powerful—and persuasive—a lobby that its influence on this issue reached into high Administration and Democratic leadership circles, accounting in large part for the paralysis that leadership showed in the Senate fight now ended.

The state's rights lobby is run by two organizations: 1) the Conference of Unemployment Commissioners and 2) the Council of State Governments.

The Conference of Unemployment Commissioners is the outfit led by Claude Williams, unemployment commissioner for Texas. (Texas has a top benefit rate of only $18, payable for 18 weeks.)

Williams is the man who started the false cry that states could not legally accept Federal supplements in benefits to jobless workers. This excuse, so eagerly seized on by Sen. George (D. Ga.), who was in charge of the bill, was repudiated by 17 states and by Governor Stevenson of Williams' own state of Texas. Stevenson's wire, incidentally, was suppressed by George.

Leader of the second outfit, the Council of State Governments, is one Frank Bayne, big shot from the Rockefeller Foundation and long known as one of the smoothest inside operators in Washington.

Both these lobbies, with or without monopoly money behind them, have a big stake in keeping unemployment benefits low by rejecting Federal aid. The stake is patronage, pure and simple porkbarrel patronage.

If they let the U. S. government in, even if only by a supplemental payment made through the states, the patronage boys fear the voters will get used to the idea and will insist on Federal standards throughout social security. This can mean the end of hundreds of well-paid jobs now held by the faithful of the state machines.

This lobby is one of the most unscrupulous in the country. It takes its kick from the people least able to bear it—the unemployed. It cares nothing for the possibility of economic crisis, hastened by refusal to pay better benefits.

It's time it was put out of business.

Answering Hysteria

Anti-labor hysteria is rising to new highs in the newspapers and in certain reactionary quarters of Congress. Every day sees new screaming headlines on strikes, new editorials denouncing labor's wage claims, new reasons why we can't have unemployment compensation, full employment, the 65-cent wage minimum, and other vitally needed measures to prevent depression and crisis.

In Congress, the drive against labor's interests—which are the interests of the nation—so far has taken the form of weaseling attacks on the three bills put on the top of the agenda by CIO President Philip Murray and the delegations visiting their Congressmen.

These three bills, the Kilgore-Forand $25 for 26 weeks bill, the full employment bill and the 65-cent wage minimum—are currently being twisted and distorted out of all recognizable shape.

What is the answer to these attacks? What can CIO members do with their Congressmen to bring the discussion back to the issues and to counter the artificial hysteria the anti-labor forces are striving to induce?

The answer must be given in redoubled work for the achievement of the objectives of the CIO, both on the collective bargaining front and on the legislative front.

On the collective bargaining front, we must double and redouble our efforts to secure wage increases and other needed improvements to bolster our country for the stresses of reconversion.

Back of our collective bargaining efforts must always be the basic CIO program of organizing the unorganized. Without organization, as President Murray has repeatedly pointed out, we have no strength and no influence.

On the legislative front, we must double our efforts to secure passage of the minimum program long advocated by the CIO. We must persuade the Congress—and the Administration—that only through full enactment of these measures can we hope to prevent another depression, another plunge into the misery and chaos of economic and social crisis.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	As urged by CIO, provides up to $25 for 26 weeks for unemployed; travel aid; includes seamen, U. S. workers, veterans, etc.	Emasculated on Senate floor this week by GOP-tory Democrat combine; Administration leadership lacking. Next week to House.	Wire Representative to support Kilgore-Forand bill as written.
Jobs-for-all (S 380)	Gives government responibility for seeing all have jobs, either by private industry or with U. S. aid.	GOP, led by Taft in Senate Finance Committee, trying to wreck with weasel amendments. Next week to House Committee on Executive Expenditures (Rep. Manasco, D. Ala., chmn.)	Rush wires urging support of S 380 without amendments by Taft, Vandenberg et al.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present 40c mum to 65c, widens coverage.	Hearings in Senate Labor subcommittee set for Sept. 25. Deal reported cooking for 55c "compromise" — which is no compromise at all.	Write Senators and Representative to support 65c top, reject any lower amount.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives U. S. chance to dump Bilbo's, Rankin's and their like by giving 10 million Southern citizens the vote.	Passed House; sabotage planned in Senate through filibuster and proposed constitutional amendment.	Tell Senators to press for HR 7, to gag filibuster, reject amendment stall.
Social Security (S 1050, HR 3293)	Improves present act which is badly in need of repair and extension after 10 years service.	Still stalled in Senate Finance Committe after two years since introduction of original bill.	Urge Senators to work for early hearings, quick passage of bill.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner; Act ends free unionism.	Far from dead or even moribund. Anti-strike hysteria laying basis for action.	Keep telling your Senators to stay away from any part of this one.

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

GI BILL: The GI Bill of Rights is in bad need of overhauling. The partial job done by Rankin (D., Miss.) left out protection for veterans from loan sharks, forgot to do anything about education allotments, etc.

Hearings are coming up on the House-passed bill in the Senate within the next week or two. CIO will testify for changes broadening the loan and aid features of the bill.

CIO will ask for increased allotments for GI's going to school, plus more for their dependents; extension of time on loan requests to 10 years; government guarantees for loans up to $5,000 (limit is $2,000); direct government loans at 3 percent interest (as is now done for farmers); increased unemployment compensation, from top of $20 to $25 a week, plus $5 for each dependent.

* * *

TAXES: CIO President Murray's new tax program (see text, page 7) gives us the ammunition we need to start our campaign for a fair and progressive tax program right now.

By putting the tax issues in relation to reconversion, Pres. Murray shows how taxes are important not only as a factor in the cost of living but also as a major influence on the whole national economy.

"Outright repeal of the excess profits tax is generally predicted . . . A reduction in the corporate rate likewise is expected."

FOR VICTORY BUY WAR BONDS TODAY

TO ALL CIO AFFILIATES:

THE HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE HAS TURNED ITS BACK COMPLETELY ON THE NEEDS OF THE WORKERS AND OF THE ENTIRE NATION IN VOTING TO END ALL CONSIDERATION OF EVEN THE INADEQUATE SENATE BILL FOR UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION. IN PLACE OF ACTING ON THIS BILL THE COMMITTEE VOTED TO TAKE UP NEW PROPOSALS FOR TAX RELIEF FOR THE RICH AND FOR WAR-SWOLLEN CORPORATIONS.

I URGE MOST VIGOROUSLY THAT ALL MEMBERS OF YOUR ORGANIZATION, AND ALL PEOPLE YOUR ORGANIZATION CAN REACH, BE IMPRESSED WITH THE NEED FOR THE WIDEST POSSIBLE DRIVE TO SECURE HOUSE RESCINDING OF THIS SHAMEFUL ACT. THIS ACTION MUST TAKE THE FORM OF A DISCHARGE PETITION TO BRING THE KILGORE-FORAND BILL TO THE FLOOR REGARDLESS OF THE HOUSE WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE. IT IS TIME THAT CONGRESS FELT THE INDIGNATION OF EVERY VOTER ON THIS ISSUE.

PHILIP MURRAY, PRESIDENT
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

Six million CIO members over the nation received this warning from President Murray as Congress throttled legislation designed to ease the shock of reconversion. Potent force in making Congress change its mind are sizeable CIO delegations pouring in to Washington. Wire or write if you can't come in person!

HOUSE JUNKS JOBLESS AID!

USING as an alibi what one polltax member called "the current outbreak of strikes," the House Ways and Means Committee this week voted 14 to 10 to postpone indefinitely all consideration of the Kilgore-Forand unemployment compensation bill, which originally called for benefits of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks.

Immediately protesting this action, CIO President Murray wired all CIO affiliates and the Political Action Committee to start a drive to "secure House rescinding of this shameful act . . . It is time that Congress felt the indignation of every voter on this issue." (See page one).

As the situation stands now, the action of the committee can technically be reversed within the committee itself, or it can be by-passed by 218 Congressmen signing a discharge petition to bring the bill on the floor regardless of the committee. Such a petition was being readied as The CIO NEWS went to press.

The GOP-polltax Democrat alliance that trimmed down the original Kilgore bill in the Senate was at work in the House unit, as seen by the fact that the committee's 10 Republican members were joined by three polltaxers—enough to put over the postponement. These men were Rep. Mills (D. Ark.), who made the motion to postpone, Rep. West (D. Tex.) and Rep. Camp (D. Ga.). A fourth Democrat voting with the Republicans was Rep. Gregory of Kentucky, which is not a polltax state.

Rep. Doughton (D. N. C.), the 82-year-old head of the Ways and Means Committee, solved his problem by voting against the postponement motion but also against an earlier motion by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.) to restore the $25 top to the Senate version of the bill.

As a by-product of the postponement motion, Federal workers and merchant seamen, who were covered for the first time by the Senate version of the Kilgore bill, are again left with no protection whatever against unemployment. The $200 travel allowance for stranded war workers is also held up.

Earlier, 10 polltax Senators joined with some 40 Republicans to kill the $25 maximum in the Kilgore bill. An additional polltaxer (Chairman George of the Senate Finance Committee) was paired against the amendment restoring the $25 top, and four more failed to vote.

Meantime, debate went on in the Senate on S 380, the full employment bill. The lead against the whole idea of jobs for everyone willing and able to work was being taken here by Sen. Taft (R. O.), seconded by Sen. Radcliffe (D. Md.). Principal strategy on this bill is to continue to water it down to the point where it becomes merely a pious expression to the effect that full employment is a good thing and let's let it go at that.

This strategy was being combatted by a group of liberal Senators led by Wagner (D. N. Y.) and Tobey (R. N. H.).

GI Mail Discharge Plan Urged by CIO

ASSERTING that Army Separation Centers are the bottleneck in the discharge system, Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, this week urged discharges by mail be instituted to speed up the return of soldiers to civilian life.

"Lowering the points needed for discharge from the Army increases the need for a more efficient discharge system since more men have been declared eligible for release," Golden said.

Golden, in a letter to Major General S. G. Henry, who has charge of the Army's discharge system, explained:

"The Army could give the serviceman his travel pay—it would have to figure that out anyway for a transfer—and impress his fingerprint and obtain his signature on a discharge blank.

"He could then be sent home on terminal leave, technically remaining in the service until the paper processing shall have been completed, when the discharge papers, the Army Separation Qualification Record, his final pay and allowances, and anything else would be mailed to him.

"Some of this, such as the last two installations of the mustering out pay, is mailed under the present system, and the soldier has the option of having all his money sent by check and mail. The same thing can be done from the camp as well as from the separation center."

Pointing to the fact that Separation Centers are only temporary facilities to be discontinued January 1, 1946, Golden continued:

"Our proposal would make it possible to send home every GI almost as soon as his services can be dispensed with. And the faster the surplus soldiers can be discharged, the higher the morale and the efficiency of those who remain.

"The Army has exercised considerable flexibility in the field, when faced by an emergency. The same kind of thinking that speeded up victory, can be used to speed up demobilization."

Veteran of several Pacific campaigns and before enlistment a member of the staff of the CIO Steelworkers, Meyer Bernstein has been named assistant to Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee.

Anti-Vet Plan Hit

Meyer Bernstein, assistant to Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, this week attacked Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey's latest interpretation of his "super-seniority" doctrine as being "impractical and harmful to the veteran and the non-veteran alike."

Charging that the Selective Service head is attempting to destroy union seniority, Bernstein—himself a veteran of several Pacific campaigns—said that under this system most ex-servicemen will have more seniority than most workers hired during the war. He said Gen. Hershey's proposals "give very little to a very few veterans, and take much away from the great majority of veterans and non-veterans alike."

Bernstein declared that there is "no divergence in interest between organized labor and the veterans," that the three million union members in the service are "as much a part of organized labor as those who remained behind to forge the guns," and that CIO is concerned with the welfare of both groups.

'U. S. Artificial Limbs No Good'

Two members of the CIO Steelworkers who each lost a leg in World War II battles told a subcommittee of the House Labor Committee this week that artificial limbs issued by the government were "awkward, clumsy and poorly constructed," caused them pain and threatened their earning capacity.

Robert L. Rogers, employed at the Bethlehem Steel plant, Sparrows Point, Md., testified that his artificial limb was so poorly fitted that the stump of his leg was rubbed open several times, and that when the Veterans Administration told him he would have to wait two and a half weeks for repairs, he finally paid a mechanic to fix it.

John Meekins, worker at the Rustless Steel Co., Baltimore, said his artificial leg was so poorly fitted that he has to use a cane to walk, but the VA told him he would have to wait six months for new one. He has two months more to wait.

Vote for Hunger

Senate Record

FIFTY-ONE Senators voted for hunger last week when they went on record rejecting Senator Barkley's amendment to the unemployment compensation bill restoring the maximum of $25 for 26 weeks. Twenty-nine voted against hunger; 16 didn't vote. Here is the list, in column one below. Keep it handy for '46 and '48.

At the same time, 56 Senators voted to give veterans and other job seekers the worst possible break in finding a job by turning the U. S. Employment Service back to state political machines for patronage plums involved; twenty-three Senators voted against this job steal; 17 didn't vote. This vote is listed in column two.

SYMBOLS: a plus sign (+) in column one means a vote for the amendment to restore the $25 maximum; a minus sign (—) is a vote against the amendment and for hunger. A plus sign in column two is a vote against the patronage deal in the Lucas (D. Ill.) amendment turning the USES back to the state political machine; a minus sign is a vote for it. A sign NV in both columns means that the Senator, for one reason or another, did not vote.

For The Right To A Decent Living

By C. W. FOWLER

CONGRESS got the 65-cent question dropped into its lap this week when six CIO rank and filers told Senators what life is like on a take-home of $21 a week and less.

The telling was done by four women and two men with pay scales now ranging from 63c for a 40-hour week down to 34c for a 56-hour week, who came before the Seante Labor subcommittee, holding hearings on S 1349, the bill to raise the present 40-cent minimum to 65 cents now and 75 cents later on.

The Seantors, especially Tunnell (D. Del.) and Aiken (R. Vt.) were impressed with the workers' stories. Even Ellender (D. La.), who has been fighting the battle of the sweatshopers since the heartings started had to keep quiet.

For example, there was Mrs. Bellows of the FTA-CIO, who said: "I've worked in a Traverse City, Mich. cannery for 13 years. We used to make 20c an hour. Now my pay is 50c—$15.80 a week take-home for 40 hours. . . . I can't for the life of me understand why cannery workers should not have overtime pay like everyone else." (They are exempt now under the wage-hour act, but would be included under proposed amendments.)

Or young Shirley Hall, a Textile worker from the south, who told the Senators that her 63c an hour is considered "high pay not only for the mill but for the area" and praised the union for getting it. Shirley's worry now is that her mother will have to go back to work, leaving a baby sister and brother uncared for.

Or Arnold Fesser, an NMU man who kept 'em sailing all during the war and who now gets 34c an hour for skilled work as a fireman and oiler. . . . Mrs. Burr of the UE-CIO, keeping a 92-year-old mother on 58c an hour. . . . supporting a 21-month-old son on $21 a week. . . . Charles Burke, an Amalgamated Clothing worker and a veteran, who doesn't see how he can raise a family on 50 cents an hour.

These six CIO rank and filers, talking to their Senators and patiently answering Ellender's pleas for the sweated industries of the South (and the North too, for Ellender defends them all), put flesh and blood on the testimony presented earlier in the week by Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach and assorted specialists, all of whom favored the bill.

They also furnished the ammunition against certain Congressmen who are busily trying to promote the idea of a "compromise" bill providing a hike from 40c to 55c.

The 55c, figure it should be remembered, is not a compromise at all, since the War Labor Board has already made it the minimum and the Textile Workers and other unions have generally established it even in the South.

Mrs. Winifred Burr of the UE-CIO is a final inspector in a New York safety razor plant. She has a skilled job that nets her 58c an hour, which adds up to $25.85 take-home for a 45-hour week, but she averages around $21 a week. Mrs. Burr is the sole support of her 92-year-old mother, finds the going tough, obviously needs more money.

NMU merchant seaman Arnold Fesser shipped out of Baltimore all through the war as a fireman, watertender and oiler. Now he gets 34c an hour for a straight 56-hour week, sends home an average of $19 a week to support a wife and three children. Fesser gets work about 40 weeks a year. The rest of the time he's "on the beach."

Frances Garcia works for Western Union in New York, belongs to the ACA-CIO. Her take-home is around $21, has to support a 21-months-old son whose father is overseas. Even with her Army allotment, Mrs. Garcia has nothing left over for "incidental expenses, recreation and a chance to live decently." Many servicemen's wives live like that.

Charles Burke, CIO Clothing Worker from Lebanon, Pa., volunteered five years ago, served overseas. Veteran Burke wants a chance to get more than 50c an hour, which he says is not enough to get married on and raise a family. Burke doesn't want to become "just a floater and spend most of my life hunting for wages good enough for a decent living."

Twenty-two-year-old Shirley Hall, a Textile Workers Union member from Lynchburg, Va., considers herself lucky because she's been getting 63c an hour and because her mother could afford to stay home with the youngsters last year. With cutbacks, Shirley's mother will have to go to work now—if she can find a job in a competitive market.

Mrs. Gladys Bellows, CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, has worked in a Michigan Cannery for 13 years, starting at 20c an hour, now up to 50c. Her take-home is $15.80 a week, which has to help feed five boys. She once worked a 91-hour week during the season without a cent of overtime. She feels that this was extremely unfair.

THEY VOTED FOR HUNGER

The 51 Senators and the 14 members of the House Ways and Means Committee who voted to wreck the Kilgore-Forand unemployment compensation bill voted for hunger in America.

They knew what they were doing. Ample evidence of unemployment already reaching into the millions has been in front of them all during their consideration of the bill. The high cost of living, already up 50 percent over 1941 and daily going higher, is common knowledge to every wage earner and housewife in the country. The cutbacks in hours and earnings, amounting to a 30 percent reduction in take-home pay, are equally familiar to all—even to Congressmen.

Instead of listening to the needs of the people and of the nation, the 51 Senators and the 14 members of the Ways and Means Committee listened only to the lobbyists who hold low wages and state patronage more sacred than their country's welfare.

They listened to the 30-cents-an-hour gang loudly complaining that they couldn't get workers to take jobs in their sweatshop industries. They listened to the state's rights gang falsely swear that state laws forbade them from accepting Federal supplements to $15 a week benefit scales.

Despite the appeals of the workers, despite CIO President Murray's most earnest warnings that the course led to economic disaster, despite President Truman's message, the 51 Senators and the 14 Committee men turned their backs on the workers and wrecked the Kilgore-Forand bill.

Democratic leadership in both House and Senate left the ball to the Republicans and to the most reactionary polltax men of their own party. In the measured words of President Murray, "they have not shown sufficient exertion to date on these crucial measures."

In turning their backs on the workers, the majority of the House Committee showed their contempt for the needs of the people by voting to take immediate action on "tax relief"—by which they mean more plums for the rich and the war-swollen corporations.

How can we persuade the majority of the Senate and of the House to reverse this menacing drive toward reaction and economic crisis?

As an immediate step, the CIO is urging all its members, and all democratic forces everywhere, to start the widest possible drive for House action to rescind the Ways and Means Committee's shameful act. The CIO is urging all Congressmen to sign a discharge petition to get the Kilgore-Forand bill past the Committee and on the floor for a vote.

This is an immediate step. Longer range steps were suggested in President Murray's statement that "many of them (the Congressmen) are apparently unaware that there is only a year until the national elections of 1946."

There is one way that this trend to chaos and misery can be reversed. That is by political action. The 1946 elections are only a year away. Congressmen watch the figures on registration in their districts more closely than any other set of statistics.

When they see a big registration, they listen more closely to the wishes of the registered voters. When they see a low and lagging registration, they feel they can relax.

It is not too early to begin the registration drive now. Meantime, the delegations to Washington, the flood of letters, wires, even telephone messages, must increase, must have constantly growing support from everyone.

The dangerous trend to reaction can be stopped. Congress can be made to listen. Congress can be persuaded that a vote for hunger is a vote for political oblivion.

But they can be persuaded only by you—the voter, the registered voter.

Looking Ahead

By LEN DE CAUX

PARIS—The complications of forming for the first time an all-inclusive world labor organization are enormous. There are differences of language, tradition, ideology and parliamentary procedure. Added to these today are the physical difficulties of transportation, food and accommodations resulting from the most destructive of all wars.

In Paris there are shortages of everything—food, rooms, clothing, heat, soap and even such minor items as matches and pencils. Ration books are needed even for restaurant meals and prices are fantastically high for foreigners who get their francs at the artificially fixed legal exchange rate. For the French, the exchange value of francs is small since there are few consumers goods to buy with them. And at that, the situation in France is much better than in many other continental European countries.

But the World Trade Union Conference is magnificent proof that where there's a will there's a way. Despite almost insuperable travel difficulties and skyhigh fares, there's hardly a delegate missing from the furthest corners of the globe.

The French CGT has made conference arrangements that could hardly be bettered in any country.

Language difficulties are met by a corps of skilled interpreters. The four official lagnuages for the conference are: English, French, Spanish, and Russian. All speeches are translated into these four languages, with some of these groups retiring to separate rooms for simultaneous translations to avoid delay.

But trade unionists the world over seem to have a common language and understanding of their own, growing out of common experience, and it's remarkable how readily democratic procedures are understood and agreed upon and how smoothly sessions proceed.

Most remarkable of all, however, is what Citrine called "passionate desire for international union unity." It's so much in evidence here that it overcomes the much more basic differences of political ideology, race, religion and nationality, and most competent observers are convinced that this conference, like all previous ones, will finally reach almost unanimous conclusions despite sharp differences that are being democratically threshed out.

The CIO delegation is following a policy of not lining up too sharply on controversial issues and candidates, but rather trying to find common ground between contending sides so that satisfactory compromises may be worked out without sacrifice of principle.

It follows this policy for two reasons: first, because it's convinced that all present are sincerely eager for the success of the conference's main business—the launching of a strong, effective, united World Federation of Trade Unions, and differ only on how best to achieve this goal; secondly, because it doesn't believe effective international labor unity can be achieved by narrow majority votes, leaving a dissatisfied minority, and that patience and diplomacy can always produce near-unanimous conclusions eventually when there is a basic desire for unity so strong as there is here.

Neither of two major issues so far emerging seem to CIO delegates to involve basic principles.

The British make an excellent practical case for their proposals for slower transition to permanent functioning than many other delegations desire. Sidney Hillman and other CIO delegation leaders have already expressed agreement with a number of concrete British proposals. Others of them seem capable of compromise in a way to assure a permanently established WFTU at this conference without sacrificing the safeguards which the British deem necessary in its initial stages.

Similarly with the issue of international trade secretariats, satisfactory adjustment appears quite possible. These secretariats are international organizations along industrial lines and have enjoyed fairly independent status in respect to the Intl. Federation of Trade Unions. The Transport Workers Union is the biggest, has a high per capita, and operates in a field where international industrial organization has very special functions. It's natural, therefore, that it should be particularly concerned with continuance of its functions under the new setup.

In many other industries, however, there is little functioning international organization and a number of CIO unions are eager to get effective trade departments started immediately for their industries under the WFTU.

MR. LABOR COMES TO WASHINGTON

Some CIO delegates that visited Congress this week to urge action on reconversion legislation.

TWO thousand strong, separate CIO delegations from Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey and Maryland, representing a combined membership of two millions, this week visited their Congressmen and Senators to find out how they stood on unemployment compensation, full employment and the 65-cent minimum wage bill and other points of CIO's reconversion program.

The march on the Capitol has just begun with Ohio and Kentucky scheduled for October 4, and other delegations from the Middle West, New England and the South the week of October 7.

This week Robert K. Lamb, legislative representative of the CIO Steelworkers, told the Pennsylvania delegation: "The tide against the CIO program has halted but not turned."

Pennsylvania CIO Council Pres. John Phillips, State PAC Chairman Harry Boyer, CIO Regional Reps. A. J. Federoff, Greorge Craig and Joseph Walsh told the delegates that it was their job to tell their communities who in Congress is holding up the reconversion program.

The Maryland delegation left for President Truman a statement urging him to support not only the CIO reconversion program, but also calling on him to announce an Administration program for immediate wage increases.

The Delaware delegation, led by Legislative Director Walter Polland of the Shipbuilding Workers, found Senator Tunnell (D.) and Rep. Traynor (D.) indicating support, but Sen. Buck (R.) refused to see the visitors.

To strengthen the President's hand in dealing with Congress, Rep. Bradley (D.) is circulating a round-robin petition to support the unemployment compensation bill.

While the Pennsylvania delegates did not parade as did some of the other CIO groups, they were able to obtain more complete reports on the attitude of their representatives.

The following run-around by Rep. Kinzer was typical of many of the Republican representatives, some of whom appeared at the opening conference with the Pennsylvania delegates but could not be found later:

Unemployment compensation: "Not a good policy."

Full employment bill: "No."

Minimum Wage Bill: "Not prepared to say" although he did not think that $26 dollars a week was an exorbitant wage—which is the maximum in most states a worker could be paid if the bill became law.

Permanent FEPC: "Not in its present form."

Abolition of the Polltax: Said he voted for it.

Matthew Connelly, secretary to President Truman, said that the President is doing everything in his power to assure passage of the unemployment compensation bill as originally proposed.

Rep. Martin, Republican House leader, sent word he couldn't see the delegation because he was meeting with "industry people at the Republican headquarters" but would see them "tomorrow." The visitors had to leave that day for home.

Senator Guffey (D. Pa.) got the greatest ovation, all the delegates standing and applauding. Both he and Senator Myers, also a Pennsylvania Democrat, were elected with the help of organized labor and are for the CIO program.

The New Jersey delegation, nearly a thousand strong, jammed the House caucus room full to meet with seven of the state's Congressmen and one Senator, and afterwards to parade to the White House and leave for President Truman a request for full support of CIO's program.

The delegation was led by N. J. CIO Council Exec. Sec. Carl Holderman and N. J. CIO Regional Director Ewald Sander.

Pres. Frank Hartman of the Camden County AFL Central Labor Council, representing 36 affiliated unions, accompanied the delegation to tell Congress that the AFL's program is much the same as CIO's, and that "if anyone gets the idea that he is going to drive a wedge between the AFL and the CIO he is mistaken."

The need for immediate action, particularly on the unemployment compensation bill, was stressed by Holderman, who said that 18 percent of New Jersey workers have been laid off—315,000 out of 1,750,000 employed during the war.

He quoted statistics from Passaic County, N. J., to show what kind of job offers these workers are getting. Of 8,000 offers:

200 were for jobs paying 30-40 cents an hour.

500 for jobs paying 40-50 cents.

6,000 for jobs paying 50-75 cents.

And only 1,300 for jobs paying over 75 cents.

Senator Smith, and Reps. Kean, Canfield, Hart, Sundstrom, Towe, Case and Norton.

TELLING IT TO WASHINGTON

Nearly 1,000 CIO members from New Jersey crowded into Washington this week to tell Congress they want federal unemployment compensation, the jobs-for-all bill, a 65c minimum wage, etc.

Veteran Alexander Barkan told N. J. Congressmen that ex-GI's want jobs, at prevailing rates, no special favors such as "super-duper seniority."

N. J. Congressmen Canfield, Hart and Kean (left to right), paid close attention, were impressed by size of the N. J. delegation.

Over 500 CIO members from Maryland also came to Washington, paraded to the White House, urged the Administration to press for speedy action to aid the unemployed and to provide eventually for full employment. They paraded up Constitution Avenue.

REPORT FROM PARIS

By LEN DE CAUX

The most cosmopolitan city in the world was host this week to nearly 300 representatives of more than 70 million workers who met to set up a permanent World Federation of Trade Unions. The CIO NEWS presents an exclusive, inside story from Editor De Caux. More will follow week by week.

IN A SETTING even more impressive than the first United Nations Conference, the most representative gathering of the world's peoples ever assembled began sessions in Paris last week.

Inscribed in large silver letters on a red background below a high rostrum, and appearing on place cards of various delegations, are names of more than 70 countries whose labor movements are represented at this first constitutional convention of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

More than 70 million workers organized in some 133 national and international labor bodies are represented by close to 300 delegates at this world parliament of labor, it is estimated.

Keynote Is Unity

The conference is meeting in the modernistic auditorium of the great Palais de Chaillot, one of the finest exposition halls, built for the Paris World Fair to display products of French workmanship.

The keynote of the conference, whose main purpose is to adopt a constitution for the new World Federation, has already been struck by speeches of delegation leaders on the draft constitution and proposed amendments.

The most far-reaching of these amendments come from the British Trades Union Congress, which approved proposals of the London meeting of the Intl. Federation of Trade Unions. These involve provisional arrangements and temporary officers for the transitional period until satisfactory arrangements are completed with international trade secretariats, and for absorbing officers and staff of the IFTU, and until bona fides of labor bodies asking affiliation have been properly investigated.

Most delegations, including the American, are eager for a permanent organization to be established at this conference. But leaders' speeches have indicated a willingness to accept many concrete British proposals and the possibility of compromises on others. So the expectation is general that unanimous conclusions will finally be reached as happened at all previous conferences and committee meetings.

Tells Workers' Hopes

He dwelt on the hopes of working people of the world that out of war and victory over fascism will come a new world order of peace, security, and democratic progress.

"Liberty of humanity in great measure is conditioned by emancipation of labor," Jouhaux said, "and emancipation of workers is the task of international labor. In order that there be peace, it is necessary that misery cease to be the lot of peoples."

The presidium of rotating chairmen of the conference was then elected, including Jouhaux, Citrine, Kuznetsov, Hillman, Toledano, and Chu Hsueh Fan of China, and Saillant was named secretary of the conference. Upon objection of the Netherlands' delegate that the presidium insufficiently represented small countries, Auguste Lindberg of Sweden was added to the chairmen by a standing vote of 130 to 88.

The Standing Orders Committee, to consider convention rules and resolutions, was elected, including Fitzgerald of CIO, Deakin of Britain, Reynaud of France, Markov of the USSR, Kuypers of Holland, Dange of India, Apostol of Rumania, Amilpa of Mexico, and Chu of China. This committee elected Fitzgerald chairman.

Trustees named to handle admission fees and count ballots include Brophy of CIO, Benstead of Britain, Tarasov of the U.S.S.R., Saillant of France and Bernasconi of Switzerland.

The election of a Credentials Committee brought a contest between 16 nominees for nine places. John Green of CIO headed the poll and the committee later elected him chairman.

Report on Constitution

The first order of business after these preliminaries was a report of Saillant on the draft constitution and proposed amendments. Following the European procedure, a general discussion then ensued before reference to the Committee on Constitution.

The first leader of a big delegation to speak was Kuznetsov.

He said the All-Union Central Council of Soviet Trade Unions discussed the approved draft constitution with only small amendments to make it more precise and complete. Its amendments include provisons for representation of small organizations, for substitutes for Executive Committee and General Council members when they are unable to attend, and for two assistant secretaries in addition to the general secretary.

Kuznetsov stressed the aims of the world body to preserve lasting peace, wipe out all vestiges of fascism and elevate workers' wages and social security, also the importance of proposed trade departments to represent workers internationally along industrial lines.

Oldenbroek of the Intl. Transport Workers Federation made a vigorous speech on one of the main issues of the conference, future relationships of existing international trade secretariats to the WFTU. He said secretariats don't accept the draft constitution article replacing them with trade departments subordinate to WFTU. He declared that secretariats are independent organizations and this conference can't decide their future. That is a matter for negotiation, he said. Final decision must be made by their own conventions.

Citrine then explained British proposals in an eloquent speech. He stressed first that this must be a trade union not a political international, and if we get into the field of politics we will be split because of varying political ideologies and aims.

Citrine argued that applying organizations should be admitted only provisionally, with authority for the Executive Committee to investigate bona fides more thoroughly than can this conference. He said it is a surprising phenomenon that some national organizations, previously with no members, now claim a few months after the war to have hundreds of thousands.

Citrine urged enlargement of the Executive Committee for more small-country representation and payment of travel costs to members from distant countries.

Citrine Asks Flexibility

Citrine asked flexibility in provisions adopted here, not a "cast iron constitution." He said the General Council should have power to amend rules by two-thirds vote, provided fundamental principles of the constitution are not involved.

Citrine said there must necessarily be an interval before the Federation can function permanently to set up a headquarters staff, etc.

But he wants a short interval, at the latest next January first.

Meanwhile, the British, who are the main support of the IFTU, have no intention of deserting its staff, nor secretariats their staffs.

Citrine said there is "no truth to the claim we are delaying." He pointed out that the British took the initiative for a new organization and are most eager for a strong, stable united body, but "people can't be bludgeoned into unity by a majority vote."

Declaring, "We want the WFTU established on firm, durable foundations," Citrine made a fervent plea for adequate financing.

Toledano expressed agreement with Citrine on the importance of thoroughly examining bona fides. He agreed that the executive must have all necessary powers to act quickly and make necessary changes, but preferred to call the transition period "a period of initiative." He said many of the British and other amendments were not contradictory to basic principles, and could easily be adopted provided they are designed to strengthen, not weaken, the WFTU.

Hillman Makes Plea

Hillman said that labor demands for representation on inter-governmental councils are "weakened considerably when made by an organization that either was provisional in character or not on an effective functioning basis. World events are marching in seven league boots. It is imperative that the voice of world labor should be immediately heard. This can be done only by formation at this conference of a permanent and functioning WFTU."

Hillman said the American delegation is in complete accord with proposals for greater representation of small nations on the Executive Council. He said he saw considerable merit to the proposal to authorize the General Council to amend the constitution as emergency circumstances may necessitate, pointing out that all national centers represented on the General Council with voting rights are protected as effectively there as in the congress of the WFTU.

On the question of international trade secretariats, Hillman urged adoption of a constitutional article setting up trade departments. He took into account Oldenbroek's arguments but said that, pending discussions for a satisfactory understanding with such functioning secretariats as the International Transport Workers, it would be unwise for the WFTU not to proceed with the establishment of trade departments in "fields today barren of effective and operating secretariats." Hillman said U. S. unions are anxious quickly to create trade departments in some important industries now untouched by any functioning organizations. He said trade departments should enjoy full autonomy on matters affecting their industry, but the WFTU should be supreme in matters of general policy.

Sound WFTU Sought

Hillman expressed confidence that all delegates have uppermost in mind a sound WFTU "based upon the unshakable unity of workers of the world," and that therefore success will attend their efforts.

Other items on the agenda include a report on the work of the Administrative Committee, to be made by Hillman, and discussion of that and labor representation in international agencies; also reports of national centers of activities implementing the London conference decisions, with Carey reporting for the CIO; also new business, when miscellaneous resolutions may be adopted. At CIO's suggestion, election of officers will be postponed to the last order of business to enable delegates to acquaint themselves with qualifications of various candidates.

The tendency is this type, although during the last year nearly kers were reinstated to remedy discriminatory , while back pay amounting to almost $2,- as paid to 3,700 workers who had been the unlawful practices. Today 60% of the cases board are representation cases. Collective bargaining has become an accepted part of employer-employe relations.

There are those who will not rest in their fight against labor's magna carta. They have turned to Congress to find the means of destroying the act. This summer the House cut the NLRB's appropriation by $40,000 and although it was restored in the Senate, the House also put the "Frey Rider" into operation, which forbids the board from opening a case in which a contract, no matter how collusive, has existed for three months. The Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill is the latest and most threatening assault on labor's hard won fight to bargain collectively.

CIO's Pres. Philip Murray labelled it as "unquestionably the most bald-faced attempt to destroy labor unions and nullify the basic constitutional rights of workers which only after years of struggle have finally been recognized."

The Ball-Burton-Hatch advocates are challenging the heart of the Wagner Act, which states:

"The National Labor Relations Act declares it to be the policy of the U. S. to eliminate the causes of certain obstructions to the free flow of commerce, by encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining and by protecting the exercise by workers of full freedom of association, self-organization and designation of representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of maintaining the terms and conditions of their employment or other mutual aid or protection."

In order to protect workers in the exercise of these rights the Act specifically provides for: (1) the prevention of unfair labor practices; (2) the selection of representatives for collective bargaining; (3) the right to strike.

Oil Moguls In 'Sit-Down'

By HARVEY O'CONNER

AT the urgent request of Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach, the deadlocked conference on the CIO Oil Workers' demands for wage increases recessed this week in Chicago to meet in Washington.

With the oil industry shut down on the Texas Gulf coast and in the Middle West, representatives of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union and the major oil companies met in Chicago Sept. 25 at the request of the U. S. Conciliation Service to bargain collectively on the union's demand for no pay cut as industry reconverts from a 48 to a 40-hour week.

Industry representatives maintained a stony silence when Judge William L. Knous of the Conciliation panel appealed to them to bargain with the union. Three days of conferences failed to budge the corporations from their anti-union stand.

No counter-proposal was made to the union's demand for no reduction in take-home pay. Judge Knous administered a withering verbal rebuke to corporation representatives for their adamant refusal to make any offer or counter-proposal.

The companies insisted that bargaining be resumed on a local plant level where negotiations have already broken down, resulting in the shutdown of a substantial part of the industry and prospective shutdowns of other plants.

"It is obvious to us that there has been no collective bargaining here," declared Pres. O. A. Knight of the union. "They do not intend to bargain. The breakdown of conciliation efforts is due to industry's stubborn refusal to negotiate the only issue before this conference—that of wages."

Gathered in Chicago were four international officers, members of the union's Executive Council, senior representatives from each of the union's seven districts and a rank and file worker from each district. A small committee headed by President Knight was selected and given full authority to attend the Washington conference called by Secretary Schwellenbach. The other union representatives returned to the centers of the oil industry throughout the country.

Fred Fernbach, personal representative of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, attended the sessions and pledged full CIO support to the oil workers. Pledges of assistance poured into the conference from CIO locals in all parts of the country.

The Oil companies are in the best position financially of any industry to maintain the workers' standard of living and provide added jobs as a contribution to the 60 million job program, declared President Knight. Fourteen major companies made $550,000,000 profits in 1944, a 100 percent increase over 1939, he said.

During the war years the companies tossed one billion, 385 million dollars in swollen profits into surplus. Dividends last year exceeded a quarter of a billion.

Westinghouse, GE Sex Biased

Fred Clymer, industry member of the Natl. War Labor Board, this week admitted there was discrimination against women in wage rates at the General Electric and Westinghouse Cos. at the end of hearings in the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers' case against the two firms.

After a whispered conversation with Vice-Pres. W. G. Marshall of Westinghouse, Clymer admitted there was discrimination, adding: "Maybe, this should have been said in the executive session of the board, but I thought it would help to get it said here."

Other issues in dispute before WLB are the 72-cent-an-hour minimum wage for hourly and salaried workers, protection of jobs and wages of war veterans; severance pay for dismissed and laid-off workers, and paid holidays.

Farm Equipment Union Asks 30%

Joining other CIO unions asking wage increases, the CIO Farm Equipment Workers has served notice on the Intl. Harvester Co. that it wants a general 30 per cent wage increase, a guaranteed annual wage and a $1 hourly minimum wage. The union represents some 30,000 Harvester employes, 17,000 of whom work in the company's Chicago plants.

Gerald Field, director of FE's Harvester Council, in announcing the union's bid for national negotiations to change the contract, said: "It's no secret that Harvester dominates the industry and sets the pace."

Present contracts between the company and the union, signed in 1942 for the duration of the war, expire upon 30 days' notice of a desire to effect changes and contain a provision allowing for a 60-day negotiation period.

Chrysler Co. UAW Confer

Wage negotiations opened in Detroit this week between the CIO United Auto Workers and the Chrysler Corp., first of the Big Three auto concerns to get down to the business of discussing the UAW's demands for a 30 per cent increase.

The Ford Motor Co. and General Motors have not as yet made public any plans to confer with the union on the wage demands.

The UAW-Chrysler conference follows a petition by the UAW for a strike poll under the Smith-Connally Act covering 120,000 workers in 20 Chrysler plants. The Natl. Labor Relations Board set Oct. 25 as the date for the vote.

A petition for a strike poll in 135 GM plants employing some 350,000 workers was filed Sept. 22 by UAW Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther, director of the UAW General Motors Dept. Oct 24 has been set by the NLRB as the date for conduction this vote.

Richard T. Leonard, UAW Ford director, said the Ford Dept. of the union would meet in Detroit Sept. 29-30 to vote on the strike issue and that a petition with the NLRB would probably be filed about Oct. 1.

FORD MEETING

A mass meeting of Ford Local 600, whose members work at the big River Rouge plant in Detroit, voted unanimously for the strike poll at a mass meeting atended by several thousand workers on Sept. 22.

Pres. R. J. Thomas, in a speech at the meeting, explained the UAW's over-all strategy in the drive for a 30 per cent wage increase. He said that the UAW the hoped to negotiate increases with the industry without strikes, but that preparatory steps to carry on a strike against any one of the Big Three if necessary were being taken, such as filing petitions for a strike vote under the Smith-Connally Act and taking union-conducted strike polls in conformity with the UAW constitution.

He said he did not know which of the Big Three, if any, would be struck first, and that stories in the press that it would be General Motors were unfounded. He also accused the press of exaggering the strike situation.

UAW Vice-Pres. Richard Frankensteen, candidate for Mayor of Detroit in the Nov. 6 election, also addressed the Local 600 meeting, urging the workers to aid actively in the campaign to give the city its first labor mayor.

Ford Director Leonard and Local 600 Pres. Joseph McCusker both spoke on the 30 per cent wage drive. The meeting voted for a 50c monthly assessment to aid the drive, all of which is to go to the local.

While petitions for a strike vote and discussions of the union's wage program at mass membership meetings continued to be the main subjects of interest, other developments which occupied the attention of UAW members as having implications affecting the union, included the resignation of Henry Ford as president of the Ford Motor Co. in favor of his grandson Henry Ford II, and the formation of the Kaiser-Frazer Corp. which will take over the big Willow Run war plant at Detroit.

Stage Protest At Shipyard

Discharge of 29 workers at the N. Y. Shipbuilding Corp., Camden, N. J., in violation of the terms of the contract with Local 1, CIO, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, provoked a strike this week that closed down the yards. About 14,000 workers are employed on the day and night shift. The workers were fired unfairly on alleged charge of "loafing," the local union stated, with the procedure provided in the contract for handling discharges ignored.

N. Y. Shipbuilding is working exclusively under contract with the Navy. Vice Admiral E. L. Cochrane, chief of the Bureau of ships, was in Camden conferring with company and union representatives in an effort to settle the dispute.

CIO Blueprint

The CIO's program serves as a blueprint for the years ahead, says CIO Pres. Philip Murray in an article in the September 15th issue of The Churchman, independent religious journal. The article is a plea for "tolerant cooperation among all people."

THE ANSWER IS: FULL EMPLOYMENT

In cooperation with the CIO Political Action Committee, we are publishing a digest of the latest PAC pamphlet, "The Answer Is: Full Employment," written by Joseph Gaer and Robert K. Lamb and illustrated by William Krokyn. We hope to present these digests to our readers as a regular feature as all of PAC's pamphlets will describe in detail the CIO program for the achievement of full peace-time economic security.—Ed.

IN five out of every six years, since the Civil War ended, we have suffered from sizable unemployment in our country. Unemployment and depressions seemed to follow wars with monotonous regularity. For a short time, after each war, we experienced a temporary boom, followed by a roller-coaster drop in employment that took our breath away.

Plan for Prosperity

Now we are at the end of the most destructive war in all history. And unless we get together and plan firmly for continuous full employment, we shall again be faced with a depression far worse than the one created by World War I in cooperation with the Hoover Administration.

Depressions breed wars. But we can see clearly now that another World War might mean the end of civilized living.

To prevent war, we must prevent another depression.

We can prevent another depression only if we nail down and secure continuous full employment.

Philip Murray, demanding quick Congressional action on the Full Employment Bill, stated: "The country must be mobilized for an attack upon poverty, ignorance and fear that compares to our wartime effort We must use what it takes to prevent the catastrophe of mass unemployment just as we need our resources in cooperative endeavor to prevent the catastrophe of fascism from overwhelming our world."

There is no other way.

Record Production

On July 1, 1945, in a report to the President and Congress, Judge Vinson, then Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion and now Secretary of the Treasury, said:

"In 1939, our national output hit its highest peacetime level, higher than in 1929, higher than in any previous year of our history—$89 billion. Five years later that record figure was dwarfed by a new record output of $200 billion. We succeeded in piling our new wartime economy on top of a peacetime economy; in achieving feats of production no one believed possible. In so doing we opened a totally new vista of what the future can hold."

"It would be disastrous to go back for we would be going back to the misery of mass unemployment."

We dare not go back. We must go forward.

When Philip Murray announced his Reemployment Plan, which was adopted by the CIO Convention, he showed clearly how full employment can be attained through "teamwork on the part of labor, industry and government in organizing production around an over-all national plan."

It's Up to Congress

We can and will have jobs for all at good wages if we plan for it, and if our Congress passes bills to support our plans.

What we must have is an over-all plan regarding wages, price control, taxes, every espect of social security, community development, planning for more education and for leisure, the establishment of racial and religious equality, and all these must be integrated by a Federal Full-Employment Plan to assure the continued success of such a program.

The CIO has such a program and has been advocating it for some time. Now the time has come to realize it. Congress and the President must be told that you expect such a program and want early action on it.

1. Adequate Basic Wage Rates. We cannot possibly have continued full employment, unless workers receive adequate pay so that they may have the purchasing power to buy the goods and services they produce.

2. An Annual Wage Guarantee. Better wages are not enough unless workers can know that they are going to get those wages continuously. Just as industry has been given a carry-forward carry-back guarantee whereby it may claim tax refunds to cover future deficits, workers should likewise be guaranteed income year-round to assure them a continued annual wage.

3. A Minimum Wage at Current Prices. The Minimum Wage should be raised to 65-75 cents per hour. The 40 cents per hour established as a minimum wage seven years ago was inadequate at that time—now that the cost of living has gone up so high, it is utterly insufficient.

4. Prices Must Be Controlled. It will benefit the wage-earner little if his wages are increased but at the same time we allow prices to go up.

5. Our Taxation Must Be Revised. We must revise our tax laws so that the burden is lightened on the shoulders of those who can least bear it.

6. Unemployment Compensation. We are today faced with grave unemployment due to the sudden shift from war to peace, and due to the fact that our Congress failed utterly to prepare for this emergency situation. We must therefore pass at once emergency legislation to give $25 a week for 26 weeks in unemployment compensation to all those now without jobs.

Social Security

7. Social Security for All. In addition to the increased unemployment compensation, we must improve our Social Security System in two ways: (a) we must include under it all those not now covered by law, and add sickness and disability benefits not now granted; and (b) we must increase considerably all the benefits so that they may truly offer the beneficaries real security in time of need.

8. Community Development. If our people are to live securely then we need to do much to improve the housing situation and to develop each community to make it a better place for Americans to live in. Community development needs government planning and government support.

9. More and Better Education. For better living we need more and better education, more education for all who are able and eager to become educated. Education will make jobs.

10. Planning for Leisure. We, Americans, love to have fun. But leisure, too, must be planned. It requires the building of playgrounds, ball fields, stadiums, parks. Plans for leisure will create many jobs.

11. Good Race Relations. Without full employment we cannot hope to improve the disease of race prejudice. But even with full employment, we must plan and fight to eradicate prejudice. And the first step is to establish a permanent Fair Employment Practices Act, and enforce it with firmness.

12. Freedom for Political Action. If we are to gain full employment and hold on to it, the people must hold on to their right to freedom of speech, the right of workers to collective bargaining, and the right of all citizens to take part in all elections without hindrance of any means-test or a poll tax.

There is a bill now before Congress which starts us toward the main highway of full employment.

It is known as the Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill.

We of the CIO-PAC are wholeheartedly for it.

Jobs-for-All Bill

The Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill calls for the establishment of a national policy with regard to every person's right to work within our free enterprise system. The bill states that every person able and willing to work has a right to "useful, remunerative, regular, and full-time" employment.

If this bill passes, it would become the duty of the President of the United States to report every year to Congress how many people there are in the country willing and able to work; how workers can and will be employed by private industry; and, if there is any danger of unemployment, he will recommend the necessary legislation for useful public works to offer employment to the anticipated unemployed.

The Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill does not propose the guarantee of specific jobs to specific people. It does not authorize compulsory assignment of workers to jobs. It does not authorize full government control of wages, prices and production. It does not authorize government guarantees of markets and profits.

This Bill does not propose any of the things the enemies of the Bill claim it does.

Full employment is the road of a peaceful and prosperous America. Who blocks that road?

The native-fascist legislators and newspaper owners and race-hatred agitators.

The Bilbos and the Rankins.

The Hearsts and the McCormicks.

The Peglers and the Fulton Lewis Jrs.

They are all against it.

Just look and see who is against legislation for full employment, then you'll know why we must fight for it.

Let all the enemies of labor take note:

We have our marching orders in President Roosevelt's Second Bill of Rights.

We shall not be denied.

We, the people of the United States, are on our way to a better future for all of us—a future in which there shall be no wars, no depressions, no unemployment, no strife.

We shall not be denied.

What to Do to Win

1. Get your community-wide Full Employment Committee to roll up its sleeves and keep everyone in your community informed on what must be done locally to create jobs for those released from jobs and how to secure all jobs.

2. Write to your Congressman and ask him to work for and vote for the passage of the following Bills:

(a) The Murray-Patman Full Employment Bill (S-380 and HR 2202).

(b) The 65-cent Minimum Wage Bill (S-1349, HR-3914).

(c) The Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill (S-1050).

(e) The Wagner Housing Bill (S-1342).

(f) The Missouri Valley Authority Bill (S-555).

3. Let your Congressmen know, let your Governors know, let your Mayors know that you are counting on them to take the lead in the drive for full employment.

4. You must not rest until everybody in your community understands the danger of unemployment and is enlisted in the struggle to attain full employment.

"It couldn't happen again"...

By I. MENDELL

Bitter memories of brutal pain . . . of acid humiliation . . . and through the searing flashes the ghost of White Supremacy rising once more to challenge and crucify him. But it wouldn't . . . it couldn't . . . happen again. A CIO NEWS short story.

SAM gulped the hot fragrant air in such large lungsful that he felt slightly light-headed as he walked straight and tall down the walk. His shoulders seemed to bulge through his uniform, as though they had grown broader since he put it on. His head, chin up, pointed straight ahead, but his eyes went left, then right and back, taking in every familiar old sight and searching out what was new.

Funny, he thought, funny. Swore I'd never come back. Never missed it while I was gone, yet first time I see the place I feel kinda like I was home again. Home! Huh! That's 'sure funny!

He shook his head unable to understand. The head was dotted with tiny pearls of perspiration already coated with the perpetual summer dust.

Without changing his stride he slapped his flanks, leaving a swirl of dust behind. He ran a careful forefinger over his campaign bars. Mustn't have any dust on them. No, sir!

SAME old dust. Same old dust. Town a mite different. More awake looking, too. A few new stores—and the walk widened some—

The walk! He scowled, slowed his pace. Damn! That walk. He didn't want to remember what had happened on that walk. The memory of it had gnawed at him. Burned in his mind and had spoiled his sleep on many a night with a pain like the cut of a dull knife, until he had longed for a way to tear it out of his mind the way he had torn a loose and aching tooth from his jaw when he was a child.

New memories had gradually formed protective layers and the old ones had become submerged. Not completely but at least enough to stop the sharpness of the pain.

Now it was with him again. He was surprised to find it was strong as when it was fresh, and fully as bitter. The bitterness of it was in his throat. He could see Mr. Summers standing there. Oily. Fat. Flabby. Hatefully smug.

"Off the sidewalk, nigger!"

The memory stopped his feet He froze tight and tense as he had when Mr. Summers had lifted his cane and swung it. He flinched as he had when the stick had cut the first welt across his face from ear to chin. His fists doubled as he re-waited for the second stroke. His whole frame jerked as it struck.

Damn, he said, softly, impotently, through hard-biting teeth. Damn!

HE KNEW he should have stepped off sidewalk as soon as he saw Mr. Summers coming. Something in Summers' face had stopped him. He could remember exactly what his thoughts had been. Effie. Sweet, soft, warm Effie. Beautiful Effie. His Effie. Summers' face had said My Effie if I want to go to the trouble to take her. He knew then he would never get off the sidewalk for Mr. Summers—not if he was beaten—jailed—not even if he was lynched for it.

Yet after two blows of Mr. Summers' cane he had stepped down and let the smug, fat men pass. So strong is rearing in a man. Only two blows. That hurt most.

His mother heard it. Not from him, but she heard. She watched his hatred growing as he lived with it. Two weeks later he left for New York. She saw to it. When neighbors had asked how she had managed, she had answered: Better a dollar owed than a son buried. Effie had followed. In New York there were no Summers's. Effie had been his Effie.

Now she was here with Maw and soon he would see them both.

Forget it, he told himself. Five years is five years. It's a helluva long time. Mr. Summers is probably dead by now. What's the use of thinking about it. Hup—two, three, four—Maw—is—waiting—hup—two, three, four—soon—see—Eff-ee—hup . . .

SOMETHING across the street made him miss a step. Three men in working clothes had turned in off Sawmill Road. Coming from the new factory Maw had written about. Two white men, the third black. Blacker than he was. Yet the three walked together—talking — arguing. The Negro was in the center; the others seemed to listen when he spoke—just as if he were white.

Sam stopped walking and watched them coming toward him, trying to solve the puzzle. Must be the two white men were giving the Negro hell for something, maybe even arresting him. Certainly he didn't look like it. Looked like friends talking, but that couldn't be. One was black!

THEN suddenly, out of nowhere, Mr. Summers was there. Fat and oily and smug. It wasn't a memory. Mr. Summers wasn't dead. He was standing there with the same look on his face and the same stick in his hand.

Sam was tight again. Damn, he thought. Gawd damn. He couldn't think any more. His mind kept repeating damn, Gawd damn!

He stood in the center of the walk blocking Mr. Summers—waiting helplessly for the cane to rise—wondering what he would do when it struck—waiting for the words. It couldn't happen again. He couldn't step down this time. Not in uniform. Yet it was happening. He wished that his mind would stop feeling so numb.

Mr. Summers' mouth opened. His lips were very thin considering his fat face and heavy jowls. The words were forming—his anticipating tongue played with them before spitting them out.

The three factory men were abreast now. They stopped, sensing something. The five men stood there silently. The three looked at Mr. Summers. Mr. Summers closed his mouth The expression on his face changed. No longer smug, hateful Mr. Summers. An almost cringing Mr. Summers. Mr. Summers fumbled in his pocket, pulled out a watch, looked at it unseeingly, stuffed it back into his pocket

Howdy, boys, he mumbled. Hot, ain't it? And waddled off across the road. Four sets of eyes followed him. The three men grinned at each other and one of them winked an eye and gave a quick nod of his head as though to say, that's showing him, ain't it?

Sam said howdy, but never knew he had said it.

The three gave a friendly wave and were off—back to their argument. Words drifted back, lying

Urgent PAC Job Calls For Women

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary - Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THERE is just one answer we women in the labor movement can make to what is happening in Congress—more and more and more political action.

When the Senate voted 51 to 29 against any increase in state unemployment benefits that are utterly inadequate to meet present day living costs, they made it clear that a big majority of our upper house wants workers to go hungry. When the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives voted to "postpone indefinitely" consideration of any federal help to the unemployed, and to work on tax relief instead, they voted for hunger too.

PROSPERITY AT STAKE

They must not get away with it. Our chance of having full employment in the United States depends on raising the incomes of our people so that they can furnish a larger market for our industry. Unemployment benefits at starvation levels will do the opposite.

Most Congressmen and Senators understand only one argument—votes. It is not long now in many states until the primaries. Our representatives in Washington are keenly aware of that. One of the ways we can influence their thinking is to get voters registered and to see that each newly registered voter lets his Congressman know.

Even in 1944, when women turned out as never before, there were many who didn't take advantage of their right to vote. This year we must reach those women, and the time to start is now.

The CIO Political Action Committee has started a national drive for funds. The goal, like last year, is one dollar from each CIO member. Every auxiliary that has not already done so should make helping PAC its first order of business.

Recognition of the important job auxiliaries can do in political action work is continuing to grow. In Washington, for instance, Eleanor Sinclair, State President of the CIO Auxiliaries and Arlie Patton of the Woodworkers Auxiliary in Aberdeen were elected to the Washington State CIO Political Action Committee. Similarly, in Minnesota, State Auxiliary Secretary-Treasurer, Carrie Spott, was elected to the State PAC. The Auxiliary Council there has set a goal of organization in every congressional district by 1946.

The effective job the women can do in local political action has been shown in a number of places recently. During the drive of Local 1 of the Shipyard Workers in Camden, N. J., for cards to Senators and Congressmen for support of the full employment bill, the auxiliary set up tables outside the yard. In four days, they got 5000 cards written.

In Charles City, Iowa, the auxiliary of the Farm Equipment Workers put on a campaign for a favorable vote on an addition to the hospital in the city election. The hospital board told auxiliary president, Rachel Idso, that they thought the victory they won was due to the work of her women.

CIO-PAC BOOTH AT FAIR: Thousands of pieces of CIO literature were given out to crowds of farmers and their families at the Tuscarawas County Fair, held late this summer near Canton, Ohio. Farmers showed much interest also in the novel exhibit of CIO products on display at an adjoining booth of the County CIO Council.

New Pamphlets

Annual Wage, The New Way

Failure of industry to provide jobs during the depression of the 30's cost the nation the gigantic sum of 400 billion dollars more than World War II cost the U. S., declares a new illustrated pamphlet, "Guaranteed Wages the Year Round," issued this week by the CIO Department of Research & Education.

"Even after a worker had spent 30 years of his life working for one company, when a lay-off came, the company owed him nothing," the pamphlet states. "It did not have to see that he had anything to eat. If it was cheaper to fire him and pay him nothing, that was the accepted thing to do."

This old wasteful way of laying off workers whenever business slackens is contrasted in the pamphlet with the new way advocated by the CIO—the guaranteed annual wage way, which assures the worker a steady job, not just this week, but all the year round.

Now is a good time, the pamphlet maintains, to start such annual wage plans, as business is in an excellent position to give guarantees in the years just ahead. "Not only are markets waiting, but business has plenty of money piled up to meet risks. Its working capital is over 45 billion dollars, or twice the prewar figure," the CIO's annual wage study points out.

Contained in the pamphlet is a brief outline of the guaranteed annual pay plan and the CIO's full employment program; a description of how one annual wage plan embodied in a contract between Hormel & Co. and the CIO United Packinghouse Workers benefited the whole community, Austin, Minn., and a description of ways of planning for guaranteed annual wages.

"Beware of the old cry of those who gain by looking backward rather than forward," the pamphlet warns in the concluding section.

"A nation that could rally, as we did, to win the war, cannot meekly accept defeat by unemployment and failue to solve her economic problems."

For Amateur Politicians

"Political Guide," described as "a trade journal for progressive political actionists," is the latest publication of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee. The new monthly publication was released this week and is being distributed to citizens, trade union political action committees and others interested in practical political work.

It tells politically interested citizens "how to act" more than "what to think." The big jobs, the editors note, is to cure "political frustration — the neuroses that come from not knowing what to do."

Hate Groups On Increase In South

ALARMING reports of a postwar boom in the activities of native fascist groups in the South are being made by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare and by CIO and various other groups in the southern part of the country.

Dr. Clark Foremen, president of the SCHW, says that the Ku Klux Klan, the Commoner party in Georgia, the Sons of Dixie in Tennessee, the Christian Veterans Association and the Christian Americans of Vance Muse, are among the fascist-minded organizations now busily engaged in spreading race hatred and anti-unionism in the South.

He warns that outbreaks of violence such as were provoked by the KKK after World War I are likely to occur again unless the poisonous activities of these outfits are stopped.

A hopeful side of the situation was revealed in a recent poll of southern editors on their opinion of expressions of racial prejudice made in Congress by Mississippi's Senator Eastland who joined Senator Bilbo is making shameful attacks on Negroes.

The opinion poll, conducted among 251 white newspaper editors in 13 southern states, showed that 87½ per cent agreed that Eastland was not speaking for southern editors when he stated that Negro soldiers had been an "utter and dismal failure."

Editorials condemning Eastland's attack on the Negro GI's appeared all over the South, the Southern Conference reports.

A Plea for A Living Wage

As part of the CIO's fight against sub-standard wages, the CIO Political Action Committee has issued a 24-page illustrated pamphlet, "Let Our People Live," a plea for a living wage.

This is the third in the PAC's series of pamphlets-of-the-month.

"We, of the CIO Political Action Committee, have taken up this issue of raising the minimum wage level to 65 cents per hour (and 75 cents within two years) as one of our major issues," states a foreword by PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman.

The pamphlet contains six full-page illustrations by the famous artist, Lynd Ward.

Police Racial School

A unique training institute for police aimed at furthering understanding and harmonious relations among racial groups was held last month in Richmond, Calif. The two weeks' course was sponsored by the city's police department in cooperation with the American Council on Race Relations, which has headquarters in Chicago, Ill.

The school was endorsed by California's liberal Attorney General, Robert W. Kenny, who commended the Richmond police Dept. "for being among the first of California's cities to establish official training for police officers in the vitally important field of race relations."

Decent Wages—The Farmers' Gain Too

CIO'S plans to take its story to the farmers of the nation were initiated this week with the issuance of the September issue of the Economic Outlook which is devoted to better understanding between farmers and workers.

Kermit Eby, director of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, said that ten times the usual number of Outlooks were published. He added that arrangements have been made to distribute it through the various farm groups such as farmer co-operatives and the National Farmers Union as well as through such CIO unions as the Packinghouse Workers; Food, Tobacco, Agricultural & Allied Workers, and the Farm Equipment Workers.

Not only are additional pamphlets planned but also a farm-labor program will be issued, Eby said.

Pointing out that many workers are farmers' sons and daughters and that most wage earners a generation or so ago came from farms, the pamphlet declares "wage earners are the farmers' own flesh and blood."

It points out that a family of four must earn $2,700 a year to afford the $800-a-year expenditure necessary to buy sufficient food, but during the war wages below the $2,700 figure prevented the farmer from keeping about 30 million stomachs comfortably filled, the pamphlet states.

The farmer "made it up on military stomachs, which take more, and on foreign stomachs," the Outlook states. "But what of next year? And the year after? There is no percentage for the farmer in low wages."

The September Outlook may be ordered from the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C., at the low rates of 1½ cents per copy for 1000 or more, 2 cents per copy for 100 or more.

CIO Backs MVA Plan

THE CIO joined this week with organized farmers and the AFL in urging a hostile sub-committee of the Senate Irrigation & Reclamation Committee to give the "go" signal to the Murray Bill (S 555) for the Missouri Valley Authority. Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO Industrial Union Councils, testified that a favorable report on the measure was a responsibility owed the nation.

Senator Overton (D. La.), chairman of the sub-committee, said that he was opposed to the measure and complained that holding the hearing on Saturday deprived him of a day off. Smith retorted:

"If the unemployment situtation is not solved by Congress, Senators will be working Sundays. . . .

"The CIO unions are interested in the prosperity of the entire Missouri Valley region, and in the welfare of the farmers and the business and professional people throughout these great river areas. We are interested in their welfare because our membership considers itself an undivided part of the American people as a whole," Smith declared.

Smith also told the subcommittee that MVA would provide abundant electric energy at low rates; flood control, irrigation, navigation, soil conservation and reforestration.

He said that if enactment of the bill is delayed, "a primary reason will be that the electric utilities have mobilized great resources of money and propaganda against its passage."

Cracking the Quip

By ARTHUR WHITE

VICTORY VIGNETTE . . . A discharged vet came down into the living room of his parent's home, from an upstairs bedroom.

"Breakfast is ready," said his mother, "how'd you sleep last night, son?"

"Not so well, Mom," yawned the ex-soldier. "I had a terrible nightmare. Dreamt that Fascism was still riding high in Europe, that many of the men who supported the cut-throats are still in power in Italy; that some of those who dishonored France were again speaking with authority, and that Greek patriots were being murdered and tortured. In fact, Mom, it seemed in this horrible dream of mine as if WE had lost the war!"

"I'm afraid, son," sighed his mother, "that you've been dreaming with your eyes wide open."

The little daughter of one of the boys in the CIO Natl. Maritime Union suddenly became very curious about the origin of babies. Her mother explained that children grow from a seed, just as plants do.

Mulling over that one, the child decided to test the idea out by pushing a seed into the earth of a living-room plant. The next morning, she raced over to it, and found a big bug crawling on the surface. She eyed it for a moment, then cried:

"If you weren't my own daughter, I'd step on you!"

WASHINGTON SIDESHOW . . . Several reporters interviewed Ed Bykowski, the Purple Heart veteran who'd been picketing Senator Bilgebo. Bykowski told a simple story about himself, adding:

"When I saw the kind of things Bilbo was doing, after the things I'd seen overseas, I swore that I would do my best to fight him, because I felt he was destroying the very things we had fought for."

The interview over, the reporters began discussing Bykowski among themselves. One speculated as to what kind of a "racket" it was, and who was behind the World War II vet. "That's easy," snapped a scribe who admired Bykowski's guts, "The AMERICAN PEOPLE are behind him!"

The small son of a radio announcer who constantly plugs drug products was offered some small-sized candies by his mother. The boy tasted them, smacked his lips.

"These are good," he said, rubbing his tummy. "What vitamins do they have?"

"Oh, none in particular," informed the mother. The child was astonished. "Do you mean to say they're just for fun?" he asked.

Register And Write

Congress in recent weeks—since the end of the summer recess, in fact—has been on a reactionary rampage calculated to discourage the most stout-hearted.

Paying apparently little or no attention to the wishes of the voters, the majority in the Senate and on the House Ways and Means Committee has wrecked the Kilgore-Forand unemployment compensation bill.

From current signs, the same Republican-polltax Democrat combination on the House Committee on Executive Expenditures is planing to try a similar job in the hearings on the jobs-for-all bill.

Though the picture is a little brighter for the 65c wage minimum, polltax Senator Ellender (D. La.) is trying the same obstructionist tactics there.

This is the gloomy side of the medal. It does not mean that we should get discouraged or feel that our efforts have little effect.

It means that we have to intensify our present work on the legislative front and point it more and more by political action work to 1946.

It means that we have to:

1. Give increasing support to the delegations that are now coming to Washington to tell their Congressmen the facts of life under pay cuts, layoffs and unemployment.

2. Follow up these delegations with reports to the union members—and their wives—back home, plus an even greater campaign for letters and wires on issues of the day.

3. Start right now on the drive to get voters registered so that they can vote in 1946 and 1948.

Congress is off on a reactionary start. Leadership from the Administration, as President Murray has pointed out, is lacking.

When a registered voter speaks or writes, he's listened to.

Watch New Drive For B-B-H

Watch out for a new drive to get the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill up in Congress within the next few weeks.

Don't be deceived by the apparent lack of open publicity in the newspapers — especially Scripps-Howard. They're ready to pop as soon as they feel the anti-union hysteria has been built up enough.

A recent editorial in the Washington News (Scripps-Howard) gives us the tip-off when it says: "There is urgent need for sound, careful, constructive legislation in the field of labor-management relations. Clear the way by getting the useless, absurd Smith-Connally Act off the books."

'Equal Rights' Branded Hoax

The "equal rights" amendment now up in the Senate Judiciary subcommittee is "a cure hoax advanced by a small group of women who live in an atmosphere of personal security and leisure and who are for the most part divorced from realities confronting American women today," the CIO said this week in testimony against the bill.

"There are more mundane but more important tasks which face American women than sponsoring fine-sounding constitutional amendments with respect to equality," the CIO said.

"There is the job of strengthening existing laws with respect to meal periods, maternity leave and industrial working conditions. There is the basic job of removing economic discrimination against women who work by a strong equal pay bill.

"If this amendment should be passed there is no one in America who will have a single new job, who will enjoy economic equality. Instead, all the existing protections for women will be toppled over. An entire series of new laws will have to be adopted at the pleasure of the states to implement the proposal. This is too high a price to pay for the sacrifices which the proposed amendment will exact from American working women."

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	In Senate version, extends present inadequate benefits to 26 weeks; includes U. S., maritime workers; turns USES back to state political machines.	GOP-polltax combination on House Ways and Means Committee voted 14 to 11 to kill even the inadequate Senate bill; give tax relief to rich instead.	Wire, phone your Congressman to sign discharge petition to bring HR 3891 to floor despite GOP-polltax gang on Committee.
Jobs-for-all (S 380)	Gives government responsibility of seeing that all workers have jobs.	GOP leading attack in Senate, with aid from Southern Democrats. House Committee on Expenditures (headed by Rep. Manasco, D. Ala.) extremely hostile.	Wire your Senators and Representative to support S 380 as reported out by Senate Banking Comm.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present minimum from 40c to 65c; widens coverage.	Polltax Senator Ellender (D. La.) leading fight against 65c in Senate Labor sub-Committee; GOP so far letting Ellender do the dirty work himself.	Wire your Senators to support bill as written; urge quick action.
"Equal rights" (HJ Res. 49)	Smashes laws protecting women workers; ends maternity, child aid; aimed by rich backers of "Women's Party" as wedge to repeal all social laws.	Reported out by House Judiciary Committee; now in Senate Judiciary. CIO testifying against. Has Truman's support.	Tell both Senators and Representative to oppose.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives us a chance to end the Bilbos, Rankins et al by giving the vote to 10 million U. S. citizens.	Passed House by 2 to 1; Senate Judiciary Committee now stalling while Sen. O'Mahoney (D. WYO.) prepares a constitutional amendment that would take 25 years to ratify as substitute.	Wire both Seantors to urge passage of HR 7, permit no phoney substitutes; prepare to fight filibusters.
Taxes	No bill yet out, but House Ways and Means Committee is preparing one to give more relief to rich, repeal profits taxes.	House Ways and Means Committee and Senate Finance Committee have charge of tax bills.	Read CIO tax plan, (CIO NEWS, Sep. 24) write Congress to support it.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; ends free collective bargaining.	Being prepared for quick action in Congress when its backers consider anti-union hysteria high enough.	Keep telling Congress to stay away from this one like poison.

SUPPORT CIO DELEGATIONS TO CONGRESS!

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

TAX STEAL: One of the biggest tax steals in U. S. history is brewing in Rep. Doughton's House Ways and Means Committee — the same committee that threw the unemployment compensation bill in the wastebasket last week.

Announcing his action in killing the unemployment aid bill, Doughton revealed that the committee contemplated cuts in income tax in the high brackets and was thinking of ending the excess profits tax entirely. Present excise (sales) taxes will remain.

The bill will be passed by both House and Senate by Nov. 1, Doughton said. That gives us less than a month to work on Congress to persuade it to follow the CIO program outlined last week by President Murray.

* * *

EQUAL PAY: Hearings on S 1178, the bill to require equal pay for equal work, regardless of sex, will have hearings in the Senate Labor Committee this month.

S 1178 is the answer to the phoney "equal rights" amendment now up for hearings in the Senate Judiciary Committee. "Equal rights" has best been described as "neither equal nor right."

* * *

"COMPROMISE". There's been talk of a plan to "compromise" for 55c an hour in the bill (S 1349) now in the Senate Labor Committee setting a 65c wage floor.

No such "compromise" is possible, since WLB already sets 55c as a minimum. Such a surrender on the 65c to 75c bill must be opposed as vigorously as possible.

* * *

MVA: CIO testimony for the Missouri Valley Authority project bill (S 555) was given to the Senate subcommittee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

This bill is being fought by big utility money, the CIO charged, and will be opposed by the utilities with unlimited funds.

The project would provide thousands of veterans with farms, millions of manhours of work, better living all around in the Missouri River area.

ADD NEW LOWS: Rep. Doughton (D. N.C.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee that dumped the Kilgore bill: "It could come up overnight, next week, next year or in two years." . . . Sen. Taft (R. O.) on the jobs-for-all bill: "I think it involves the danger of a fraud on the American people."

QUOTE OF THE WEEK: Sen. Tobey (R. N.H.) on the full employment bill (S 380): "I maintain that 169 years ago assurance was given to every man in America that he would have the right to work . . . Two great scourges fall on mankind. The worst scourge of mankind is war. A close second to it is unemployment and depression. We go all out to win a war. We should go all out to defeat a depression."

TAX BILL AIDS RICH

GIVING the rich even more than Secretary of the Treasury Vinson recommended, the House Ways and Means Committee late this week reported out a tax bill designed to:

1. Cut the excess profits tax from 95 to 60 percent and repeal it completely by January 1, 1947. This will cost the Treasury about $1.3 billion a year—which will have to be made up by other taxpayers.

2. Give all taxpayers, regardless of their income, a flat 10 percent cut in income taxes, with a much smaller cut in the so-called "normal" tax of three percent on lower incomes. The 10 percent straight across the board cut benefits the higher brackets the most. Vinson had asked for outright repeal of the three percent "normal" tax, as does the CIO.

3. Cut the surtax on corporations not declaring "excess" profits by another four percent, which will cost the Treasury $400,000,000.

4. Cut excise taxes on such items as furs, jewelry, liquor, etc., back to 10 percent beginning July, 1946.

5. Freeze social security taxes at one percent, despite the fact that they have been supposed to increase to 2.5 percent for the past four years. This has the effect of keeping social security funds at current levels, rather than allowing them to expand.

6. Repeal the capital stock tax, which saves corporations another estimated $200,000,000.

The report was rushed through secret sessions of the committee in the record breaking time of four days. Action is expected on the House floor by next week, with the Senate Finance Committee expected to do a similar rush job on its version of the bill.

Despite a plea for open hearings from the CIO, sent to Chairman Doughton of the House Committee in a letter from Nathan Cowan, the committee held all its hearings in secret, with no chance for labor or other organizations to testify.

Out of these secret hearings came stories—with the evidence of the reported bill to back them up—that the Republicans, with the aid of Doughton, completely dominated the hearings. Though they did not get the 20 percent straight across the board income tax reduction they were aiming for, they got half of it, with the strong possibility that the Senate will boost it higher.

They also got a sizable hunk of the gravy they wanted for the corporations on the cut in the excess profits tax from 95 to 60 percent—a cut that will save the corporations over half of the amount they have been paying.

DEADLOCK ON JOB BILLS

A temporary deadlock and a period of marking time took up the week on two of the main issues facing Congres—the emergency unemployment compensation bill (S 1274) and the jobs-for-all bill (S 380).

New Congressional action on the jobless aid bill, shelved last week by a GOP-tory Democrat conspiracy in the House Ways and Means Committee, could take two avenues—a move within the Committee to rescind its action of last week, and a discharge petition to get the bill out of the committee and onto the floor for debate and a vote.

Shortly after the Ways and means Committee dumped the bill, President Truman called its Democratic members to the White House to tell them that he expected positive House action and that he felt the Senate had "let him down" in its crippled version of the measure.

At this time of writing, the committee has not acted on Truman's request. Meantime, Rep. Mike Bradley (D. Pa.) and other House liberals are preparing to promote the discharge petition. Under House rules, 37 days have to elapse between committee action and the filing of the petition. This brings it to Oct. 21. The petition requires 218 signatures of Congressmen to become effective.

House action on the jobs-for-all bill was still waiting for the first stage of committee hearings, after the Senate had passed a watered down version of the measure. Current predictions are that the House Committee on Executive Expenditures, which is handling the bill, will not get down to it until towards the end of the month.

The Senate version of the bill, described by Majority Leader Sen. Barkley (D. Ky.) as guaranteeing "everybody out of work the right to seek a job if he can find one," was passed by a vote of 71 to 10. At Sen. Taft's (R. O.) insistence, it contains an amendment limiting government action to a point consistent with the government's financial obligations.

According to Taft, this amendment "kills the compensatory spending theory. Federal spending as a remedy for unemployment will now only be consistent with the needs and obligations of the Federal government and other essential considerations of national policy."

Under this verbiage lies one of Taft's main objectives in what passes with him for public office—the objective of preventing any real action to provide jobs, where needed, through government action.

On the House side, Rep. George Outland (D. Cal.), leader of some 115 Representatives who have pledged to fight for a real jobs-for-all bill, indicated that his group will press for a return to the bill as originally written.

The committee in charge—House Executive Expenditures—is not expected to be too eager to report out the original bill. Letters to your own Congressman urging him to join the group supporting the bill will help.

In a side action on the unemployment compensation bill, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) has put in a bill (S 1456) to put the U. S. Employment Service back under Federal management. This is aimed to undo Sen. Lucas's (D. Ill.) amendment returning USES to state patronage machines.

MONOPOLY GRIP TIGHT ON FM

MONOPOLY control of standard radio broadcasting by top business and newspaper interests has seeped into the field of FM (Frequency Modulation) radio and unless sharp protests are heard from the public FM licenses will be gobbled up by these groups to the detriment of the people, a special FM report published by the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee revealed this week.

The report is a call for action on the part of all public-spirited organizations and individuals to protest such practices via letters, telegrams, resolutions and petitions to the Federal Communications Commission.

Scoring the FCC's recent grant of FM licenses to "interests already in control of standard broadcast stations"—45 of the 53 licenses awarded were made to these business and newspaper powers—NCPAC laid down a six-point program for FCC and Congress to follow.

It urged that not more than one-quarter of available FM channels be given to licensees of existing AM stations and newspapers with the proviso that the applicants must exhibit proof of genuine public service in present operations and promise to perform "a wholly new and different program service on their FM stations."

The other three-quarters of FM broadcast channels should be given to newcomers, "which will insure fair consideration for veterans, small businessmen, farm, labor, cooperative and citizens' groups, and others who, to date, have not enjoyed broadcasting opportunities," NCPAC urged.

NCPAC asked that the FCC set down terms of hours and expenditures standards for all public service programming, which must be met by all applicants before licenses are granted and renewals made. The program calls, too, for prohibiting the granting of an FM license to any standard (AM) licensee without a public hearing and urges that such hearings, wherever possible, be held in local communities which applicants intend to serve.

The NCPAC study, titled "A Report to America on Radio Broadcasting," cites the tight control of the airwaves—which, according to the Communications Act of 1934, belong to the people—held by big business and their press cohorts.

Ten clear-channel 50,000-watt stations are licensed to members of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, which utilizes more power and space in the radio spectrum than all the nation's 444 local 250-watt stations put together. The NAM's control extends even further with 46 corporations listed as contributing $71,000,000 worth of time on the four major networks in 1944.

"The largest single group of broadcast stations operators today," NCPAC charges, "are the big newspaper publishers, approximately 250 stations being owned by or affiliated with newspapers." The political danger of such ownership is indicated in NCPAC's findings that of the 208 newspapers, which also owned radio stations, at least 152, 73%, supported Dewey in the 1944 campaign.

Ohio, Ky. At Capital

Nearly 300 workers from Ohio and Kentucky came to Washington this week to plug CIO's program with Congress. It was a quiet week on Capitol Hill, leading up to a real merry-go-round beginning Oct. 8 when delegations from Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Kansas are due Monday; from Indiana Tuesday; from New England Wednesday; from West Virginia and Michigan Thursday, and from the South on Friday.

Feature of the Ohio delegation was the presence of representatives from community groups outside the labor movement and from the AFL Brotherhood of Painters, and presentation to Congress of a special statement from Mayor Thomas Burke of Cleveland urging passage of the unemployment and full employment bills.

The delegates left with Speaker Rayburn of the House of Representatives a petition signed by more than 25,000 people urging enactment of CIO's legislative program. They urged Democratic leader Barkley in the Senate to push passage of HR 7, the anti-polltax bill.

Leaders of the delegation were Thomas Downes, Joseph Kres, Harry R. Doll and George Bass, of Ohio, and Joseph Cannon and Fred Foss from Kentucky.

PAY HIKE WON'T UP CAR PRICES, SAYS THOMAS

A 30 percent pay boost requested of major motor companies will not force the public to pay higher prices for cars. That was the flat assertion of CIO United Auto Workers Pres. R. J. Thomas this week over NBC stations in an interview with Commentator Richard Harkness.

"In 1940," Thomas said, "the labor cost per car was only $155. Today it is $189. Thus, in five years, the labor cost in producing an automobile has gone up only $34.

"But during the very same period, the average wholesale price per car has gone up $135. So already the automobile makers are $101 ahead of the game. And this does not make allowance for the fact that labor productivity is now higher than at any time in our industrial history."

Pointing out that the effect of a few widely publicized, unauthorized strikes has been negligible, Thomas said:

"It is my considered opinion that the industry is using these few unauthorized strikes to try to put the blame for slowness in reconversion on the UAW. We feel that the motor car industry is trying to use the excuse of delaying reconversion for just another effort to break our union, and to keep wages down."

Thomas cited two human samples showing why the auto workers need basic wage raises to offset the loss in take-home pay.

1. William Dowler, Cadillac Motor Co., Detroit, used to earn $72.80 for a 48-hour week as a tool inspector. Now he's driving a truck in the same plant, earning $41.60 for 40 hours. His take-home is only $38.68 to support a wife and one child.

2. M. J. Grimes, another Cadillac employe with the same size family, earned $70.20 for a 48-hour week as a cutter sharpener. Now he makes $43.60 for a 40-hour week as a drill press operator. His actual take-home is only $40.26.

Pointing out that workers like Dowler and Grimes haven't got the cash to buy washing machines and radios and other expensive consumer products, Thomas said that "unless automobile workers—and other workers—do get a 30 percent increase, industry will find a mighty poor market for its postwar products."

SEES POVERTY AS THREAT TO ALL

ANY MAN's poverty is a threat to every other man's security, Jacob S. Potofsky, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, told the Senate Labor Committee this week in testifying for the 65c-75c amendment to the wage and hour act.

"No one can seriously argue that 65c an hour, in the face of present living costs, can be anything but a bare minimum wage," Potofsky said. "Even with that wage, millions of Americans will still be unable to afford enough food and colthing, a decent roof over their heads, adequate medical care, education for their children or insurance against illness and death.

"Congress has an unparalleled opportunity at this time to eliminate the sub-standard wage and the worst kind of human misery and deprivation resulting from this low-level competition.

"At the present level of wages, and with the greatly reduced percentage of workers earning less than 65c an hour, it is possible for Congress to enact a 65c minimum at this time without appreciable effect on price levels.

"If this opportunity is missed, great damage will be done. The U. S. has not achieved greatness by standing still. It has achieved greatness by forging forward, a step at a time, on many fronts. Let us now step forward on the line of eliminating sub-standard wages."

KEY TO DETROIT VICTORY—JOBS

By IRVING RICHTER

THE Detroit Mayoralty race is developing in the midst of sharpening national issues. These national issues are nudging at Detroit's local issues and demanding answers from the candidates.

Labor's candidates are giving the answers. Labor's opponents are evading the issues. Instead, they are raising the time-worn, discreted appeals to bigotry, prejdice and disunity.

The "house organ" of General Motors in Detroit, the Detroit News, has begun the same kind of inflammatory reporting on the Frankensteen campaign which it used in 1936-1940 to try to defeat the organizing drive of the UAW. This time they are slanting their news to try to defeat labor's candidates. On September 13, the Detroit News, quoting an unnamed "high UAW executive," carried a front-page story beginning: "It looks like a lot of CIO members wouldn't give a nickel to see Dick Frankensteen elected." The same unnamed person was reported as saying that Frankensteen's chances of election were less than 50-50 "because of the apathy of the middle-class, non-union voters."

This was a crude attempt to convince CIO members that Frankensteen would not represent their interests, and at the same time to seek to drive a wedge between the non-labor voters and the union voters.

FRANKENSTEEN continues to hammer home the local issues: the need for decent housing and improved transportation, cleaning up Detroit's incredibly filthy alleys and streets, relief from the burdensome tax system, etc. But he has hit hard on the major question—jobs.

The labor campaign is not depending on the daily press. Extensive radio programs have been arranged. Billboards, posters, sound trucks—and most important—neighborhood work, are the chief means being used to win.

Incumbent Mayor Jeffries campaigns as a non-partisan candidate. But in the 1944 Presidential race he mouthed all the Republican slogans in an attack upon President Roosevelt. This is being thrown back at him, and that will hurt in a city which delivered the state of Michigan to Roosevelt.

All other issues in the campaign have become dwarfed by the 250,000 unemployed now in Detroit—with their families making up about a third of the city's population. The automobile industry shows no haste to reconvert, no willingness to raise wages. The industry shows the same union-busting bebavior which has characterized its activties throughout the war.

THE issues in the Detroit mayoralty race are now very clear. The Democratic Party of Wayne County has endorsed Frankensteen. The Republican Party has endorsed Jeffries. The Democratic Party in Wayne County is Pro-labor, pro-New Deal.

The Jeffries' machine, or the Republican Party, was already in the race long before this announcement. Backed by a slush fund of several hundred thousand dollars and a powerful machine, now augmented by Gerald L. K. Smith's goons and other Fascist hoodlums, the Jeffries' crowd is formidable and dangerous.

But the official entry of the Democratic Party into the campaign has solidified the Frankensteen campaign. It blasts to pieces the argument that this is a fight between labor and the community. It now becomes a fight of all those in the community who want to move forward under the banner planted by President Roosevelt—for economic opportunity, progressive government, an end to discrimination, the right to a job, a decent home, a decent education, and all the other rights in the ECONOMIC BILL OF RIGHTS.

SIMPLE ARITHMETIC

Newspapers and professional viewers-with-alarm are trying to confuse the issue on the wage situation. The best way to clear away this deliberately induced confusion is to follow President Murray's advice and get at the basic facts, which can be reduced to simple arithmetic that everyone can understand.

Suppose you were a wage earner getting $1 an hour straight time for 40 hours a week and $1.50 for eight hours of overtime, for a total of $52 a week.

With VJ-Day, you are cut back to 40 hours a week straight time, and your total is now $40 a week. (Incidentally this is not take-home pay. Taxes and other deductions reduce it still futher.)

2. Your CIO union, following President Murray's initiative, asks for a 30 percent increase in your base wage rate, to bring your earnings back to the $52 level.

This keeps your purchasing power at the rate it was during the war period. During this period, of course, the cost of living went up 50 percent, while the Little Steel Formula gave you only 15 percent. The rest you made up (if you were fortunate) on overtime.

If you couldn't bridge the gap with overtime, you cashed bonds, took in boarders, had more than one member of the family working, or just plain went into the red.

With VE- and VJ-Day, overtime came to an abrupt end, thus bringing a 30 percent cut in wages. The increase asked by your CIO union, then, aims at restoring this cut.

That's your side of the story. Now, how about industry? What are the facts of industry's position after VJ-Day?

1. Industry's profits have gone up from $3.7 billion in 1939 to $17.2 billion in 1944. (Source: WPB report, July 20, 1945) This is profits before taxes, the way your wages are figured. After taxes, the way your wages are not figured, profits doubled to $6.4 billion in the same period.

2. These profit figures tell less than half the story. According to the same WPB report, corporations have retained another $15 billion in undistributed profits, which add to their net worth.

3. On top of this, the tax laws give corporations "carry-back and carry-forward" credits amounting to another $25 billion. These credits allow corporations tax refunds in case their postwar profit level falls below 1936-1939. They do not apply to individuals —just to corporations.

Take one example—the steel industry. According to the United Steelworkers' study, "Five Years of War Profits," steel profits before taxes went up 276 percent, after taxes 113 percent. Dividends rose 82 percent. Total assets rose 22 percent from $4.86 billion to almost $6 billion. Says the Steelworks' pamphlet: "The industry earned over $2 billion in open and concealed profits in the five war years."

This is one industry, steel. Many others show even greater profit increases—ranging as high as 2,000 percent, few or none lower than 100 percent. Total assets (concealed profits, reserves, etc), tax credits, and the like add even more billions.

These are the basic arithmetical facts of economic life in America today. They are being used by Philip Murray and the leaders of your unions in fighting for the wage increases you need to keep your head above water.

They are yours for the using too. Use them.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

PARIS—The CIO is "tops" with most of the delegates attending the World Trade Union Conference. They have great respect and affection for America as represented by Roosevelt's policies and American GI's, and regard the CIO as more representative of the best in America than the reactionary isolationism of the AFL in world labor affairs.

AFL opposition to world labor unity has caused revulsion in favor of the CIO even among British unionists, despite long, close, fraternal relations with the AFL.

After the Meany attacks on the CIO, Soviet unions and the WFTU at Blackpool, TUC delegates began chanting "Eenie, Meany, Miney, Mo —He Ought to Join With the CIO."

★ ★ ★

The Murray jobs-for-all program, the CIO Political Action Committee and CIO policy combatting racial and other discrimination seem known in the furthest corners of the earth. Delegates of all nationalities are constantly button-holing Americans to ask about them. Delegates from Africa, Asia, West Indies and other colonial countries are particularly interested in the success of the CIO anti-discrimination policies and praise them highly.

CIO's industrial form of organization is also widely known and used as a model in many countries where unions are being organized for the first time. Others, like Poland, where there were pre-war movements, report they are now reorganizing "along more modern industrial lines."

★ ★ ★

Trade union unity has made much progress nationally as well as internationally. In Czechoslovakia, where a dozen national labor movements before the war were divided along national, political and religious lines, there's now one united trade union movement with a million and a half members. In Italy, Belgium, Rumania and most other European countries, similar unification has taken place.

★ ★ ★

French delegates are elated over cantonal election results. They showed a pronounced trend to labor and the left. This trend is expected to be much more pronounced in national elections later in October, since the cantonal elections often revolve around local issues and usually are more conservative in trend than national elections.

★ ★ ★

Leo Krzycki, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, appointed by CIO President Murray as fraternal delegate to the forthcoming Polish trade union convention, has been spending as much time with the Polish as with the American delegates. He reports that Polish unions are now more than a million strong, and have opened their doors for the first time to Catholic priests working in hospitals, orphanages, etc. Many of them are now members of white collar unions operating in such institutions.

Scores of delegates are graduates of Nazi concentration camps and bear many signs of brutal treatment. Polish Delegate Adam Kurylowicz, head of the Railwaymen's Union before the war, and again now, spent years in Ozwieczn, one of the most notorious. He saw friends thrown into furnaces, babies town from their mothers' breasts and killed, and many other unspeakable horrors.

Delegates from Balkan and Central European countries are among the most vocal at the conference. In many cases their unions were illegal and labor was sorely opposed even before the war. Now that they enjoy the right to organize and other democratic rights, their unions are growing by leaps and bounds.

These delegates are so full of their new-found freedom and hopes for the future in contrast to past oppression that they want to tell the whole world and particularly the conference about it on every possible occasion.

★ ★ ★

The conference rose to its feet in one of the most spontaneous ovations when it was announced that Largo Caballero and La Passionaria had entered the visitors' gallery together. It was both a tribute to Spanish resistance against Franco Fascism and to labor unity, since the two Spanish leaders represent both right and left wings of Spanish labor, often in conflict in the past.

WORLD LABOR UNITY!
1st FEDERATION BORN

A view of the dais in the conference hall of the Palais de Chaillot, as the World Federation of Trade Unions met in Paris with 300 delegates representing more than 70 million workers. Left to right: Vassili Kuznetsov, Soviet Union; James B. Carey, CIO; Sir Walter Citrine, England; Louis Saillant, France; Sidney Hillman, CIO; an interpreter; Mikhil Tarosov, Soviet Union; Leon Jouhaux, France. It was expected the meeting would be concluded this week.

PARIS — The greatest of all unions was founded Wednesday, a Union of all unions of the world.

For the first time in the history of mankind, organized workers of all countries have combined in one, strong, permanent, all-inclusive world organization.

The World Federation of Trade Unions was born amid scenes of great enthusiasm when the Paris conference unanimously adopted a constitution unanimously recommended by the Constitution Committee. By this action the World Trade Union Conference became the first constitutional convention of the WFTU.

The constitution skillfully reconciles differences reflected in scores of amendments to the original draft from national delegations. It assures immediate establishment of an organization with flexibility to meet problems of its initial stages. Enthusiastic acceptance by the whole conference reflects the fundamental unity of purpose and principles and confirms the judgment of the CIO delegation that earlier differences were only over how best to assure the unity, strength and effectiveness of the new organization.

The conference earlier heard and discussed for several days an important report by Sidney Hillman of CIO in behalf of the Administrative Committee recommending specific steps to obtain world labor representation in the peace settlements, on the economic and social council of the United Nations, and on the Allied Control Commission governing Germany and Japan.

Delegates also heard a report by James B. Carey, on behalf of the CIO on American labor's participation in international affairs and CIO activities implementing decisions of the London World Labor Conference.

The world's biggest union was formed this week in Paris. This complete and exclusive story was cabled by Editor Len De Caux. Watch succeeding issues for final Paris details and for a first-hand report on CIO delegates' trip to the Soviet Union.

Hillman was elected chairman of the Constitution Committee and reported its recommendations to the conference. He and the rest of the CIO delegation were given great credit for successful reconciliation of differences leading to final unanimous decisions.

To provide flexibility in the first two years to meet initial and unanticipated problems, it is provided that until the second biennial congress of the WFTU in 1947 the evecutive committee shall have authority to exercise any functions of the congress essential to carrying on WFTU work, including power to amend the constitution by two-thirds vote in which members shall cast the same number of votes their countries or groups of countries are entitled to in the congress.

It is also provided, however, that no such change shall involve fundamental rules or principles of the WFTU constitution, and executive committee decisions, while taking immediate effect, are subject to confirmation by the general council which includes representatives of all affiliated organizations and meets annually. General council decisions in turn are subject to confirmation by the next congress.

Another change provides that the general secretary be elected by the general council instead of the congress and be responsible to the executive committee though removable only by the general council.

In order to make the executive committee more representative in exercising great interim powers and to satisfy small country demands, its size was increased to 26 members and provision was made for substitutes when regular members cannot attend.

Executive members are distributed as follows:

U.S.S.R., three; U. S. and Canada, three; Britain, two; France, two; Latin America and West Indies, two, and one apiece for Near and Middle East, China, Australia, India and Ceylon, Africa, Scandinavia, Western Europe, Southern Europe, Central Europe, and Southeastern Europe, plus three members from the trade departments and the general secretary.

The governing body of the WFTU between executive committee meetings shall be the executive bureau elected by the executive committee from among its members. The executive bureau will consist of the chairman, six vice-chairmen and the general secretary, and will appoint two assistant general secretaries to serve under the direction of the general secretary.

4 The Gattis have always wanted to own their own home, and have a nice place for their children. A year ago they had a chance to get this seven-room house at 5394 Allendale, in Detroit, and made a down payment on it out of their wartime savings. It took all of the savings to do it. One of their worst worries now is that they won't be able to keep up the $45-a-month payments on it, unless Gatti gets an increase in his basic pay. After V-J Day his overtime work and wages were wiped out.

MEET the Gatti family. Tom Gatti is a Ford worker, has been for several years. He's an active member of CIO United Auto Workers' Local 400. At present he's a machinist at the Highland Park plant in Detroit, but before the war he worked at Ford's giant River Rouge plant at Dearborn.

Tom Gatti is just one of 135,000 Ford workers and just one of a million or more members of the UAW-CIO who work in Chrysler or General Motors or other plants. But the problem that is driving the Gatti family nuts is the same one that has millions of other working class families throughout the country stumped—how to get along with 30 percent or more of their take-home pay sliced off.

The Gattis have a fine big family as these pictures show. It's the kind of family that the well-being of our country rests on. Mrs. Ermine Gatti is an intelligent mother who knows what kind of food is necessary to keep her husband and kids healthy.

But now Mrs. Gatti is terribly worried. It took all her ingenuity to plan low-cost, nourishing meals and meet all the other family expenses even when her husband was making some extra money working long hours during the war. Now that his hours have been reduced to 40 and sometimes less, with the extra time and a half pay for work beyond 40 hours gone, she frankly doesn't see how she can manage. Already she is falling behind in her bills.

2 Home from school hungry, Eleanor and Jerry make a raid on the pantry shelf for bread and jam. Growing kids sure eat a lot, says Mrs. Gatti. Their father's pay is much smaller these days, but the children's appetite is just as big as ever. Their mother says it takes at least $23 a week for solid food alone, not including the milk bill, which runs about $9 a month. Then there's the electric bill, $5 a month; gas, $3.50; water bill, $5.50 every three months, not to mention fuel. Last year it took nine tons of coal at around $11.20 a ton to keep the house warm. And Tom Gatti's last paycheck for two weeks was $77.60. You can't do anything but fall into debt on that, says Mrs. Gatti. And neither she nor her husband want to do that.

Equal Rights Amendment Is Debunked

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE Equal Rights Amendmend is raising its ugly head again. The Senate Judiciary Committee has moved ahead on considering amendments to the Constitution. It is in keeping with the whole anti-labor drive in Congress that one of the first measures to be considered is this phony amendment on Equal Rights.

Legal counsel for the Committee to Defeat the Unequal Rights Amendment said that he could not believe that any reasonable person would maintain that a man deserted by his wife and a woman deserted by her husband should have equal treatment under the law. The overwhelming majority of women in that position would have a very difficult job supporting themselves. The overwhelming majority of men would have no economic problem.

Labor organizations in their testimony stressed particularly the importance of maintaining minimum wage and maximum hour laws in the states and other protective laws which the unions have battled for. One of them pointed out that the opinion of a majority of the House Judiciary Committee was such laws would be invalidated by passage of the Amendment.

Elizabeth McGee of the Natl. Consumers League pointed out that passage of the Amendment would not extend laws that now protect women to men.

STATES' WAGE LAWS

Only three states today have minimum wage laws which apply to both men and women although there has been a consistent campaign to get such laws passed. On the other hand 26 states and the District of Columbia have a minimum wage law for women. It seems fairly clear, therefore, that the passage of the Amendment would not result in extending the coverage of present laws to men, but rather in loss of the minimum wage gains which have been made for women.

One of the most effective points made at the hearings was that the sponsors of the Equal Rights Amendment have never supported laws to provide for equal pay for equal work. New York State has such an equal pay law and Miss Blanche Friedman of the Women's Trade Union League, pointed out that labor had taken the lead in fighting for it. The National Women's Party, sponsor of "equal rights," was conspicuous by its absence in that campaign for real economic equality for women.

It's the same story in Washington today. Hearings on the Pepper Equal Pay for Equal Work bill are scheduled to begin in mid-October. Passage of that bill would make possible tremendous progress in doing away with the most vicious discrimination against women—discrimination in pay. And the National Women's Party is noticeably silent.

The National Industrial Conference Board figures show that the average hourly earnings of women in 1939 and in 1944 were slightly less than two-thirds of what men made. Elimination of that pay differential is the biggest contribution we can make to equal rights for women.

Write your Senators today that you ask them to oppose the Equal Rights Amendment which would deprive women of vital protective laws, and to fight for real equality by backing the Pepper Bill for equal pay for equal work.

Guild Blasts BBH Bill

An attempt "to destroy collective bargaining" and "a death sentence for labor" is how the current issue of The Guild Reporter describes the Ball-Burton-Hatch bill in a two-page spread attacking this legislation.

Asks Probe Of Textile Crisis

Accusing employers in the cotton textile industry of provoking strikes by their failure to carry out directives of the Natl. War Labor Board, the Textile Workers Union this week asked Southern members of Congress to urge Sec. of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach to name a special commission to deal with the strike crisis.

Around 2,500 workers in the South are already on strike and walkouts imminent in other mills are likely to bring the total to 40,000, the union said, in urging that textile employers be brought to Washington in an attempt to make them abide by WLB directives.

John W. Edelman, TWU legislative representative, wrote the congressmen that in at least two of the mills on strike, the companies attempted to pay wages below the 55c minimum ordered by the WLB last February.

"The issue in other strike situations, or those where strikes are imminent," he said, "is failure of the companies to follow WLB directives to sign agreements such as are now universally in effect in American industry, both in the North and South.

"But back of the attack on the union contract is the issue of wages. These manufacturers would endanger the entire economy in their insensate policy of wage cutting at a time when profits are record-breaking in percentage and volume."

Silk Strike Settled

Conclusion of a three-week strike of 1,500 silk and rayon workers at Paterson, N. J. through the granting of a wage increase, and the filing of a petition for a strike vote among 1,500 workers of the Karaghuesian carpet manufacturing firm in Freehold and Roselle Park, N. J., have been announced by Sol Stetin, regional director and vice-president of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

The silk and rayon strike was settled, Stetin said, on the basis of a 10c hourly increase, 5c of which is to be retroactive to Feb. 20, 1945. This represents an increase of $4 a week for those working 40 hours and $5 for those employed 48 hours.

The strike action against the carpet concern was taken, Stetin said, as a result of the company's stubborn refusal to comply with a War Labor Board ruling of March 27, granting the workers retroactive pay to Oct. 31, 1943. The Karaghuesian concern has deliberately stalled for the past two years "in a relentless effort to deprive its workers of the benefits of a union contract," the TWU director charged.

Save Vet Home Buyers From Sharks, CIO Urges

AS part of the proposed revision of the GI Bill of Rights, the CIO is asking that home loans for veterans be administered by U. S. housing authorities to protect servicemen from greedy real estate speculators.

The Veterans Administration now has to depend on local real estate appraisers to set a value on the property the veterans want to buy. GI Bill Amendments Rep. Rankin (Miss. polltaxer) forced through the House would take the appraisal system out of VA and turn it over to the banks and lending institutions.

Meyer Bernstein, assistant to Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, has planned comprehensive proposals for the GI Bill changes, including these additional changes in the housing provisions:

Amortization period to be extended to 32 years; availability of material, building costs and civilian demand to be considered; time for application for loans to be extended to 10 years after dischage of all draftees; loan fund to aid veterans in temporary default on mortgage interest.

Other changes proposed by Bernstein in the GI bill include:

Increased weekly allowance to be paid unemployed veterans for 52 weeks from $20 to $25 weekly, with $5 additional for each dependent up to three.

Elimination of the 25 year age limit on education benefits; Federal aid to states for veterans vocational rehabilitation programs; subsistance allowance for veteran students to be increased to $90 a month without dependents with $25 for each dependent up to three; minimum allowance for disabled veterans to be $115.

Bernstein is scheduled to appear before the Senate Military Affairs Committee Oct. 11 to present the CIO's position.

United Nations Food Parley

A conference of the food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations will open Oct. 16 at Quebec, to work out plans aimed to drive out the starvation and want that have destroyed the peace of the world.

The new organization, first of the permanent, international peacetime bodies, is the outgrowth of the Hot Springs, Va., conference on food and agriculture, called by the late President Roosevelt in 1943, to devise means of applying world opinion and world skill to the menace of mass hunger.

Participating countries recognize in the FAO program and constitution, that full employment to provide markets for full production, and agricultural credit to keep production in line with world food needs, will be as much a part of FAO's problems as are farming techniques and distribution methods stepped up and improved by workable trade agreements.

The writer is at present attending the World Trade Union Conference in Paris, France, where delegates from every corner of the globe are meeting to form a united all inclusive world labor organization. It is most encouraging to see how the delegates of every race, color, religion and nationality, meet in union spirit. In fraternity and good fellowship, delegates are working out common problems and learning about the great progress of union organization in the remotest countries. It is evident that the workers everywhere are coming to recognize in unionism their road to economic emancipation.

One of the main purposes of the WFTU will be to promote union organization in all countries with the stronger lending aid to the weaker in the same spirit followed by CIO organizations. Proceedings are remarkably harmonious and we look for an early establishment of a strong, united, permanent World Federation of Trade Unions.

OIL COMPANIES FLOUT U.S. PLEA FOR PEACE

THE CIO Oil Workers Intl. Executive Board wired a request Friday to all its members asking their immediate cooperation with the Federal Government in placing the oil industry back in operation, and urging continuation of such cooperation as long as the oil industry is under seizure.

The union's action followed an order issued Thursday evening by President Truman calling for Government seizure of 26 oil producing and refining companies and directing Secretary of the Navy Forrestal to operate them.

In announcing its request to its members to return to work for the U. S. Government, the union's council pointed out that it was the oil industry and not the union that refused to settle the dispute through arbitration and made it plain that it was "not capitulating to the oil companies."

"The union is still on strike against the companies," the union's council declared. "There can be no final settlement of our differences with the oil industry until such time as industry is ready and willing to meet the just demands of their workers."

Vice Admiral Ben Morsell, chief of the Navy Bureau of Yards and Docks, has been assigned to take charge of the seized oil properties. President Truman's order calls for operation of the yards under the terms and conditions of employment in effect at the time of seizure.

"Nothing will be permitted to stand in the way of adequate supplies of any kind for our armed forces and for their proper deployment and demobilization," the President's order stated.

The seizure order followed several days of futile conferences with representatives of the CIO Oil Workers and 11 oil companies called by Sec. Schwellenbach in Washington.

The conference was deadlocked from the start by the companies' stalling tactics and their unwilingness to yield an inch in meeting the union's demands. Finally Schwellenbach presented a proposal to the conference calling for a return to work on the basis of a 15% wage increase upon resumption of the 40-hour week, to be put into effect as soon as possible, and acceptance by both sides of an arbitrator's decision later on an additional wage increase between 15 and 30 per cent.

MANAGEMENT STALL

The Secretary set 4 p.m. Tuesday as the deadline for an answer to his proposals. Union officials informed Schwellenbach at that time that they were prepared to accept settlement of the strike on the basis of his proposals if all the oil companies involved also accepted them in good faith.

The companies, however, continued to stall and asked for more time. The Secretary of Labor granted them another 24 hours, setting 4 p.m. Wednesday as the final deadline. On Wednesday, after receiving the companies' replies, Schwellenbach announced publicly that only one of the 11 companies, Sinclair Oil, had accepted his proposal and that each of the others had made so many reservations and qualifications that they were in fact rejections.

Arbitration, he said, was impossible under all the conditions imposed, and the next step would have to be seizure of the properties by the government.

BIG WAR PROFITS

Oil Union Pres. Knight in Washington scoffed at the companies' pleas that they could not afford to pay the 30 per cent increase demanded by the union and pointed out these significant facts and figures:

1. Profits of the 16 major oil companies before taxes increased 160.3% between 1939 and 1944, and by 100.6% after taxes.

2. Labor cost of the product of the 16 companies was only 8% of its total value. Therefore, the 30% base wage increase sought by the union represented less than 3% of the total value of the product. These labor costs include salaries and bonuses paid to executives, some of which exceed $100,000 a year for one individual.

3. Undistributed profits increased by 55.3% from 1940 to 1945, and total assets went up in the same period by 21.9%, to a total of more than nine million.

Union Accepts Ward Proposal To Bargain

A proposal made by Montgomery Ward & Co. to negotiate with the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes if Army operation of the properties was withdrawn was accepted this week by the union.

A resolution adopted by the union's General Executive Board at its session this week in Atlantic City instructed the M-W Organizing committee "to proceed with negotiations with Ward after Army withdrawal in accordance with the company's proposals."

Negotiations are to apply to all plants and facilities of the company represented by the union, including the plants now operated by the Army throughout the country, the resolution stated.

"In the event that these negotiations do not resolve themselves in a written agreement, the Montgomery Ward Organizing Committee is hereby authorized to issue a strike call against all the company's plants and facilities, at such time as it feels necessary," the executive board declared.

Company Back Of Tel. Strike, Says UE-CIO

Alarm over the nation-wide drive of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers for a $2 a day increase is behind the company-dominated Telephone Workers' threat to call a national telephone strike, UE Intl. Rep. Neil Brandt declared this week.

The Western Electric Co. and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., are seeking to head off this demand, Brandt said, "by manipulating their controlled company union like a Charlie McCarthy. AT&T even encourages this company union to threaten a national strike to keep out a legitimate union, the UE-CIO."

The strike threat was also obviously designed to influence a Natl. Labor Relations Board election held Oct. 2 among 5,200 employes of the Western Electric plant in Baltimore, Brandt said. (Results of the election have not yet been announced.)

"Western Electric and AT&T appear ready to use a company-dominated union in a strike against the public because the NLRB trial examinder has found that Western Electric maintains a company union," he declared.

The NLRB examiner branded the Federalation a company-donminated union after more than a year's investigation by the Board.

Packinghouse Workers Ask 25c An Hour Raise

Workers in the packinghouse industry can no longer get along on the low pay and reduced hours of work they now face, Pres. Lewis J. Clark of the CIO Packinghouse Workers Union declared this week in Chicago, in announcing a union drive for a general wage increase of 25c an hour.

Clark said that workers in the industry had been given no general increase since August 1941 and that their level of wages is "substantially below that of most basic mass production industries in the country."

As a result of the elimination of overtime pay, he stated, men with families are now getting take-home pay of $17 a week or less. During the war period when packers were making unprecedented profits, no general wage increase of any kind was given to the workers.

"The American sense of fair play requires that the industry give immediate consideration to the union's demands," Clark said. "The UPWA will vogorously and militantly press for acceptance of its demands and will take such action as may be necessary to prevail upon the packers to grant them."

A delegation of representatives from CIO Packinghouse locals in the Mid-West is scheduled to meet in Washington Oct. 8, to confer with their senators and congressmen on legislation vital to reconversion.

CIO Veterans' Meet

The CIO Veterans Committee, headed by Clinton S. Golden and including several leaders of CIO unions, will meet Oct. 8-10 in Washington, D. C., to consider continued relationships with veterans organizations and ways for advancing the CIO legislative program.

Vt. CIO Re-elects Jenkins

Pres. Anthony Jenkins and Sec. Treas. John Lawson were re-elected, and a program endorsing the position of the National CIO was unanimously adopted by some 100 delegates to the annual convention of the Vermont CIO Council held last week at Rutland, Vt.

Gov. Mortimer R. Proctor in an address on the opening day praised labor in the state for its splendid war efforts and said that "as an important member of the state family, labor would have equal responsibility with management for the future prosperity of Vermont."

CIO leaders who spoke at the two-day convention included Timothy Quinn, Texas director, and Frank Carmichael, New England regional director. Bishop Edward F. Ryan, head of the Roman Catholic diocese of Burlington, sent a message to the State CIO and the Rev. J. Graydon Brown, pastor of the Turland Congregational church and Rabbi Jacob Handler of the Rutland Jewish center both addressed the delegates.

CIO State Pres. Jenkins is general office representative of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Burlington and Lawson is secretary-treasurer of the United Stone & Allied Products Workers, which has national headquuarters in Barre, Vt.

GM Rejects UAW Wage Demand

The General Motors Corp. this week rejected the demands of the CIO United Auto Workers for a 30 per cent raise. GM Pres. C. E. Wilson in a letter to Walter Reuther, UAW vice-president and director of the union's GM Department, denied the UAW's charges that the company was making excessive profits.

The union has charged that GM, like other companies, has various slick ways of hiding these profits, so that they don't show up in financial statements.

A petition for a strike vote was filed against General Motors by the UAW Sept. 22, and the Natl. Labor Relations Board has set Oct. 24 as the tentative date for conducting the vote.

A strike petition has also been filed against the Chrysler Corp. which announced last week that that it would start negotiations with the union on the 30 per cent wage demands. Date set for the strke vote is Oct. 25.

trade departments and the role of these departments were reconciled by a provision that "aims, methods of work, duties, rights and finances of trade departments shall be governed by a special regulation to be adopted by the executive committee and approved by the general council." Hillman interpreted this as meaning the executive committee will have full freedom of action to negotiate satisfactory arrangements with existing secretariats for their reorganization as WFTU trade departments.

'Break' on Fees

To meet the problem of the inability of unions of low-wage countries to pay the same per capita as higher-wage countries, the constitution was amended to give the executive committee authority to permit affiliated organizations to pay on the basis of lower fees without any loss of representation or voting rights. Regular fees are four English pounds annually per thousand members up to five million. But it is understood the new executive committee will likely adopt a conference committee suggestion for two categories of reduced fees for lower wage countries, first with 50 per cent reduction or two pounds, and second with 75 percent reduction or one pound.

Another new constitutional provision to assure proper establishment of the WFTU gives the executive committee power to make a thorough investigation of trade union bona fides of all organizations seeking affiliation before admitting them as WFTU members.

The constitution committee worked two days considering scores of amendments advanced by national organizations and reconciling many differences that emerged in three days of previous debate. That it finally produced a unanimous report was considered a great tribute to the basic unity of the conference and a good omen for future success of the WFTU.

The constitution committee was elected by the conference Monday, after a preliminary report of the credentials committee was adopted, from a slate of 16 countries proposed by the administrative committee.

It included Hillman, Kuznetsov, Citrine, Franchon of France, Chu of China, G. Andersson of Sweden, M. Butler and A. Monk with one vote for Australasia, Giuseppe di Vittorio of Italy, M. J. de Vries of South Africa, Ingvald Haugen of Norway, Casimir Rusinek of Poland, Toledano of Mexico, Evzen Erban of Czechoslovakia, Schevenels of the I.F.T.U., Oldenbroek of the International Trade Secretariats, and Dange and A. Mukerji with one vote for India.

Hillman's Report

Hillman's report for the administrative committee on World Labor representation in international agencies and peace settlements was one of the conference's main orders of business. It led to four days' discussion with scores of delegates participating before it was referred to a special committee.

Hillman related it to efforts of the administrative committee to obtain World Labor representation at San Francisco. He pointed out that acceptance of the ILO as a consultant was not the labor representation sought, since it is a governmental body. He said, "the ILO—a tripartite body performing specialized functions in the economic field — can neither speak for nor represent World Labor in international affairs."

Noting the charter finally adopted leaves the way open for the economic and social council to arrange for consultation with non-governmental organizations, Hillman urged the conference to direct the executive committee of the WFTU to make representations immediately to the economic and social council to assure this form of representation.

Referring to the Potsdam agreement to demilitarize and de-Nazify Germany, Hillman said that this has the full, wholehearted support of World Labor. But, he added, "World Labor must be ever vigilant to prevent any hesitation or weakening in application of the Potsdam program.

Anti-Nazi Policy

"In the United States zone," Hillman declared, "I know American big business is very effectively represented on all high policy-making bodies. Yet the people cannot look with confidence to these gentlemen for swift and full execution of the Potsdam program.

"We must recognize that there are those —and not in Germany alone—who don't want to see Germany's war potential utterly destroyed and the roots of fascism relentlessly eradicated. We of World Labor must firmly and effectievly express our will that these forces, who bear primary responsibility for plunging the world into war, shall not again prevail."

Hillman said, "We recognize the workers of Germany form only a base upon which we can hope to build a democratic land which can again join the community of freedom-loving nations. We are convinced the labor movements of the world are better equipped than any other groups to render the important services of assisting the workers of Germany to build a free, democratic labor movement."

Probe of Germany

For these reasons Hillman's report urged the WFTU to direct its executive committee to appoint a commission to visit Germany and make a full investigation in all zones of present economic and social conditions and of progress made in the execution of the Potsdam decisions.

He proposed further that the WFTU executive committee be instructed to take the necessary steps to request WFTU representation in an advisory capacity on the Allied Control Commission "so those immediately responsible for the administration of Germany may have the benefit of counsel and advice from World Labor, and the world's working people will have assurance that their voice will be heard in determination of the execution of vital policy matters."

Hillman declared all he said with reference to Germany applied with equal force to Japan and made the same proposals for an investigating committee and labor representation in Japan's case.

Noting the big-five foreign ministers' preparatory discussions looking toward peace treaties, Hillman said, "It is contemplated that such treaties in draft form will be submitted to a United Nations' conference for consideration and approval before execution. I believe it is essential that World Labor be given the opportunity, at an appropriate time and place, fully and effectively to express its views concerning these vital treaties which may well shape world history for generations to come."

Delegates Delayed

He urged that the WFTU executive be instructed to take necessary steps to secure such representation.

The report of the credentials committee revealed that delegates from the Transval and Greece will not be allowed to leave their countries. Joseph Curran of CIO moved that the administrative committee investigate the reasons why these delegates are delayed and if they are found to be deliberately prevented from coming, that the conference protest and make representations to the governments concerned.

Papworth of Britain strongly seconded Curran's motion. He said he had been on a British labor commission to Greece and had found union leaders properly elected but subjected to discrimination and persecution by reactionary authorities. He said many labor protest cables are still being received from Greece. Curran's motion then was unanimously adopted.

Following the conclusion of discussion and Hillman's report, the conference began hearing reports from national labor movements on their activities in implementing London conference decisions. James B. Carey reported for CIO. He expressed regrets for the absence of President Murray, "America's outstanding leader of labor," pointing out he was one of the first to initiate the campaign for international trade union unity and worked tirelessly to bring it about, and the present conference represented "the consummation of Murray's dearest wishes and most energetic activities." Carey said Murray's absence was due to the reconversion crisis, requiring Murray's constant attention.

Carey said the CIO is joining wholeheartedly in the formation of the WFTU.

"Our participation in international affairs will not be on any 50 per cent basis. We intend to assume our full responsibility to our own members and to the workers of the world. This is in line with the consistent policy of CIO to advocate our own members but also to benefit all programs designed not only to benefit the people."

Labor Recognition

Carey related the efforts of CIO and its consultants to the American delegation at San Francisco to secure recognition in the United Nations' organization for functional groups representing the broadest field of the people's interests and including industry and agriculture as well as labor.

"There are so many economic and other spheres in which there are people's problems, handled by trade unions, farmers' organizations, business associations and the like rather than by government and political representatives, that we are convinced that there can be no really effective world organization which doesn't provide full representation for these popular groups and interests," Cary said.

Hallsworth, reporting for Britain, told of the new labor government and its plans. He said the British working people, through their unions, are assured of representation in postwar reconstruction. He mentioned a number of industries with tripartite boards in which "workers are represented in the control and running of industries even while under private enterprise."

Hallsworth said, "Labor representation in production planning during the war has had profound influence and will be continued for reconstruction." He said TUC proposals for a 40-hour week will have the sympathetic attention of the minister of labor, himself a leading trade unionist.

Progress in Norway

Elias Volan, reporting for Norway, said unions have been re-established and took their former place in the life of Norway as soon as the country was liberated. Now there is a coalition government with a labor majority, but after current elections, he hopes there will be entirely a labor government. Volan said democracy in industry is Norwegian labor's aim. "Unions should participate in the direction and administration of industry," he said. Committees of production with unions represented are now functioning at a local level but labor also wants committees at a national level in each industry.

Soloviev, reporting for the U.S.S.R., told of terrific destruction there by the Nazis and said unions are taking an active part in the formulation and execution of a five-year plan for reconstruction and economic advancement. He said the Donetz mines, tractor plants in Leningrad and Kharkov, the Dnieper power plant and many other big plants destroyed by the Nazis are already in full operation again, but "it will be years before all wounds to our national economy will be healed."

Soloviev said "There are jobs for all in our country, cutbacks and reconversion have caused no reduction in employment but rather a demand for more workers to expand civilian production. The five-year plan assures full employment and full production. No one is haunted by the fear for tomorrow of unemployment, and misery that it brings."

He said unions and the government are are not only pushing public housing projects but also are aiding and encouraging workers to build their own homes. Returning veterans are entitled to free building materials for this.

Soloviev said unions are restoring prewar working hours without loss of take-home pay, and vacations, and sent 750,000 workers to rest houses and health resorts this year, and 1,750,000 children to camps and vacation resorts—a half million more than last year.

By ARTHUR WHITE

VICORY VIGNETTE . . . When Allied authorities took over the offices of the I. G. Farben Industries, they found much in the way of incriminating documents that was visible, but a considerable amount of stuff had been buried by company directors in trunks, cloisters, caves, and other caches.

On employe asked for permission to keep a box with his personal belongings. AMG officers found secret contracts hidden under a layer of silverware in the box.

And still another employe is said to have also requested that he be allowed to keep a pet strong box. Investigation of this one, revealed nothing more amiss than an old, crumpled 100-mark bill . . . The employee pointed to the money, and in a suppliant tone asked the AMG officer:

"Would you mind letting me keep that?" . . . "Why—what is it?" queried the officer . . . "Oh, I'm a little sentimental, I suppose," explained the employe. "You see, it's the first bill I ever stole."

"Hey!" he shouted, "one of you will have to stay ashore."

"Not me," said the first ivory-tusker, "I'm the white elephant that so many people wind up with, after an unlucky investment."

"Nor me," declared the second, "'cause I'm the pink elephant in the ceiling, that folks see the morning after."

"And I have to come aboard," insisted the third, a baby elephant. "I am the GOPachyderm who hopes to someday represent an adult political party."

The Afrika Korps is digging itself in—in London. Former members of the Korps, now German POW's, have been engaged to rebuild the city on the Thames, and as they prepare foundations for pre-fabricated houses, the Nazis mutter and mumble.

"Think of it," muttered one disgustedly, as he swung a pick-ax, "once we were part of a famous military unit, and today we are worse than common laborers! Imagine being paid only twelve cents a day, by these schwein!" . . .

"Yah," mumbled the other, shoveling dirt, "it's enough to make a man want to commit suicide."

They worked along in silence for a while, and then the second of the duo turned to his grimy friend, and said:

"Say, Hans, if we dig deep enough and long enough, do you think maybe there's a chance we might reach our friends in Argentina?"

Then the Nazi big-wigs were brought to the Palace Hotel infirmary at Mondorf, Luxembourg, for medical treatment, many were reported to have long had the drug-taking habit, with Goering, the biggest dope addict.

But fathead Herman also had to be treated for bronchitis, and after a preliminary examination, a staff doctor told his superior:

"Goering's general condition seems good. The only thing that seems to be troubling him is his breathing."

"Um—yes," mused the other medic, "we must see if we can't get something to stop that."

One of Franco's stenchmen suggested he solve his present difficulties by placing a Help Wanted ad in the Madrid press.

"I think it should read this way:" stated the fascist lackey, reading from a paper, "'Democratic Head of State, bowing to public pressure that he resign from the heavy duties of office for health's sake, desires to reconvert to monarchy. Old-line royalist wishing regal power and splendor with little to do or say, please apply.'"

"I will do as you say, and insert the advertisement," agreed Franco, "but do you really believe we will be able to find such a man?"

"There are several possible prospects," replied the henchman, "but I feel certain that we'll get a reply from either Leopold of Belgium or Carol of Roumania."

Not so long ago, a reporter interviewed Alfred Krupp, the German munitions king, on his immense estate at Essen. Like so many staunch Hitlerooters, Krupp also claimed that he had been "anti-Nazi".

But when the newsman examined the building's library, he found a bound volume of German communiques autographed by Der Feuhrer, and a huge nest of "Jew-hating" literature.

"You say that you are not a Nazi, and were opposed to their views," declared the reporter, "but how do you account for this collection of anti-Jewish propaganda?"

"Oh," explained Krupp, giving the stock answer in trade, "I am not an anti-semite. Some of my best friends were Jews!"

"No doubt they appreciated the honor," countered the scribe sardonically, "while they were still alive."

Accent Your Style

By LUCILLE JASON

Do you know the difference between style and fashion?

FASHION is the mode of the moment. It dictates that you wear a coat with a belt one month, a coat without a belt the next. It exaggerates lines so that the article cannot be worn again the next season. It changes with the wind and demands that you change your wardrobe with it.

STYLE is the art of being well-dressed in clothes that are as good this year as they will be next. It's paying attention to good, basic lines and avoiding distorted extremes. It's choosing something that's particularly suited to your personal life and its activities. It's selecting clothes that can be worn with pleasure for several years.

We will concentrate on style. And in this year of scarcities, we will also concentrate on fabrics that are more plentiful than others. We will buy only what we actually need, but we will make those few things so RIGHT that we will always look well dresed. We will coordinate our wardrobe and buy clothes that will serve more than one purpose and thus keep our buying down to a minimum.

If your wardrobe absolutely must have some additions to it, here's how to make those additions as few as possible and yet be well dressed.

* * *

Did you ever think of the usefulness of a black cotton or lisle sweater?

It will carry you right through the four seasons. Try wearing it under your suit. It will add sharp contrast to a pastel suit, give solidness to tweeds and checks. When summer rolls around, it will look wonderful with a colorful dirndl skirt. You can go as gay as you like in the skirt too, because the solid black top will tone the print down. And, if the occasion arises, the sweater can top off an ankle length dinner skirt and go out for the evening. Dress it up with a gold necklace or colorful beaded choker.

If you buy a jumper . . .

Get one with a built-up top. Try it on to be certain that it looks well with or without a blouse. A jumper can make a wonderful sleeveless dress when the weather gets real warm. Wear it alone, wear it with its own blouse, or wear it with your little black sweater. And if you are following our plan of "planning," buy it in a solid color.

* * *

If you buy a playsuit . . .

Make sure that it's the three-piece variety. Separate blouse, shorts and skirt. Wear the blouse and skirt alone for a wonderful mid-summer cotton dress. The blouse and shorts will see you through a day in the country, button on the skirt to walk through city streets. And then, if you're still following our "Plan," choose your playsuit in a bold cotton plaid or wild print. Then the gay patterned blouse can be worn with your solid color jumper to make another new outfit.

* * *

It's how you wear your cottons that will give them their proper place. Dress them up with accessories—hat, gloves, jewelry—and they will have the "Cosmopolitan Look" and could be worn day or evening in town. A ribbon in your hair, and oxfords, and your cotton goes to the country.

Cottons are cool, easy to launder, fresh-looking on wilting days, and if they are chosen with an eye for style, they can be packed away at the end of the season and will look brand-new when next summer rolls around again.

WASHINGTON GUIDE

Tell 'Em The Facts of Life

Congressmen are interested in everything that interests their voters (especially the registered ones). They read letters from home not only on bills up before Congress but also on issues not covered by legislation.

They use letters as a gauge of public feeling on the whole state of the nation. Thus, it's a good idea to sit down every so often to write a letter to your Congressman just telling him what's on your mind.

The issue uppermost in most people's minds right now is the cut in wages following V-J Day. For people whose take-home has fallen by 30 per cent due to shorter hours, cutbacks, etc., this is the burning question of the day.

Why not write your Congressman about it even if there aren't any bills up to restore this wage cut? Why not sit down and tell him these basic facts:

1. Tell him what's happened to your paycheck since V-E and V-J Day. If it's been cut (and almost all have), tell him how much; tell him the trouble you're having meeting bills; get your wife to add her comments, or better still, write a joint husband and wife letter.

2. Tell your Congressman what your union is doing to restore this cut in earnings; tell him about the general CIO 30% wage increase program; point out that it's an absolute must to prevent a new depression.

3. Give him profit figures on your industry (available in your union paper); remind him that Congress has protected industry against any possible loss in the future; ask why Congress has done nothing similar to protect the workers' purchasing power.

4. Remind him that you support the program of President Philip Murray and the CIO right down the line—as a voter and as a union member.

5. Write him now. He's getting lots of mail inspired by employer groups.

This will help your Congressman to understand the basic issues behind the wage situation. It will help him to answer attacks on the CIO. It will help him remember what's on the voter's mind.

Writing To Congress

Keep your letters short and easy to understand. Write in your own language; form letters are not read.

Write courteously. Your Congressman is a public servant, and deserves respect. He's also human, and reacts better to politeness. If you have to scold him, do it without rancor. Praise him when he deserves it.

Write as a voter, mentioning your Congressional District (learn this from your local union). Always give your address, so he can reply.

'Anti-Polltax' on Edge of Passage

Polltax repeal is on the edge of final passage, with the decision headed for the Senate floor as The CIO NEWS goes to press this week.

As the situation stands, the Senate Judiciary Committee has reported HR 7 out for floor action. At the same time, the Committee has also reported a constitutional amendment ostensibly aimed to do the same job that HR 7 will do.

With both proposals reported by the Committee, the decision as to which will come up first on the Senate floor is up to the Democratic leader, Sen. Alben Barkley (D. Ky.). Barkley can call up either HR 7 or the amendment first.

Here's the key to this decision: HR 7 will pass the Senate (after the filibuster of Bilbo, Eastland et al is broken and the polltax becomes a thing of the past) if it reaches the floor before the amendment.

The amendment (proposed by Sen. O'Mahoney, D., Wyo.) is an attempt to stall and evade the issue. Constitutional amendments require ratification by 36 states, take years to become law—especially when they're progressive amendments.

If the amendment is allowed to come up first, some hesitant Senators may vote for it as a means of clearing their consciences, then announce that they cannot and need not vote for HR 7.

If HR 7 comes up, the Bilbos and Eastlands will filibuster—but the filibuster can be broken, just as they have been broken in the past.

Bilbo gave the tip-off on the amendment proposal only this week, when he announced that he would not filibuster against it, but would filibuster HR 7. Eastland was a little more cagey, but said the same thing in effect.

If HR 7 is passed, as it will be if it reaches the floor ahead of the amendment, the plain citizens of eight polltax states will be able to vote. We can be sure they won't vote for people like Bilbo, Eastland, Rankin and their kind.

Here's what to do: Wire Sen. Barkley to put HR 7 ahead of the amendment. Wire your two Senators to vote cloture to block the filibuster, vote for HR 7 and reject the O'Mahoney stall.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	Extends present state benefits to 26 weeks; includes seamen, U. S. workers; turns USES back to states.	Passed by Senate; pigeonholed by House Ways and Means: Discharge Petition coming up.	Wire Congressman to work to rescind Ways and Means action; support Discharge Petition on Forand bill.
Jobs-for-all (S 380)	States government responsibility for full employment.	Passed by Senate; now waiting House action. 115 Representatives supporting original bill as written.	Urge Congressman to support Kilgore-Patman bill as originally presented to Senate.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present minimum from 40c to 65-75c; widens coverage.	In Senate Labor Sub-Committee; supported by Sens. Tunnell, Aiken and others, fought by Sen. Ellender (D. La.).	Urge Senators to support bill as written; urge early action in House.
Taxes	Bill not yet out at press time; GOP urging big cuts for rich, end of excess profits tax.	House Ways and Means and Senate Finance Committees have charge of all tax bills.	Urge support of CIO tax plan. Watch for new bill to be offered.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives us chance to end rule of Bilbos, Rankins; helps north as well as south.	HR 7 reported out by Senate Judiciary; also a constitutional amendment which would stall action for years.	Wire Senators to support HR 7, reject amendment as stall.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; ends free collective bargaining.	Ready for early action in Congress; press drive now being whipped up daily.	Keep telling Congress to stay away from it.

SUPPORT CIO DELEGATIONS TO CONGRESS!

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

TOP OF THE LIST: Basic to successful legislative action is successful political action. All the Congressmen and one-third of the Senators come up for election in 1946—with elections only 13 months away.

CIO-PAC aims to do even a better job than it did in 1944; registering millions of voters, getting the issues to the people, getting out the vote.

This takes money, to pay for literature, to keep organization going, to keep people in the field.

Your CIO-PAC has started its $1 fund drive. Your local's shop steward or PAC chairman has the receipt books now. All he needs is your $1.

$1 for a better Congress. $1 for security.

TAXES: CIO and more than a dozen leading liberal organizations are supporting a tax bill to cut burdens on low incomes, help finance reconversion, maintain national purchasing power.

GOP and reactionary Democrats favor straight across the board percentage reductions in income taxes, which favor big income groups. GOP leaders also clamor for repeal of the excess profits tax.

A sound tax bill calls for repeal of the so-called "normal tax" which hits all income levels at the same 3% rate, from $500 on up. It wants the excess profits tax kept on, asks repeal of excise (sales) taxes on things low income people buy.

The House Ways and Means Committee is ready to report a "compromise" bill as we go to press—after secret hearings which CIO vigorously protested.

Taxes can mean money in or out of your pocket—depending on how they affect low and high income groups. Write your Congressman today—tell him to work for a sound tax program.

ADD NEW LOWS: Rejection of Truman's nomination of ex-Rep. Raymond S. McKeough to the U. S. Maritime Commission by the Senate Commerce Committee sets a new low mark in AFL finagling on Capitol Hill, since the only protest against the nomination came from its chief lobbyist Lew Hines.

A brisk fight is expected on the floor from Senators whose stomachs were turned by this exhibition of AFL spite. McKeough, it will be remembered, was CIO-PAC's regional director in Illinois in the 1944 campaign.

DEPRESSION—IT CAN BE AVOIDED!

"Avoid Another Depression" is a pamphlet issued this week by the USA-CIO. The CIO NEWS prints below major excerpts from this important statement by President Murray.

By PHILIP MURRAY,

President, United Steel Workers of America, CIO

THE steel industry sets the pattern of wages throughout all industry. Hence, the frozen steel wages during the heighth of prosperity in the nineteen twenties were a major contributing factor to the devastating depression that the nation suffered in the early thirties.

It is important to America that this history be reviewed. The same mistake must not be made again.

The August 16, 1923, increase was the last general raise granted by the steel industry in the nineteen twenties. Through the greatest six years of peacetime prosperity, 1924 through 1929, steel wages were frozen. Not until October 1931 was there another general movement in steel wages, and then it was a downward movement of 11 percent followed by another cut of 15 percent in May 1932.

Common labor was paid 44 cents an hour in 1924, and for each succeeding year. By 1929 the rate was still 44 cents. No increase.

Average hourly earnings for all steelworkers were 64 cents in 1924. By 1929 they had risen—in six of the most prosperous years of steel—a total of three cents to 67 cents an hour. This four and one-half percent rise in hourly earnings was the result of technological improvements and the increase in production. In 1929 steelworkers produced 46 percent more steel than in 1924, with only a 4½ percent rise in hourly earnings.

Weekly earnings rose only three and one-half percent, from $35.22 in 1924 to $36.48 in 1929, while production rose 46 percent. And to make $36.48 a week in 1929 the average steelworker had to work 55 hours. And he got no overtime pay. No shift premiums. No paid vacations.

How did the steel industry do? In 1924 net profits were $188 million. These are the profits which the industry acknowledged. We have no way at this late date to find out how much more profits were made and concealed.

What were profits in 1929? They had risen to the astronomical level of $483 million—almost a half a billion dollars. With a rise of 47 percent— from 28,086,000 tons in 1924 to 41,069,000 tons in 1929—in finished steel production, the industry's profits rose 157 percent.

But more. During these six years the steel industry reduced its funded debt by 38 percent. In 1924 it owed a little over a billion dollars ($1,008,000,000). By 1929 the industry's debt was cut to $625 million—a reduction of $383 million or 38 percent.

But still more. From 1924 to 1929 the steel industry increased its net working capital by 17 percent, from $850 million to $995 million—an increase of $145 million.

But still more. Steel made tremendous profit gains over 1924, at which time it earned $188 million. Here is how much profits the industry made in excess of 1924 during each of the next five years.

Year	Net Profits	Excess over 1924
1925	$205,000,000	$ 17,000,000
1926	263,000,000	75,000,000
1927	202,000,000	14,000,000
1928	279,000,000	91,000,000
1929	483,000,000	295,000,000
	Total	$492,000,000

At the same time they salted away another $528 million in working capital and reduced debt.

These excess profits could and should have been put into higher wages.

If these excess profits had been put into higher wages, this would have meant an increase for each steelworker of $2,550, or $425 for each of six years. That is $35.40 a month. The dues that the steelworkers paid into the open shop of Judge Gary and Charley Schwab were $35.40 a month.

The unorganized steelworkers were unable to force a wage raise. It takes a strong national union to do that kind of job. So steel wages were virtually frozen while steel profits soared sky high

So what happened?

The increas d profits did not go into wages where they could be spent for goods and services. These excess steel profits did not go into purchasing power to keep the wheels of industry turning. And the wheels of industry slowed down, and almost came to a complete stop.

This must not happen again!

The United Steelworkers of America has a wage program designed to avoid another great depression.

The USA is seeking a general wage increase of two dollars—$2.00—a day.

The steel companies have the money. They made two billion dollars out of the war.

They are due to continue making high profits in the next several years.

The way to avoid another big depression is to institute a general increase in steel of two dollars a day that will raise purchasing power of steelworkers. And, with similar increases in other industries, the purchasing power of the nation will be raised.

Don't Railroad Atomic Control Bill—CIO

SHARP opposition to the Johnson bill (S 1463) which would set up a dictatorial committee to control development of atomic energy, and demand for full public hearings on the subject were expressed this week by CIO President Murray in a wire to Senator Alben W. Barkley, majority leader in the upper house.

Criticizing attempts to rush the Johnson bill through, Murray said:

"The Johnson bill would hand over to a little group the power to censor all scientific research on atomic energy and to blacklist any scientists who do not submit to such censorship.

"It deprives the President of the power to remove members of this commission once they are appointed.

"Any commission which Congress establishes must represent the whole American people and must include representatives of government, science, industry, labor, agriculture and the general public.

"We urge President Truman to call together at once the Democratic leadership in Congress to arrange adequate public hearings. The CIO respectfully requests an opportunity to be heard at such hearings and calls upon all other groups representing the American people to make similar requests for a public hearing."

RADIO ROUNDUP

CIO TAKES PAY CASE TO U.S.

PRES. Phillip Murray took CIO's wage case to the nation this week, as he opened the first of four country-wide broadcasts over American Broadcasting Co. stations.

Murray will speak, and will introduce guest speakers, on the network the following Monday nights:

Oct. 15—10:15-10:30 EST
Oct. 29—10:00-10:15 EST
Nov. 12—10:00-10:15 EST
Nov. 26—10:00-10:15 EST

The first talk will deal with the CIO United Steelworkers' $2 a day wage demand, and with other CIO unions' similar proposals.

The programs are being advertised by radio spot announcements and newspaper ads. Approximately 180 stations will carry the broadcasts.

In announcing sale of time for discussion of controversial issues—something that CIO has long been urging—ABC Pres. Mark Woods declared:

"We believe it is in keeping with the Federal Communications Act as interpreted by the FCC, to sell time to labor unions. ABC proposes to continue to exercise its managerial discretion to insure well-rounded discussions of public affairs, both on a commercial and sustaining basis."

Labor, Liberals File FM Applications

At least 19 Frequency Modulation (FM) radio station applications have been filed with the FCC by organized labor or liberals friendly to the cause of labor.

Organized as the NMU Broad-Casting Co., the principal officers of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union are seeking an FM permit in New York City to broadcast information for seamen, educational programs for children, and to use foreign language programs in an effort to stimulate the support of democratic causes.

In addition to four applications filed by the AFL Intl. Ladies Garment Workers for stations in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chattanooga, Tenn., the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has four applications pending.

The ACW, headed by Pres. Sidney Hillman, is seeking stations in Philadelphia, Rochester, New York City and Chicago.

Another CIO union with applications on file since last December is the CIO United Auto Workers, seeking FM stations in Chicago, Newark, N. J., Flint, Mich., Cleveland, O., Los Angeles and Detroit.

Already operating a standard broadcast station, WCFL, the AFL Chicago Federation of Labor, has a bid in for an FM station.

Chairman Elmer A. Benson of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee is listed as an individual applicant for a station at Minneapolis. He is a former governor, U. S. Senator and banker and proposes a station with farm, labor, religious and educational programs.

NCPAC Fights FM Monopoly Control

Launching what they promise will be a "sustained" campaign to keep FM radio from monopoly control by present standard broadcasters and large newspapers, the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee released today an eight-page printed "Report to American on Radio Broadcasting."

The pamphlet, main points of which were reported in last week's CIO News, has been mailed to thousands of citizens' groups and civic leaders throughout the country. It briefs the current state of American broadcasts, outlines the prospects for domination of FM broadcasting by the same interests "who now control the country's principal stations and newspapers," and urges action in the form of letters, wires, petitions, and resolutions to the Congress and the FCC.

Murray Bond Talks

President Murray will be on the air over more than 400 stations during the coming Victory Loan drive in a recorded broadcast urging continued CIO support.

"During the war, members of the CIO put millions and millions of dollars into Government bonds," Murray will say. "Now that the war is over, our members will wish to do their full share in helping bring the boys back home, in helping to care for the sick and wounded—to help the GI Bill of Rights."

It Pays to Protest

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union last week complained that Leo Cherne's "Opinion Requested" program over Mutual stations had misrepresented the case for a seamen's Bill of Rights similar to the GI Bill of Rights.

A protest letter to the president of Mutual gained the NMU time this week to tell the nation that more than 6,000 merchant seamen were war casualties, that nearly 500,000 of them wore combat zone bars, and that 117 have been awarded Distinguished Service medals.

30% Wage Hike Won

An increase in basic wages which approximates the 30% demand of the CIO United Auto Workers has been granted by the Wright Aeronautical Corp., Paterson, N. J., UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas announced this week. This is the first compliance by a major corporation with the union's wage program, he said.

The offer includes a flat increase of 22c an hour for all hourly-rated employes, plus an additional one cent based upon the payroll to be used in correcting wage rate inequities, and an additional three cents to be used to place all employes on a general equality basis.

The hiring rate has been increased from 65c to 77½c an hour with a ten cent increase in 30 days, and a minimum of $1.03 in another 30 days. The top rate has been increased from $1.41 to $1.63.

WFTU LEADERS

SAILLANT, CITRINE ELECTED

By LEN DE CAUX

PARIS—A firmly established, united world organization of labor with a unanimously elected leadership is now on the job making its voice vigorously heard from the start for union organization or all workers, against fascism, for democratic rights of all peoples and for labor participation in planning the peace and world reconstruction.

Sir Walter Citrine of Britain was elected chairman and Louis Saillant of France general secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions. Top executives also include seven vice-chairmen: Sidney Hillman, Vassili Kuznetsov, Leon Jouhaux, Lombardo Toledano, Chu-Hsueh-Fan of China, Giuseppe di Vittorio of Italy and E. Kupers of Holland. These together with the chairman and secretary, constitute the executive bureau. Philip Murray and Hillman will represent the U. S. on the 26-member executive committee.

Before adjourning its two weeks' sessions, the conference resolved to send investigating commissions to Germany and Japan; made specific demands for representation on various international agencies; adopted many resolutions on behalf of the rights of labor, ex-servicemen and colonial peoples, against race discrimination, and for breaking relations with fascist Spain and Argentina. Named on the commission to visit Germany are Jouhaux, chairman; Hillman, Citrine, Kuznetsov, A. Kapatocky of Czechoslovakia, and E. Kupers of Holland. The commission to Japan is to be named later.

The final report of the credentials committee showed 187 delegates and 65 substitutes from 65 national and 18 international organizations seated at this first constitutional convention of the WFTU. They represented approximately 66,760,000 union members in 56 countries.

A number of organizations desiring to participate were unable to send delegates due to transportation difficulties. Telegrams were received from Greece, Iran and the Transvaal saying that delegates were unable to attend either because of arrest of delegates as in Iran or because they were refused necessary passports. The conference ordered telegrams sent to the Iran and Greek governments protesting their action in preventing union delegates from attending.

Headquarters of the WFTU will be in Paris under the constitution adopted, subject to powers of the executive committee to make any changes necessary to meet emergency conditions.

Election of the executive committee followed the report of the nominations committee, on which Joseph Curran represented the CIO, announcing selections by national groupings as set forth in the constitution to insure worldwide representation.

The executive committee includes: Murray, Hillman and Pat Conroy for the U. S. and Canada; Kuznetsov, Tarasov and N. V. Popov for the U. S. S. R.; Citrine and Ebby Edwards for Britain; Franchon and Jouhaux for France; Lombardo Toledano and Lazaro Pena for Latin America and the West Indies; El Ariss for the Near East and Middle East; Chu-Hsueh-Fan for China; A. Monk for Australasia; S. Dange for India and Ceylon; B. Goodwin for Africa; E. Jensen for Scandinavia; E. Kupers for Western Europe; G. Di Vittorio for Southern Europe; A. Zapotocky for Central Europe; D. Sulaj for Southeastern Europe. Besides these 22, the executive committee includes the general secretary and three members to be selected by trade departments, making a total of 26 members.

The composition of the general council was also announced by the nominations committee, including representatives of all

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS

Facts, as Lincoln used to say, are stubborn things. They have a way of blowing the most elaborate and unsound arguments out of the window and into the ashcan. Used in generous doses, they can expose the hollowness of the most artfully contrived and expensive propaganda.

Facts are needed now more than ever before. Huge corporations are deluging newspaper readers and radio listeners with propaganda, both in the paid advertising sections and in the unpaid parts that pass for editorials. The main purpose they have is to persuade the reader that CIO's wage demands are unreasonable, impractical, ruinous, inflationary, etc.

To read these corporation advertisements—especially when they refer to the corporations' war record—the unwary might come to the conclusion that industry's life is one long sacrifice and that it exists only to serve the nation at a return barely sufficient to keep body and soul together.

By contrast, of course, labor is presented as dominated solely by selfishness and an apparently insane desire to wreck the means from which it draws its livelihood.

What are the facts? They are plain for all to see—but because you don't see them in the full page advertisements that hit your eye every time you open a newspaper, and because facts are needed now more than ever, they bear repeating.

Industrial profits increased five times during the war period—five times before taxes, and they doubled after taxes. The total, after taxes, is $6.4 billion.

Industry, in addition to declared profits, has huge reserves from the war period—undeclared as profits and untaxed. The total, according to U. S. Government reports, is $15 billion—with an additional $25 billion that they can tap in tax refunds.

What are the facts about wages? These you never see in your daily newspapers, and even though they are known to every worker and his wife who handles a paycheck, they also bear repeating.

Wage earners today are being asked to take a pay cut amounting to as much as 30 percent—one third—of their previous take-home. The cut comes through reductions in hours, loss of overtime pay, and other means—when it is not a total pay cut in the form of a layoff notice.

At the same time, the cost of living stays 50 percent above the 1941 level. The same corporations that spend millions on newspaper advertisements are seeking to make the cost of living go even higher, by their pressure on price control for higher prices. Incidentally, they're looking for more gravy in the tax bill now coming up in Congress.

CIO's wage case therefore, as spearheaded by President Murray and all CIO unions, is a demand for restoration of a wage cut. What CIO seeks is a restoration of the take-home lost due to cutbacks in hours and the loss of overtime.

These are the facts of CIO's wage case. They can blow the elaborate and expensive propaganda of the corporations sky-high. They can chase the inflation profits, the viewers-with-alarm, the editorial soothsayers back under the rug.

But they won't do the job for you unless you use them. President Murray has urged all CIO members to arm themselves with the facts, to apply them intelligently, aggressively and as widely as possible.

If we do this job of arming ourselves with the facts, we will answer the anti-CIO propaganda and take the longest of many steps toward winning our case for a restoration of post VJ Day wage cuts.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

PARIS—Success of the World Union Conference at a time when the Big Five foreign ministries were having such difficulty reaching agreement provoked much comment in the European press.

The WFTU has already shown what a powerful force world labor can be to promote better understanding between all peoples. With closer, more directly common interests, the labor movements of various countries can more readily reach common agreements, and thus bring popular pressure to bear from below for a unity of governments which is often difficult to achieve solely on the diplomatic level.

On the walls of CGT headquarters at Paris are inscribed the following words of Anatole France; "The union of all the workers will make the peace of the world." The WFTU is the biggest step yet taken in this direction.

Setup of the WFTU may at first seem complicated to American unionists but it represents a skillful arrangement for the representation of national and functional interests as well as numerical strength without making the machinery too cumbersome for speedy and effective action.

The supreme body of the WFTU is the world congress which will meet every two years with every affiliated organization having delegates and votes in proportion to its membership, but with reduced proportional representation for membership in excess of five million to prevent one or two large organizations from dominating the whole congress.

Meeting every year, with provisions for additional special sessions if necessary, will be a smaller body known as the general council, a sort of small scale world congress.

The General Council will be equally representative in the sense that each affiliated organization is represented on it though with fewer delegates—one apiece in most cases. More council members are to be picked by their respective organizations, and in the case of roll calls they will cast the full number of votes to which their organizations are entitled in the world congress.

Next there's the smaller executive committee of 26 members which can meet at short notice to handle all major situations. All parts of the world are represented on the executive committee. Smaller countries are grouped geographically and delegates from countries in each group get together at the world congress to select a representative of the whole group. Trade departments are also represented on the executive committee by three members. However, executive committee members represent the congress as a whole and not any particular geographical or trade division thereof.

Trade departments will perform one of the most important functions of the international organization, grouping together unions of different countries along industrial lines for promotion of the common interests of all workers in their respective industries.

The top executive body of the WFTU is the executive bureau, consisting of a full-time general secretary elected by the General Council and a chairman and seven vice-chairmen elected by the Executive Committee.

Of great significance at the conference was the large representation of colonial and semi-colonial countries and the moving, impressive speeches of their delegates. Union organization is making great headway in such countries, though membership is still comparatively small. But its potential influence is enormous, both in respect to numbers and the biggest of future world issues.

Delegations from these countries got together at the conference to work out a common program for submission to the Executive Committee. A special department for colonial problems and an Asiatic trade union conference are among many ideas under consideration.

Illustrative of the difficult living conditions in Europe these days was the sad experience of the Arab delegation. The membership made donations of eggs, butter and other foods to meet delegates' living expenses in Paris. Delegates sold these products before leaving to get French francs, but found the sum realized in francs was sufficient only for one day's food in Paris at French prices, and eggs, butter and meat were almost unattainable luxuries in Paris restaurants. If delegates could have brought food instead of money, they could have lived like lords.

CIO and Auto Workers representatives ask Gen. Omar Bradley, Veterans Administrator, to back the CIO proposal that the states be required to adopt the Federal Committee of Apprenticeship standards in the training of veterans, thus preventing the veteran from being short-changed by unscrupulous employers. Bradley, and George Buckley of the UAW veterans dept.

CIO Backs Bill To Get Jobs For Wounded

THE CIO Veterans Committee this week moved on a broad front to aid ex-servicemen, setting up its program for improvements in the GI Bill of Rights, supporting a bill to aid disabled veterans get jobs and striking against discrimination toward former members of the armed forces because of race, creed or color.

To aid wounded veterans in getting jobs the committee decided to support HR 1533, a bill providing that the Veterans Administration repay benefits paid to veterans injured in industrial accidents.

Clinton S. Golden, committee chairman, said that many employes do not wish to hire veterans because they fear they will incur double liability in unemployment compensation cases.

The measure is also supported by the Disabled American Veterans, and Golden said the committee action was in line with its policy of cooperating with bona fide democratic veterans' organizations. After reviewing its relationship with veterans' organizations, the committee renewed its decision to advise CIO members they should decide for themselves which veterans' organizations they wish to join.

To strike against discrimination because of race, color or creed, the committee commended the Veterans Committee for Equal Rights for its fight in behalf of Pfc. Richard H. Naito, Japanese-American soldier, barred from admission to Monaghan Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Spokane, Wash. The stand of the Natl. VFW in ordering Naito's admission to the post was lauded by the committee.

CONFER ON GI BILL

The committee also conferred with Meyer Bernstein, assistant to Golden on veterans' matters, on proposed improvements of the GI Bill. Following the committee meeting Bernstein this week appeared before the subcommtitee on veterans' legislation of the Senate Finance Committee (see other story on this page).

The reported practice of some employers in chiseling on payment of wages to veterans taking apprectinceship training was condemned, and the committee recommended continuance of the management-labor apprenticeship plan in training ex-servicemen. The committee received reports that some employers instead of paying the usual apprenticeship rates were reducing pay by the amount the veteran received for subsistence under the GI Bill.

Victor Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, a committee member, Bernstein and a committee representing the Skilled Trades Dept. of the Auto Workers called on Gen. Omar Bradley, Veterans Administrator, to point out the need for changing the GI Bill so that apprenticeship training requirements in the states meet with the standards of the Federal Apprenticeship Committee.

In that way chiseling on veterans' wages by employers would be avoided and uniform standards would be set up to enable a veteran completing the course to qualify for skilled work throughout the Nation. The UAW offered its services in seeing that veterans so trained would get skilled jobs.

The UAW representatives also told General Bradley that the union would like to see the returning servicemen given credit in apprenticeship training not only for skills learned in the services but also for previous training.

Facts For Vets

From a reliable source on Capitol Hill it was learned today that on or before Nov. 1 the Navy will reduce points needed for discharge by three. At present 44 points are needed by enlisted personnel, and 49 by officers.

* * *

The CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers this week presented a five-point program for speeding up discharges to the Army and Navy, asking for:

Fifty separation centers; centers to be staffed whenever possible by civilian personnel to avoid the slow-down caused by changing of military personnel because of discharges; immediate discharge of all men with the required number of points.

Changing requirements for discharge from points to length of service to end discrimination against Negroes who have not had the opportunity to acquire points by engaging in combat; making voluntary enlistment more attractive to make possible the discharge of drafted personnel.

James McLeish and Tom Neill, chairman and executive secretary, respectively, of the UE natl. servicemen's and veterans' committee, presented the program to Secretary of War Patterson, Brig. Gen. Berry, Comdr. Sergeant of the Navy and Sen. Walsh, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and Sen. Johnson of Colorado, acting chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

* * *

Neill this week also appeared before the subcommittee on veterans' legislation of the Senate Finance Committee in behalf of the UE proposals for amendments to the GI Bill similar to the requests asked by the CIO Veterans Committee.

CONGRESS GETS CIO PLEA FOR BETTER GI BILL

CIO's requests for GI Bill of Rights improvements including better provisions on housing and increased unemployment compensation, were presented this week by Meyer Bernstein, representative of the CIO Veterans Committee, to a mildly critical subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee.

One of Bernstein's questioners was Sen. Millikin (R. Colo.), who interrupted the witness while he was pleading that an Army and Navy Board of Review be set up to hear appeals from general military courts martial.

Millikin wanted to know whether lack of uniformity for the punishment of the same offense did not occur in civilian courts as in the Army, but agreed with Bernstein when he pointed out that the variation was wider in the Army.

The witness immediately preceding Bernstein, Dave E. Satterfield, Jr., of the Life Assurance Assn. of America, like the CIO representative called for the extension of time during which a veteran can apply for a home loan. Both referred to the same statement by Bernard Baruch in which he asked that loans be administered by the Federal Housing Administration.

The CIO program includes:

Boosting of unemployment benefits from $20 to $25 a week for a year with $5 additional for each dependent up to a maximum of three.

A $90 monthly subsistence for veterans studying under the GI bill with $25 additional each month for each dependent up to a maximum of three, nad lifting the 25 age limited on eligibility.

Elimination of present price limits on artificial limbs so that the Veterans Administration can supply the best possible devices.

Other changes in the housing provision to include extension of the amortization period for payment of loans from 20 to 32 years, lower interest rates, and extension of time of application for loan from two years after discharge to ten years after discharge of all draftees.

Advocating boosting veterans' unemployment compensation payments, Bernstein said that civilian skilled workers and soldiers were frequently employed side by side at U. S. military installations, and in many instances the civilian received a great deal more than his partner in uniform.

He asked the committee to suppose that come demobilization the soldier and the worker were discharged at the same time and were unable to find work.

"It would be both unfair," the witness said, "for the veteran to draw less unemployment compensation than the civilian. The former serviceman's allowance ought to be increased." Turning to the inadequacy of artificial limbs now supplied by the VA, Bernstein argued:

"If the average price of the most desirable device is twice that now allowed by the VA, the total cost of furnishing one and a spare to each disabled veteran will be less than the cost of fighting the war for one or two hours."

Asserting that the real weakness in the educational legislation is in elementary and secondary education, Bernstein asked for the immediate creation "within the states and the cities of educational commissions representing the professional educators, labor and the public, to make plans for the utilization of the vocational schools the clock around, if necessary."

27 September 1945.

Mr. Clinton S. Golden

Chairman of the C.I.O. Veteran's Committee

New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Golden:

We, the members of hut 708 of the 42d Station Hospital, stationed in the Aleutians, wish at this time to commend your committee on its very fine work.

Your recent suggestion to the War Department that demobilization is too slow and that men should have their discharges mailed to them meets with our hearty approval.

Thanking you again for your fine work, we remain,

Respectfully yours,

This letter from the Aleutians shows that the proposal made to the Army by Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, for speeding discharges is meeting with enthusiastic approval from servicemen. Golden urged that soldiers be processed at their bases for discharge and sent home on terminal leave while the paper work was being completed.

Yugoslav mothers like the one above helped fight the Nazis, and like the Norwegians (right above) were aided by labor's dollars contributed through the CIO Natl. War Relief Committee. Food, supplies and weapons were parachuted into Norway to aid the underground.

THEIR BLOOD HELPED TO BUY US VICTORY!

THOUSANDS of Europe's and Asia's underground fighters, who face a winter of hunger and cold along with millions of other workers, spilled their blood in the fight to defeat fascism. Their sabotage of the enemy and their fight for very existence were aided by $9,000,000 contributed by American workers. Today, freed from censorship, the story of that aid can be told.

Soon after the Natl. CIO War Relief Committee was organized in 1941, word reach it that the labor movements of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Luxembourg, and occupied France had gone underground and desperately needed help. The problem was to cut through military, diplomatic and financial red tape and get that help to them.

The CIO War Relief Committee, under the direction of Leo Perlis, and operating with the National War Fund and other labor groups, conducted long, secret negotiations with government agencies. Finally, arrangements were made. The underground movements abroad chose special labor trustees to carry out labor projects decided upon by these American labor groups. Special licenses were then issued to these labor trustees by the U. S. Treasury Department.

Through seven of these historic licenses that actually authorized trade with the enemy, American workers sent $9,000,000 to the underground labor movements in Europe and China. This money helped rescue thousands of anti-fascists from the Gestapo and transport them to places of relative safety. It was also used to feed hundreds of thousands whose husbands and fathers were victims of fascist slave and concentration camps.

American dollars helped feed 10,000 Norwegian anti-fascists hiding in the forests, and parcels of food were smuggled to their families.

Czechoslovakian orphanages were established in France for children of men who joined the Czech army in exile or were prisoners of the Nazis.

Effectiveness of the aid was testified to by many incidents. Best of all, perhaps, was the work carried on by the Norwegian underground, said to be the most active and well organized in Europe.

The Norwegians maintained underground railways like those that helped slaves escape to the free North in the U. S. pre-Civil War days. Along these Norwegian routes traveled those escaping from Nazi authorities, leaders of the resistance who had been spotted by the Gestapo, and others with information that would be of value to the military forces of the Allies.

CIO dollars helped Norwegian underground workers (above) escape to neutral Sweden. Skilled Chinese workers (below) were smuggled from occupied into Free China, where they were desperately needed.

LOW PAY BOSSES BUCK 65c FLOOR

FIRST organized outside opposition to the 65-75c minimum wage bill came into the open this week, with the appearance of three substandard employers before the Senate Labor sub-Committee holding hearings on the proposed act (S 1419).

Countering them, the CIO sent witnesses, including David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers, a spokesman for Reid Robinson of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, the State, County and Municipal employes, and others. For next week, the CIO scheduled an appearance by President Murray to wind up its case against sweatshop wages.

One of the substandard employers, a Mr. Nichols of the cotton compressing industry, cheerfully admitted that the average wage in his industry is 45c an hour, which he seemed to think was enough. Mr. Nichols, of course, lives on considerably more than 45c an hour.

A second low wage boss, a Mr. Bowden of the grain elevator industry, was mainly worried about the possibility of having to pay overtime. Grain elevator workers frequently work 80-hour weeks (that's better than a 13-hour day six days a week), and how, said Mr. Bowden, can we stay in business if we have to pay overtime like everybody else?

Mr. Bowden wants just a little exemption — enough to cover "country" elevators, like the kind he represents.

They're Still Telling It To Congress!

CIO spokesmen and representatives of community organizations from three major sections of the United States came to D. C., this week to tell their Congressmen that they want action now on CIO's legislative program — main points being unemployment compensation, and the full employment and 65-75 cents minimum wage bills.

Heard from on Capitol Hill were men and women, white and Negro workers from Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Indiana, Michigan and West Vrginia, from the New England States and the South.

They told their good Congressmen like Senator Kilgore (D., W. Va.) that their work was appreciated, and they needled their bad Congressmen like Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.).

Vandenberg provided Michigan delegates with an instructive half hour on how to avoid answering questions, appear very positive on others, and misquote figures to build up a case. Fortunately, the delegates knew some of the answers better than he did.

The gray-headed, suave, sharply dressed man who heads the Republican reactionaries in the Senate said he was "100 per cent for FEPC;" declined to commit himself on the tax bill until it reached a Senate committee; misquoted figures on the excess profits tax but corrected himself when caught at it; said the polltax repeal bill ought to pass but declined to say whether he favored a parliamentary move that would help insure its passage; tried to weasel on the Ball-Hatch bill, which would virtually turn the Wagner act upside down, but finally said he wanted compulsory arbitration for "wildcat" strikes, and said he'd reserve the right to outline his plan of action until after the Nov. 5 labor-management conference; and wound up by stating he "didn't realize" that the original Kilgore-Forand unemployment compensation bill would have given Michigan workers $33 a week unemployment compensation.

The Minnesota delegates gave Senator Ball (R., and sponor of the Ball-Hatch bill) an uncomfortable hour explaining why labor was opposed to his measure.

Illinois delegates praised Rep. Adolph J. Sabath (D.) as a friend of labor and presented him with a humidor as a token of labor's esteem.

'Relief for the Greedy' Tax OK'd By House

WORKING at top speed and under a gag rule that shut off any changes from the floor, the House this week voted a tax bill that meets FDR's definition of the 1944 law—"relief for the greedy, not the needy."

As it stands, the bill, which now goes to the Senate Finance Committee (Sen. George, D. Ga., chairman) for more secret hearings, gives the rich and the corporations more than $7 billion in tax relief.

It does this by cutting excess profits taxes from 95 to 60 percent, by giving incomes above $21,000 a straight 10 percent cut, and by presenting the top income brackets with special gravy.

Letting the cat out of the bag, GOP leader Knutson (R. Minn.) of the House Ways and Means Committee explained that he was quite sure the Senate would repeal the rest of the profits tax when it got the bill.

According to a statement put out by the CIO and 14 other organizations, if finally adopted by both House and Senate and signed by President Truman the bill would:

1. Give large corporations an extra $12 billion by cutting the excess profits tax, since the larger outfits make the biggest excess profits.

2. Give "only meager relief" to low and middle income groups by failing to raise exemptions from the low of $1,000 for married couples and hand big incomes the biggest share of the straight 10 percent slice.

Forming a "committee for a progressive tax program" the CIO and its liberal allies announced an eight point tax plan designed to protect incomes up to the $3,000 level by raising exemptions, and to give individuals the same carryback and carry forward privileges corporations now have. It also would forgive taxes owed by veterans up to $250.

The program, which will be put in amendments to be offered in the Senate this week, also calls for relief for small business, for keeping the excess profits taxes, for repealing sales taxes on low priced goods, and for taxing profits made from sales of property held less than three years. This last provision is also aimed at halting inflationary gambling in real estate, etc.

Though the CIO has steadily protested the custom for some years now, tax bills are voted in the House under a "closed rule" that prevents members from offering amendments. They have simply the choice of voting the bill up or down, and since the revenue is always needed, pressure is strong to vote for the bill no matter how bad.

Both the House Ways and Means and the Senate Finance Committees, which have charge of tax bills, are run by a reactionary Republican - Democrat coalition that works together in perfect harmony.

In the House, Rep. Doughton, 82-year-old chairman, sees eye to eye with the GOP leader, Rep. Knutson (Minn.) on every proposition to protect the rich and soak the poor.

In the Senate Finance Committee, Chairman George (Ga.) sees eye to eye with Sen. R. A. Taft (R. O.), who specializes in wrecking economic bills and who stands to gain many thouasnds of dollars himself by reduced taxes on big incomes.

The few liberals—six on the House side and three (four, if you include Barkley) on the Senate side—don't seem to be very effective against the GOP-tory Democrat deal that has been worked out.

Perhaps they would be more effective if they got more mail from the voters—and maybe the reactionaries would be more hesitant.

WHEN Wendell Willkie's "One World" sold over a million copies in its first month, the publishing world rocked on its foundations. A sale of 10,000 copies used to be considered a respectable figure for any book except an occasional phenomenal "Gone With the Wind."

During the war, the book market has expanded. Some of the expansion has been due to the millions of soldiers who have for the first time picked up the reading habit—and it hasn't all been comics, either! Some of it has been due to gas rationing that has forced people to stay home and find new ways of amusing themselves.

But there is another factor at work today—and even the most conservative publisher is beginning to take it into account. America's greatest democratic force—the labor movement—is bringing the people to the books and books to the people.

Labor's millions today are not content to let their unions satisfy only their economic needs. The war and the growth of the CIO Political Action Committee, shaking old humdrum notions and prejudices, have brought a widespread demand for education, for understanding and for a culture that grows out of the soil of everyday existence.

Book clubs, book stores, libraries in union offices and book reviews in union papers are increasing, while unions are producing their own literature in pamphlets and, even in a few cases, in books.

A new book market is coming into existence—a market for books which for the first time, through guaranteed sales to large groups, can be produced at a cost that will fit the workers' pocketbook. A market which encourages the writing and publishing of books that pictures the world as it is today—books that picture union members and working people as heroes, that tell what fascism is and celebrate the struggle of the people for more and more democracy and more of the good things of life. Funny books, serious books, fiction, non-fiction, poetry, mystery stories, what-have-you—but books written for and about the "common man."

Charges Red Caps Are Pauperized

An increase from the present hourly wage rate of 57c to 85c to adjust the widespread wage inequalities among the lower paid red caps, dining car employes and Pullman laundry workers are among the demands placed by the CIO United Transport Service Employes before 60 major railroad companies in a formal notice asking for opening of national wage negotiations.

Reduction in hours for dining car employes from 240 to 160 a month without reduction in pay was also demanded.

"The maintenance of static wage rates in the face of the tremendous rise in the cost of living during the war," said Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the union, "has virtually pauperized large areas of railroad service employment."

The formal notice, filed with the railroad companies in accordance with provisions of the Railway Labor Act, asked that a date not later than Oct. 30 be set for opening conferences.

It also proposed that the railroads create a national carriers conference committee to handle the proposals on a national basis, instead of by eastern and western committees as formerly.

ILWU Board Hits Biddle

Support for the people of the East Indies resisting the Dutch was voted by the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union meeting in Washington, D. C., this week, and all ILWU locals were instructed to report shipments or suspected shipments of arms and supplies to the Dutch imperialists.

Full ILWU support for the New York longshoremen, striking for conditions won 10 years ago on the west coast, was voted by the Board. These conditions include payment for mealtime work, a halving of the slingload (amount of cargo lifted at one time), and other conditions long standard for CIO dockers.

In another resolution on eastern affairs, the ILWU Board voted to send a commission to look into the trade union situation in both China and Japan, declaring that genuine trade unionism was the only way to build China to a democracy and to take Japan out of the feudal age.

The Board took a swipe at ex-Attorney General Biddle, newly appointed prosecutor in the Nazi war criminal trials, in warning against any possible attempt on his part at "soft handling or sabotage" of the trials. The Board cabled the World Federation of Trade Unions to be on guard against Biddle, reminding them of his known persecution of anti-fascists and coddling of fascists here.

Chicago CIO's New Officers

Re-election of Pres. Albert Towers, Sec. Michael Mann and Treas. Frank Monaghan of the Chicago CIO Council at eleciton meetings held Sept. 20 and 27 was announced this week. Two new vice-presidents were elected —Willoughby Abner of the Auto Workers and Andrew Pitts, Packinghouse Workers — to replace Frank Jordan and Louis Torre.

Maurice Elligott, Clothing Workers, and Don Mourning and Steve Kane, both from Auto, were elected trustees and Charles Lawson, Farm Equipment, was elected sergeant-at-arms.

The six executive board members are Lucius Love, Steel Workers; Sidney Rissman, Clothing; Morris Yanoff, Office Workers—all re-elected—and Philip Keller, George Stevens and John Hamby, new board members, all from the Auto Workers.

State. County Asks 30%

A demand for a 30 per cent general wage increase for all public and government employes under the jurisdiction of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers was adopted unanimously last week at a meeting in New York of the union's National executive board.

Pres. Abram Flaxer said that 347 State, County and Municipal governments as well as a large group of hospitals and private schools will be notified of the union's request for reopening of agreements to include the four-point wage program adopted by the board.

Textile Workers Get $4,000,000 Increase

TWENTY thousand cotton textile workers employed in 20 mills in New Bedford and Fall River, Mass., will get a $4,000,000 wage increase under an agreement made bebetween the CIO Textile Workers Union and the textile manufacturers, announces George Baldanzi, the union's executive vice president.

The agreement with the New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers Assn. and the Fall River Textile Manufacturers Assn. provides the largest hourly wage increase in the history of the cotton textile industry in the United States, Baldanzi said. It covers 10 mills in each city.

Increases include a general across-the-board raise of 8c to be applied on top of the guidepost rates set last February by the Natl. War Labor Board; a 65c minimum and a 7c premium for third shift workers.

The agreement also calls for a week's paid vacation for workers with five or more years' service; vacation pay for returning veterans, the union shop and check-off of union dues.

"Application of the general increase alone will mean about $3,300,000 to the cotton textile workers of New Bedford and Fall River," Baldanzi said. "Other gains, such as the increased minimum and the third shift differential, will bring the total annual wage increase to about $4,000,000 a year."

New contracts extending the New Bedford-Fall River wage pattern to 40,000 workers in 50 additional New England mills where the TWUA has contracts will be made shortly, Baldanzi stated.

The new agreement is the first one the two associations have negotiated jointly the union. It goes into effect Nov. 4.

Oil Union Aids Navy; Presses Wage Fight

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

THE nation's oil workers, though still on strike against the companies, went to work for the U. S. Navy this week following the industry's seizure by President Truman.

The oil companies' arrogant refusal to accept the arbitration proposals of Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach climaxed the breakdown of negotiations extending over a period of two weeks.

Schwellenbach proposed a 15% upward adjustment in wage rate to absorb half of the cut in earnings caused by the cutback in hours from 48 to 40, and arbitration of the remaining 15% asked by the CIO Oil Workers International Union to balance the cut in hours.

As Pres. Truman's seizure order covering 26 companies left large segments of the industry untouched, the union's president, O. A. Knight wired Truman Oct. 10 asking complete rather than incomplete seizure, although the union had not originally asked the government to take over.

Attempted discrimination against active unionists in the Texas Gulf district and elsewhere was thwarted by the union's swift protest to the Navy which ordered the companies to maintain the status in effect before the seizure order.

The union's locals throughout the country responded quickly to the International's request for hearty cooperation with the Navy to reopen the seized plants.

Five companies have signed with the union on the basis of no wage cuts in reconversion and negotiations are proceeding with others. In a message to all locals, Pres. Knight declared that the CIO Oil Workers Union had spearheaded labor's wage fight for an American standard of living. and that victory was in sight.

Thousands of new members are joining the OWIU as a result of the union's militant struggle, reports William B. Taylor, director of the organizing campaign. Both independent and AFL locals in many localities are preparing to swing over to the CIO union, he says.

Senate OK's McKeough

After a brief orgy of CIO baiting, the Senate this week confirmed Pres. Truman's appointment of former Congressman Ray McKeough to the U. S. Maritime Commission. McKeough, who lost a Senatorial race to the Chicago Tribune's Curly Brooks in 1942, was CIO-PAC Regional Director in Illinois through the 1944 campaign.

The opposition to McKeough's appointment came principally from the Republicans, who based themselves on the stand taken by the AFL's lobbyist Lew Hines, echoed by William Green and by two small AFL maritime unions—an opposition that brought sharp criticism from Daniel Tobin, head of the powerful AFL Teamsters.

Film Strike Unfair List

Refusal of major film producers to recognize a legitimate AFL union of set designers, who had voted by an overwhelming majority to affiliate with the organization, has caused the studio strike in Hollywood.

Producers on the unfair list, according to the Los Angeles CIO Council, which is cooperating with the AFL union, include: Warner Bros., Fox, Metro Goldwyn Mayer, Sam Goldwyn Productions, Columbia, Republic, Universal, RKO and Paramount. The only studios on the fair list are PRC and Monogram, the Council stated.

Jot and Daisy Tucker playing with their new baby chicks. When Daisy brings word home from school that Jot's "spring sickness" is due to lack of green vegetables, the family laughs at him.

Sam decides to become a tenant farmer instead of a migratory worker when his uncle dies in the cotton fields.

THE SOUTHERNER

THE SOUTHERNER, Producing Artists, Inc., released through United Artists, director Jean Renoir played with Betty Field, and Zachary Scott.

THEY banned it in Memphis. Perhaps the GI who saw the picture and remarked, "my grandpappy lost his farm that way," hit on the reason. To the southern bourbon, like the colonial ruler, the white man must always be glorified, and a searchlight on the south's poor white is something the Memphis Board of Reviews didn't want. The Southerner couldn't be shown in Memphis.

When Sam Tucker's (Zachary Scott's) uncle dies in a cotton field, Sam resolves to become a tenant farmer instead of a migratory worker. Their new home is a torn down shanty, and Granny berates Sam for bringing his loved ones to such a hole. However, Sam knows that once this land had been fertile. His love of land gives him hope that out of this near-desert of neglect he can once again make fertile and yielding fields. Sam is a good farmer, and his struggle is rewarded. With only the help of Nona, his wife, and a few primitive tools he brings order to the fields.

The first winter finds Jot, his little boy, stricken with the dread disease of the South, pellegra. Jot has "spring sickness." Daisy brings word home from school that it is because he gets no green vegetables. The family laughs at the child. Whoever heard of green vegetables in winter anyway. Granny calmly announces that she lost four from "spring sickness," just like Jot. The village doctor confirms Jot's need for green vegetables. The running sores on his face, and the incessant weeping and pain are due to pellegra. They must give the child milk and vegetables.

The Tucker's try to buy milk from their neighbor. He refuses. He needs the milk for his pigs. Besides Devers (J. Carrol Naish) is jealous. He sees in Sam Tucker competition for land he had always wanted for himself, the chance to improve his own lot. Sam must not only fight nature with his bare hands but jealousy as well. There is no one at any time for Sam to turn to for help. There is no money, no place to get tools, no medical station or care, no flood control, no help at all from organized society. The only contact with the rest of the world is the school. And their efforts to get their children to school despite the cold and lack of clothing are pitiful.

Nora's desperation comes from the tears of her children. She cannot stand their hunger cries, and rushes into the field to weep into the earth. Sam cannot comfort her. He prays to a God that gives him the love of the land, with nothing but his bare hands to force it to yield.

A welcome gift comes from Sam's worker-friend, Tim (Charles Kemper). He had been a farmer himself; had gone to the city, and was now earning $7 a day. He sends them a cow. This gift plus the green vegetables they now grow in their garden saves Jot.

Only when nature unleashes its final act of vengeance against Sam Tucker, and the floods wipe out all that he has done, does Sam resolve to give up the land, and go to the city with Tim.

It is the sight of Nona, Granny and the children, industriously repairing the damage to the house that restores Sam's confidence. He will try again.

A touching scene between the worker and farmer friend takes place at the end between Sam and Tim. They josh each other: "Where would you be without me," says the farmer. "You couldn't eat. We grow the vegetables, the cotton and the corn." "And where would you be without me," Tim retorts, "I make the plows, the machines, your blouse." The two friends know they need each other. But Sam doesn't have the things his friend produces.

Two sharp criticisms have been levelled against the SOUTHERNER. One is that all of Tucker's problems are natural; and two, that here was a play about a southern problem without a hint that more than half of that region's population is Negro. The answer to the first dramatizes the vastness of the problem of the farmer's struggle against nature, and the need of the help of organized society in that fight. Flood control, education, medical care and farm loans would all have helped the Tucker's from starving on their own land. The director, Jean Renoir, believes that the problem of the Negro in the South is so vast as to be another picture.

affiliated organizations named by each organization. The CIO is represented on the general council by Murray, Hillman, and R. J. Thomas. The Canadian Congress of Labour is represented by Pat Conroy.

At the first meeting of the general council, with Reid Robinson, John Brophy and Michael Ross sitting in as substitutes for the CIO in addition to Hillman, Saillant was unanimously elected general secretary. Citrine praised the qualifications and experience of Walter Schevenels, who had been favored by the British delegation for secretary, but announced Schevenels had requested the withdrawal of his candidacy. When he finally announced the British delegation would cast its vote for Saillant, Saillant was elected by a unanimous, rising vote and great enthusiasm.

The general council had also to deal with differences within India, Near and Middle East, and African groups on selection of their executive committee representatives. They voted in favor of El Ariss for the Near and Middle East, and Goodwin for Africa. The Indians finally announced their own agreement for alternating representation between the All-India Trades Union Congress and the Indian Federation of Labor.

To Inspect Germany

The executive committee met later, with James B. Carey substituting for Murray, to elect the chairman and vice-chairmen for the executive bureau. The executive bureau then met to begin its administrative work, naming a commission to visit Germany and deciding to appoint three assistant secretaries to serve under the direction of the general secretary subject to confirmation by the executive committee. These assistant secretaries include Shevenels, charged with negotiating for absorption of the international trade secretariats as trade departments of the WFTU, and two others to be named by the CIO and the Soviet trade unions, respectively.

The committee on representation in international agencies and organizations, including Emil Rieve of the CIO, brought in a resolution pointing out that a world federation now exists "which speaks with authority on behalf of the working people of the whole world."

This resolution protested denial of world labor representation at the San Francisco international conference and directed the executive committee to take all necessary steps to assure participation on the social and economic council in an advisory capacity under the charter provision for consultation with non-governmental organizations; and to work for representation in the general assembly in a consultative capacity, and for full representation, with a right to vote, on the social and economic council.

The resolution also urged affiliated organizations to secure labor representation in delegations of their governments to the United Nations organization.

Backing Hillman's arguments for world labor representation in the peace settlements and reconstruction and administration of Germany and Japan, a resolution called further for:

1. Appointment of labor commissions to visit Japan and all occupied zones of Germany to investigate economic and social conditions, liquidation of Fascism and the possibility for reconstruction of free, democratic trade unions.

2. Representation for the WFTU in an advisory capacity on the Allied Control Commission for Germany and the occupation authority for Japan.

3. Opportunity for the WFTU "fully and effectively to express its views concerning peace treaties now under discussion."

4. Representation for the WFTU on all other international agencies and commissions dealing with problems of peace and reconstruction.

Aid to Veterans

The same committee introduced a resolution dealing with reports of national organizations. This urged all national centers to call on their governments for full provision for the needs of demobilized servicemen including opportunity for employment, money grants for normal livelihood until employment is found, special training and educational opportunities. It called for special measures to combat the danger of mass unemployment and raise living standards. The resolution also emphasized the promotion of cultural and educational work among union members as one of their most important tasks.

Finally the resolution called on all union movements to work for following a basic charter of union rights and immediate demands.

1. Freedom of working people everywhere to organize in unions and exercise freely the right of collective bargaining and all other normal union activities.

2. Freedom of working people to establish cooperatives and other associations for mutual aid.

3. Freedom of speech and assembly, publication and press, and of religious and political association.

4. Freedom from every form of exploitation and social or economic discrimination based on race, creed, color or sex; equal pay for equal work.

5. Freedom of opportunity and equality for all in educational and vocational training.

6. Full employment at all times at adequate rates of pay for all people, with regular paid holidays each year as a right.

7. Adequate protection in all circumstances of life where social and economic security of every citizen is required to be guaranteed.

Hit Franco Spain

Most other resolutions were reported by the standing orders committee, whose chairman was Albert Fitzgerald of CIO.

A resolution on Spain urged all democratic governments to consider breaking off all relationships with the Franco government and called for WFTU support of the Spanish people in every way possible in their fight for complete liberation. It asked the executive committee to examine the claim of the Spanish republican government in Mexico for recognition and to make representations to Franco for immediate release of Alvarez and Zapirain.

Speaking at a big anti-Franco mass meeting in Paris addressed by world labor leaders, Carey pledged CIO support to the Spanish people's struggle against fascism, saying "American labor will do everything within its power to help restore democracy in Spain and to defend the democratic rights of all peoples."

A separate resolution condemned the fascist regime in Argentina and asked all democratic governments to sever relations. It also urged all WFTU organizations to use all means at their disposition to aid the Argentine people to recover their sovereignty and liberties.

A strong resolution on the right of colonial peoples for self-determination and national independence, called particular attention to recent events in Indo-China, Indonesia and the Far East as "in conflict with the expressed principles of the United Nations." It asked the executive committee to consider appointing a commission to investigate the situation in Greece with a view to securing for Greek workers the right to organize unions of their own free choice and to make immediate representations to the United Nations on behalf of the right of common people everywhere to self-determination and national independence.

Blast Anti-Semitism

Another resolution denounced anti-Semitic propaganda and discrimination against colored races in the U. S., Latin America, colonial countries and elsewhere. It also denounced discriminations of some workers' movements in respect to union membership, conditions and leadership. It placed the WFTU on record "to fight indefatigably, in national and international fields, against any discrimination of race, color or social situation without or within the workers' movement."

Other resolutions urged aid for industrialization of economically backward countries; urged effective measures in various countries to "destroy control now exercised by international monopolies and trusts at the expense of the common people"; suggested the appointment of a commission to investigate economic and political conditions of colonial and semi-colonial countries and to make representations to governments concerned; supported the right of civil servants to organize into unions of their own choice and affiliate with national centers; expressed admiration of the world's people for the achievements of Franklin D. Roosevelt and urged United Nations' leaders to follow his objectives for continued world unity of the United Nations so the common people "shall enjoy their rightful heritage of freedom, peace and prosperity."

A proposal for an Asiatic trades union conference was referred to the executive committee.

The conference ended Monday noon after a closing speech by Jouhaux, singing of the Internationale and the Marseillaise, and three cheers for the WFTU.

gives every Studebaker extra value

MOST of us have some special, personal reasons for our preferences in motor cars. Yet there's nothing that has a greater bearing on any car's year 'round satisfaction than the quality of its materials and workmanship.

Into every Studebaker goes the accumulated skill of generations of home-loving, home-owning craftsmen—fathers and sons working together with the common purpose of producing cars worthy of the finest reputation in the automotive industry for surviving soundness.

Many have had the good fortune to enjoy Studebaker operating economy through the war years. Now, at last, the time is beginning when the smart styling, the brilliant engineering, the dependable long life and solid value of a new Studebaker can be made available to more and more of America's forward-looking families.

GE, Westinghouse Face Cartel Trial

CHARGES of conspiring with German, British and Swiss manufacturers to fix prices and allocate trade areas for electrical goods were filed against General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. this week by the U. S. Dept. of Justice.

GE and Westinghouse were named with two subsidiaries and an association in charges of violation of the Sherman anti-trust act that allege that since 1931 the five defendants "have been continuously and are now engaged in" an unlawful combination to restrain trade with foreign nations in electrical equipment.

The three other companies are Intl. General Electric, Westinghouse Electric Intl. Co., and the Electrical Apparatus Export Assn., formed by IGE and WEI and jointly controlled by them.

It is charged by the government that the companies agreed to fix prices and allocate export sales on a quota basis, with IGE getting 60% and WEI 40%.

Assistant Atty. Gen. Wendell Berge, in charge of the anti-trust division, said the case is a significant one in the Justice Dept.'s "drive against American participation in foreign cartels."

He said that the conspirators agreed to exchange information on prospective orders from American oil, mining and automobile companies, banks and chemical companies, and "the effect has been that American companies buying electrical equipment in the U. S. for use outside the U. S. and Canada have not been able to deal in a free market but have had to purchase on terms secretly agreed upon by GE and Westinghouse."

Give Ex-GIs Real Chance To Study

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

AS our boys come back to civilian life in increasing numbers a thorough overhauling of the GI Bill of Rights, and especially of its educational provisions, has become urgent.

Last July, just before Congress recessed, poll-taxer Rankin, chairman of the House Committee on World War Veterans, rushed his own amendments to the GI Bill of Rights through the House. Less than 100 members were present at the time and only a handful knew what they were voting on.

Fortunately the Senate refused to be stampeded. The veterans sub-committee of the Senate Finance Committee under Senator Johnson of Colorado, postponed consideration until fall. Now they have begun hearings.

This is our chance to fight for liberal educational provisions which will result in millions of young men and women taking educational training which will benefit them and the nation.

So far the number of veterans applying for educational benefits has been small. Why?

As the law now stands only men under 25 are automatically entitled to four years of educational assistance. Older men qualify for one-year refresher courses, but to be entitled to training beyond that they must show their education has been interrupted. We'd like to see the age limit stricken out of the GI Bill so that all veterans would be entitled to four years of education if they want it.

Another problem is the inadequacy of the subsistence allowances. Fifty dollars a month is not enough for a student to live on with present prices. Rankin's bill would raise it to $60. CIO is asking that it be at least $90.

And what if you have dependents? The present scale of $75 for a student veteran with dependents bars men with small children from school training. No one dependent on his own resources could support a wife and baby on $75 a month while he studied. Mr. Rankin proposes $85 a month. CIO is asking that $25 for each dependent up to a total of three be added to the subsistence allowance for single students.

One thing that bothers servicemen when they inquire about educational opportunities is the fact that the GI Bill provides that any benefits you apply for under its provisions shall be deducted from any future bonus. That provision should be removed in the interest of encouraging as many boys as possible to go back to school.

Then there's the problem of suitable courses, especially for young veterans. Boys who didn't finish high school, or even grammar school, don't want to go back into regular public school classes. And they shouldn't be expected to. It's not a wise arrangement either for the veterans or the school children. Classes should be set up to meet their special needs.

Unfortunately the planning and establishment of such courses is an expensive procedure so most city school boards are not able to attempt it. With some federal funds to assist, however, they could develop special veterans' classes. There's nothing to stop Congress from adding a provision authorizing such grants to the GI Bill of Rights.

These are the major changes needed in the educational features of the bill. Let your Senators hear from you about them. Ask them to discuss them with Senate Finance Commtitee members.

If our boys go right to work when they get back it's going to be hard to persuade them to stop and get their education. Let's make the educational provisions of the GI Bill so attractive that they'll start right back to school.

Housing Show

The Federal Public Housing Authority later this year will stage in Washington, D. C., a demonstration of post-war uses for temporary war housing as it becomes surplus to war and demobilization needs, FPHA Commissioner Philip M. Klutznick announced this week.

100,000 Furriers Getting X-Rayed

A MASS X-raying project covering 100,000 CIO fur workers and their families got under way this week in New York as the workers began a march before X-ray machines in the auditorium of the CIO Furriers' Joint Council. The machines being used in the voluntary tuberculosis detection program can take 200 pictures an hour.

The project, believed to be the largest X-raying program in industry ever attempted in the United States, is the cooperative effort of union groups affiliated with the CIO Intl. Fur & Leather Workers; the N. Y. Tuberculosis & Health Assn.; the City Health Dept., and the Lower West Side Dist. Health Committee of Neighborhood Health Development.

The X-ray project is a phase of the New York unions' long range general health and welfare program.

The Tuberculosis Assn. will make available trained physicians to read the X-rays. An analysis of each film will be mailed to the worker. The unions will follow up cases that require medical treatment and will endeavor to arrange hospitalization or other treatment indicated by the diagnosis.

Only the individual and the participating physicians will know the results of the X-ray films, Irving Potash, manager of the Fur Union's Joint Council, stated. Several months of educational work preceded the plan. The unions mailed posters to all shops, distributed handbills among workers, enclosed cards in union dues books, made special mailings, and included information in every union meeting notice.

Wilmington

Sen. Harley M. Kilgore from West Virginia, is scheduled this week to open the Wilmington, Del., Workers' Education & Recreation Committee's program for 1945-46 at a banquet in his honor. This is the third season for the joint labor forum in Wilmington which is sponsored by a committee composed of representatives of the CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and YWCA.

A full recreation program for union members has been planned in cooperation with the YWCA. Michael Ross, CIO director of International Affairs, will speak on World Labor Today at a future forum.

Teaching Democracy

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

DEMOCRACY is a fine word. It means many fine things which need to be brought down to the level of daily life instead of being set aside merely as a reservoir from which to draw flowery oratory for patriotic speeches.

In practice, it means that when a lady is riding on a street car or bus she does not frown and edge away if a Negro happens to take a seat beside her. It means that a man does not make nasty cracks about a Jewish associate, or complain because foreigners are moving into the apartment building where he lives, or refuse to vote for a good candidate because of his religion.

Such prejudices are a source of infection which poison democracy but they are hard to get at because they are so deep-rooted. "The Story of the Springfield Plan" tells of the efforts of one community to reach the roots of this infection and treat it.

The Springfield plan is simple and down-to-earth. Backers of the plan make no pretenses of saving the country from the evils of racial and other group prejudices at one stroke. They say there is nothing new in their plan, that it is as "old as good teaching anywhere." Democracy, they remind us, is an ancient institution. Most Americans profess to believe in its principles, but many slip up seriously in practicing it.

This plan for teaching democracy by practicing it, which has since gained nation-wide notice, was launched in Sprnigfield, Mass., in 1939 by a group of educators and other liberal community leaders headed by Dr. John Granrud, the city's superintendent of schools.

The committee of teachers, principals and supervisors whom Dr. Granrud named to plan out an organized program included liberals and conservatives, Jews, Catholics and Protestants, so that all types of thought were represented to assure the widest support possible for the plan.

The tentative objectives for the proposed plan as drawn up by the committee made these points:

Pupils must be taught an understanding of the various groups in the community, including their historical background and their contribution to America.

They must be made to understand that America has not already achieved a perfect society, as they have too often been led to believe. Weaknesses in the democratic process must be pointed out and ways of eliminatnig them discussed realistically.

Pupils should be taught to think clearly and to understand the forces playing upon them if they are to be kept from falling prey to emotional bias.

Since most prejudices develop outside the school, a plan for education for democracy must include the adult community.

PROGRAM OF ACTION

These were the concrete proposals which made the basis for the program of action subsequently introduced into the school system and into the community through adult education projects.

If the plan was to succeed, it was necessary to have teachers who were earnestly in sympathy with its aims, so selection of the teachers also became an important part of the program.

The Springfield schools have a basic single standard salary schedule which permits no racial discrimination. Negro as well as white teachers instruct classes of all white children or mixed classes. Freedom from pressure in appointment of teachers is also protected. Immediate relatives of school officials having anything to do with appointments are not eligible as teachers.

Success of the Springfield plan lies in such simple, fundamental things as recognition of the fact that youngsters take great pride in having a part in management of school affairs, and that they learn how to behave democratically through cooperative undertakings on which they work together.

"The Story of the Springfield Plan" gives detailed descriptions of some of the methods used to bring the principles of democracy down to the level of everyday living which should be invaluable guides to other communities aware of the dangers of racial, religious, political and economic discrimination.

STAINLESS STEEL EQUIPMENT FILLS HOSPITAL NEEDS

Stainless steel equipment answers many hospital problems, for hospital equipment has to be strong, easily cleaned, and highly serviceable. Stainless steel resists corrosion from constant cleaning, disinfectants, sterilization with hot steam. It will not rust, chip, or peel with wear. It retains its smooth polished surface which repels dust and dirt.

Cracking the Quip

By ARTHUR WHITE

CREAM OF WIT . . . While picketing the apartment of Senator Theodore Bilbo, Purple Heart-vet Ed Bykowski made life a bit unpleasant for the "gentleman" from Mississippi. Bilbo didn't like being picketed one bit, so when he found Bykowski on hand at nine A.M., the Senator began leaving the house earlier.

"When I missed seeing him one morning," Bykowski told a reporter, "I realized what he was trying to do, so I began getting there earlier, too. By the time I had to quit my vigil, Bilbo was leaving at 7:15, but I was always on hand to stare him in the eye."

The talk among progressive-minded businessmen, is for paying a "guaranteed annual wage" once industry gets into high gear in production of peacetime goods. Recognizing that a definite yearly income could mean a definite amount spent by the wage-earner on all sorts of items turned out in the nation's factories, these business execs figure that pay-guarantees will certify prosperity.

But the feeling is hardly unanimous among industrialists, and as a Labor Dept. official put it, the other day:

"About the only thing some businessmen are willing to offer their employes, is a guaranteed annual lay-off."

WASHINGTON GUIDE

Answering Ball, Hatch

Strong attempts are being made in Congress to have early hearings held on the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill (S 1171), which was assigned to the Senate Labor Committee (Sen. Murray, D., Mont., chairman).

The plan is to use newspaper-provoked anti-union propaganda as a smokescreen for early passage of the bill. If all of it cannot be passed its sponsors will be satisfied with parts, particularly those dealing with compulsory arbitration.

The CIO Legal Dept. has prepared an exhaustive analysis of what the BBH bill would do to collective bargaining, which can be obtained by writing to the CIO national office.

The legal analysis should be studied for ammunition in refuting the bill point by point.

Here are some additional political points that can be made in writing your Senators and Congressmen:

1. The reason for the unrest and anxiety in workers' minds that the newspapers scream about is a simple one—workers and their families are worrying about the paycheck. For most of them, it's been cut 30%—or such a cut is looming.

Answer: CIO's case for a 30% increase in basic wage rates to make up the cut should be supported.

2. Workers and their families are worried about layoffs and how they'll eat when the job is gone.

Answer: pass the Kilgore-Forand bill providing unemployment benefits of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks.

3. Workers and their families living on substandard wages are unable to live decently.

Answer: pass the 65c-75c minimum wage amendment to the wage hour act now pending in the Senate Labor Committee.

4. Workers and their families are worried about a depression that will repeat and magnify 100 fold the misery of the Hoover 30's.

Answer: pass the original jobs-for-all bill (S 380), recently mangled in the Senate and now pending in the House Committee on Executive Expenditures.

5. Workers and their families are worried about taxes—how they're going to pay them out of reduced incomes.

Answer: reject the Ways and Means Committee bill (HR 4309) now before Congress and pass a bill such as the one recommended by the CIO and other groups.

These are the answers to the labor unrest the newspapers worry about. A bill such as the Ball-Hatch proposal answers nothing.

And while you're telling your Congressman these basic facts, remind him that no bill has ever absolutely prevented strikes.

CIO's Week In Congress

Next time someone says to you why doesn't the CIO do something about those jerks in Congress, just recite this list of what CIO did in a typical week—in this case, Oct. 8 to 15:

Monday: brought delegations in from Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Had them meet their Congressmen, collectively and individually. Testified on 65-75c minimum wage amendment. Filed protest against secret tax bill.

Tuesday: brought large delegation from Indiana, which saw Congressmen on jobs-for-all, unemployment compensation, 65-75c wage, etc. Testified on 65-75c wage amendment.

Wednesday: brought delegation from all New England states, same as above. Issued joint tax program with 14 other liberal organizations.

Thursday: brought delegations from Michigan and West Virginia. Testified on 65-75c minimum wage, also on liberalizing GI Bill to give veterans better break, keep them out of loan sharks' hands.

Friday: brought large delegation from Southern states, including Rankin's and Bilbo's preserves. Testified on 65-75c wage floor. Got set for more testimony next week.

Covering Up Dirty Worker

The House Ways and Means Committee held hearings on the tax bill just voted in the House. It refused to hear testimony and refused to allow the bill to be amended from the floor during a 4-hour "debate" this week.

In other words, the Committee rammed its bill down the throat of the House under a gag rule that completely shuts off debate or the possibility of anyone changing the bill.

Now the bill goes to the Senate Finance Committee, which is headed by Sen. George (D. Ga). The CIO has asked for open hearings in this committee, just as it did in the House.

Taxes touch everybody's pocketbook and deeply affect the whole economic situation of the country. The tax bill worked out by a reactionary GOP-reactionary Democrat conspiracy, gives big plums to the rich and the corporations, nothing for the wage workers.

Its time this dirty work was dragged out into the open where the voters can get a look at it. Wire Sen. George and your own two Senators; demand open hearings on HR 4309 in the Senate Finance Committee; demand a hearing for a new, progressive tax bill; to be offered; demand rejection of HR 4309.

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	Extends present state benefits to 26 weeks; includes seamen, U. S. workers; turns USES back to states.	Passed by Senate; pigeonholed by House Ways and Means; Discharge Petition coming up.	Wire Congressman to work to rescind Ways and Means action; support Discharge Petition on Forand bill.
Jobs-for-all (S 380)	States government responsibility for full employment.	Passed by Senate, now waiting House action. 115 Representatives supporting original bill as written.	Urge Congressman to support Kilgore-Patman bill as originally presented to Senate.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present minimum from 40c to 65-75c; widens coverage.	In Senate Labor Sub-Committee; supported by Sens. Tunnell, Aiken and others, fought by Sen. Ellender (D. La.).	Urge Senators to support bill as written; urge early action in House.
Taxes (HR 4309)	Bill to be voted by House this week; big cuts for rich, cuts in excess profits tax.	After House vote to Senate Finance Committee.	Urge support of CIO tax plan. Watch for new bill to be offered.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives us chance to end rule of Bilbos, Rankins; helps north as well as south.	HR 7 reported out by Senate Judiciary; also a constitutional amendment which would stall action for years.	Wire Senators to support HR 7, reject amendment as stall.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; ends free collective bargaining.	Hearings scheduled to start soon; press drive now being whipped up daily.	Keep telling Congress to stay away from it. Concentrate now on Senators.

SCIENCE: Behind the sensation-mongering headlines on the atomic bomb lies a serious struggle in Congress over the future not only of nuclear research but also of all science in this country.

The monopoly interests want the government to exercise little or no control and to have no rights in scientific research.

Liberal forces are arguing for the public interest in science. So are many scientists. Incidentally, scientists have been trying to debunk the idea that the U. S. can rule the world because we have the "secret" of the atomic bomb. Fact is, the "secret" doesn't exist. All we have is the know-how, which other nations are acquiring rapidly.

NOTE: CIO was first to point this out in a radio program of Sept. 9, when we brought Dr. Harlow Shapley to the microphone to say that smugness about atomic "secrets" was dangerous.

DEATH OF NAZISM depends not only on catching, punishing Nazi war criminals (not one of which has been punished yet, six months after V-E Day), but also on economic disarmament of German industry.

So far, very little has been done to make it difficult for German aggression to rearm. Some highly placed people still think of Germany as a "buffer" against the menace to the east. One such lost command of an army last week.

In Congress, compliments should go to Senator Kilgore and his committee for their work exposing German industrialists backing Hitler, preparing for war, not only after 1918 but also now in 1945.

U. S. WORKERS will get protection against wage cuts due to cuts in hours under a bill (HR 4308) introduced by Rep. Hugh DeLacy (D., Wash.), who rates as one of Congress' outstanding progressives. The bill provides for 48 hours pay for 40 hours.

PAY CHECKS AREN'T PERSONAL

Paychecks aren't personal, CIO President Murray warned the nation last Monday, in the first of four programs, over American Broadcasting Co., stations. Excerpts from his talk, on what decent wages mean to all America, follow.

By PHILIP MURRAY

Leading labor's fight for adequate take-home pay, CIO Pres. Philip Murray will broadcast again to the nation Monday, Oct. 29, over the ABC Network. Supporting him on the program, from 10 to 10:15 p. m. EST, will be rank and file workers who are members of the CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers and UE Unions.

The CIO urges all members to organize listening groups for this broadcast and for two others in which President Murray will participate in—at 10 to 10:15 p. m. EST Nov. 12 and Nov. 26. Comments on the programs should be sent to CIO, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

LABOR, in putting forth its program, does so only with the national welfare in mind. What helps Labor, helps you.

We are asking only for a restoration of the shrinking national pay envelope—not labor's pay envelope, but the national pay envelope—not only the income of the worker—but also of the farmer, the owner of the small store, the clerk and professional—all of us.

Let me review briefly what has happened to the national pay envelope since the end of the war.

There have been four major, whopping-big cuts in wages and salaries that, according to the U. S. Commerce Dept., have taken 20 billion dollars out of the national pay envelope.

First: The cut in hours of work—generally from 48 to 40 hours a week—with the elimination of overtime. The average manufacturing worker who earned $46.35 in June, is now making only $35.60—a cut of $10.75 a week.

Second: Unemployment. One month after V-J Day 2,000,000 men and women were laid off entirely, and the number is mounting daily. Mr. Snyder, Director of Reconversion, estimates that there will be 8,000,000 unemployed by next spring.

Third: Downgrading. The third big cut in the nation's pay envelope came when—as production was cut down—wage-earners and salaried employes were downgraded from high-paying to lower-paying jobs.

Fourth: The last big cut in the nation's pay envelope is a hidden one. During the war, according to the War Production Board, Labor's productivity rose about 25 per cent over all. That is to say, what before the war took five men or women to make, now requires only four men or women. This means fewer people drawing wages and salaries.

Furthermore, we must not forget that prices are still at wartime peaks. During the war, while the cost of living rose 45 per cent, it was only because of wages and salaries earned from overtime payments that many American homes were able to avoid going into debt.

During the war, those families that weren't able to bridge the gap between earnings and prices were forced to cash in their war bonds, took in boarders, had more than one member of the family working, or simply went into debt. Now that overtime is vanishing, now that wage-earners and salaried employes are being downgraded to lower-paying jobs, now that the army of the unemployed is growing by millions—there is simply no way left for American families to stay out of the red.

This is what we say must be done, and done fast:

Because wage and salary rates have not kept pace with the rising productivity, rising profits, and higher living costs. . . .

Because savings cannot be relied on to provide the power to buy. . . .

Because unemployment compensation is too small to do more than pay for bread and rent. . . .

Because it now costs $1.45 to buy the food, clothing and shelter that could be bought for $1 in January, 1941. . . .

For these reasons and many others it is necessary for our country's sake that there should be a substantial increase in wages and salaries now.

If we are to avoid the terrible cycle of depression and crisis, with its attendant starvation and mass unemployment, the nation's purchasing power must be maintained. And the only way to maintain it is by immediate and substantial increases in salaries and wages.

Nothing short of substantial increases now will revive the nation's shrinking purchasing power.

This is not inflationary. Prices need not go up. The money to increase the nation's pay envelope is available . . . not only available, but for the most part simply lying idle in the coffers of industry. And more. Corporation profits for next year are forecast, by business sources, at twice their level in prewar years.

First of all, industry can grant a 10 per cent increase without raising its costs at all. The money saved with the elimination of overtime is enough to raise basic wage and salary rates approximately 10 per cent.

A 10 per cent increase would not even begin to touch the huge reservoir of profits accumulated during the war. And more important it would not get into the stream of purchasing power the increased profits that corporations are due to make next year.

Corporate profits before taxes rose almost four times during the war, to over 17 billion dollars in 1944. After taxes corporate profits still doubled. How much has business kept of these war profits?

The answer is supplied by the "Life Insurance Companies in America." They report that financial assets at the disposal of business, both incorporated and unincorporated, totaled 66 billion dollars at the end of 1944, compared with 17.5 billion dollars at the beginning of the war. This is an increase of 277 per cent since 1939.

But more. Congress is substantially reducing the excess profits tax law. This means that industry next year will be able to keep as profits almost two billion dollars that otherwise would have been paid in taxes.

But still more. Next year corporate profits are going to be more than twice as big as they were before the war. I do not ask you to take my word for it alone. Here is what a hard-headed business journel says. BUSINESS WEEK, reports in its September first issue:

"Corporate profits stand to be surprisingly good in 1946. The total isn't likely to fall far short of $8,000,000 after Federal taxes and it might quite conceivably top 1944's 10 billion dollars by a slight margin."

Again on October 6 BUSINESS WEEK reports:

"If the excess profits tax is repealed as expected, corporations would take home more than 11 billion dollars (in 1946)."

Bear in mind this forecast of huge profits after taxes for next year was made since V-J Day. And it compares with prewar profits of less than $4,000,000,000.

These are the basic facts of economic life in America today. They show that small increases will not do the job of maintaining purchasing power.

They show, on the one hand, a vast fund of accumulated profits and future corporate earnings, and, on the other hand, a sharp, pressing, and immediate need for substantial wage-and-salary increases. A need that, not met promptly and fully, will mean just one thing: That your country and mine has been plunged back down the inexorable path of depression, misery, mass unemployment and starvation, back to the days of bankruptcy and evictions and sickness and hungry kids and unpaid doctor's bills.

'NO PRICE BOOSTS, NO RADIOS'—INDUSTRY WINS

Leading the strike, according to Clifford McAvoy, Washington legislative representative for the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, were radio parts manufacturers.

McAvoy said that the manufacturers blackjacked the Office of Price Administration into granting price increases ranging from 9½ to 26 percent before they would produce parts.

The UE quoted the Radio & Television Weekly as saying that more than 60 of the major radio parts manufacturers in the East had refused to produce without price boosts.

"The result," said the trade publication frankly, "has been a virtual halt in the production of radio receivers."

The UE charged that there is every indication that the parts manufacturers are merely leading the fight of the entire industry for higher prices, and pointed out that the Radio Manufacturers Assn. has admitted that the industry "could have reconverted overnight and radios would be on store shelves today."

The "pitiful weakness" of OPA in bowing to manufacturers' demands was sharply criticized by McAvoy, who pointed out that the price increase was granted without cost figures being submitted. An OPA press release substantiated this.

"Despite repeated requests by the OPA for the submission of cost data for use in computing the increase factors for radio parts," an OPA release stated, "and despite assurances of representatives of the industry that such cost data would be supplied, cost data were not submitted to OPA as promised."

Hit Plan to Up Butter Prices

Administration announcement of the end of butter subsidies which would boost the price of this basic food five to six cents a pound Nov. 8 were sharply criticized this week by the CIO Women's Auxiliaries.

In a telegram to War Mobilization and Reconversion Director Snyder, Sec.-Treas. Eleanor Fowler of the Auxiliaries urged reconsideration of the decision to cancel the subsidies.

South Gives Congress An Earful, Too

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

ANOTHER one of those CIO delegations that are learning to take their voting rights seriously arrived in Washington last week to see what their Congressmen are up to. The latest group to make life on the "Hill" different was from the South.

The delegation was made up of nearly a hundred men and women, Negroes and whites from shipyard, textile, tobacco, steel and other industries. Eight states were represented—Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia.

The group had a preliminary meeting with CIO legislative representatives to get organized. Paul Christopher, CIO regional director from Tennessee presided.

Then the main business started, as the Southern Congressmen who were invited to meet with the delegation began arriving in the caucus room. Quite a few came. More stayed away.

One after another CIO men and women arose from the floor to tell stories of the hardships Southern workers are suffering because of low wages, bad housing, closing down of war plants and shifting of jobs.

Pete Hatcher of Milledgeville, Ga., told of the havoc caused by lay-offs at the big Naval Ordnance plant in his town, with a drop in employment from 2,000 to around 200 planned. Mrs. Ruby Collins, mother of five children, said that low wages in Georgia were driving the young people out of the state. Clyde Ganaway of Mobile, Ala., reported that employment in the shipyards there had been cut from 23,000 to about 4,000.

Senator McKellar of Tennessee was there. He said he always voted according to his convictions, and that his record spoke for itself. Representative Ramspeck of Georgia also talked.

Other U. S. Representatives from Georgia present were Tarver, Camp, Brown and Pace. There were Morrison from Louisiana; Patrick, Manasco, Grant, Andrews and Hobbs from Alabama; Gary and Flannagan from Virginia; Kefauver, Priest, Davis and Murray from Tennessee; Ervin and Weaver from North Carolina, and Richards, South Carolina.

NEWS ITEM: Rep. Marion T. Bennett (R. Mo.) said this week that he wants more comfortable seats in Congress. "It is about time," he told his colleagues, "that these hard benches were declared surplus and turned over to some prison or museum specializing in primitive instruments of torture and some decent seats were provided. If this could be done, maybe members would stay in their seats and the decorum of the House would improve."

By C. W. FOWLER

LED by Philip Murray, CIO's parade of witnesses on the 65-75c wage floor bill this week blasted plans for a "compromise" reported brewing on the bill and demanded its early passage as a help in staving off another economic crash.

Witnesses were President Murray, whose statement was read by USA-CIO Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Harry Bridges, of the Longshoremen & Warehousemen, Harold Lane of the Food, Tobacco Workers, Solomon Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers, and Howard McKenzie of the Natl. Maritime Union.

Murray was especially firm on the rumored "compromise," which is said to involve a deal to settle for 55c an hour, saying it was "no compromise at all—merely a retreat. As the members of Congress well know, the WLB some months ago set 55c as the minimum wage. To offer this accepted—and thoroughly inadequate—wage minimum as a compromise is to make a mockery of progress on the whole issue.

"We submit that the minimum needs in this case are modest enough," McDonald continued for President Murray, "at a mere 65c an hour for a 40 hour week so that no compromise is admissable."

Murray's statement devoted equal emphasis to the issue of coverage, as did Harold Lane for the Food and Tobacco Workers, both pointing out that food processing workers, tobacco workers and the like were not "farm labor" at all, but were workers in highly industrialized processes.

Bridges' testimony somewhat startled the Senators—particularly Ellender of Louisiana, who has been leading the fight against the bill—when he urged a law to abolish overtime work as "extra exploitation." Despite overtime pay, Bridges said, workers on overtime do not get anything like the value of the extra work and in fact suffer from it. The answer to overtime, he said, is a big enough wage increase to enable workers to live decently without having to break their backs working extra hours.

At this point Sen. Ellender became solicitous for the future of unions. Passing the minimum wage bill, he said, would deprive unions of their function—which is collective bargaining for their members. It means using a law instead of the "strength of the unions"—which is terrible, he thought.

"Collective bargaining depends on the strength and discipline of the unions and their members," Bridges replied. "Federal law is needed to help those who haven't been able to organize—and thus in turn helps union members to keep their jobs and their earnings."

Over on the House side McDonald was asked the same question by Rep. Ramspeck (D. Ga.), who said he feared that unions "would go out of business" if the law were passed.

"We'll take our chance on that," McDonald replied. "Unions exist to help their members and all workers. They don't exist just for the sake of existing. And we want this law to help the people who don't have unions."

Barkin's testimony — which Ramspeck, incidentally, was reluctant to hear, on the ground that only one witness was scheduled from the national CIO—was mainly devoted to teaching the committee members some of the elementary economic facts of life in America today. Answering questions on the costs to industry of the 65—75c minimum, Barkin showed that the Textile Workers Union a week ago had been able to win a 65c minimum for northern workers without difficulty on the score of costs.

"Prices are not set by cost," he said, "they are set to secure the greatest profit. Many of them now provide sufficient margin to absorb both the proposed wage adjustments and greater ones.

"Labor cost is so insignificant in many industries, amounting to less than 10% of the value of the product, that it can be absorbed without affecting material cost."

In addition, technological progress has been so great that U. S. industry can absorb relatively higher labor costs in this country and export profitably in competition with low wage countries.

JOBS-FOR-ALL BILL IN RUGGED FIGHT

WARNING that "the American people will have no patience with equivocations written into" the jobs-for-all bill, CIO Pres. Philip Muray this week called for the passage of the measure as reported by a subcommittee to the full Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

The bill, passed with weakening amendments by the Senate, is now before the House Expenditures Committee, where Nathan E. Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, this week appeared for Murray to urge passage of the measure minus hamstringing provisions.

Chairman Monasco (D. Ala.) and Reps. Hoffman (R. Mich.) and Rich (R. .Pa.), by their caustic and irrelevant questioning of Cowan, showed little sympathy for the bill.

Rep. Bender (R. Ohio) engaged in a heated exchange with Hoffman, who tried to establish a new precedent by preventing Cowan from testifying for Murray, because the latter was unable to be present. At the moment he was conferring with President Truman at the White House. Rep. Cochran (D .Mo.) also showed he had little time for Hoffman's tactics.

Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) set Rep. Rich down a peg when the latter questioned that 120 House members had joined the Texan in sponsoring the bill by remarking: "Where have you been?"

The trio's tactics lent weight to Murray's warning:

"Reactionary elements in Congress are becoming bolder by the day, war agencies are being dismantled without regard for the need for an orderly transition from war to peace, and a nation-wide campaign is under way to pit one group of Americans against another—and make organized labor the scapegoat.

Murray then called on the committee to make good the campaign pledges of both parties and to join with Representatives who have pledged themselves to vote for the Murray-Patman bill.

President Murray underscored the urgency of passing the bill by stating that since Aug. 22 when he appeared before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on behalf of the bill, the millions of unemployed "have grown, and it has been predicted by the Director of Mobilization and Reconversion that the number will reach eight million this winter and remain at that level throughout 1946. Think what that will mean in the lives of American men, women, and children.

He asked that the bill:

1. Include the provision contained in the original bill that: "All Americans able to work and seeking work have the right to useful, remunerative, regular, full-time employment, and it is the policy of the U. S t.o assure the existence at all times of sufficient employment opportunities to enable all Americans . . . freely to exercise that right."

2. Refrain from linking taxation to the measure because the original bill places sufficient emphasis upon making up a deficiency of employment after free enterprise has failed.

3. Include the original requirement that "the joint committee on the national budget prepare and report a joint resolution setting forth for the ensuing fiscal year its summary recommendation concerning the national budget."

CIO Board Meets Nov. 1

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week announced that the CIO Executive Board will meet at CIO Hdq. in Washington, D. C., Thursday, November 1.

Major point on the agenda will be a comprehensive discussion of the wage situation.

Board members who attended the Paris World Trade Union meeting and who are visiting the Soviet Union are expected to return in time for the meeting.

CIO TAX PLAN SHELVED AS CORPORATIONS GET BREAKS

By FRED d'AVILA

IGNORING CIO requests for substantial tax cuts for individuals, for aid to small business, and for retention of the excess profits tax for corporations, the Senate Finance Committee this week recommended only 3 percent reduction in individual taxes, complete repeal of the excess profits tax and retention of excise (sales) taxes.

Of an estimated $4,780,000,000 in tax cuts, corporations would benefit to the tune of $2,555,000,000.

The House previously had voted to reduce the excess profits tax to 60 per cent, with 72 per cent of the tax reductions going to some 850 corporations with $1,000,000 or more net income each, according to the CIO. Under the Senate Committee bill, the corporations' tax savings would be more than doubled.

The House bill is just as bad as the Senate Committee's recommendation, in that it reduces corporate direct income taxes sufficiently so that the total saving with only 60 per cent reduction in the excess profits tax adds up to about the same as recommended by the Senate group.

Observers predicted that in the pending Senate-House conference over the bill, sharp pressure will be put on to keep both the direct corporate tax reductions and the compete repeal of the excess profits tax.

The Senate group not only ignored a CIO request for reduction of wartime excise taxes on items such as electric bulbs, movie tickets and inexpensive toilet items, but knocked out a House provision which called for reduction of wartime excise levies to 1942 levels by next July 1.

CIO's proposals for taxation according to ability to pay were presented to the Senate Committee by Clifford McAvoy, legislative representative of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, assisted by Lincoln Fairley, research associate for the Auto Workers.

Criticizing the cut in the excess profits tax as "indefensible," with war-fat corporations expecting boom profits in 1946, McAvoy said:

"A corporation which will earn excessive profits in 1946 is in the best position to pay taxes. It is the last taxpayer in the country which should be given tax relief.

McAvoy was repeatedly "needled" during his testimony by Senators Hawkes (R., N. J.), Taft (R., O.), Millikin (R., Col.), Vandenberg (R., Mich.) and Byrd (polltax D., Va.).

"Available data," McAvoy testified, "indicate that with a national product of $160,000,000,000, corporate profits after payment of taxes in 1946 will amount to $10,500,000,000 if the excess profits tax is repealed."

The CIO urged tax relief for small business rather than for big corporations, with special consideration for veterans. Included in recommendations were: an exemption of $5,000 from the corporate income tax and the lowering of existing rates for corporate enterprises with net incomes below $100,000.

For veterans the CIO recommended:

1. Forgiveness of income taxes up to $250 owed by veterans for the years 1941 to the date of their discharges.

2. Tax relief for one year after discharge by continuing the $1,500 additional exemption.

3. An incentive business tax of 25 per cent less than the regular rate for veterans opening new business, the difference to be applied to payments on their business loans up to $25,000.

For individuals in the low-pay brackets, neither the Senate Committee nor the House heeded CIO recommendations for the raising of exemptions.

CIO recommended increase of exemptions for single individuals to $1,000 and for married couples to $2,000, while maintaining credits of $500 each for children and other dependents.

KEEP 'EM COMING!

WHAT'S HAPPENING TO VICTORY?

All over the country people are asking, what's been happening to the victory we won over fascism and reaction? Where is the outline of the new world we fought and worked to attain?

The question is well taken. The people who ask it have reason to wonder out loud what has been happening to the future that they and their sons spent four years in fighting to win.

As they ask the question, they look around them and see:

On the home budget front—30 percent cuts in take-home pay already felt or in immediate prospect for millions of workers' families.

On the propaganda front—a press campaign of slanders against the labor movement unequalled in recent history. Heroes of production yesterday—rabble today.

On the legislative front—a refusal by Congress and the Administration, six months after VE-Day and three months after VJ-Day, to move on measures to bolster the national income, protect workers' living standards, counter unemployment, stave off depression.

On the foreign front—deliberately induced disunity, deliberate promotion of suspicion and hatred among yesterday's allies, a campaign of distrust stirred up against the very peoples we and our allies fought to liberate.

And aimed against every working man and his family, against every farmer, every white collar worker, every merchant—a frenzied drive for an inflation that can bring ruin to us all, unless it is checked.

The evidence for this dark picture is abundant and detailed. Layoffs, cuts in hours, attacks on unions mount daily. Stalling in Congress and government agencies is clear to all. A cloud of threats and innuendoes hangs over foreign relations. Price strikes aimed at inflation are being engineered in almost every industry.

Added to this picture is a tax bill passed in the House and pending in the Senate that spoons still more gravy to the corporations and to the rich and leaves the poor as heavily burdened as ever.

Where is the answer to this problem of what is happening to our victory? The answer is in the hard work and concentration on the problem of millions of trade union members, their friends and their allies—not only in this country but all over the democratic world.

The answer to take-home pay cuts is CIO's campaign for a 30 percent base pay increase, led by Philip Murray in the unions, the press and the radio and backed up by every CIO affiliate.

The answers to the slanders against labor are the facts of labor's case, presented through every means we have open to us.

The answers to the stalling on Capitol Hill are CIO's delegations to Washington, CIO wires, letters, visits to the Congressmen, unity on CIO's program with every progressive in your community.

The answer to world division is a unity of the workers of all countries dedicated to freedom—demonstrated so magnificently in the creation of the World Federation of Trade Unions that contrasts so sharply with the failure of the diplomats in London.

The answer to inflation, to tax grabs for the rich, to price strikes, to attacks on unions is again CIO's program, pressed with all the vigor of six million men and women and their leaders.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

Excerpts from testimony by CIO President Murray on the 65-75 cents minimum wage amendment take the place this week of Len De Caux's regular column. De Caux is on the way from the Soviet Union to the United States.

THE people know we have the men, the machines, the resources and the technological skills for continuing prosperity, if adequate purchasing power and markets can be assured. This bill, by raising the floor of wage rates to 65 cents and later to 75 cents an hour, would provide an underpinning for purchasing power.

It is of great importance in enacting legislation to correct these evils that you raise the minimum to an adequate figure. Since the enactment of the present 40-cent rate in 1938, living costs for low-income groups have risen to the point where a 65-cent rate would be needed to maintain approximately the same level of living.

For a family to attain a minimum standard of adequacy a worker must therefore earn more than 75 cents an hour or must work many hours at overtime rates or else two or more persons in the family must have jobs. To permit a lower wage rate is to condemn children to poverty and suffering, to force mothers to neglect their homes in order to add to inadequate family incomes and to have the entire community pay a heavy toll through charity, doles, and, still worse, in the lowered efficiency and value of thousands of our young people who are the nation's greatest resource.

At this point, I would like to speak out as strongly as I can in protest against a reported compromise on this measure. We have read in the press a number of recent stories to the effect that the compromise looks to a settlement of this issue on the basis of raising the present minimum from 40 cents an hour to 55 cents.

Such a compromise would be no compromise at all. It would merely be a retreat. As the members of Congress know, the War Labor Board some months ago set 55 cents an hour as the minimum wage which they would approve without question or review. To offer this accepted—and thoroughly inadequate—wage minimum as a compromise is to make a mockery of progress on the whole issue.

The entire nation, and not just certain regions, would benefit from the elimination of substandard rates. The excuse cannot be made that the substandard problem is one confined to traditionally low-wage industries. Less than half of the members of one of our big unions, the United Steelworkers of America, working in substandard wage plants, are found in the South, and only 38 per cent of these plants are located in the South.

The problem of substandard wages in all industries, even steel, goes beyond regional considerations. It is a challenge to the entire nation. New industries do not have to be created in less industralized areas by means of low wages. Our modern industries do not need the incentive of "cheap labor" to grow. They are built on our mechanical ingenuity and high wages.

Fully as important as the raising of the miinmum wage is the problem of extending coverage to groups of workers now excluded. It has been estimated that under the present terms of the Fair Labor Standards Act some eight million people in the following categories are totally excluded from wage and hour protection; agricultural workers, domestic workers, seamen, fish cannery workers and employes canning, storing, packing or otherwise handling agricultural products in the geographical area in which they are produced.

There is no real justification for excluding these groups from the basic protection of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Many of the present exemptions were wrested from Congress by powerful pressure groups, masquerading as spokesmen for farmers, who put across the fiction that such workers are similar to agricultural labor and that granting them wage-hour benefits would be a burden on the farmers.

No nation can long maintain its democracy if it forces a large section of its workers to suffer the kind of exploitation that comes from sweatshop wages. A country with a national income of 64 billion dollars set a 40-cent minimum wage; a country with a national income of 160 billion dollars can set a 65-cent minimum wage, to be raised to 75 cents as we move forward to full peace-time production.

SOVIET FRIENDSHIP GROUP BACKED BY CIO LEADERS

MOSCOW—Formation of an American - Soviet Trade Union Committee was proposed here this week by Vassili Kuznetsov, chairman of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, and accepted by CIO leaders at a mass meeting in the Hall of Columns in honor of the CIO delegation now touring the USSR. Kuznetsov proposed the committee to "facilitate establishment of close contact between American and Soviet working classes" and as a step to strengthen the "friendship between the peoples, which is so necessary to support world peace."

Endorsing the proposal, CIO Vice-Pres. Joseph Curran, who is also president of the Natl. Maritime Union, declared; "We will ardently support the idea for establishment of an American-Soviet Trade Union Committee. I am told to assure you that the CIO will always work hand in hand with Soviet trade unions." CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, declaring that he could "hardly believe I am in Moscow," told the meeting of Soviet trade unionists:

"When I visit your plants I feel that I am in our own American establishments. When I speak here I feel as if I am speaking in my own country. All this bespeaks the fact that we and you have one mind, the same aspriations, the same community of interests. Both of our great countries can work together. We shall exert all efforts so that in the period of the peaceful development of our countries, the friendship of the Soviet and American working class will grow stronger."

CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood declared that "the difference between the American and Soviet government systems cannot hamper unification of the trade unions of both countries."

HOW HITLER CRUSHED UNIONS

By ANTHONY JENKINSON

PARIS.—One of the most important pieces of evidence against the top Nazi war criminals shortly to go on trial at Nuremberg is the original document, issued on Apr. 21, 1933, ordering the suppression of the German trade unions, this correspondent learned today.

The document, signed by Dr. Robert Ley on behalf of the "Supreme Direction of the Political Organization," was drawn up at a special meeting of Nazi leaders in Munich summoned and attended by Hitler himself. One of those attending the meeting was Fritz Saukel, later to become Reich Director of Manpower. Like Dr. Ley, Saukel is one of the top 24 Nazis who will be tried at Nuremberg.

Carrying out directions contained in the circular, SA and SS troops on May 2 seized trade union offices all over Germany and arrested union leaders. Principle targets of the raids, as outlined in the circular, were the General German Trade Union Confederation (ADGB) and the General Independent Employees Confederation (AFA). The ADGB, with 28 affiliates, and the AFA with 13 affiliates, between them had about 5,000,000 members at the time of the raids.

Several of the ODGB leaders seized in the Berlin raid—which was directed by Ley himself—are alive today and have important evidence to give at the trials. Besides telling how 500 heavily armed SA men, headed by Ley, broke into their offices in Berlin on May 2, they can detail how in following months and years hundreds of union leaders were tortured and killed in concentration camps.

As late as March, 1945, the evidence shows, 250 union leaders were gassed and burned to death in the Sachsenhausen camp.

As part of their tactic of splitting the German labor movement, the Nazis first seized what they called the "Marxist-Jewish" unions, saying at the same time—in a "Proclamation for the Protection of German Labor" dated May 2, 1933—that "we do not want to disrupt and destroy the unions." On June 24, 1933, however, on an order from Dr. Ley, the properties and officials of the Christian Trade Union Federation were also seized. The CTUF at that time had a membership of about 1,000,000.

"All trade union chairmen; the district secretaries and the branch directors of the Bank for Workers, Employes and Officials. Exceptions are granted only with the permission of the Gauleiter," the order said.

'WE WANT OUT,' GI's TELL BRASS

By FRED ROSS

GIs believe that the Army is holding too many men in uniform—the announcement that 1,100,000 will be discharged this month notwithstanding.

Brig. Gen. Robert W. Berry, acting Assistant Chief of Personnel, who gave the 1,100,000 figure to the Senate Military Affairs Committee this week, added that unless the point system is revised downward the number of monthly discharges will taper off to about 650,000 by February.

In an apparent defense of discharges through separation centers, General Berry said that their rated capacity is 1,400,000 a month, which would put them 300,000 above the number of men passing through them this month.

Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, about a month ago urged that to speed up discharges GIs be processed at their bases, be sent home on terminal leave where their discharges would be mailed them.

The Army's only answer was that separation centers give "greater protection to the individual soldier, not only now but in the years to come."

A GI SPEAKS

"Let us consider the steps involved in the demobilization of an individual soldier. They are, briefly, completion of his service record, complete physical examination, return of all surplus clothing and equipment to the Quartermaster Supply, final pay of soldier, simple typing of his discharge and in some separation centers (and only in some) there is also included a one or two-minute interview with a 'job counsellor' or U. S. Employment Service representative.

"Please note that NOT ONE STEP cannot be accomplished at each and every camp, air camp, air base, or other military establishment of the U. S. I myself am tired merely by my presence in the Army, of providing an administrative job for numerous colonels and generals—a job which they are loathe to relinquish."

The Army personnel chief said that 1,085,000 men at home and overseas are eligible now for discharge on points. This figure will be cut to approximatey 950,000 by November 1, when 900,000 more men with 60 points or more will be eligible for discharge, bringing the total on that date eligible for discharge to 1,850,000.

ASKS FOR MORE SHIPS

Reflecting the demand of the GIs that more ships be made available for bringing troops home from overseas, Senator Johnson (D., Colo.), and Senator Revercomb (R., W. Va.), questioned General Berry on the amount of shipping being used for that purpose. General Berry said that he did not have the figures but would send them to the committee.

Senator Revercomb read a letter from a GI in the Philippines who reported he saw the following ships at anchor in a trip across the Pacific: August 6, 300 by count and so many more it was impossible to count them; August 20, Eniwetok, 500; August 25, Ulithi, 400; Manila Bay, 500.

The GI added that at Clark Field he saw at least 600 B-24 bombers, which he was told "had been grounded as there was no further use for them." He said that they could "be stripped at very little cost and made into transport planes, carrying from 20 to 40 passengers.

Pickets Ask Bilbo Ouster

THE one-man protest of Edward Bykowski, wounded Navy veteran, against bigotry has become an organized move to oust Theodore G. Bilbo (Miss. polltaxer) from the Senate.

About a month ago Bykowski began picketing Bilbo's apartment after the Senator had refused to hear his protests against insulting letters to "Dear Nigger" and "Dear Dago" sent by the Senator in reply to inquiries about his stand against the permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee. Bykowski's shrapnel-shattered leg gave out. He returned to his Staten Island home, but promised to be back.

This week not only was Bilbo's apartment being picketed by an average of nine persons every day but petitions calling on the Senate to expell the Mississippian began circulating.

Amvets Shun Anti-Unionism

Efforts to turn the American Veterans of World War II into a labor-beating organization failed decisively at the Chicago convention of the group last weekend, when a resolution in opposition to the closed shop was defeated 149 to 1.

The Amvets convention, which was attended by delegates from most states of the union purporting to represent 20,000 veterans and servicemen, passed unanimously a resolution disapproved "in its entirety the utterances of Senator Bilbo referring to any discrimination of race, creed, or color as being diametrically opposed to the principles of our organization."

The Amvets also called on President Truman in another resolution to appoint a commission to inquire why men in the service are not discharged more quickly.

"We're a small organization. We've got to wait before we take a stand on this matter," said one delegate after the resolution was presented by the resolutions committee. "Let's table it."

Other delegates rose to their feet to protest sidetracking the resolution, one of them declaring, "What are we afraid of?"

A protest against the convention's action did not come until the following day when J. H. Alexander, Dallas, a member of the executive committee, issued a statement threatening that the Texas delegation would bolt the convention.

Women's Organizations Say, 'Keep Price Curbs'

By ELEANOR FOWLER

AMERICAN housewives in all walks of life are worried about inflation. They voiced their concern in two national meetings held this last week. One was a meeting of organizations called by the Consumer Relations Advisor of OPA and attended by representatives of the American Assn. of University Women, the League of Women Voters, the American Home Economics Assn., the Natl. Council of Negro Women and the Natl. Council of Catholic Women.

The other was the national executive board of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO, representing women in workers families from coast to coast.

BOTH GROUPS DISTURBED

Both these groups of women were disturbed by the hasty lifting of wartime controls which has already taken place and appealed to the Administration to keep and strengthen remaining controls which protect the consumer.

They were especially critical of the revoking of WPB Order L-41 under which building materials were controlled and which set a ceiling of $8,000 on new home construction. They foresaw an immediate inflation in house sale prices with terrific pressure against rent control and urged a real drive to secure Congressional action to give OPA authority to set ceiling prices on homes.

They felt strongly that subsidy payments which hold food prices down should be continued until their removal will not increase food bills. Elimination of subsidies now which is being discussed in Washington, would mean a 5c a pound increase on butter, 4c a pound on peanut butter, 3c a quart on milk and similar increases on meat, flour, the major canned vegetables, etc.

No worse time than the present could be imagined, the Auxiliary women pointed out, for food price increases when most workers families have just taken what amounts to a 30 per cent wage cut. The result would be a still further cut in purchasing power of millions of American families.

Renewal of the Second War Powers Act, which expires Dec. 31, with no weakening amendments, was stressed by the women who met with OPA. All of the powers to channel production which the WPB exercised as well as the power to ration spring from the Second War Powers Act.

Consumers are concerned about continuing these powers now for two main reasons. The steps that have been taken to meet the clothing crisis, weak as they are, depend on them. Reports indicate that cotton goods produced under the so-called low cost clothing program are finally coming on the market in some appreciable volume, although inexpensive children's clothes are still very scarce. Similar wood and rayon programs are reported to be at a standstill because manufacturers are refusing to produce under the clothing orders while they press for lifting of all controls.

Housewives ask a firm statement by the administration that the low cost clothing program will be tightened up and pushed through. Maintenance of rationing is another subject on which women are unanimous. They want to see the rationing system kept in order to insure our ability to meet the needs of our allies and of the liberated peoples.

DeMille Flops As Legion 'Card'

Movie director Cecil B. DeMille's attempt to give the impression that the American Legion was backing his one-man fight against organized labor proved a flop, Henry Geisz, eastern regional director of the Union Labor Legionnaires, reports in the current issue of In Fact.

Geisz, who attended the meeting at which the Wall Street Post of the Legion conferred the Americanism medal on DeMille, said that only two of the 130 New York County legion posts invited to the meeting sent their colors, and that he counted only 35 persons, four of them reporters, in the section reserved for the Legion.

DeMille got into a snarl with his union, the American Federation of Radio Artists, when he refused to pay a $1 assessment voted by his union to inform his own industry of the dangers of an open-shop referendum in California two years ago.

Pamphlets For Vets

THE best description of the new pamphlet "The CIO and the Veterans," published by the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee (formerly Natl. CIO Wage Relief Committee) and the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, is the foreword by CIO Pres. Philip Murray. He writes:

"This pamphlet tells how CIO unions are streamling their procedure so that veterans may be quickly re-employed without loss of seniority, without burdensome initiation fees, without losing the gains that many of them fought for at home before they fought abroad. The CIO proposes that the veteran be rewarded with jobs rights as well as with battle ribbons."

This is a good pamphlet to have around union halls for distribution among veterans to nip in the bud the attempts of a considerable portion of the press to play the ex-servicemen against unions.

The pamphlet may be ordered from the Natl. CIO Community Service Committee , 1776 Broadway, N. Y. 10, N. Y., or the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Veterans Beware

"Today the swindler looks upon the returned soldier as an easy mark," William Trufant Foster states in the Public Affairs Committee pamphlet issued this week by the Public Affairs Committee, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y. Price is 10 cents each.

"Many a soldier," continues Dr. Foster, "has in his pocket his back pay, plus travel expenses home, plus part of his mustering-out pay. . . . Soldiers and sailors and their families have more than 30 billion dollars in war bonds, plus enormous savings in banks, plus the privilege, under the GI Bill of Rights, of having loans guaranteed by the government."

'BE POLITICS WISE' SAYS AUXILIARY

CIO Auxiliary leaders from the U. S. and Canada met this week in Chicago at an enlarged meeting of the Executive Board of the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries of the CIO to map campaigns for political action, for support to the wage increase drive of the CIO, and for prevention of inflation.

Wives of workers are the greatest single untapped reservoir of votes, the auxiliary resolution on political action points out. The Auxiliaries can help tap that reservoir, and should be represented on political action committees at all levels in order to do the most effective job. The resolution urges all auxiliaries to increase mail to Congressmen and Senators and to take part in delegations wherever possible.

Auxiliaries can help to muster support for the union campaign for a 30 per cent basic wage increase by explaining the need to women's groups and to merchants in their communities, the CIO Auxiliary wage campaign resolution points out. They can make sure that the radio programs through which CIO President Murray will carry an understanding of the campaign to the public, are carried by their local American Broadcasting Co. stations.

The resolution also call on the auxiliaries to set up strike kitchens, help in the picket lines and form home visiting committees if their unions are forced to strike.

The Board voted to urge continuance of food subsidy paments until their removal would not mean price increases, and keeping and strengthening of controls needed to make the low cost clothing program effective, and urged maintenance of rationing so as to help meet the needs of our allies and the liberated peoples.

The Auxiliary Board also sent a telegram to the House Appropriations Committee, urging continuation of child centers. The committee this week reported out the first supplemental appropriations bill granting four months' continuance of the child care centers. Now is the time to urges Representatives to support the measure.

Win Screen Vote

By a vote of 39 to 25, the Screen Office & Professional Employees Guild, Local 1, CIO Office & Professional Workers of America, CIO, won a N. Y. State Labor Relations Board election among the office and professional employees at William Morris, Inc., N. Y. City, internationally famous theatrical booking agency, this week.

CIO Wins Three Crafts In Big PRR Election

The CIO United Railroad Workers of America won three of the craft unions away from the powerful company union of the Pennsylvania Railroad Maintenance of Equipment Department in the system-wide election held recently. The CIO won bargaining rights for: (1) Boilermarkers; (2) Molders; (3) Power Plant employes and Shop Laborers. Although the Company Union retained five crafts, their margin was so close there is some doubt as to their ability to maintain control of employes in these crafts. For example in the vote of the Electricians there was a difference of only 68, with the CIO polling 1,397 votes to the Company Union's 1,465.

With the full cooperation of company officials all over the P. R. R. system, the so-called Independent Shop Crafts Brotherhood, was able to gain only a majority of 2,900 in a total vote of some 43,200. Foremen and clerks were voted and over 500 of their ballots were challenged and impounded. Employes were threatened with lay-offs, demotions and even loss of jobs if they continued to campaign for CIO or wore a CIO button. During the counting of the vote at Philadelphia, a Company Union official had possession of confidential company service records which he tried to use in opposing a challenged foremen vote.

Against such terrific odds, A. B. Martin, National Director of the CIO-URRWA and his staff, as well as all those participating in this drive, are to be congratulated on the success of this campaign.

Flash From Overseas

The World Federation of Trade Unions conference in Paris has adjourned and a group of delegates are now in Moscow as guests of our Russian trade unionists. While I have been in Europe, I have had the pleasure of running into a number of our former organizers who are in the armed forces. I expect to be back in my office in Washington, D. C., the end of this month.

Three Pennsy Shop Crafts Vote CIO

AGAINST tremendous odds, the CIO United Railroad Workers won collective bargaining rights for three craft units in a system-wide election held among eight groups of employes in the Maintenance of Equipment Dept. of the Pennsylvania Railroad in 14 states. The CIO union was opposed on the ballot by the Brotherhood of Railroad Shop Crafts of America, a so-called independent union, which the CIO charges is company-dominated.

Results of the election held August 20 to September 20 were announced this week. Returns from the more than 20,000 ballots sent by mail, about 14,000 of which were from servicemen, delayed the final counting of the ballots.

Out of a total of some 43,000 eligible votes cast, the CIO carried 20,147 to 23,064 for the company union, giving the Brotherhood a plurality of only 2,917, said A. B. Martin, national director of the union.

The three units carried by the CIO union with a total vote of 4,769 were:

1. Boilermakers: CIO — 1,585; Brotherhood—1,452.

2. Powerhouse employes and rail shop laborers: CIO—3,061; Brotherhood—2,552.

3. Moulders: CIO—123; Brotherhood—98.

The vote in the other five craft units was as follows: Machinists —CIO 4,685, Brotherhood 6,457; Sheet Metal Workers—CIO 883, Brotherhood 1,184; Electrical Workers—CIO 1,397, Brotherhood 1,465; Carmen—CIO 8,003, Brotherhood 9,066; Blacksmiths — CIO 410, Brotherhood 780.

That the CIO Rail Shop union was able to come so close to completely defeating the Pennsy's pampered child, the Shop Srafts Brotherhood, in the face of all the opposition inspired by company agents, is remarkable, Martin said. Demotions, threats of lay-offs and firings and other means of intimidation were all used to help defeat the CIO, he declared.

New Hormel Pact Gives 17½c Increase

HORMEL & CO., Austin, Minn. meat packing firm famous for its annual wage plan, has signed a new agreement with Local 9, CIO United Packinghouse Workers, providing a basic weekly wage increase of $7 for about 1,000 workers. The pay hike, which is equivalent to 17c an hour, represents a 20 per cent increase.

Hormel is the first major packing concern to accede to demands of the CIO Packinghouse Workers union for a general wage increase of 25c an hour, with an immediate adjustment of 17½ cents from the major independents pending negotiatings with the Big Four packers on on the 25 cents demand. Hormel has agreed to grant the additional 7½ cents immediately upon conclusion of national negotiations providing a 25 cents increase.

The pact with Hormel further stipulates that when the balance of the industry raises rates 17½ cents an hour, the company will pay in the form of a weekly bonus "an amount equal to the cost of the so-called fringe items, namely, clothes changing time, furnishing clothes, tools and safety equipment and time spent in the preparation of tools."

An outstanding provision of the agreement is a sick leave plan entitling workers to one-half day for each two months, cumulative from year to year. Combined sick leave and vacation however, is limited to not more than 10 weeks in any one year.

CIO Conventions

The Marine & Shipbuilding Workers and the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers have scheduled national conventions for January, according to information received at CIO Headquarters in Washington.

The Shipyard Workers will meet in Atlantic City, N. J., January 7-12 and the UE convention will be held January 21-25 at the same place.

The Intl. Woodworkers of America convention will be held in Eugene, Ore., Nov. 14.

GM Refuses To Bargain

Refusal of the General Motors Corp. to submit a written counter-proposal to the demand of the CIO United Automobile Workers for a 30 percent increase is blocking progress toward reaching an agreement, charges UAW Vice-Pres. Walter P. Reuther, director of the union's GM Dept.

In a letter to GM Pres. C. R. Wilson, Reuther said the union was renewing its request that the corporation submit a written counter-proposal to the union's demand sent to the GM President August 18.

The UAW's request that the proposal be submitted to the union by Oct. 16, was ignored this week by Wilson who was quoted in the press as saying, "We aren't going to file any such counter-proposal at any time."

The UAW's General Motors Dept. last month filed a request with the Natl. Labor Relations Board for a strike vote among GM workers under the Smith-Connally Act. The NLRB has set Oct. 24 as the date for taking the vote, but the corporation has refused to permit the vote to be taken on plant premises.

Reuther termed GM's refusal "a thoroughly irresponsible and typical action by a corporation without social conscience." He charged that GM refused because it is "afraid of the results of the vote. General Motors want to be able to say that the strike vote, when it is taken, is not a clear expression of all its employes," he declared.

He stated that the union "is determined to exhaust every possible means of achieving a peaceful settlement of the issue."

Tips For Union Teachers

A week's training institute for 50 members of the CIO Textile Workers Union was held at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill last August. It was the first time a major Southern university has offered its hospitality to a labor union for educational purposes, said Phillips Russell, the university's extension director, in the October issue of Textile Labor.

The lecture method is a failure in teaching trade unionists, Russel says, in giving some conclusions he has reached in the course of his experience in lecturing and teaching union classes. "Workers are accustomed to learning through their hands more than through their eyes or ears. Consequently, instruction should depend on doing rather than listening or notetaking."

Union members, he found, "like plenty of give-and-take. They don't like anyone to talk 'at' them." Current events, or what's behind the news, he says, is one of the most popular subjects, as it gives them a chance to meet the teacher on equal terms.

Federal Workers

The CIO Federal Workers this week asked War Production Board Chairman J. A. Krug to help relieve problems faced by dismissed WPB workers by extending the furlough period to 120 days, and by pressing the Civil Service Commission for a revision of its regulations to permit rehiring of laid-off WPB workers through central re-employment registers.

Ward Workers Out Million As Seizure Ends

"The Government is in default of its own directives," Irving Abramson, natl. director of the Montgomery Ward Organizing Committee, wrote President Truman just before the Army turned back to the company plants in Chicago and six other cities this week-end.

Abramson pointed out that when President Roosevelt ordered the seizure of the plants last Dec. 27, he had directed the payment of more than one million dollars in back wages to Ward employes in Chicago, Denver, Detroit and Jamaica, L. I. Abramson said the back wages have not been paid. The seizure had been ordered after the firm had refused to obey War Labor Board directives.

The company announced that both maintenance of membership and the checkoff, instituted by the Army, would terminate with the end of the U. S. seizure.

THE NAVY TAKES CHARGE: Shore patrolmen guard an oil refinery in East Chicago, Ind., aftermath of the recent stoppage by members of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, for a 30% cost of living increase. NAB Policy Criticized

The newly adopted standards of the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters were praised this week as allowing wider freedom of speech, but were also condemned as inadequate for protection of labor's rights on the air.

Comment came from Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Auto Workers in a letter to Judge Justin Miller, new NAB president.

Thomas said that:

1. An NAB provision that "political" and "public-question" broadcasts "should be presented by straightforward statement appealing to reason and intelligence" might "strangle at birth one of the most significant developments in broadcasting," the documentary program, if the provision is rigidly interpreted.

2. Another provision banning "unfair attacks on industries, professions or institutions" significantly fails to mention labor unions.

3. The NAB standards contain no clearcut statement concerning the right of organizations or individuals to reply to attacks against them, "nor is there any clear cut recognition of radio's duty to provide adequate time for public service programs."

4. The new standards "fail to urge the use of Negro and other minorities as radio actors portraying ordinary types of people, and to discourage the perpetuating of libellous racial stereotypes."

Frankensteen Blasts Intolerance

In a message to a Natl. Conference on the Foreign Born in Post-War America, Richard T. Frankensteen, vice president of the CIO Auto. Workers and candidate for mayor of Detroit, this week condemned those who seek to spread discrimination and intolerance.

The conference, which is being sponsored by the American Committee for Protection of Foreign Born, met this weekend in New York City.

7,000 Leather Workers Win More Pay

Wage increases ranging from 5 to 10 cents an hour have just been won for close to 7,000 leather workers in 11 cities throughout the country, the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Union announced this week.

Health insurance, improved vacation plans and other gains were also obtained along with the pay increase, in renewal of local union contracts and interim negotiations.

WLB To Wind Up Jan. 1, Won't Accept New Cases

The Natl. War Labor Board announced this week that it would accept no new cases or appeals in order to wind up its work by January 1.

Chairman Lloyd Garrison said the WLB will accept appeals from directive orders issued by regional boards and commissions, however, in cases in which the directive was announced prior to the present decision. The only other exceptions will be in cases in which a regional board has made an order and the parties have not agreed that the regional board's decision shall be final.

After October 22, the WLB will act on stipulation cases only and on these will simply agree to name an arbitrator. This will serve to relieve the WLB of having to decide any new cases.

In cases after October 22, the WLB will cease to issue orders and instead will make recommendations as to appropriate terms of settlement.

Cracking the Quip

By ARTHUR WHITE

WASHINGTON SIDESHOW . . . Phil Murray's program of jobs for all and a 65-cents-an-hour floor under wages, has produced the usual "viewing with alarm" response from certain Southern members of Congress (who were also horrified by the NRA's 40-cents-an-hour idea), and one of them told a union official in Washington:

"You're being unfair, to ask the overall hourly wage that you do. After all, in the South we can't pay a man the same as he's paid in the North."

"Well," responded the labor official, "before I was elected to head my union, I was a tailor of men's clothing for 25 years. As far as I know, it takes the same amount of effort to sew a button on a pair of men's pants in the South as it does in the North."

* * *

Commentators and columnists, critical of MacArthur's policies, have been rebuking him sharply via the radio and press. They praise him for his work as a Commander, but point out that despite certain face-saving gestures, he has allowed the Emperor, and war-criminals both in the Cabinet and in big business, to stay in power . . . Johannes Steele, commenting on this to a columnist friend, remarked: "The whole business seems more like the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, 'The Mikado.'" "Yes, with one exception," averred the friend. "As yet, the 'punishment doesn't fit the crime.'"

WASHINGTON GUIDE

Now The Visits Are Over

Now that the series of mass CIO visits to Congress is temporarily over, its time to take stock of the way the job was done, the results secured, and the job ahead to make certain we get full value from our work.

About 3,000 rank and file members, men and women, Negro and white, came to Washington from 33 states. For a period of five weeks, Congressmen from all over the country met with their constituents to hear at first hand what's on the voter's mind.

The job was divided into two main parts; 1) a meeting between all the delegates on a particular visit and as many Congressmen from their states who would attend and 2) individual calls on the Congressmen in their offices.

Results secured are not going to be immediately evident—nor are they expected to be. However, this much can be observed now—and the longer term results watched for later:

1. Congressmen got a chance to hear, at first hand from the voters, what millions of CIO members and their friends and neighbors feel must be done. Each such visit, in this manner, was worth a dozen editorials, worth more even than letters. Each such visit backed up what CIO leaders are constantly telling the Congressmen.

2. The delegates got a first hand insight into their Government, saw at first hand how their Congressmen react, how they work. Again, each such visit was worth a dozen editorials, a dozen written explanations of how Congress operates.

3. The delegates can now return home with their first hand experiences to spread among their shopmates, their neighbors. They can make the job that all of us must do with Congress come alive, in terms of what they saw, not what someone or some publication told them.

Now the job ahead is to make the most of the education value of the delegations. Every delegate who went to Washington should report to his local, to his council, to his community.

Every delegate should tell exactly what his impressions were, should pass on to the people who sent him the experience he gained in the Nation's Capital.

In this way, the delegates will find they're getting full value from the time, money and effort they invested in visiting Washington.

Add Coming Up

U. S. PAY: Congress has a chance to legislate directly on basic wage increases to offset postwar cuts in take-home pay by voting for the Downey bill (S 1415) giving U. S. employes a straight 20% increase.

The bill is in the Senate Civil Service Commission. Wire your Senators to support it.

Hobble The Hobbs Bill

An old enemy of labor—Rep. Sam Hobbs (D., Ala.)—put his anti-union bill (HR 32) up on the front page of the House Rules Committee agenda this week, with a big drive being whipped up to get it out on the floor for an early vote.

Under the disguise of stopping "union racketeering," the Hobbs bill offers a chance to clap a fine of $10,000 or 20 years in jail on any unionist taking part in normal union activities, such as a picket line during a strike.

It also offers a chance to clamp fines and jail sentences on unionists for enforcing normal union regulations governing payment, hours of work, fees etc.

Hobbs and the people behind him have been pushing this vicious bill over a number of years now.

The CIO fought this bill when it first came up on the labor haters' horizon some years ago. The AFL, Teamsters and liberal Congressmen such as Hugh De Lacy (D., Wash.) are fighting it in the Rules Committee.

Wire Chairman Sabbath (D., Ill.) of the Rules Committee and your own Congressionman to oppose this vicious attempt to cripple unions.

An Even Break For the Seamen

American merchant seamen, more than 6,000 of whom gave their lives to fight fascism, have long been excluded from normal benefits accorded to other fighters and to other workers.

They've been excluded from Social Security since the act was passed 10 years ago. Despite FDR's plea, the GI Bill of Rights (inadequate as it is) left them out in the cold—which means no mustering out pay, no educational aid, no unemployment benefits—nothing.

Now there's a bill (HR 2346) caled the "Seamens Bill of Rights" that's been pending in the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee for two years.

Appearing for 200,000 union maritime workers, Hoyt Haddock, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, urged immediate action on the bill.

Seamen will "no longer be forgotten men" when this bill is passed, Haddock told the committee.

Write to Rep. S. O. Bland (D., Va.), chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee, and to your own Congressmen urging immediate action on HR 2346, the Seamens Bill of Rights.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	Extends present state benefits to 26 weeks; includes seamen, U. S. workers; turns USES back to states.	Passed by Senate; pigeonholed by House Ways and Means. Discharge Petition coming up.	Wire Congressman to work to rescind Ways and Means action; support Discharge Petition on Forand bill.
Jobs-for-all (S 380)	States government responsibility for full employment.	Passed by Senate; now waiting House action. 115 Representatives supporting original bill as written.	Urge Congressman to support Kilgore-Patman bill as originally presented to Senate.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present minimum from 40c to 65-75c; widens coverage.	In Senate Labor Sub-Committee and House Labor Committee.	Urge Senators to support bill as written; urge early action in House.
Taxes (HR 4309)	Bill voted by House has big cuts for rich, cuts in excess profits tax.	Senate Finance Committee report expected this week.	Urge support of CIO tax plan.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives us chance to end rule of Bilbos, Rankins; helps north as well as south.	HR 7 reported out by Senate Judiciary; also a constitutional amendment which would stall action for years.	Wire Senators to support HR 7, reject amendment as stall.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; ends free collective bargaining.	Hearings scheduled to start soon; press drive now being whipped up daily.	Keep telling Congress to stay away from it. Concentrate now on Senators.

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

USES: The House Appropriations report recommending billions of dollars in cuts in expenditures has a trick rider slipped into it that would send the U. S. Employment Service (USES) back to the states for complete control.

This rider flatly contradicts the recommendation in President Truman's last message that USES be kept under a Federal system for the reconversion period at least.

Purpose of the "state's rights" advocates is to get control of the patronage involved in USES jobs and to make sure USES is used to recruit labor for low wage jobs.

Here's a tip: in its September report, USES says that 60% of the jobs now open pay less than 70 cents an hour. USES was under Federal administration in September.

NOTE ON BALL: Sen. Ball (R., Minn.), who likes to be called a liberal, wrote this to the Cleveland CIO in reply to a letter asking him to support the 65-75 cents wage floor bill:

"I think it would disrupt the wage structure in smaller communities and in addition would tend to restrict tremendously the job opportunities of inexperienced persons and youngsters, as employers would insist on experienced and qualified personnel if the minimum wage were raised to that point."

Or more briefly, the junior daddy of the Ball-Hatch bill wants inexperienced persons and youngsters to live on 40 cents an hour.

How long did Sen. Ball ever have to live on 40 cents an hour—even as "an inexperienced person" or a "youngster"?

ONE FOR THE WOMEN: The House Appropriations Committee has recommended continuation of child care centers up to March 1. If agreed to by the House, this gives hundreds of thousands of mothers, who have to work to live and support families, a chance to go on working, sure that their kids are taken care of.

Good organization and stout protest by the mothers—particularly those with husbands in the services—did the trick.

BIG PAY HIKES POSSIBLE, SECRET SURVEY SHOWS

A U. S. government survey that "leaked out" this week to press associations revealed in detailed form the fact that industry generally can afford at least a 24 percent immediate increase in wages without losing one penny of profits! The survey said that industry can expect $6 billion in profits after the wartime peak.

Real Wages Dropping

The report, which was widely quoted in dozens of newspapers throughout the county, said that if no wage increases are granted, the real wages in 1946 for an average manufacturing worker with tax exemptions for one dependent will be $23.95 in 1941 dollars—a drop of 10 per cent from 1941.

Based on manufacturing industry as a whole, the report was quoted as saying:

"1. The gross weekly pay of the average worker in manufacturing has increased from $26.64 in January, 1941 to $47.12 in April, 1945, or 77 per cent.

"2. When allowance is made for the increase in the cost of living and in personal income taxes during the war period, the value of the average worker's take-home pay in 1941 dollars increased from $26.64 to $31.47 (assuming income tax exemption for one dependent), or 18 per cent.

"3. Of the increase which occurred in gross weekly pay during the war period:

"Thirty-six per cent resulted from increased hours of work, and will be reversed by 1946.

"Ten per cent resulted from inter-industry shifts, which will also be reversed by 1946.

"Twenty-one per cent resulted from general changes in wage rates, which are not likely to be reversed.

"Thirty-three per cent resulted from wartime upgrading, the liberal administration of wage schedules in a tight labor market, and other factors which will be reversed in part.

"4. On the assumption that half the increases resulting from liberal administration of wage schedules will be reversed, the gross weekly pay of the average worker in manufacturing will fall to $33.96 in 1946, or 28 per cent below the April, 1945 level.

"5. A money wage of $33.96 in 1946 represents three per cent less purchasing power than a wage of $26.64 in 1941. When allowance is made for payment of 1946 income taxes, the purchasing power of take-home pay for an average worker with exemptions for one dependent will be $23.95 in 1941 dollars, a reduction of 10 per cent from January, 1941.

Net Profits Rising

"6. Between April, 1945 and the spring of 1946 total salaries and wages paid will decline by between $30 and $35 billion. Accompanying this reduction will be a fall of total national output of more than $40 billion, and sharp declines in profits before taxes and in farm income.

"7. It is estimated that 1946 profits after taxes of manufacturing corporations will be over $6 billion, a figure higher than the wartime peak. This estimate assumes an increase in wage rates sufficient to maintain average hourly earnings in each manufacturing industry at the April, 1945 level.

"8. Industry's ability to pay higher wages depends upon many factors, favorable and unfavorable, some of which are measurable and others non-measurable.

Savings for Industry

"9. In the case of the measurable factors, it is estimated that the cost of increases in average manufacturing wage rates indicated below would be compensated for by the factors indicated:

FACTOR REDUCING 1946 COSTS	INCREASE IN WAGE RATES
Reduction of overtime	4.5%
Elimination of one-half of wartime upgrading	9.5%
Repeal of corporation excess profits tax	10.0%
TOTAL	24.0%"

This means that industry generally—without losing a nickel—can boost wages 24 per cent because of savings made in the abolition of premium payments and overtime and because of the pending repeal of the excess profits tax.

The report did not say one word about other tax concessions that corporations are eligible for, nor about the huge wartime "surpluses" they have stacked away.

While pointing out that industry's ability to pay higher wages may be adversely influenced by factors such as inefficiencies during the reconversion period, production of less profitable peacetime goods, etc., the report said:

"There is no doubt that large increases in productivity will occur after this war which will permit proportionate additional increases in wage rates."

Among these factors are: Replacement of inefficient workers, reduction of fatigue due to a shorter work week, and new methods, techniques, materials and modern machinery.

The report predicted that there will be eight million unemployed by next spring—with manufacturing employment dropping back to 1941 levels, a net decline of three million workers from a wartime top of 16.1 million.

Pay Rates Cut

"Even if these persons should find employment in non-manufacturing industries, they would experience a substantial cut in earnings," the report stated.

"Most of the decline in manufacturing employment will take place in the durable goods industries where earnings are considerably above the average for all manufacturing, while a large portion of the increase in non-manufacturing employment is expected to take place in the trade and the service industries, where weekly earnings are only slightly more than 50 per cent of those prevailing in durable goods manufacturing."

LABOR-MANAGEMENT PARLEY OPENS NOV. 5 IN WASHINGTON

THIRTY-NINE members, 18 for labor, 18 for business and three for the general public, will comprise the labor-management conference meeting in Washington November 5.

Of the 18 labor representatives, CIO will name eight. AFL eight, Railroad Brotherhoods one, and United Mine Workers one. The U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers will name nine each of their 18.

Public members will be Judge Walter P. Stacy of North Carolina, Secretary of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach and Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace, with Stacy serving as chairman. George W. Taylor, late of the War Labor Board, will be the conference secretary.

An equal number of alternates will be selected by each group, plus one adviser. Alternates and advisers will have no voting power, but can speak when asked by their principals. An executive committee of eight has been recommended to the conference,

JUDGE WALTER P. STACY

To Preside At Labor-Management Parley in Washington

which will set up its own machinery.

Other committees recommended include a rules committee of four: a committee on collective bargaining of 12; management, 12; jurisdictional and representational problems, eight; initial collective agreements, 12; existing collective agreements, 12.

The proposal has also been made that agreement of at least 15 members of each main group be required before any major recommendations are adopted. The first two sessions of the conference will be open to the public.

Profit Dam Seen Threat To Nation

Charging that financial reserves of American corporations are damming up America's economic blood stream, CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week told 3,000 people attending the Ohio CIO-PAC Legislative Conference in Columbus that war-rich industrialists were holding on to their profits while at the same time they were attempting to break the union movement.

"The moguls of American industry," said Murray, "who are responsible for the breakdown of collective bargaining in the last few weeks don't say they disapprove of wage increases. They don't dare say it. But actually all they want to give the worker is a piddling increase. The question, therefore, is how much? Some, out of sweet charity, has agreed to give 10 percent. But they know, when they make the offer, the workers won't accept."

Murray contended that employers were deliberately trying to foster strikes and to create the impression that workers' demands were ruinous. Actually, said Murray, corporations have total assets worth 66 billion dollars which "they want to lie in their coffers and stink and rot until the effect of it causes a form of economic constipation."

Murray went on to say that through tax rebates, corporations today were in a position to go on a sitdown strike against labor. This was the background, he contended, of the present situation.

The audience heard Ohio CIO Pres. Jack Kroll declare: "We are not Republicans and we are not Democrats. We do not intend to capture any political party, nor do we intend for any political party to capture us."

Blast FCC's FM Policy As Monopoly Aid

Granting of 64 conditional licenses for FM (frequency modulation) broadcasting by the Federal Communications Commission this week brought a sharp statement of criticism from C. B. Baldwin, executive vice-chairman of the National Citizens Political Action Committee, in N. Y. City.

In a wire to Paul Porter, chairman of the FCC, Baldwin said that "the granting of 64 licenses without public hearings ignores the demands of many individuals and organizations for greater caution in licensing individuals and corporations to conduct business on public licenses."

The wire described as "a grave threat to effective freedom of speech and press" the granting of licenses to companies owned by or affiliated with newspapers, asserting this provides a monopoly in many communities of the "media for disseminating public information and opinion."

The Baldwin wire followed by two weeks the issuance of a National Citizens PAC report on American broadcasting and a list of recommendations for Congressional and FCC action to "safeguard the people's right to the air."

Europe Offers Political Lesson, Says Hillman

THE unity he saw at the World Federation of Trade Unions in Paris, in Britain and liberated Europe, must inspire us here to put united political action on the top of our agenda in this country, CIO-PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman told a PAC conference in New York this week.

"Labor is the basis of this unity," Hillman said. "So it must be here too. Others of our population will join us once we show them that we have the program and the organization that fits their needs.

"The key to world peace and security depends on the 1946 elections as much as on any other factor," Hillman added. "We have to get to work now to help win the peace at the ballot box next year. Time is not on our side—it's on the side of the enemies of peace and security."

Speaking briefly at the opening session of the conference, Hillman revealed that almost all the Germans he met refused to believe or act as though Germany had lost the war. "The Nazis are not too seriously disturbed," he said. "Most of them are anti-Hitler—not anti-Nazi. The job of de-Nazifying Germany must be done on a labor basis."

After Hillman's brief opening speech, the conference got down to its work of making reports on political action in local unions and state councils, arranging for distribution of $1 pledge cards, and the like. Special stress was laid on the $1 donation drive—without which political action cannot carry on.

Says Must Oust Bias To Win Jobs for All

There can be no full employment unless provisions are made to insure that all groups, regardless of race, color, creed or sex, have equal opportunity for good jobs at decent pay.

This was the concensus of opinion of speakers and panel participants at the conference on "Full Employment: Our Common Goal," sponsored jointly by the N. J. State CIO and the American Labor Education Service at Trenton this week. Government, labor and civic leaders of state and national organizations participated in the conference.

In the keynote address, Edward Boze, chairman of the State CIO Committee to Abolish Racial Discrimination, warned that discrimination against women, Jews, Negroes veterans and other minorities was increasing and that such discrimination has been used to lower living standards for all workers.

Murray Backs Quill

CIO Pres. Philip Murray joined with many prominent leaders on the Citizen's Committee for the re-election of Michael J. Quill by heartily endorsing this week Quill's return to the City Council in New York.

Murray said: "Here in Washington we read with great satisfaction of the work done by Councilman Quill for the people of the Bronx who have twice chosen him as their representative in municipal affairs. We know that Councilman Quill constantly upholds and advances the best interests of all his constitutents."

Hit Rent Inflation Move

The San Francisco CIO Council this week protested against attempts by the San Francisco Apartment House Industry Assn. to eliminate rent control in the area, urging continuance of controls until war emergencies are ended.

Sheil, Murray Honored

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and the Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, Auxiliary Bishop of Chicago, will receive the first annual Msgr. John A. Ryan Award at a dinner at the Roosevelt Hotel, New York City, Nov. 28, it was announced this week by Dr. Emmanuel Chapman, chairman of the Committee of Catholics for Human Rights.

The award is presented "to the Catholic clergyman and layman who have contributed most to the defense of human rights and to furthering interracial amity." Bishop Sheil won wide acclaim for his speech at the 1944 CIO convention on "A Society of Free Men," which was issued in pamphlet form by the CIO.

'UNDERCOVER MAN' BILBO: The race-hate Senator from Mississippi finds a picket line around his Washington apartment too embarrassing—so he uses the back entrance. Bilbo, whose violent remarks against racial and religious minorities have caused war veterans to picket him in protest, has hired two private detectives (right) to protect his precious skin.

Guaranteed Annual Wage Asked by UE

PROPOSALS guaranteeing 40 hours of employment each week for war workers and war veterans alike were made last week to Pres. C. E. Wilson of General Motors by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, representing 30,000 employes in GM's electrical division.

James J. Matles, the union's director of organization, who was discharged recently from the Army after two years' service, released the four-point proposal sent to Wilson with a reminder to the GM president that he was quoted as saying: "All business is going to be better when everybody has a job."

The UE's four-point proposition, sent to Wilson as a counter-proposal to his scheme announced publicly last week calling for a 45-hour week at straight time pay, recommended:

1. A guaranteed employment of 40 hours a week for all employes in GM plants under contract with the union, for a period of one year.

2. Work in excess of 40 hours to be paid for at the rate of time and a half as at present.

3. The difference between Wilson's offer of an 8% general increase. which he said the 45-hour-week would give, and the union's demand for a $2-a-day increase to be negotiated between the parties.

4. Wage increases granted to be put into effect with price increases on the company's products.

The letter to Wilson containing these proposals was signed by Matles and General Sec-Treas. Julius Emspak.

Low Wages Cut Sales—Wallace

Secretary of Commerce Wallace this week told sales executives that if they want to sell refrigerators, vacuum cleaners and radios they would have to help see to it that wages are raised.

Speaking to the Sales Executive Club, the Natl. Federation of Sales Executives and the Advertising Federation of America at N. Y. City, Wallace said that the American families having an income of less than $1,000 a year—a third of all American families — simply did not buy home improvements. He continued:

"No salesman needs to be advised that he is wasting his time if he tries to sell a $200 washing machine to a family which cannot possibly spend more than $10 for its entire year's furniture bill. But no one needs to be told, either, that if that $1,000-a-year family can move into a higher income bracket a good many things will automatically appear on the scene."

STEEL PROFITS CLOT U.S. BLOODSTREAM — MURRAY

THE U. S. Steel Corp. is all set to lead the U. S. into a "devastating depression" worse than the one in '32, CIO Pres. Philip Murray charged this week in a statement replying to the Corporation's rejections of the CIO United Steelworkers' demand for a $2 a day pay increase.

"We regret to report that U. S. Steel and the other large steel firms do not seem prepared to assume their rightful responsibilities to the nation in the current economic crisis facing the American people," Murray said.

"The national pay envelope, according to the U. S. Commerce Dept., is shrinking by $20,000,000,000 a year. No small piddling pay increase will restore this huge loss in purchasing power. A substantial raise of $2 a day is required to provide the necessary consuming power to keep the wheels of industry going."

PHILIP MURRAY

The union's demand for the $2 increase, Murray said, "is reasonable, practical and necessary for the national welfare. Adequate pay means full employment; inadequate pay envelopes will certainly force large numbers of willing workers on the unemployment roster. A half way wage raise will not take America all the way to full employment."

Asserting that the future security and prosperity of America is at stake, Murray said that if the steel companies have their own way as they did in the 1920's, "America is in for another devastating depression which would probably be worse than the 1932 depression. The union's demand for a $2 a day pay raise seeks to save America from such a fate. It is essential for the nation's welfare."

Accusing U. S. Steel of shamelessly crying "poor" when "its pockets are bulging with wartime profits," Murray's statement gives comprehensive facts and figures to show that the basic steel industry could pay the $2 a day increase which would cost about $250,000,000 a year and still be $150,000,000 a year better off, through elimination of overtime pay and return of the 40-hour week which will reduce the industry's payroll by some $125,000,000, and through tax refunds and repeal of the excess profits tax. In addition the industry has reduced costs through technical improvements in plants and equipment which have greatly increased the rate of productivity.

In contrast to the present prosperous condition of the industry, Murray described the poor economic status of the steel workers who have suffered drastic cuts in their take-home pay. Many are having to cash in their meager War Bond savings to pay the landlord and storekeeper and are confronted with a still mounting increase in the cost of living. Down-grading to lower paid jobs has also taken a big chunk out of workers' pay envelopes, Murray stated.

And this while the steel industry is facing the rosy prospect of at least $552,000,000 in take-home profits in 1946. "Never in a peacetime year has the steel industry made such profits," he declared.

"To keep excessive profits from clogging up the blood stream of the American economic life, it is necessary that wages and salaries be substantially increased now," Murray concluded. "This is essential for the nation's welfare."

UAW OK'S STRIKE ACTION

BY a six to one vote, workers in General Motors plants throughout the country have voted to authorize a strike to back up the demands of the CIO United Auto Workers for a 30 percent wage increase if necessary. The poll was conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board Oct. 24, as required by the Smith-Connally Act. The vote in favor of strike action was 70,853 to 12,438.

A similar vote conducted among Chrysler Corp. workers Oct. 25 is also predicted to be overwhelmingly for strike action if necessary. Actual count of the vote was not completed as The CIO NEWS went to press. UAW Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther, director of the union's General Motors Dept., explained that the pro-strike vote does not necessarily mean that a strike will be called. Only the UAW Executive Board can authorize a strike. Before such action is taken, he said, every attempt would be made to reach a peaceful settlement of the union's wage demands.

Pres. C. E. Wilson of General Motors threw a load of dynamite under the wage dispute shortly before the strike vote by making a public statement turning down the union's 30 percent increase demand with a proposal for increasing the legal 40-hour week to 45 hours at straight-time pay, which he claimed would amount to a 5 to 8 percent pay increase.

The proposal was blasted by UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas who called it a "phony bribe" offered in return for the surrender of basic labor standards. He recommended its "unqualified rejection."

"Adoption of the 45-hour work week for the country would add at least six million to the ten million who will face the bitter prospect of unemployment in 1946," Thomas said "Wilson's proposal is a formula for a quick return to staggering unemployment and economic chaos for the whole country.

Reuther, who heads the wage negotiations with GM, submitted a four-part economic brief during the conferences last week in Detroit, giving "The Case for Maintaining Take-Home Pay Without Increasing Prices."

The first section set forth the nation's need for the 30 percent increase and the second took up the corporation's ability to pay this increase without increasing the prices of its products. Reuther emphasized that the union's demand takes into account the well-being of the whole population.

The brief presented figures to show that without a wage increase the real wages of GM workers in 1946 will buy slightly less than the average 1940 earnings of $1,804.

The third part of the brief emphasizes the major responsibility of manufacturers of durable goods, especially autos, to promote full employment by raising wages without increasing prices, and the fourth part stresses that now is the time to adjust wages.

Reuther attacked GM President Wilson's proposal to increase the work-week to 45 hours in a telegram sent to Chairman Murray, of the Senate Education and Labor Committee, early last week, in which he charged that General Motors has given notice of a sitdown strike against the government's policy of raising wages, and was trying to provoke its workers to strike.

Senator Murray called Wilson's proposal "unthinkable." If Congress were to legislate this longer work week, he said, "the result would be a substantial increase in the number of jobless workers throughout the nation."

OIL COS. STALL PAY TALKS

PRES. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union charged this week that colective bargaining with the oil companies whose properties were seized by the Government several weeks ago has been stalled indefinitely since the Navy took them over.

He demanded either that the companies agree to arbitrate immediately the difference between the 15 percent offered by the industry and the 30 percent asked by the union, or that the Navy return the seized plants to private management and allow the wage dispute to be settled through the normal process of collective bargaining.

Asst. Sec. of the Navy H. Struve Hensel conferred with both union and company representatives in Washington on Wednesday in an attempt to settle the dispute. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the previous day, had sent Hensel a telegram warning that labor might come to consider Navy seizure of the properties "merely a device for defeating the just wage demands of the oil workers," unless arrangements were completed at once for a bargaining conference between the employers and the union.

Knight said in a statement issued after the conference that "for the second time within three weeks, the private oil companies have defied the efforts of the U. S. Government to settle the wage dispute with the Oil Workers Union. "The conferences held by Hensel with both union and management, were fruitless," he declared.

"The managements, which had previously rejected settlement proposals of Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach, again erected barbed wire barricades against legitimate collective bargaining by demanding plant by plant negotiations," Knight declared.

It would take many months and "needlessly dissipate the energies of important officials in both management and government," Knight declared, to negotiate "on such a piecemeal basis."

The union has acted in good faith, he said, and expects the company to do the same. Under the status quo maintained since Navy seizure, the rehiring of thousands of returning veterans has been prevented by retention of the 48-hour week, and there has been no assurance offered that there will be no reduction in take-home pay when hours are reduced to 40 a week.

The 15 percent offer of the companies, Knight stated, would result in an average loss of yearly earning amounting to $397 per worker.

He pointed to the huge profits made by 14 major oil companies whose net income was 96 percent greater in 1944 than in 1939 to show that the industry could well afford to pay the 30 percent demanded by the union.

C. of C. Man Hits 'Compensation' Racket

CIO Regional Director Hugh Thompson found that he was not a voice crying in the wilderness when he asserted this week that the Buffalo Civic Full Employment Committee should not force unemployed workers into low paying jobs, Thomas L. Stokes, Scripps-Howard columnist, reported.

Stokes said that not only did some members of the committee agree with Thompson, but that President Streeter of the Chamber of Commerce declared that he did not think "this committee ought to starve anybody into jobs. We shouldn't do anything to destroy the standard of living."

KEYS TO A REAL VICTORY

Victory in the war against reaction and hunger did not come with VE and VJ Days. The military defeat of fascism does not automatically bring security, well being and permanent peace.

These are obvious facts, as any worker facing cuts in take-home pay, layoffs and unemployment can testify—and as any observer watching the efforts to stir up international suspicion and distrust can see.

What can bring final victory for all the people who fought and worked to crush German and Japanese aggression, who fought and worked for a world of freedom from hunger and fear?

Here in the U. S. we have two answers to this question. The first is the united support of all CIO members, backing Philip Murray, in the demand for wages to offset losses in take-home pay and in the national purchasing power. Along with that fight goes the continuing drive to protect union security, against the Ball-Hatch bill and for genuine collective bargaining.

The second is political action to build security on the home front and to clinch the peace on the international front. Not second in terms of importance, for the two are inseparably tied together.

The fight for wages to offset take-home cuts is both an "economic" and a "political" issue. Despite the end of the war, wage policies are still affected by what government does in Washington. Government includes Congress—even though Congress does not legislate directly on wages, it has tremendous power to influence and shape economic policy. The Administration in turn is continuously and directly influenced by the influence the voters have on Congress.

What can we do to help Congress—and through Congress the Administration — to think and act on the all-important question of the national purchasing power?

We can tell our Congressmen the simple facts of economic life in America today. We can tell them how take-home pay has been cut while the cost of living stays up 50 per cent beyond 1941 levels. We can tell them that layoffs are throwing hundreds of thousands out of work and on to the miserably inadequate state unemployment compensation benefits.

We can tell our Congressmen that profits are so huge ($6.4 billion in 1944, after taxes) and expected to be even greater in 1945 and 1946 that wage increases can be met without price increases. We can tell them that government studies show that industry can today meet wage increases of up to 24 per cent without any losses.

In letters, wires, phone calls and personal visits we can urge our Congressmen to get up on the floor of the House and Senate and speak out on these facts. We can ask them to work actively for bills directly affecting jobs and purchasing power—the full employment bill, the 65-75 cent minimum wage bill, the unemployment compensation bill, and other measures directly concerned with the nation's welfare and security.

This is political action geared to economic action. The two are inseparable. And once we get political action rolling on the wage issue, we will have made a long start on solving the other problems that beset our nation and the world today.

The U. S. is the strongest power in the world today. To make that strength count for world security, we must have a secure economy and a prosperous people here at home.

Our job is clear—to use the strength that comes from political action to win back our national power, to win security and contribute to the peace and friendship we fought and worked to achieve.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

FROM Paris Moscow is less than 10 hours by air. You fly in minutes and hours over blood-soaked country that took months and years and millions of lives for armies to cross.

Looking from the plane, you see ruined towns, villages and even fields pockmarked with hundreds of bomb craters. All Europe is so war-devastated that it will take years to supply the population with bare necessities and restore normal prewar standards.

The CIO delegation was deeply impressed with the physical needs of the people of all countries visited, the need for America to give a helping hand in reconstruction, and the all-important mission of the World Federation of Trade Unions to so unite labor in all countries that the world ruin of another war may be averted.

The delegation interrupted their trip to Moscow for a brief visit to Berlin. They saw first hand the terrific destruction the Nazis brought upon their biggest city.

While they were in Berlin, hundreds of drowned and decomposing German bodies were being taken out of subways flooded by the Nazis when the Red Army approached.

They saw the chancellery where Hitler, the architect of German ruin, held sway, now blasted and stripped bare, and also the balcony from whence he addressed his deluded followers.

Signs on streets here and elsewhere in the Soviet zone contrast Soviet and Nazi attitudes on race hatred and the rights of all peoples, and say, "Hitler's come and go but the German people remain."

Those who remain are mostly old men, women and large numbers of children. Few if any young men are on the streets.

Unions are well organized in the Soviet zone but are little organized in other zones. A meeting was held Wednesday, Oct. 17—attended by Hillman and Kuznetsov—of union leaders of all zones to discuss the formation of a central union committee for all Berlin. These were mostly older, prewar unionists held in concentration camps during the war.

The CIO delegation arrived in Moscow Thursday. England, France and Germany saw American soldiers everywhere but here there are practically none, though there are many evidences of American aid, equipment and machines in the plants visited.

Despite terrible devastation of the western part of the country and necessities diverting all energies to aid the war effort, Moscow already shows many signs of solid reconstruction and gradual improvement of the people's lot.

Unlike the U. S., the chief difficulty of reconversion seems to be a labor shortage. There is no unemployment, and the plants visited tell how many more workers could be used and they hope for a better labor supply as demobilization proceeds.

★ ★ ★

The delegation was most warmly welcomed everywhere as a symbol of American friendship. Between acts at the big Bolshoi theater, there was an announcement from the stage that the CIO delegation was present, and the whole audience rose and applauded.

There was a hearty reception also at a big meeting of active unionists at the House of Unions, which was formerly a noblemen's club. Kuznetsov introduced the delegates, and Carey, Haywood and Curran spoke, testifying to the friendship of the American and Soviet peoples and labor movements.

At the Stalin auto plant and at machine-building, textile, power and other plants visited, the workers were eager to talk about their unions and ask about American unions. They personally exhibited much warmth, good fellowship and delight at this evidence of American labor interest in their problems and achievements.

The delegation was off to Leningrad Tuesday for a three-day visit, and expects to return to America before the end of October.

CIO GROUP CHARGES PERON ANTI-LABOR

THE CIO Latin - American Affairs Committee, representing over six million organized workers in the U. S., this week denounced as "utter falsehood" Argentine strongman Juan D. Peron's claim of labor support and also expressed strong displeasure over U. S. Senator Robert M. La Follette's reported statement that Peron had the support of Argentina's working classes. The Committee is headed by Jacob S. Potofsky, secretary - treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Asserting that it had first-hand information on the political and labor situation in Argentina because of its close and confidential contacts with bona fide Argentine labor elements and because of its activity in the inter-American field, the CIO Committee pointed out that the few unions Peron could really claim for himself were dominated by appointed henchmen and goons acting in connivance with the regime's secret police.

So-called pro-Peron labor demonstrations are usually staged in strategic areas of Buenos Aires by imported hoodlums and sympathetic police concentration provides theatrical effects that cause them to be noticed by the populace, the Committee declared.

Krzycki to Poland

Leo Krzycki, vice-president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, will attend the convention of the Polish Trade Union Federation in Warsaw, Nov. 18, according to an Allied Labor News report. He is carrying greetings from President Murray to the meeting, first held since the defeat of the Nazis.

France Goes Left

France's national election, just concluded, showed a strong trend to the left, with Communist, Socialist and Popular Republican Movement (MRP) coming out on top. According to late returns, the Communists won 152 seats in the new Assembly, Socialists 142, MRP 142. The Radical Socialists, which despite the name are a conservative party, went down to 25 seats, from 142 in the last national elections, held in 1936.

YOUR DOLLAR FOR PAC CAN HELP DO THIS

British Dockers' Pay

"Peace, however, has brought new problems. Real wages are down, because of curtailment of overtime payments. Many workers are leaving war industry for less highly-paid employment. The rank and file is pressing the unions to go forward with demands for improved standards in regard to both wages and hours."

Sound familiar? It's from an article on the dock workers' strike in Britain, written by Gordon Schaffer of Reynolds News, one of the largest circulating Sunday papers in England, and the organ of the cooperative movement there.

Latin-American

Layoffs and cutbacks are plaguing Latin-American workers, too, ALN reports from Mexico City. Thirty thousand workers in Chile were laid-off in one copper mining area, 20,000 face lay-offs in Cuba, with a similar crisis looming in Mexico.

Direct cause of the lay-offs is the ending of purchases by the U. S. for war use.

Miners' unions are demanding that their governments take over the mines and run them to avert national economic depression and mass unemployment. Most Latin-American mining is in the hands of U. S. capital, with a small percentage controlled by the British.

Guerrillas Released

Two of the leaders of the guerrilla forces who fought the Japanese in the Philippines have been released from jail, a delayed ALN dispatch reports from Manila. They are Luis Taruc and Casto Alejandro, leaders of the "Hukbalahap" which was organized in March, 1942, to carry on resistance against the invaders.

The two men were jailed by the Counter Intelligence Corps of the U. S. Army, which has also arrested scores of other Huk fighters and leaders, and members of the Natl. Peasants Union. Manila trade unionists led the campaign for the release, with a 30,000-strong demonstration there in September.

Praise for WFTU

The World Federation of Trade Unions, set up this past month in Paris by 65 national trade union centers representing 75,000,000 workers, draws praise from J. Alvarez Del Vayo, minister in the Spanish Republican government. Writing in the current issue of The Nation, he says:

"The day on which Philip Murray announced labor was going to ask for a place at the peace table marked a turning point in the history of the world . . . by courageously crossing the frontiers of the U. S., American labor will now command attention in Europe as well as at home. In the international crises that lie ahead it can play a decisive role.

"At the same time the increase in its prestige abroad will place it in a better position to fight for the interests of American workers.

"Sidney Hillman and the CIO have rendered an invaluable service to international democracy."

NMU Aided Strike, But Brought GI's Back Home

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union this week asserted that its members sailed all troopships during the rank-and-file strike of N. Y. members of the AFL Intl. Longshoremen's Assn. against the leadership of its president, Joseph P. Ryan. The NMU members joined the picket lines. In an editorial in The Pilot, the NMU stated:

"The War Shipping Administration fought the strike on the phony issue of keeping the troopships sailing. The longshoremen worked all troopships. We sailed them . . . WSA mysteriously made non-troopships troopships. We demanded a list of bona fide troopships. It was refused. Meanwhile, WSA had tied up hundreds of ships in the James River and elsewhere."

Backs Farm Electric Plan

The CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Union this week endorsed the U. S. Rural Electrification expansion program, pointing out that it not only would help to bring needed electricity to farmers but also would provide an estimated 36,000 jobs a year for the next three years in the electrical industry.

Clifford McAvoy, Washington legislative representative of the UE., told the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that loans to the REA over a suggested three-year period would make it possible for the agency to extend electrical current to 1,300,000 farm homes.

AFL Suspends Machinists

The Intl. Assn. of Machinists, the AFL's largest affiliate with a claimed membership of 680,000, was suspended by the AFL executive council last week for failure to pay dues since last November. The IAM has been engaged in a prolonged dispute with the AFL over jurisdictional questions involving the Carpenters and the Operating Engineers, which led to the IAM withdrawing from the AFL in 1943 but reaffiliating a year later.

At the IAM convention which opens Oct. 29 in New York, the Machinists are expected to take up the question of again voting by referendum to withdraw from the AFL.

WLB Job Program

A program to find postwar employment for its experienced labor relations specialists and other staff members has been undertaken by the Natl. War Labor Board, which is expecting to disband by the end of the year.

National and local unions wishing to build up their staffs to meet labor-government problems may obtain complete information on the background and experience of professional or clerical persons from William Brody, Director of Personnel, Natl. War Labor Board, Washington, D. C.

ANTI-65c AN HOUR GANG SHOWS HAND

OPPOSITION to the 65-75c wage floor came out into the open this week in Senate and House committee hearings, with the big boys using phoney "farm" organizations, small businessmen and the like as fronts for their drive to keep present sweatshop levels.

At the same time, CIO kept up its fight for the bill with testimony by Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and George Baldanzi, vice-president of the Textile Workers. An unexpected ally was found in Robert W. Johnson, head of Johnson & Johnson, the country's biggest bandage company, who testified that a manufacturer who can't pay a living wage has no right to be in business.

Johnson told the committee that it "should take the position that the average American workman cannot keep body and soul together on less than $30 a week anywhere in the U. S."—which requires a 75c minimum.

Hillman rested his argument on the need for a decent wage level to maintain full production, full employment, and lasting peace, which he said, must be based "on the security and prosperity of the working people of the world."

He joined CIO Pres. Philip Murray's testimony of last week in blasting at hints of a "compromise," reported set at 55c an hour. "This is no compromise at all," he said. "It is a flat refusal to do anything toward raising substandard wages."

Hillman pointed out that the greatest market for American production, despite the greatly increased foreign trade we all hoped to see, is still the American people, "working full time at decent wages, enjoying at least a subsistence standard of living. Without that market, we cannot have full production or full employment or security in America. And if America is not secure, then we cannot play our part in building a peaceful world."

Baldanzi used textile profit figures to show how easily the industry can pay the 65c wage, pointing to increases from $38,000,000 in 1939 to $400,000,000 in 1945—which amounts to $744 profit per worker in cotton and $1,690 in woolens.

The opposition fronts used by big business during the week included an ex-newspaperman now working as a lobbyist for the Natl. Farmers Grange, an attorney for a truckers' association, and one of the lesser vice-presidents of the Western Union Co.

Western Union, this man said, is worried about the future of the American family—which is why it believes the law should not forbid Western Union to employ child labor as messengers. Such decisions, he said, should be "a family matter" and besides forbidding child labor would 'involve serious hardship" — for Western Union.

Shipbuilder Balks AFL

Andrew J. Higgins refused last week to accept a War Labor Board order extending a contract with an AFL union in his New Orleans shipyard, on the basis that the proper bargaining agent was determined. The CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, which claims to represent a majority of the 3,000 employes, has filed a petition for an election with the Natl. Labor Relations Board. The Board has set Nov. 1 as date for a hearing on the petition.

Smith-Connally Hit

Repeal of the strike-notice section of the War Labor Disputes Act has been asked by the Labor Dept. on the basis that it hurts rather than helps industrial peace. Asst. Sec. of Labor Daniel Tracy told the House Military Affairs Committee that the 30-day "cooling-off" period called for by the Act "frequently becomes the white-heat point of the dispute."

EYES ON

By FRE

NOVEMBER 6th, the fourth largest city in the nation may have a new Mayor. His name is Richard T. (Dick) Frankensteen, vice-president of the CIO United Auto Workers Union, former football star, a talented musician, and a firm follower of the progressive ideals of the late President Roosevelt.

A native of Detroit, Frankensteen has a good chance to become its "first citizen." He swept the primary election by a victorious 82,936 votes to incumbent Mayor Jeffries' 68,754. He has back of him an all-time registration high in municipal elections, with 802,761 eligible to vote. He has the endorsement of the Democratic Party. And he has as an opponent a three-term incumbent who is on the record as anti-labor, anti-Roosevelt and pro-Dewey.

Frankensteen is a people's candidate. He is wholeheartedly supported by CIO and by the CIO and National Political Action Committees, as well as by prominent Railroad Brotherhood and AFL officials, civic leaders, and a wide variety of organizations. The breadth of his backing belies the charge that he is exclusively "labor's" candidate.

Frankensteen's main concern is post-war jobs. He wants to work with the federal government and private industry to help to guarantee them. He says:

5 (Left) Sore point with Detroiters, who slums, rats, garbage. There have been

DETROIT

D d'AVILA

"Bread lines, apple stands, idle mines and idle factories are as great a threat to democratic government as Hitler and Hirohito ever were. Jobs must be created and created now. All Americans in all walks of life must unite to mobilize for peace as we mobilized for war. Government and labor and industry must work out their mutual problems to the benefit of all the people."

He charges Mayor Jeffries is unfit for the test of the reconversion period. Unfit psychologically as an opponent of the late President Roosevelt's socially progressive policies. And unfit on the basis of a do-nothing record.

Detroit's transportation system has broken down. Long lines of men and women weary after a day's work wait for a chance to squeeze themselves into crowded street cars. Detroit's taxes are the highest on record. Detroit's postwar job program is nothing but blueprints. Detroit's alleys and slums are playgrounds for rats.

It all adds up—in the opinion of Frankensteen supporters—to a better than even chance that come election day, the people will vote out Jeffries and vote in Frankensteen.

REPORT FROM RUSSIA

By LEN DE CAUX

LONDON—The CIO delegation to the Paris World Trade Union meeting was on the way back to the U. S. this week after an eight-day visit to the Soviet Union which left a deep impression of the need for closer understanding and cooperation between labor movements and peoples of the U. S. and the U. S. S. R. It was a return visit for that paid to the U. S. by the Soviet Trade Union delegation last July.

The CIO delegation visited Leningrad as well as Moscow and met with many union officials and rank filers in the various plants, besides being received by Foreign Secretary Molotov and U. S. Ambassador Harriman. The delegates addressed a number of union and shop meetings and had many opportunities to to see how unions function in the U. S. S. R. and how the Soviet people are going about the great tasks of reconstruction.

CIO delegates to the Paris World Trade Union meeting visited the Soviet Union, to see Nazi-caused destruction like this heap of rubble in Leningrad.

Carey Urges Cooperation

The delegation's impressions were summed up by Chairman James B. Carey at a concluding press conference in Moscow. "We are deeply moved by the personal warmth and friendship shown us on all sides," Carey said. "The eager desire of the Soviet people for closer ties of understanding and friendship with the people of the U. S. has been evidenced again and again. This has greatly strengthened our determination as CIO representatives to do everything within our power to cement our cordial relations with Soviet trade unions and to establish ever closer unity between our two great peoples for lasting peace, growing prosperity and democratic progress."

Carey said the delegation was "horrified by wholesale destruction wrought by the Nazis but was filled with greatest admiration for the determination and united effort of the people, which has already brought about substantial reconstruction and promises great things for future elevation of living standards. We believe America can assist greatly by supplying many machines and other products the Soviet Union so sorely needs and that in so doing we shall be promoting our own prosperity and drawing closer together our two peoples for their common goals," Carey declared.

Says Unions Democratic

Respecting the Soviet trade unions, Carey said the delegation was impressed by their activities promoting workers' interests as well by their magnificent, wholehearted participation in winning the war and in the tasks of reconstruction. "We've also noted with pleasure their many activities of social welfare and of a cultural character and the comprehensive nature of the social security system they operate. Our observations have increased our pride in being associated with such a great trade union movement through the World Federation of Trade Unions."

Answering reporters' questions about Soviet trade unions, Carey said the AFL had charged the CIO with being communistic and the U.S.S.R. unions with being agents of government, and added that "both these charges are obviously unfounded." He commented on democratic procedures followed by U.S.S.R. unions in the election of officers and in other respects, and declared that "the answer to the question of whether Soviet trade unions are democratic is emphatically yes."

Carey urged that there be no delay in plans for grants to the U.S.S.R. to enable it to obtain American machines and materials for reconstruction. He said the CIO hoped soon to act on the establishment of an American-Soviet trade union committee as well as on a similar joint committee with unions of Britain and France.

The delegation was carried to Moscow in an American-made Soviet plane. The CIO representatives stopped off briefly at Berlin for a tour through the city to witness the terrific destruction the Nazis brought down on their capital.

The first few days in Moscow were devoted to visits to the big Stalin auto plant, the Krasny proletarier machine building plant, a power plant and textile and steel plants outside the city. Delegates met with directors, union officials and shop workers, and attended shop meetings, besides visiting medical clinics, prophylactoriums, day nurseries and kindergartens, workers' clubs and other facilities attached to the plants.

Soviet workers asked questions about union functioning in the U. S. and were particularly interested in what happens to unemployed workers in America. The chief complaint at plants visited appeared to be a labor shortage, not unemployment.

The delegation was particularly delighted by entertainment given in the big hall of the home of trade unions—a nobleman's home in Czarist times—with an orchestra, chorus, dancers, singers and acrobats, all workers from shops or children of workers.

In the same hall the day before, the delegation was welcomed by a mass meeting of active union members. Vasilli Kuznetsov, chairman of the All Union Central Council of Trade Unions, introduced the delegation and praised the CIO for its progressive policies, its great part in the war, and its work in the forming of the WFTU. He expressed hope for early formation of an American-Soviet trade union committee. Carey, Allan S. Haywood and Joseph Curran addressed the meeting on behalf of CIO.

This exclusive, first hand report on the CIO delegation's visit to the Soviet Union was cabled by CIO NEWS Editor Len De Caux. CIO delegates, who talked to trade union officials and rank and file workers, found that Soviet unions are democratic and recommended closer cooperation between the working class there and in the U. S. to build a world that is "fit for the children of heroes to live in."

Curran paid tribute to "the greatness of your people who though wounded beyond imagination have defeated the Nazis, and have immediately turned your machinery to peace production. You have shown what a free people can do," he said. "In aiding you we have aided ourselves, saving countless American lives."

He said, "the CIO will work side by side with the Soviet trade unions for the end of all wars, equal rights for all with no discrimination and for a world free from exploitation."

Haywood praised work done by Kuznetsov and the Soviet delegation to the U. S. in furthering better understanding. He said, "There's much we can learn from each other though our systems are different." Haywood said he was favorably impressed with the opportunity for youth, with the social security system and other Soviet social welfare activities. "Workers in the U. S. want the same simple things. Common people everywhere must learn to understand each other," he declared.

Carey said, "at such union meetings it's difficult to believe we are in Moscow instead of the U. S. There is the same kind of audience, the same kind of work, the same aspirations." Conveying Pres. Philip Murray's compliments to Kuznetsov, Carey praised Soviet unions' part in forming the WFTU. He said its task is "to eliminate fear of war and insecurity and build a better world fit for the heroes of the U.S.S.R., U. S. Britain and all the other United Nations—a world fit for their children to live in."

At Leningrad, the delegation had an opportunity to see the terrific destruction wrought by the Nazis and they were deeply moved by stories and evidence of its heroic defense during the long siege. Peter Popkov, mayor of Leningrad all through the siege, received the delegation and told of his people's bravery and endurance of all hardships, with hundreds of thousands of civilians dying from cold, hunger and bombardment. Speaking vigorously and frankly, he urged the delegation to give a fairer, truer report about Leningrad and the Soviet people than has the American press.

'Eternally Grateful'

While in Leningrad, the CIO delegates addressed a mass meeting of active unionists in the big trade union center. Peter Kazakov, organizational director of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, presided and Carey, Albert Fitzgerald and Reid Robinson spoke on behalf of the CIO.

Robinson expressed the deep emotion felt by the delegates at the sight of women and children without limbs and many other evidences of destruction, suffering and heroic endurance seen at Leningrad. "Your sacrifices have been beyond belief," he said. "We should be eternally grateful to you and the whole Soviet people for stopping the Nazi war machine at Leningrad and Stalingrad. We hope our deeds will show we appreciate your sacrifices and that the story we take home will help counteract the propaganda against you spread by Fascists."

Fitzgerald paid high tribute to the spirit and determination of the Soviet people and the personal warmth with which the CIO delegation was welcomed everywhere. He said, "You've gained friends who are going to insist our government do everything in its power to aid you. We've seen the price you paid to establish freedom for all peoples of the world. We in America are determined that no force within or without is ever going to turn us against your people again."

Hits Anti-Soviet Press

Fitzgerald said that American press attacks on the U.S.S.R. come from the same forces as are fighting the CIO. "These papers have tried to inflame the public against the U.S.S.R., but they are losing this fight."

After a farewell banquet, the delegation left early Friday morning by plane for London. The delegation included Chairman Carey, Haywood, John Green, Emil Rieve, Fitzgerald, Robinson, Curran, Lee Pressman, Len DeCaux, John Abt and Vincent Sweeny.

Watch forthcoming issues of the CIO NEWS for a series of articles by Editor De Caux reporting on impressions gleaned on his visit to Europe, and including descriptions of Soviet factory life, workers' clubhouses, how unions function, social insurance, and other aspects of the great reconstruction effort in that country.

Education Notes

Huberman With Pamphlet Press

Leo Huberman, public relations and educational director of the CIO National Maritime Union for the past three years, this week became the new director of Pamphlet Press, replacing Joseph Gaer, announced Reynal & Hitchcock, publishers who sponsor Pamphlet Press. Gaer is continuing his work as Publications Director of the CIO Political Action Committee.

Huberman is the author of several books in the fields of economic history and trade unionism, including We, The People, Man's Worldly Goods, The Labor Spy Racket, and America Incorporated.

'Citizen CIO'

First issue of "Citizen CIO," publication of the new Natl. CIO Community Services Committee, formerly the Natl. CIO War Relief Committee, appeared this week. This organization has changed its name to more closely express the scope and nature of its activities since the coming of peace.

The Committee "will continue to work in the fields of Foreign Relief, Veterans' Aid, and Campaigns, but the greatest emphasis will be given to work within the American community to the end of bringing higher standards of welfare services to all citizens," states Citizen CIO.

Two Conferences

CIO unions took part in two educational conferences held this month by the American Labor Education Service. First was the sixth annual Midwest Workers' Education Conference held in Milwaukee, Oct. 13-14, which was attended by 250 representatives of 40 unions from 37 cities in 12 midwestern states. Theme of the conference was "How Much Does Labor Education Serve the Labor Movement Today?"

The second was a conference on Full Employment sponsored jointly by the New Jersey CIO Council and the ALES which was held Oct. 20 at Trenton, N. J. The conference took up the question of how government, community, labor and minority groups can work together.

Living Newspaper

A "Living Newspaper" dramatization of the union's political and economic program will be presented by the CIO Intl. Longshoremen & Warehousemen at the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco, Nov. 16. Script is being written by the union's director of information, Morris Watson, who produced the original Living Newspaper shows in New York for the Federal Theater.

The affair will be the highlight of the union's campaign to bring about community understanding of wage and hour demands and other union policies, with special reference to the problems of veterans and women.

Alabama Convention

NEARLY 300 delegates to the seventh convention of the Alabama CIO State Industrial Union Council, held Oct. 19 - 21 at Birmingham, charted a course of action for the coming year designed to build and strengthen the CIO in Alabama, and secure enactment of state and national legislation for the benefit of the people.

Pres. Carey E. Haigler was reelected for a second term and E. W. Wells, member of the United Steelworkers, was elected to a new position of full-time combination secretary-treasurer and Political Action Committee director. The new office was set up under the new constitution adopted at the convention.

Resolutions were passed supporting the National CIO's legislative program and pledging all-out efforts to defeat in 1946 all anti-labor and anti-Negro political candidates, both state and national. Extension of political collaboration with the AFL, the Railroad Brotherhoods and all progressive citizens groups was urged.

The convention came out strongly in defense of Negroes in a resolution pointing out that "the main weapons of the employers to weaken the CIO and to cut wages is that of pitting race against race."

"We must recognize that the white workers of Alabama and the CIO as a whole cannot go forward if organized labor does not fight for the civil, political and economic rights of all workers," the resolution stated.

The convention urged strong support for the full anti-discrimination policy enunciated by CIO Pres. Philip Murray calling for: (1) Equal opportunity and absolutely fair treatment for all Negro members of the CIO; (2) maintenance of the war-time gains of Negro workers, and, (3) protection of the up-grading and seniority rights of Negroes.

LONGSHOREMEN'S DEMAND: An immediate interim increase of 25c an hour in the basic pay of West Coast Longshoremen, pending final outcome of protracted negotiations with the Waterfront Employers Assn. of the Pacific, is being demanded by the CIO Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. The union is demanding 25c an hour straight time and 37½c overtime.

The contract between the union and the association expired Sept. 30 and by mutual agreement was extended to cover the period of negotiations. Since the union's proposals so far have been rejected and no counterproposals made by the employers, the ILWU said that an immediate 25c increase was "essential for the welfare of our members."

PAPER CONTRACT: An agreement providing substantial wage increases and a group insurance plan has been signed with the Metropolitan Container Council, an association of employers in the corrugated paper industry, announces CIO Wholesale and Warehouse Workers Local 65. The contract covers 1,200 union members employed in 20 plants in the New York area.

Pay increases which total $4 a week call for a $2 raise effective April 1, and another $1 as of Oct. 1, 1946. The group insurance plan, which will be financed by employer contributions of 3 percent of the payroll, provides life and accident insurance, hospitalization, sick benefits and surgical care.

BOSTON STEEL PARLEY: National wage negotiations currently being conducted by the CIO United Steelworkers of America and the need for intensified PAC work, were among the subjects discussed at the eighth annual conference of USA District 1 in Boston. About 300 delegates representing 40,000 workers attended.

District 1 Director Martin J. Walsh who is also a member of the top negotiating committee at Pittsburgh, reported on the situation there. USA. Dist. 38 Director James G. Thimmes called for more PAC work, asserting that legislation favorable to labor depended on having friends in city, state and national positions.

FTA Wins Big Calif. Vote

Workers in 60 canneries in Northern California voted 6,000 strong for the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers union in industry-wide elections held last week by the Natl. Labor Relations Board. The vote was 6,067 for the FTA to 4,701 for the AFL and 110 for an independent union.

The CIO union also won bargaining rights for workers employed in six of 12 independent canneries employing 10,000 workers. The AFL won four, and results in the other two are unsettled pending a check of challenged votes.

OPA Controls Would Lower Home Prices

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE housing boom is on. In the week after War Production Board Order L-41, which limited the sale price of houses built with priorities to $8,000, was lifted contractors made thousands. They sold houses built with those priorities for $9,000 and up.

Early in September, a group of national consumer organizations called on Reconstruction Director Snyder. One of their main concerns was the possibility of an inflation in housing, especially if WPB Order L-41 was lifted.

Snyder pooh - poohed their fears, saying that in 30 to 60 days every lumber yard in the country would have an inexhaustable supply of building materials. The incredible shortsightedness of Snyder's whole approach to the problem is now obvious. The Department of Commerce has just reported that short supplies of lumber, brick, clay sewer pipe, cast iron soil pipe and bath tubs will hold up construction. The scramble for materials is on.

OPA Administrator Bowles has been urging action ever since the announcement was first made that L-41 would be lifted. OPA under the law can put ceilings on materials that go into houses, but not on the finished article.

OPA'S PROPOSAL

OPA proposes a new house ceiling to cover cost of construction plus a reasonable profit and an old house ceiling of the sale price paid for any house sold since 1942. A house which hadn't been sold since 1942 would not be under ceiling until it was sold, when its sale price would become the ceiling. This plan was unanimously approved by a four agency committee set up by Snyder.

Bowles told the Senate Small Business Committee home price ceilings are an "absolute necessity" if we are to avoid a speculative boom worse than followed World War I. He said:

"In addition to creating serious long-range economic problems, failure to stabilize prices of homes will make a mockery of the GI Bill of Rights which provides for Government loans up to $2000 to help veterans buy homes. . . . Failure to stabilize home prices will also make rent controls increasingly difficult to maintain."

Write your Congressman and Senators telling them the housing problems in your area and urging action by Congress to put OPA's plan for control of prices on homes into effect.

DAV Attacks Super-Seniority

THE CIO is eager to cooperate with management in setting up reemployment programs for disabled veterans, Vice President John J. Grogan of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers this week told the Chicago convention of the Disabled American Veterans, third largest veterans organization.

The DAV further cemented its relations with the CIO by opposing the return of the U. S. Employment Service to the states and criticizing Selective Service Director Hershey's super-seniority theory—on which the organizations see eye to eye. The CIO policy is to cooperate with all democratic bona fide veterans' organizations.

The convention adopted the report of its national service office, Millard M. Rice, attacking the Selective Service System's theory of super-seniority, which asserted:

"Continuation of so-called 'super-seniority' may result in many law suits, and possibly in many walkouts, strikes and strikes between veterans and non-veterans, over an issue which potentially affects only a small percentage of the total number of returned veterans."

The retiring DAV commander, Milton D. Cohn, denounced Sen. Bilbo and Rep. Rankin (Miss. polltaxers) as "cold indifferent lawmakers," and said that Rankin was blocking veterans' legislation by insisting on retaining chairmanship of the World War veterans' committee. Cohn said that in both Houses five or more committees are handling veterans' legislation, which should be handled by a major committee in each house.

SMITH BLASTED

Grogan said many CIO unions have given disabled veterans special seniority benefits, but "obviously unions cannot protect the rights of men to jobs when jobs do not exist.

"Our first task is to make sure that there are jobs by seeing to it that legislation making possible full employment is passed . . . The CIO wants better provision made for the dependents of veterans and the widows of those who have given their lives in the battle for freedom."

He warned that if profiteers succeed in their aim to destroy unions by organizing veterans to fight them, "workers, veterans and disabled veterans" will work "longer hours for less pay and everyone will face the fear of joblessness and hunger."

CIO Housing Plan

A five-point program for emergency housing, topped by a demand for the commandeering of vacant dwellings or an excess room tax, was adopted this week at a housing and jobs conference under the auspices of the Greater N. Y. CIO Council.

'Un-Americans' Get Called

For the first time since it went on a permanent basis through Rankin's move last January, the successor to the un-American Dies Committee got called this week by a group of liberal Congressmen.

The calling came after the Committee's counsel "requested" a number of radio commentators, and a quiz show, to send in their scripts for examination.

Said Rep. Celler, after listing a series of pro-fascist outfits that the committee has not touched:

"The present committee can either adopt the Dies course of unfounded character assassination, lynch law, and prosecutor-jury-executioner complex or it can proceed, as I hope it will, in a manner true to American tradition, with the right to be heard, fair proceedings, and placing emphasis on investigation of all, not a few, selected foreign isms."

Celler's speech, and subsequent speeches by Reps. Coffee (D. Wash.), Jackson (D. Wash.), Beimiller (D. Wisc.), Patterson (D. Cal.), Hook (D. Mich.), Marcantonio (A. L. P. N. Y.), Douglas (D. Cal.), and Savage (D. Wash)., hit the un-American Committee hard for well over an hour's debate.

Among facts on radio brought out were these: the NAM (never investigated) spent, through 53 affiliates, more than $82,000,000 on radio time. None of these scripts have been subpenaed or "requested."

Hit Tax Fake

The current tax bill, now in House-Senate conference, doubles the tax gift to the "99,900 wealthiest corporations and individuals," the Committee for a Progressive Tax Program said this week.

The committee, which consists of CIO and 14 other progressive organizations, said:

"If the conference committee adopts the Senate version on excess profits, which calls for outright repeal rather than the partial repeal voted by the House, the 900 richest corporations will get an average tax cut of $2,000,000 each, whereas the House version would mean a tax cut of $1,000,000 each.

"If the conferees adopt the House version on individual reductions, granting a minimum 10% cut, the taxpayer with an income of $1,000,000 would have his income after taxes increased 90%, while the increase would be 60% under the Senate version, allowing a 5% reduction in individual taxes."

This shadow-boxing in the conference will end up in both corporations and wealthy individuals getting maximum cuts, while the small taxpayer will hold the bag, the committee concluded.

Tips From The Opposition

A wise campaigner never overlooks a helpful tip from the opposition—and here's one from the Ohio Chamber of Commerce that we can learn from.

After a long tirade in a "Bulletin To Members" against the CIO's drive for jobs at decent take-home wages, the Chamber pleads with its members this way:

"Whatever your problem in bringing about a sound, healthy reconversion by the unmatched dynamics of private, competetive enterprise, it is both your privilege and your duty to tell the men whom we elect to solve our problems of government. Tell whom?

"President Truman, the White House,Washington, D. C. Sens. Taft and Burton, Senate Office Bldg., Wash., D. C., the Congressman from your district, House Office Bldg., Wash., D. C., the editor of your home town newspaper . . . probably the most important—because newspapers are used as the principal vehicle to influence public opinion."

Maybe we don't have the money represented in the Ohio C. of C., but we too can write letters and we can vote—if we register.

Watch Out For 'Repeal' Joker

President Murray warned sharply this week against possible jokers in the current move to repeal the Smith-Connally Act.

"The CIO holds now, as it held during the life of the statute, that the Smith-Connally Act should be repealed. It is, and has been, a useless, mischievous and dangerous piece of legislation," he said.

"The CIO further holds that no similar piece of legislation, whether it be the Ball-Hatch bill or anything like it, should take the place of the Smith-Connally Act.

"Just as the Smith-Connally Act impeded war production, so would the Ball-Hatch bill or any other bill directed at the normal rights and functions of unions impede the achievement of full production and full employment during the reconversion period and after it."

Anti-union strategy on repeal will probably follow two lines; (1) repeal only Sec. 8 of the Act, which requires strike votes, and leave in the prohibitions on political action and (2) pass the Ball-Hatch bill or something like it.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present 40c wage floor to 65c, then 75c; widens coverage.	Senate Labor Sub-Committee; House Labor Committee.	Wire Senators, Representative to support as written, reject "compromise" rumored at 55c.
Federal pay raise (S 1415)	Gives U. S. workers 20% pay raise to make up cuts in take-home due to end of overtime.	Senate Civil Service Committee, Sen. Downey (D., Calif.), chairman.	Urge Senators to support; bill important as chance for Congress to act directly on the wage issue.
Navy Yard pay (HR 4308)	Gives U. S. Navy Yard workers 48 hours' pay for 40 hours' work. Sponsored by Rep. DeLacy (D., Wash.)	In House Naval Affairs Committee.	Urge Representative to support as direct action on wage issue.
Jobless aid (S 1274, HR 3891)	As passed by Senate, merely extends present inadequate state aid to 26 weeks; includes seamen, U. S. workers.	Pigeonholed by tory Dem-GOP alliance in House Ways and Means Committee.	Urge Representative to join in efforts to blast it out of Ways and Means.
Equal pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work; no discrimination against women in layoffs.	Hearings start in House Labor Committee Oct. 29.	Urge support as aid in keeping up wage levels, as help to widows, wives of servicemen who must work.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Wipes out Wagner Act; ends free collective bargaining.	Being boomed as substitute for Smith-Connally Act, repeal of which now in the works.	Tell your Congressmen to repeal Smith-Connally Act, stay away from Ball-Hatch and all substitutes.

TELL YOUR CONGRESSMAN ABOUT TAKE-HOME PAY!

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

TAXES: the Senate has now passed its version of the tax bill, which gives even more to the corporations in the way of excess profits tax "relief" than the House did—by the simple act of abolishing it entirely.

The bill now goes to a House-Senate conference committee to iron out the differences between the two versions.

Immediate wires to both your Senators and to your Representative can still help in registering a protest against this outrageous "relief for the greedy" measure. Protest now will also help to build a record for the next tax bill.

* * *

EQUAL PAY: the equal pay for equal work bill (S 1178) is one of four chances Congress has to legislate directly on the wage issue. The bill prohibits discrimination against women in wages and in layoffs, is now in the House Labor Committee for hearings starting Oct. 29.

The other three are the 65-75c wage floor bill (S 1349, HR 3914), the 20% Federal base pay raise (S 1415) and the 48 hours' pay for 40 hours' work bill for Navy Yard workers (HR 4308).

Tell your Congressmen to support all four as important aids to CIO's drive to hold take-home pay at adequate levels.

* * *

MVA: much as the power trust would like to think so, the setback for the Missouri Valley Authority bill (S 555) in the Senate Irrigation sub-Committee doesn't kill the bill.

It goes next to the Senate Agriculture Committee, where hearings will begin late in November. Start building a campaign with your two Senators now for a favorable report. Check your Senators to see if they're on this committee.

* * *

FACTS: behind CIO's fight for decent take-home pay are facts like these, reported by Local 227 of the Textile Workers in Lawrence, Mass:

Of 2,076 job openings in Lawrence Sept. 12, 1,176 were in textile mills. "These jobs are mostly in the top making departments and have always paid low wages," the local writes. "The wages in these jobs pay between $25 and $27 per 40-hour week . . . At the above date, of 1,674 jobs, 1,332 were between less than 40c to less than 75c per hour."

Local 227 is passing on these facts to their Congressmen. Are you telling your story to Congress?

* * *

GUIDEPOSTS . . . watch the Congressional Record for speeches giving the facts on labor's case for wages to offset cuts in take-home pay . . . incidentally, each local and PAC unit should get the Congressional Record . . . write your Congressman to put you on the list . . . rumors are starting about a Thanksgiving recess . . . tell your man to stay on the job . . . hunger and unemployment take no recess . . . neither should the voters take a recess from telling their Congressmen what's on their mind . . .

Office of
THE PRESIDENT

EXECUTIVE 5581

October 30, 1945

Dear Congressman:

The House Military Affairs Committee has reported out H.R. 3937, a bill repealing the strike vote section of the Smith-Connally Act and substituting severe penalties against strikers and their unions. In addition the bill extends the present ban against political contributions by unions to include primaries and expenditures.

The bill is purely a punitive measure aimed not at correcting the admitted evils of the Smith-Connally Act but to afford the opportunity to employers to provoke or instigate stoppages and then proceed to mulct the union treasuries through endless lawsuits. The bill is aimed at the very destruction of labor unions and makes a mockery of collective bargaining agreements.

The American people cherish the right of workers to organize into unions and to enjoy the right of collective bargaining. The Congress should not tolerate any proposed bill which serves only the employers in current disputes and robs labor of these fundamental rights.

The members of labor unions enjoy a constitutional right of freedom of assembly and freedom of speech. This bill, which seeks to deprive them of the opportunity of expressing their views on political issues at their own meetings or through the distribution of their own literature, is a clear violation of our federal Constitution.

In the name of the six million loyal men and women members of the CIO I urge you to work for the defeat of this vicious un-American measure now before you.

Sincerely yours,

Philip Murray
President, CIO

uopwa

CIO sharply protested to Congress this week proposed amendments to the Smith-Connally law introduced by House Republican Whip Leslie C. Arends of Illinois. The amendments would outlaw labor political activity, and would penalize unions for stoppages during the terms of their contracts by loss of collective bargaining rights for one year, liability for civil damages, and release of employers from all bargaining obligations. (See Story—Page 5.)

BRING GIs HOME FOR XMAS—NMU

JUST home from Europe, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Natl. Martime Union this week charged that horrible conditions exist among the U. S. troops overseas because available shipping is not being used to bring home those entitled to discharges.

Curran sent a telegram of protest to President Truman and called a meeting of the national officers of the union to urge them to set a deadline guaranteeing that the high-point GIs would be homeward bound by Christmas.

If the deadline is not heeded, he warned, he would ask the NMU National Council to cut off crews from all vessels other than troopships.

Curran, who was a member of the CIO delegation to the World Federation of Trade Unions convention at Paris, declared:

"Servicemen from Camps Lucky Strike, Philip Morris and Herbert Tareyton told me of six suicides at Camp Lucky Strike alone, and of 12 soldiers in the three camps who went insane under the strain of endless waiting, delayed and changed orders to ship them home."

The NMU leader charged that ships that could be used to bring troops home were:

Transporting Chinese Nationalists troops and involving the U. S. in intervention in China's internal affairs; operating in a shuttle service between China and Australia under the auspices of the British; helping the Dutch suppress the Indonesians; carrying passengers and cargo in domestic and Far Eastern waters for private American ship owners, and rotting in War Shipping Administration "graveyard" anchorages.

Vets Break Lockout

Local 644, CIO Auto Workers, Pottstown, Pa., is crediting a newspaper ad, signed by 25 World War II veterans with breaking an eight-week lockout precipitated by the Spicer Corp. The firm, after a shutdown, proceeded to hire veterans in preference to other workers with greater seniority.

The ad stated that the company lied when it said the union opposed the rehiring of veterans and quoted the clause in the contract providing that employe-veterans should be given seniority equal to their time in the service when they were rehired.

Pact Protects Vets

The Textile Workers at Newark, N. J., is engaged in a drive to have all local unions persuade employers to sign the union's model veterans contract. A feature of the contract is provision for hiring disabled veterans—whether they worked in the plant or not—at jobs suitable to their handicaps.

Any inquiries on servicemen's and veterans' matters should be addressed to the CIO Veterans Committee, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Control of Atomic Science For Public Aid Urged By CIO

DEVELOPMENT of atomic science in the interests of the people and not of monoply profit was urged this week by CIO President Murray in testimony presented by Robert K. Lamb, legislative representative of the CIO Steelworkers, in a Senate committee hearing.

Criticizing previous testimony as expressing "fears and hopes for a future war" instead of dealing with the possibilities of atomic development's aid to mankind, Murray stated:

"I get the impression from talking to some of the atomic physicists that the bomb has not only made war obsolete, but that it should have made it unthinkable. The possible risks, not only to the participating nations but to mankind, are too sweeping to contemplate another war."

Murray urged passage of "S 1297 as revised jointly by Senators Kilgore and Magnuson in the October 8 print" to provide federal aid to both private and government scientific research and technological development.

He said that "increased government support is necessary to make scientific and technical information generally available, to equalise opportunity, promote competition, prevent monopoly and stimulate scientific and economic advance."

He urged the discharge by the armed forces of those who have exhibited scientific talent, and Veterans Administration aid in returning such persons to institutions of higher learning.

Murray said that the CIO endorses the idea of a national foundation for development of atomic work but sharply criticized the idea of placing control in the hands of dollar-a-year men.

"We insist on placing the control of this foundation in the hands of the duly elected representatives of the people," Murray said. "We welcome full participation of all scientists, and insist that the actual research carried on with federal grants be just as free of interference as responsible expenditure of public funds can make it.

"We favor full publication and availability of the results of such research. And we insist that those responsible for disbursing these funds shall be held to account, and not permitted to serve any interests except those of the general welfare."

Murray objected to the original OSRD Natl. Research Foundation Bill and the War Dept's. May-Johnson Atomic Energy Commission Bill "as designed to become the instruments of monopoly, and easy prey to those who want to launch this country on another arms race."

Hits Conscript Military Plan

Conscript miitary training as proposed by President Truman was sharply attacked this week by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Auto Workers in a telegram to Truman declaring that discovery of the atomic bomb has made such training no contribution to world peace, a threat to our democracy and a major and tragic error of the administration.

Recalling hearings before the Select Congressional Committee, Thomas wired:

"Impartial military strategists, who have no stake one way or the other in a large standing Army, testified that the military value of such training is highly doubtful. Discovery of the atomic bomb and its use in any future possible war makes conscript military training of still less value."

Low Income Building Seen Vital for U. S. Home Plan

THE CIO's plan to insure construction of 1,750,000 homes each year for the next 10 years and the employment of 7,000,000 workers directly and indirectly in the building industry was outlined this week by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the CIO United Auto Workers at a housing conference called by the N. Y. City CIO Council.

Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, urged improvement of the Wagner-Ellender housing bill (S 1342) and laid particular stress on the need for construction of better housing for the 50 percent of American families with incomes of less than $2,000 a year.

The CIO program, prepared with the assistance of William Nichols, who heads the CIO Housing Dept., pointed out that 16,000,000 homes will be needed in the next 10 years.

"This need," Thomas explained, "includes the replacement of 7,000,000 homes that were recognized as substandard five years ago; the replacement of those dwellings that will become substandard during the next 10 years, and the provision of facilities to meet the requirements of new families, particularly those established by returning veterans."

Thomas sharply criticized the "realism" of the Natl. Housing Agency, which predicted the construction of only 12,250,000 homes in the next 10 years.

"Spelled out, that kind of realism means that the Natl. Housing Agency believes that we will not exceed a house production program that falls so far short of meeting the need that it will condemn more than 16,000,000 families, or about 65,000,000 children and adults to live in houses which the government says are indecent and unsantitary for periods ranging from one to 15 years," Thomas said.

Thomas called for the creation of a permanent national housing agency which, unlike the present one, would have direction and control of all related agencies.

Among other points that Thomas stressed as necessary were: Subsidized housing for low income groups, development of a research division for the housing agency, and more government aid in financing homes and in guaranteeing loans.

CIO WAGE POLICY RESOLUTION

(Passed by CIO Exec. Bd. Nov. 1, 1945)

The affiliated unions of the CIO have within recent months presented to the employers of their industries demands for substantial wage increases. Completely ignoring their obligation under collective bargaining, the corporations of all important industries have abruptly and arrogantly rejected these requests. The feeble excuse, offered with suspicious unanimity, is that their financial position is such that they cannot afford any wage increases without corresponding increases in the price of their products.

A recent report of the staff of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion reveals the utter falsity of the position assumed by American Industry and the danger which it is creating for the Nation. This report shows that:

(a) Between April, 1945, and the spring of 1946, total salaries and wages paid will decline by 30 to 35 billion dollars, through increasing unemployment, drastic reductions in take home pay and severe cuts in basic wage rates.

(b) It is estimated that 1946 profits after taxes of major corporations will be over 7½ billion dollars—a figure higher than the wartime peak. The estimate for all business is 11 billion dollars of net profits after taxes.

(c) It is estimated that the average worker in manufacturing will have a gross weekly pay in 1946 of $33.96. This will represent 3 per cent less purchasing power than the average wage of $26.65 in 1941. When allowance is made for the payment of 1946 income taxes, the purchasing power of take-home pay for an average worker with exemption for one dependent will be $23.95 in 1941 dollars—a reduction of 10 per cent since January, 1941.

(d) The factors such as reduction of overtime, elimination of wartime upgrading, and the repeal of corporation excess profit taxes will reduce operating costs in 1946 to allow on this basis alone an increase in wage rates of 24 per cent.

In the face of these facts, the refusal of American industry to negotiate substantial wage increases for their workers unless accompanied by inflationary increases in prices is but a sinister attempt to repeat the policy of American business of the 1920's, when in the absence of labor unions in the mass producing industries, wages were frozen and the corporations reaped exorbitant profits. The result was economic chaos for our nation.

Continual decreasing purchasing power of American workers today with the selfish accumulation of fantastic corporation profits spells disaster.

President Truman in his recent radio address has completely supported the position of the CIO by stating that: "Wage increases are therefore imperative—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise the national income." The President very specifically enunciated the factors which are decreasing business costs and the excellent profitable position of the corporations, which in his words "add to the ability of industry to increase wages."

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the CIO shall continue its determined drive for substantial wage increases to provide adequate wages and thereby enable workers and their families to maintain a decent standard of living, and assure sustained purchasing power to keep the wheels of industry going.

The CIO and its affiliated unions have endeavored to achieve this end through bona-fide collective bargaining with representatives of industry. Management, regardless of the unchallenged facts, confines itself to a cold and arrogant "No."

We, therefore, demand that the representatives of American industry, in the interest of the Nation, comply with the mandate of the President of the U. S., engage in bona-fide collective bargaining and grant substantial wage increases. We are confident that continued refusal on the part of employers to meet this clear obligation will receive the universal condemnation of the American people.

Truman To Talk At Labor Meet

President Truman will address the opening session of the labor-management conference which he called, beginning this Monday, Nov. 5, in the Dept. of Labor auditorium in Washington, D. C.

CIO delegates attending the parley will include: President Murray, R. J. Thomas, Sidney Hillman, Emi Rieve, Reid Robinson, Albert J. Fitzgerald, John Green and Lee Pressman.

Serving as alternates will be: James B. Carey, Allan S. Haywood, L. S. Buckmaster, George F. Addes, Julius Emspak, Clinton S. Golden, Joseph Curran and Willard Townsend, with Ted F. Sivey as "official adviser."

The conference has been called by President Truman to bring together representative leaders of both labor and management for the purpose of establishing policies upon which to build better human relations in industry.

PUSH WAGE DRIVE HARD, CIO EXECUTIVE BD. URGES

By C. W. FOWLER

DRAWING heavily on the OWMR report showing that wage increases up to at least 24% are possible without touching profits, the CIO Executive Board this week voted to continue its wage increase drive "to enable workers and their families to maintain a decent standard of living and assure sustained purchasing power to keep the wheels of industry going."

In the same meeting, the Board voted a policy statement on atomic energy, authorized creation of an American-Soviet Trade Union Committee and a similar British body, urged study of a possible American-Italian group, sharply opposed compulsory military training, adopted a veterans' program, supported UNRRA without GOP-inspired amendments and demanded return of the U. S. Employment Service to the Federal government.

The wage campaign, President Murray said, must be run on the broadest possible basis, involving all the people in the community and telling them the facts of CIO's case against current cuts in take-home pay.

The country faces an economic loss of 35 billion dollars a year through pay cuts, he said. We can't hope to have anything like adequate national purchasing power with a loss such as this. Nor can we have full employment, Murray added, pointing out that the alternative was a depression more severe than anything the country ever experienced before.

Employers, he added, are on a gigantic sitdown strike. The strike has two main purposes—to raise prices and to break the unions. And to arm themselves for this fight against the nation, employers have a war chest of billions of dollars—not only in accumulated profits but also in the "carry back and carry forward" business in the tax bill. This last item allows employers tax refunds to equal their 1936-39 profit level, even if their plants are totally shut down.

Murray particularly praised the OWMR report, pointing out that he had originally suggested that such a study be made and that he had fought vigorously against its suppression. (The report, described in the Oct. 29 CIO NEWS, was "leaked" to correspondents and received wide publicity.)

The corporations, Murray said, are driving as hard as they can for inflation, so great is their greed for profits. Then, when inflation comes, they will seek to blame labor for causing it.

Supporting Murray's speech, Sidney Hillman emphasized the political consequences of low wages and unemployment. Without jobs for at all at decent pay, he said, we would have disunity and disruption in this country. Plenty of fascist elements are around looking for just such discontent, and if we have another great depression, then we stand a good chance of getting fascism and World War III in its wake.

Turning to CIO's foreign relations, Murray revealed that the American-Soviet Trade Union Committee was originally proposed by Vasili Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet Council of Trade Unions, and that he had told Kuznetsov he would recommend it to the next board meeting. Following that, Murray wrote to Sir Walter Citrine of the British Trades Union Congress with a similar proposal.

Citrine's reply was to say that the AFL should also be asked to join, which was done and was met by the usual AFL refusal to have anything to do with the rest of the world.

On the question of use of atomic energy, the Board voted to begin "immediate negotiations with Britain and Russia to agree on worldwide atomic energy controls, and extension of the agreement thereafter to the United Nations."

It also urged the United Nations to outlaw "use of atomic energy for military purposes, and all production of atomic bombs." For the U. S., it demanded "a democratically organized national agency to deal domestically with atomic energy, composed of representatives of government, labor, industry, farmers, churches, universities, scientists and military forces."

CAN BOOST PAY WITHOUT HIKING PRICES—TRUMAN

By FRED d'AVILA

LABOR is entitled to "substantial wage increases" to offset loss of take-home pay and industry generally can afford to pay them without loss of profits and without boosting prices, President Truman flatly told the nation this week in a radio talk.

Despite the fact that his economists had pesented him with a confidential memorandum stating that industry generally could hike wages 24 percent without price increases and without profit loss, President Truman did not mention any specific pay raise as possible.

Furthermore, a new Executive Order, amending No. 9599, left the doors open for possible price increases. The amendment provides that industries increasing wages may, within six months, apply for price increases even if they have not sought government approval of the wage boosts.

The President warned that the entire nation will feel the effects of a failure to raise wages to offset loss of take-home pay.

"It has been estimated that, unless checked, the annual wage and salary bill in private industry will shrink by over $20 billion," he said.

"The corner grocer is going to feel it, as well as the department stores, the railroads, the theaters, and the gas stations—and all the farmers of the nation."

President Truman said that wage payments have been drastically cut by elimination of overtime, down-grading to lower pay jobs, and changes from higher paid war jobs to low paid peacetime employment.

The President said that "there are several reasons why I believe that industry as a whole can afford substantial wage increases without asking for any increase in prices":

1. Elimination of overtime.

2. Downward reclassification of jobs.

3. Increased labor productivity.

4. The favorable profit position of business "with excellent prospects for the period that lies ahead."

5. Repeal of the excess profits tax, and other tax concessions.

Recommending sincere collective bargaining, President Truman said that industries vary in their abilty to boost wages, and urged "both management and labor" to "keep on exploring these developments and determine from time to time to what extent costs have been reduced and profits have increased and how far these can properly be passed on in the form of increased wages."

The new amendment to Executive Order 9599 lists three new tests which the War Labor Board and the stabilization Administrator can use in approving wage increases when price increases are sought:

"1. Increases where the percentage increase in average straight time hourly earnings in the appropriate unit since Jan., 1941, has not equalled the percentage increase in the cost of living since Jan., 1941, and Sept., 1945." Government figures, however, say that such earnings have in most cases "exceeded" living costs.

"2. Increases necessary to correct inequities in wage rates or salaries among plants in the same industry or locality, with due regard to normal competitive relationships."

"3. Increases necessary to insure full production in an industry, designated by the stabilization administrator, which is essential to reconversion and in which existing wage rates or salaries are inadequate to the recruitment of needed manpower."

The President sharply criticized the House Ways and Means Committee for failure to approve federal unemployment compensation legislation, placed responsibility for "damaging delay" in passage of the full employment bill on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Dept. of the House, and asked continued federal control of the U. S. Employment Service to aid workers in finding jobs.

Worth More and Out to Get It!

Four days on a picket line around a General Electric Co. plant at Philadelphia and Kitty Merlo's soles are worn clear through. She was one of 5,000 who hit the bricks for higher pay.

Two can play at taking pictures, as AFL pickets at Warner Bros. studio, Burbank, Calif., discovered last week. They used big mirrors to disrupt picture making by boss' stooges using telephoto lenses.

TALKING ABOUT STRIKES

Talking about strikes—which everybody is doing nowadays—there are a couple of big ones most of the newspapers seem to be overlooking.

They're just about the biggest strikes the country has ever seen. They're holding up production, jobs, wages and reconversion. They're holding up the public—and with a vengeance. They're holding up the worker, the consumer, the taxpayer, the farmer and the government.

These strikes aren't being run by unions, and they aren't preceded by Smith-Connally votes. Maybe that's why they aren't getting much attention in the press.

One of these strikes is being run by industry. The other is being run by a reactionary GOP-tory Democrat conspiracy in Congress.

The industry strike is evident in the current refusal to produce goods, especially in consumers' durable lines such as automobiles, radios, refrigerators, washing machines, etc.

The Congressional strike isn't a pure sitdown. Though much of it does consist in sitting on measures for full employment, unemployment compensation, social security and the like, other aspects show more violent action such as the current anti-labor bills, the tax steal, etc.

Part of the industry strike is a price hijacking operation. Radio parts manufacturers gave this one away when they refused to supply assemblers (who control them) unless OPA came through. UE-CIO exposed this one, as UAW-CIO did for the auto manufacturers.

Another aim of industry's strike is to smash the unions by forcing unemployment now in the hope of cutting wages for later production.

This has been admitted by the NAM, which ought to know. In a newspaper report this week, the head of the NAM was indirectly quoted as admitting "there are a few employers who feel that now is a good time to let labor 'sweat it out' for a while." He adds hastily that this group is a minority and that there's no conspiracy of any kind.

Now, as to Congress. A look at the negative record alone of this 79th Congress of the United States since January 3, 1945, should be enough. 1) Full employment: no action. 2) Unemployment compensation: no action. 3) Social security: no action. 4) A series of bills such as minimum pay, Missouri Valley, equal pay for equal work, a pay raise for U. S. employes, polltax repeal — all contributing to higher purchasing power, more jobs—no action.

But the Congressional record hasn't been all inaction. A tax bill whose every clause turns up more benefits for the rich and the corporations has been passed by both houses. A sustained drive has been carried on for hearings and passage of the Ball-Hatch bill. A new drive started this week for HR 3937, which outlaws strikes and political activity by unions.

Added to this, of course, President Truman's message of September 6 continues to be ignored.

The newspapers haven't said much about these two strikes, though President Murray has called them to the papers' attention. A few columnists here and there have written some lines about them, but no steady campaign of educating the public as to the real economic and social facts behind the current unrest has been appearing in print.

How about you helping in this educational drive? How about telling your local community, your local newspapers, about the strikes by industry and by the controlling majority in Congress?

This, as President Murray has pointed out, is one practical and simple way that we can help our country and ourselves to get out of the tangle of low wages and high prices that we're all in right now.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

LONDON—Labor holds the key to the future in Europe as in America. After a flying visit through England to France and through Germany to the Soviet Union, that impression stands out above all others—that and the basic similarity of labor problems, behavior and goals despite surface differences in different countries.

London papers tell about the rushing and profitable business of concerns that buy household goods from former war workers at a small fraction of the price originally paid.

Their vans tour industrial districts, taking advantage of the need for cash of workers with reduced earnings due to layoffs, loss of overtime and lower paid jobs. They come away laden with radios, refrigerators, pianos, furniture, bicycles and other goods that workers can no longer afford to keep.

It is small wonder that there is labor unrest in Britain as in America, as the workers struggle to maintain their take-home pay.

There is less unemployment here than in the U. S., but shortages of food and most other commodities are far worse, especially since the ending of American lend lease.

But along with all the difficulties there is an optimism in labor ranks. A Labor Government has been elected with a sweeping majority. Most unionists feel it has a real program to solve the country's problems with power to put it into effect; and that whereas it may need occasional prodding from below, it should be given every chance and all possible support to make a go of this program.

★ ★ ★

In France, shortages of food, clothing and particularly fuel are far worse than in Britain. Cold and hunger are among the worst enemies as the country begins the difficult task of reconstruction without adequate power or transportation, in plants destroyed or pillaged by the Nazis, or at best with antiquated machinery due to lack of replacements during the occupation.

But here too labor is on the march. Besides building strong unions, workers have turned vigorously to political action and their parties won a clear majority in the recent elections.

Whatever political differences exist in French labor's ranks, it is united in determination that labor and the common people must take the lead; that monopolies must be curbed or nationalized; and that France must have a new deal of social reform and betterment of labor conditions along with a planned program for restoring national prosperity.

★ ★ ★

In Germany, the economic problem as elsewhere in Europe is how to provide the bare necessities of food, clothing, shelter, etc., but political circumstances are very different, since the Germans are now subjects of the victorious occupying powers.

But even here labor holds the key to the future. Unions and labor political activity are just beginning again and if Germany ever is to have a democratic rebirth once Nazism is finally extirpated, it will be labor and the common people that will have to bring it.

In the Soviet Union, where production and distribution are nationally planned, there is no unemployment problem, but there is a terrific physical problem of rebuilding industry to supply the people's needs and to raise living standards.

Before the war, the Soviet Union was engaged in pulling itself up almost by its bootstraps from an economically backward agricultural country to a great, modern industrial power. Then its total energies had to be diverted to the life and death struggle of war.

Now with industry and transportation in large part destroyed by the war, the Soviet people face a huge task of reconstruction to restore prewar production levels and to resume their onward march to greater prosperity for all their people. They look hopefully to America not only for the machinery they so sorely need but also for friendly human understanding of their great national effort.

Here too, most emphatically, labor holds the key to the future. For the whole national effort is basically labor's effort to better its own conditions and those of all the people—just as labor is seeking to do in America and every other country.

NAM GRIP ON RADIO BLASTED BY COFFEE

THE extent to which the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and industries which subscribe to its principles control the air was brought out this week by Rep. Coffee (D. Wash.) in opposing the Rankin-dominated House "Un-American" Committee's investigation of liberal radio commentators.

Coffee quoted Advertising Age figures showing that 53 corporations among the 262 largest contributors to the NAM spent a total of $82,729,886 for network radio advertising in 1944.

Among them were General Electric, General Motors, Chrysler, Cudahy Packing, E. I. DuPont de Nemours, RCA, Standard Oil, Westinghouse, etc.

Developing facts on the extent of NAM control of radio, Coffee said:

"Ten clear-channel 50,000 watt stations now licensed to members of the NAM utilize more power and space in the spectrum than all of the nation's 444 local 250-watt stations put together.

"Furthermore, the actual networks themselves owe substantial percentages of their income to a few powerful advertisers and advertising agencies. Twenty-six percent of CBS's 1944 revenue came from four advertisers and 38 percent from four advertising agencies. A similar story could be told of the other national networks.

"Another factor pointing toward increasing concentration is the $71,000,000 worth of radio time purchased on the four major networks in 1944 by 46 advertisers who are also listed among the largest contributors to the NAM."

Coffee pointed to the NAM's frank admission that "strikes are being won or lost in the newspaper and over the radio" and said that "under this theory, which they apply to every major issue, their agents get the entire radio system to support their job of winning over the American public."

He said that the NAM has boasted that it gets as much as a million dollars worth of free time in a single year and that "NAM employes have been presented as impartial news commentators in daily broadcasts on a national scale, without any revelation of their connection with NAM."

Corwin Bucks Smear

Norman Corwin has been selected chairman of a committee, representing labor, movie and other groups, to fight the House Committee on Un-American Activities smear probe of liberal radio commentators.

UAW Radio Victory

The UAW-CIO won another radio victory this week when stations WXYZ and WWJ in Detroit agreed to use spot announcements plugging the campaign of UAW-CIO's Vice-Pres. Richard Frankensteen for mayor. Protests to the Federal Communications Commission did the job.

Slam At GM

A slam at General Motor's rejection of the UAW-CIO's wage demands was taken this week by Commentator Raymond Swing (NBC). "So far," said Swing, "the union has the better of the presentation, if only for the reason that the corporation refuses to discuss its profits."

CIO Publicity Praised

The CIO Publicity Dept. got a big hand from Morgan Beatty (NBC). Said Beatty: "CIO publicity is better, from the standpoint of intelligent argument, than any union publicity ever issued in this country before."

FM Bids in D. C.

Two new FM (frequency modulation) broadcasting petitions were filed this week in Washington, D. C., by local groups:

1. The Metropolitan Broadcasting Corp., with 35 liberal-minded small business men putting up from $100 to $5,000 each. Clark Foreman, chairman of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, is secretary.

2. The Potomac Cooperative Federation, which would like to operate a station on a non-profit, cooperative sharing basis.

Unconstitutional, Says Murray

BILL TO BAN LABOR POLITICS, WRECK UNION TREASURIES

REPUBLICAN Rep. Leslie C. Arends of Illinois this week introduced an amendment to the Smith-Connally Act which would outlaw labor political activity and would establish drastic penalties for work stoppages that occurred within the time limit of existing collective bargaining contracts. The amendment was approved by the House Military Affairs Committee.

In a letter to all Congressmen, CIO President Murray said:

"The bill is purely a punitive measure aimed not at correcting the admitted evils of the Smith-Connally Act but to afford the opportunity to employers to provoke or instigate stoppages and then proceed to mulct the union treasuries through endless law suits.

"The bill is aimed at the very destruction of labor unions and makes a mockery of collective bargaining agreements."

Blasting the amendment's political restrictions, Murray said the proposal seeks to deprive union members "of the opportunity of expressing their views on political issues at their own meetings or through distribution of their own literature" and "is a clear violation of our federal Constitution."

The amendment would ban labor political contributions even in primary elections, an act that was ruled legal last year by former Attorney General Biddle.

The Republican - introduced amendment would make it "unlawful for any . . . corporation or labor organization to make contributions, expend any sum, aid in soliciting funds, accept any contribution or levy any assessment on its members or subordinate affiliates" in connection with any political convention or election at which Presidential electors, Congressmen, etc., shall be chosen.

Violators could be punished by a fine of up to $5,000.

The penalty for violation of collective bargaining regulations is even stronger, in view of the fact that anti-labor employers could instigate stoppages with the aim of literally driving unions out of existence. The amendment says:

"In the event of any strike, or concerted failure or refusal to work during the life of a collective bargaining contract which includes a no-strike provision, the employer shall be relieved of any obligations under the contract, and the labor organization shall lose its status as a bargaining agency for a period of one year.

"Any such labor organization which is party to the contract may be sued in its own name in any Federal District Court . . . and shall be responsible in damages to any party injured as a result of the breach."

The new legislation was described by Rep. Bradley (D., Pa.) as designed "to create chaos in the ranks of organized labor" and Rep. Sheridan (D., Pa.) called the proposal "a straightjacket on labor" and predicted its defeat.

Included in the action of the committee was repeal of the Smith-Connally act provisions for 30-day notices before strikes and for strike elections, as well as for seizure of plants by the government—provisions which the CIO described as "unworkable" when the act originally was considered.

SPEED OIL CASE, TRUMAN URGED

PRESIDENT TRUMAN was urged to set up machinery at once to adjust the wage dispute in the oil industry in a statement released this week by Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union.

The statement, drawn up by the union's executive council and policy committee in Ft. Worth, Tex., declared that the union understood when it agreed to cooperate with the government after President Truman ordered seizure of certain key oil properties "that machinery would be set up to adjust the basic wage dispute."

"To date no serious effort has been made to set up such machinery," the union officers declared. Pointing to statements issued by government economists to show that the oil industry could easily afford to maintain the present purchasing power of its employes without imcreasing prices, the union stated that the "oil strike would by now have been settled on terms mutually agreeable to union and employers," if the strike had not been broken by Navy seizure.

"Seizure of the oil industry was wholly unwarranted," the statement asserted. "Spokesmen for the industry now admit publicly that there was no shortage of fuel oil for the Navy and that adequate stocks were available for military needs.

"The Navy on the advice of the Dept. of Justice now threatens to remain in indefinite possession of certain key plants because the Administration has provided no method for settling the wage dispute and will not allow the Oil Workers Intl. Union to settle it through economic action."

Parley to Help Kill Polltax

Representatives of Negro and white organizations from 22 states responded to the "Call to Action" conference of the National Committee to Abolish the Polltax held in Washington Oct. 29-30, to press for passage by the Senate of the federal anti-polltax bill, HR 7.

After listening the first day to speakers explain the vital need to get rid of the polltax if American democracy is not to be a mockery, the delegates spent the second day interviewing their senators. With the exception of Sen. Pepper of Florida and Sen. Barkley of Kentucky, the Committee delegates found the Southern senators solidly opposed to aiding the anti-polltax fight.

Sen. Hill of Alabama said he would not filibuster to prevent a vote on the anti-polltax bill, but would not commit himself further, delegates reported.

FAECT Wins Big Election

CIO's union of engineering and technical employes, the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, won an NLRB election recently which gives the union collective bargaining rights for some 2,100 technical and salaried employes in 53 plants and offices of the Federal Telephone & Radio Corp. in the New York City-Newark, N. J. areas.

The corporation is the manufacturing unit and affiliate of Intl. Telephone & Telegraphy in the U. S.

FAECT Pres. Lewis A. Berne said that the victory was the last of a series in the union's drive to organize the major electrical manufacturing companies. FAECT is the union representative for engineers and related salaries employes at General Electric, Philadelphia; Radio Corp. of America; and Emerson Radio & Television Co.

LIGHTS ON—BUT DIM—IN EUROPE

By LEN DE CAUX

Europe's three major capitals — war wrecked London, bright Paris and stolid Berlin — feature labor in ferment. Only a night away in giant planes divided like Pullman cars, Europe has become a doorstep problem for the U.S.A. What's happening is told in this exclusive article from London by Len De Caux, Editor of The CIO NEWS.

LIKE missing teeth in a child's mouth, there are gaps everywhere in London's solid blocks of houses. The Nazi blitz did the most wholesale damage in the working class districts of the East End. But nearly everywhere it has left its mark.

The lights are on again in London, though with none of their pre-war brillance, due to fuel and power shortages. The theaters are doing a rushing business, but their shows start at 6 or 6:30 p. m. and close around 9. The streets are crowded with unwieldly buses, prehistoric taxis and midget-size automobiles.

But there are acute shortages of food, clothing and most other necessities and comforts... These shortages are worse now than during the war, most Londoners will tell you, due to the ending of American lend-lease.

England depends on imports for most of her raw materials and food supplies. There is an enormous amount of reconstruction and industrial development needed, before she can export to buy sufficient imports.

On the surface, the British labor scene is comparatively tranquil, despite a persistent longshoremen's strike and other lesser stoppages from time to time. There is relatively little reconversion unemployment, union leaders say. At the same time there are many evidences of reduced take-home pay due to loss of overtime, transfers to lower-paid peacetime jobs, etc.

Dominating everything else in British labor thinking is the new Labor Party government, with a sufficient parliamentary majority for the first time to put its program into effect. "Our chance has come, let's not muff it," seems to be the prevailing labor attitude.

"Dominating everything else in British labor's thinking is the new Labor Party government. Optimism about the future is widespread. Even the more radical laborites couple their prodding with aggressive support for the government and its declared purposes."

So the unions are at great pains to avoid any action that might embarrass the government, or give comfort to its tory enemies. Optimism about the future is widespread. Even the more radical laborites, in and out of Parliament, who are fearful of too much go-slow conservatism, couple their prodding with aggressive support for the government and its declared purposes.

AFTER the gray, damp drabness of London's "industrial mist," Paris sparkles like a jewel. The city is intact. The sun shines brightly and often.

The people on the streets still have their French vivacity. The women, and even some of the men, still have the knack of making clothes look smart.

But you notice sad changes. Suits, though carefully preserved, are mostly ancient and threadbare. The plump, jovial Frenchman with well-rounded tummy is almost extinct in Paris. At workers' meetings, most of the people are peaked and thin.

Paris knows hunger, cold and lack of the simplest necessities. There is no hot water nor heating in even the best hotels, except those requisitioned for American use. The average Paris family's coal ration for the whole winter is hardly enough to heat an American home for a few days—and there's doubt whether this will be available.

Meat has almost disappeared from Parisian tables. Cigarettes and matches are unobtainable. Wine is scarce, diluted and prohibitive in price. Coffee is made from some cereal concoction. There's hardly an item in the every-day living of Americans that can be procured by the French without the greatest difficulty, if it is obtainable at all.

Here, even more than in London, Americans are the most obviously privileged class. They have army hotels, messes, cafes, clubs, Red Cross centers and other special facilities. Our soldiers can go to the Army PX and buy cheaply cigarettes, soap, candy, matches and other simple items that Frenchmen would give a fortune in francs to obtain.

Fuel is apparently the key shortage in France. Pre-war sources of importation have been cut off. Mines have been ruined by the Germans, and the French miners have been so weakened by malnutrition, and are still so poorly fed, that they cannot achieve their pre-war output.

Transportation and manufacturing suffer not only from the fuel and power shortage, but also because the Nazis pillaged the factories and their occupation prevented proper maintenance and replacement of machinery.

Food is reported to be fairly plentiful in more distant rural areas. But transportation is not adequate to make this food available in the big cities, and there is much peasant hoarding.

Here, as in England, the big hope of the people is in labor. French unions are strongly organized. The General Confederation of Labor (CGT) reports a membership increase of half a million in the last few months, bringing it to a record strength of 5,100,000 members.

The unions, like those of the CIO, are mostly organized along industrial lines. They have young and vigorous leaders, recently risen from the ranks and steeled by underground resistance and armed struggle against the Nazis.

But even more spectacular than the rebirth of French unionism is the resurgence of labor political activity. The working class political parties, which together won a clear majority in the recent national elections, are the largest and most popular in the country. They have scores of daily papers covering every city and district. Their meetings are packed and the signs of their organization and propaganda are everywhere to be seen.

Though divided politically between Socialists and Communists, French labor is emphatically united in determination to wipe out all traces of fascist influence and political reaction; to break, or at least sharply curb, the power of monopoly capitalists to exploit the people; and to enact far-reaching social reforms for the benefit of labor and the common people, as an essential part of the whole job of national restoration.

BERLIN, the capital of Nazi world aggression, has been brought low. It has suffered a terrible vengeance from the people it attacked. But it has not been razed to the ground like Carthage, nor has it even suffered so much as Warsaw.

The center of Berlin is in ruins. Nearly every big building there is either reduced to a pile of rubble or is half collapsed or is a skeleton of walls and windows with all inside destroyed. But the greater part of Berlin is still standing, and life goes on.

An extraordinary clean-up job has already been done. Most of the streets have been cleared of debris. Bricks of destroyed buildings are being neatly sorted and stacked. Stores have been opened at the street fronts of buildings that have little else standing. Streetcars and subways are functioning, at least partially, and electricity has been largely restored.

The people on the streets tell the same story of defeat as do the blasted buildings. Gone are the strutting uniformed Nazis. Replacing them everywhere are the troops of the victorious American, Soviet, British and French armies.

The only German uniforms still to be seen are those of letter carriers and a few policemen, the latter with little of their former authority or arrogance.

There is hardly a young man to be seen among the Germans on the streets. The huge German casualty figures are one reason; and most of the surviving German soldiers are still prisoners of war. Old men and women and little children throng the streets.

Their chief occupation seemed to be hunting for fuel to heat their homes this winter. Right in the once proud Tiergarten (Berlin's Central Park)—now a gaunt spectacle of charred, shattered and dead tree trunks surrounded by shell holes—they were gathering sticks. And far out into the suburbs others pursued their search.

All through the Soviet-occupied zone of Berlin, there are signs set up in the streets, a block or so apart, pointing out some of the morals of Nazi defeat. These signs emphasize particularly the Red Army's abhorrence of race hatred and discrimination, and of ideas of a master race. In opposition to such Nazi ideas, they advocate equal rights for all people, including the German people, and state repeatedly: "History shows that Hitlers come and go, but the German people and nation remain."

We visited the great Chancellery, where Hitler had his office, with his personal bedroom and bathroom adjoining it. The building is bomb-shattered and almost completely stripped of all furnishings. But we were shown the location of Hitler's desk at one corner of a huge room, and we saw the balcony from which he sometimes spoke.

"Out of the ruin and degradation which Hitler and his Nazis brought upon the German people, the chief signs we saw of hope for a democratic rebirth were in the small children, and in the gradual re-emergence of a German labor movement led by proved opponents of Nazism."

Out of the ruin and degradation which Hitler and his Nazis brought upon the German people, the chief signs we saw of hope for a democratic rebirth were in the small children, innocent of their elders' guilt and capable of being brought up without taint of Nazism; and in the gradual re-emergence of a German labor movement led by proved opponents of Nazism.

FAECT-CIO won the collective bargaining rights for some 2100 technical and salaried employes in an NLRB election at the Federal Telephone & Radio Corp. in New York and Newark and its environs. This large group of employes comprises the bulk of the company's white collar and salaried employes in some 53 plants and offices. Federal Telephone & Radio is an affiliate of and the manufacturing unit for Intl. Telephone & Telegraph in the Untied States.

Glass Workers on Strike

DISGUSTED with the way management of the Libbey-Owens-Ford and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Cos. have been stalling on the union's efforts to negotiate a contract, some 15,000 employes in plants in ten cities represented by the CIO Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers have walked out on strike.

Intl. Union Pres. Joseph Froesch said that company representatives broke off negotiations which had been going on in Chicago for 18 days, using as an excuse to avoid signing a contract a small strike at a Libbey-Owens-Ford plant in Ottawa, Ill., involving fewer than 400 workers.

Froesch pointed out that a 10-day strike last summer had been called off at the request of the War Labor Board, on the promise that a contract would be signed, but since then the companies have continued to stall around on all kinds of small points instead of bargaining in good faith. The union filed a petition at that time for a strike vote under the Smith-Connally Act.

"We have done everything humanly possible to work out the details of a contract with these two companies," Froesch said. "Certainly their actions do not lead me to believe that they are dealing in good faith."

Leland Beard, the union's vice-president, who was in charge of negotiations in Chicago after Pres. Froesch was called away by sickness in the family, said that glass workers take-home pay had been reduced by 23 per cent or more since hours were cut back from 48 to 40 after V-J day. He said that the union strongly desired to settle the dispute peacefully, but that the companies' attitude had made this impossible.

The shut-down involves four plants of Libbey-Owens-Ford at Toledo, Ohio; Charleston, W. Va.; Shreveport, La.; and Ottawa, Ill.; and six Pittsburgh Plate Glass plants at Ford City and Creighton, Pa.; Crystal City, Mo.; Henryetta, Okla.; Clarksburg, W. Va.; and Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

To Vote on CIO At Union Electric

Workers at the Union Electric Co., St. Louis, Mo., formerly represented by an independent union, are still signing application cards to belong to the CIO Utility Workers, reports Delmont Garst, CIO representative in charge of the organizing drive.

Although the AFL Steam & Operation Engineers petitioned for the NLRB election set for on or before Nov. 26, the CIO union is confident of winning it. The Operating Engineers union, whose long history of racketeering is exposed in the book, "Labor Czars" by Harold Seidman, claims to represent a group of workers at Union Electric. The CIO union hopes to win the election and free the workers from the clutches of this outfit.

Some 2,300 workers are now employed at Union Electric. The normal employment is expected to be around 3,000.

Strike Petitions

CIO Unions Back Up Pay Increase Demands

DETERMINED to get action on their just demands for wage increases to offset big cutbacks in take-home pay since the end of the war, a number of CIO unions have joined the big parade now filing notices of intention to strike.

Among them is the United Steelworkers, the CIO's second largest union, which petitioned for a strike vote Oct. 30 to back up demands for a $2 a day increase. Here are some others that have taken similar action:

The United Rubber Workers has asked for a strike vote among employes of all Firestone plants, to enforce demands for a 30 per cent increase.

Representatives of 170,000 workers in 54 General Electric Co. plants, members of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, have authorized filing a petition for a strike vote following refusal of the company to grant a $2 a day increase. In addition, the UE has been authorized to ask for a strike vote among 30,000 employes in General Motors plants in the electrical manufacturing industry.

Pres. Lewis J. Clark of the Packinghouse Workers announced that a strike petition has been filed for a vote in the packing industry, including all the Big Four's plants — Armour, Wilson, Swift and Cudahy—as well as many independent packers throughout the country. There are some 200 in all which have contracts with the union, Clark said. More than 200,000 workers are involved. The union is asking for a 25c hourly increase.

A petition for a strike vote involving six additional major independent packers was filed previously. The vote is due to be held Nov. 15.

The American Communications Assn. is seeking a strike vote among 7,000 Western Union employes in the New York Metropolitan area, ACA Pres. Joseph Selly has announced. The ACA is demanding that Western Union comply with a regional War Labor Board decision granting a 10c hourly general increase and other raises.

The Retail Wholesale & Department Store Employes Union is calling for a strike among 75,000 Montgomery Ward workers to force the company to bargain collectively with the union on a nationwide basis.

The Farm Equipment Workers have filed for a strike vote in 11 International Harvester plants to back up demands for a 30 per cent increase and a company-wide contract.

Steel Union's Reply To Industry's Rebuff

STEPS to back up its demand for a $2 a day increase by a strike if necessary were taken this week by the powerful CIO United Steelworkers.

David J. McDonald, the union's secretary-treasurer, on Oct. 30, filed formal notice of the dispute between the USA-CIO and the steel companies with the Secretary of Labor, the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the War Labor Board, as required by the Smith-Connally Act.

McDonald said that 583,727 members of the union employed by 769 companies were involved.

The petition for a strike vote was taken following refusal of the companies to grant the union's wage demands, and was authorized by the USA-CIO wage policy committee at a meeting last week in Pittsburgh. Pres. Philip Murray, however, cautioned union members against premature strike action.

A resolution passed by the committee ridiculed the companies' claim that they could not afford to pay the increase without a price increase. "The stubborn facts reveal the arrogance of the position assumed by the steel industry and the danger which it is creating for the nation," the committee stated.

"After granting the union's request for a $2 a day wage increase, the steel industry would still make $474,000,000 in 1946 or three and half times more in take-home profits than in the prewar years of 1935-39. This would be 45 per cent more take-home profits in 1946 than the industry made in the best war year—which was 1941."

While the steel industry has been reaping fabulous profits, workers take-home pay has been drastically reduced, the wage committee stated.

"The present purchasing power value of steel workers' cutback take-home pay is 10 per cent below that of January, 1941, when weekly earnings were $33.50," it declared.

"Since V-J Day the take-home pay of steelworkers has been cut from 25 to 50 per cent due to the shortened work week, downgrading and other factors." This is forcing the workers to "eat up their small wartime savings to keep body and soul together," the committee said.

Since the steel companies have seen fit to meet the "unchallenged facts" presented in the wage request with "an arrogant and abrupt 'no'," the resolution declared that the union had "but one path to pursue to protect the basic interests of our membership and to assure an economy that will provide full employment and full production."

The executive officers of the union were therefore authorized "to take whatever steps may be necessary, including a strike vote, to achieve the union's request for a wage increase of $2 per day."

David J. McDonald, Sec.-Treas., CIO United Steelworkers of America, files an application for a steel strike vote with L. N. D. Wells, associate director of the NLRB's field division.

Union Asks GM To Reconsider

General Motors was asked to reconsider the wage increase demands of the CIO United Auto Workers this week in the light of President Truman's recent wage policy speech. UAW Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther, director of the union's GM Dept., in a letter to C. E. Wilson, asked the General Motors president to "personally enter into negotiations with us in accordance with the President's mandate."

Reuther told Wilson that President Truman's statement removed all doubts about industry's ability to "raise wages without increasing prices, and he reaffirmed the nation's faith in collective bargaining as the machinery by which such wage adjustments can be made."

Negotiations between the union and the company came to an abrupt end Oct. 26, at the conclusion of the union's presentation of its case for a 30 per cent increase, when the company dismissed the demands as "unreasonable."

Put the Heat on Congress Now For Prosperous U. S.

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE GOVERNMENT's study of wage price policy which was recently made for the advisory board of the reconversion office gives a very clear picture of the urgency to our whole country of the CIO full employment program. Their figures lead them to the conclusion that the pay of the average worker in manufacturing industry will be cut 28 percent from April, 1945, to 1946 by elimination of over time, down grading and cutting of incentives.

They go on to say, "the decline in earnings of those who are employed in 1946 will be accompanied by unemployment and total loss of earnings for about 8 million people in the spring of 1946." The total decline in wages and salaries will be $30 to $35 billion.

"Cuts of this magnitude in the salary and wage bill," the report goes on, "are bound to have significant repercussions on the welfare of all economic groups. Wage earners' families will react to their cut in earnings by reducing their purchases of goods and services. This means less trade, less manufacturing activity, and less farm income."

It's our job to tell all the groups we can reach in our communities about the danger to our economy and ask them to join with us in fighting for labor's program. One effective way to get our message across is to get people to listen to the two remaining CIO national radio programs in which President Philip Murray explains the CIO wage campaign. They are November 12 and 26, over the American Broadcasting Company at 10 p.m.

TELL NEIGHBORS

We can show our neighbors from our own local experience how large a cut workers' families have already taken. They will understand that those families can't buy new furniture or new clothes and even have to cut down on the food bill in most cases.

We can show them examples of workers who never did get a living wage—enough for a decent American standard of living. Average weekly earnings in April, 1945—during the war—in retail trade were $28, in power laundries $29, in hotels $24.

Labor proposes to maintain wartime income of manufacturing workers and to raise the income of those substandard groups. The 30 percent wage increase CIO is demanding would keep up the buying power of workers families so that they could buy the products of industry and farm.

The increase in the wage-hour law now being considered in Congress from the present 40 to 65 cents to be increased to 75c in two years would help to eliminate sub-standard wages. Along with wage increases must go increased and more widespread provisions for social security. To meet the immediate crises of 8 million unemployed by next spring, labor is urging the emergency increase of unemployed benefits to a maximum of $25 for 26 weeks. For long term increases in benefits and coverage we support the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill.

Finally labor is solidly behind the Murray-Patman full employment bill which would make it the responsibility of the government to fill the gap between private employment and jobs for all. Public support for this program is not hard to get but time is short. Once our country plunges into depression it will be difficult to pull it back.

President Truman says that he is going to fight for passage of the full employment bill and for $25 for 26 weeks in unemployment benefits. He has explained to the country that labor must have wage increases. It is our job to see that he and our Congressmen receive the pressure from the people that will turn those words into deeds.

Congress Lags Behind Workers

WAGE EARNERS fighting for their own security through wage demands are doing more than Congress has done so far to bring about full employment, the CIO Economic Outlook said in its current issue this week. Layoffs, unemployment, and deep cuts in take-home pay are the causes of labor unrest, the Outlook adds, as well as failure of Congress "to pass a single law that offers hope of continuing full employment."

The $2 a day and 30% pay adjustment demands of the CIO Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Electrical Workers and other CIO unions "are fully justified by analysis of what has happened to wage rates, prices and productivity since January 1, 1941," the Outlook adds.

Since that date, wages have lagged behind retail prices while output per worker has increased sharply. It reveals that industry's price and profit margins can easily sustain these wage increases without raising the general price level. Industry has crammed 14 years of normal peacetime profits into the past six years, and the U. S. Treasury forecasts a record high for profits after taxes for 1946.

Vets League For 30% Pay Hike

The national action committee of the Veterans League of America, New York City, composed entirely of veterans of World War II, this week called on "all veterans' organizations interested in the veterans as a civilian and a job seeker to support the CIO Auto Workers in its fight for a 30 per cent wage increase."

The committee condemned the proposal of Pres. C. E. Wilson of General Motors to extend the national work week to 45 hours "as a direct blow to the job hopes of returning veterans. The returning veteran has a large stake in organized labor's fight for a 30 per cent wage increase as opposed to the lengthened work week, for only by America's ability to consume the vast amount of goods which industry will produce at 40 hours can the goal of full employment be achieved," the committee stated.

Virginia Unionists Take CIO Training Course

A WEEK'S training course for CIO leaders in Virginia was conducted by the Southern School for Workers at Richmond, Va., Oct. 14-20. CIO unions represented by the 16 workers who attended were the Textile Workers, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and the Paper Workers.

Union and government officials led class and spoke to the students. They included Harold S. Roberts of the Natl. War Labor Board; Mrs. Ruth Spitz, U. S. Dept. of Labor; Frank Grasso, Paper Workers director; Boyd E. Payton, Virginia director, Textile Workers; Max Sussman, business agent in Richmond, Food & Tobacco Workers; and Robert Johnson, Virginia PAC director. Miss Brownie Lee Jones is director of the school.

At evening meetings, Walter Pollard, Washington representative of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, conducted an open forum on the topic, "Behind the Strike Headlines;" John Edelman, Textile Union legislative representative, explained current legislative developments; and George Guernsey, Natl. CIO assistant director of education, discussed the use of movies.

The students also spent most of one day working with Guernsey on the use of materials and means of reaching both workers and others in the community.

Plans grew out of the training course for assisting in the formation of stewards' councils and developing educational programs for local unions.

Free Atomic Work Urged

The Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, through Lewis Alan Berne, this week charged that those seeking to lock up and control the secrets of atomic energy were the same forces who gave freely of their scientific and industrial secrets to the Nazis and Japanese and who could not be trusted to apply science and technology for the well-being and security of the American people. Berne made this statement before a joint Senate Committee conducting hearings on a proposed national science program.

Berne said that we are undergoing a sociological revolution with respect to the application of science and technology to modern life and that the isolation of science and the restriction of atomic energy from universal application was an archaic hope fraught with tremendous dangers.

Health Program

A program for improving health and safety in industrial plants is being developed at Wayne University, in Detroit, under Dean Raymond Hussey, M. D., of the school of occupational health. Emphasis of the program is on health, not illness or injury, Hussey stated. Surveys are being made and data gathered.

"We wish to enlist everybody concerned in the task of maintaining, regaining and protecting occupational health," he stated.

CIO Man On Dymaxion Board Of Directors

The first private profit corporation in U. S. business history to have representatives of CIO and AFL international unions serving on its board of directors with a voice in formation of company policy is the Dymaxion Dwelling Machines, Inc., says the company's president Herman Wolf.

James Dickerson, representative of the United Steelworkers of America, is the CIO board member. Clinton Golden, assistant to the USA-CIO president, in a statement released by the company, said that the union was happy to have its representative serve on Dymaxion's board of directors, "because of the potential markets which may be opened up by the activities of Dymaxion. The steelworkers are interested in enlarging the markets for mills employing our members, whether those markets are for steel or aluminum. I understand all three of these metals are used extensively in Dymaxion construction."

The company was formed in late 1944 to manufacture the Dymaxion house invented by R. Buckminster Fuller in 1927.

Education—Recreation

Fur Union Buys Vacation Home

Purchase of a union vacation resort at White Lake, N. Y. for members of the CIO's Fur & Leather Workers has been authorized by the union's international executive board. Also approved by the board was the construction of a modern hotel with facilities and equipment for all-year-round use.

The White Lake property, which the union will take over, contains 200 acres with a private lake and additional frontage on White Lake.

The Furriers Joint Council has contributed $100,000 toward purchase of the property, the Joint Board has pledged $50,000, and the International has contrbuted $25,000 to the fund, making an overall total of $175,000 so far. Other contributions are expected from various fur and leather locals.

The union hopes that construction work can be speeded up so that the hotel will be in operation during the coming summer, when large numbers of union members will get their vacations with pay.

The resort will be named in honor of the union's president, Ben Gold, in accordance with a resolution passed at the convention.

Free to Unions

A 15-minute speech by George Baldanzi, executive vice-president, Textile Workers Union, on the need for a 65c minimum wage has been recorded for distribution to local unions. The record of the speech, entitled "Wanted: An American Standard of Living," may be ordered free of charge from the TWU educational department, 15 Union Square, New York 3, N. Y.

Complete information needed to be an intelligent voter is given in a pamphlet, "Your Part in Georgia Politics," issued by the Committee for Georgia, an affiliate of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare. The pamphlet may be obtained from the Committee at the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce Bldg., Atlanta 3, Ga. Single copies are 10c; $7.50 per hundred, plus express.

UAW Posters

PAC Pamphlet On Employment

Jobs for all is the key to the nation's major problems, states the latest pamphlet of the CIO Political Action Committee, "The Answer is: Full Employment," published this week.

The answer to maintaining peace between nations, avoiding strife between labor and management at home, eliminating race hatred and discrimination, wiping out substandard wages and raising the standard of living in America, is Full Employment, the pamphlet asserts.

Outlining a 12-point program in support of full employment legislation now before Congress, the pamphlet says: "What we must have is an overall plan regarding wages, price control, taxes, every aspect of social security, community development, planning for more education and for leisure, and the establishment of racial and religious equality."

The pamphlet was written by Joseph Gaer, director of PAC publications, and Robert Lamb, legislative representative of the CIO United Steelworkers, and was illustrated by William Krokyn. It may be obtained from the CIO-PAC, 205 East 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

REVIEWS

FIVE films head our list of this year's crop. They are: The True Glory, a documentary of the European War from D-Day to V-E Day; The Southerner, reviewed in the Oct. 15 CIO NEWS; Pride of the Marines, Our Vines Have Tender Grapes, and The House on 92nd Street.

THE TRUE GLORY (U. S. '45), considered one of the great documentaries of this war, is jointly directed by Garson Kanin and Carol Reed. Fourteen hundred Allied camermen filed this official record of the Allied invasion of Fortress Europe. The narration is by 130 on the spot veterans, the music by the London Symphony Orchestra.

THE SOUTHERNER (United Artists Release '45). A tender and sensitive production of the life of a Southern tenant farmer, his lonely struggle against nature and disease. Superbly directed by Jean Renoir.

PRIDE OF THE MARINES (Warner Bros. '45). John Garfield takes the role of the hero Al Schmidt, a blind veteran, and his fight for happiness.

OUR VINES HAVE TENDER GRAPES (MGM '45). You learn of the lives of our Scandinavian American farmers in northern Wisconsin through the eyes of a charming child (Marguerite O'Brien), the school teacher who comes from the big city and hates the backwoods, and the local newspaperman who loves his people.

THE HOUSE ON 92nd STREET (20th Century '45). An exciting and authenitc melodrama based on official FBI records in capturing German spies after atom bomb secrets.

THE CORN IS GREEN (WB '45). Drama of a school teacher who makes her mission in life the education of Welsh miners.

THE STORY OF GI JOE (United Artists '45). Episodic record of the U. S. Infantry in Africa, Sicily, and Southern Italy, based on the dispatches of Ernie Pyle.

ANCHORS AWEIGH (MGM '45). Gene Kelley and Frank Sinatra are two sailors turned loose in Hollywood, a real musicalulu.

NATIONAL VELVET (MGM '45). A charming story about children and horses.

RHAPSODY IN BLUE (WB '45). The story of George Gershwin, with plenty of Gershwin melodies.

BLOOD ON THE SUN (UA '45). James Cagney slashes through a super espionage melodrama about the Tanaka document and the early Jap plans for world conquest.

'THE HOUSE I LIVE IN'

THE HOUSE I LIVE IN, an RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. featurette with Frank Sinatra, written by Albert Maltz, title song by Earl Robinson.

PURPOSE: Presented in entertainment terms, this featurette aims to advance Americanism through better social understanding.

The above is from the film's prospectus. It began when Frank Ross, producer, heard of Sinatra's work in schools and with youth groups for the cause of inter-racial and religious understanding and harmony. He decided to make a short film on the subject. Albert Maltz, author of The Cross and the Arrow, volunteered to write the script, and that's how "The House I Live In" came about. In all it runs 10 minutes, and talks simply, in a straight from the shoulder lingo. Frankie sings two songs. "If You Are But a Dream" opens the scene.

Movies Worth Seeing

Then, he goes out to get a bit of fresh air, and runs smack into a group of kids beating up another "because they don't like his religion." He then talks to them, and they take it. And he winds up his little conversation with the song, "The House I Live In— "All races and religions, that's America to me."

The song is beautiful, and its words pack a punch. But that isn't what's going to make this short go over. It's Frankie, and his special appeal to youth. The benefits from this featurette will go to combat juvenile delinquency. The first showing will take place in New York City on November 6, and after three to six months it will be available in 16 mm.

Frank Sinatra's career has been built on screams and sighs. He is the idol of the teen-agers, and they harken to his words.

Frankie is imbued with the idea, that we must all learn to live together, and he's taken on himself a sort of a mission to teach the very young the importance of it. He's not only making a movie on the subject, but he has gone as a sort of troubleshooter into the neighborhoods, and preached his message.

Last week he went to the Benjamin Franklin High School in New York City, where race riots had occurred, and spoke to the High School body in language they understood. Next week he plans to fly to Gary, Indiana, where a school strike occurred over the same question.

When Frankie talks he tells them about his own origin. "I'm an Italian." He tells them about his own humble beginnings, about jumping into the Hudson River, pilfering, etc. and then he inspires them with the will to do bigger and better things. He tells them about the guys in a fox hole, "all religions together," and how they had one objective, and worked together for that. He urges them to work at that objective in the comfort of home, where it's easier. And he makes them take an oath, not a formal one, but they take that oath with Frankie, to do all the good they can, to live together, and to work together. And the kids don't feel they're propagandized, or preached at. They feel that it comes from one of them, because they love Frankie as one who mirrors them. There's no trouble getting them into the Assembly Hall either. When they're told Frankie is coming, the only trouble is to keep them from breaking down the doors. And they take whatever he's got to give them.

Frank Sinatra began his trouble shooting career about a year and a half ago. He campaigned for FDR during the elections of 1944. During that campaign he met Henry Wallace. The two became fast friends. Frankie began to feel that he had a great field influencing the the young in the higher ideals of our democracy. His singing seemed to tie them to him. He received hundreds of thousands of letters from youngsters, boys and girls, telling him of their problems, their dissatisfactions, their unhappipopularity to do the most ness. He aims to use his good.

This film is part of that work. RKO says that it may be the first of a series using the medium of entertainment to combat social evils, as stars of the Bob Hope, Bing Crosby and Danny Kaye calibre are now reported interested in making films dealing with social and economic problems and giving the proceeds to charities directly concerned in coping with those problems.

We think "The House I Live In" is a good beginning. Hats Off, to Frank Sinatra.

"The House I Live in,
The goodness everywhere,
A land of wealth and beauty
With enough for all to share,
A house that we call Freedom,
The home of Liberty,
And a promise for tomorrow,
That's America to me."

Tory Timing For Disruption

The new substitute for the Smith-Connally Act, reported out of the House Military Affairs Committee this week, is a perfect example of tory timing—on the dot for disruption.

As President Murray points out in his letter to Congressmen, the proposed new bills aims to do three main jobs on all unions:

1. Encourage employers to provoke strikes "and then proceed to mulct union treasuries through endless lawsuits."

2. Smash unions by depriving them of collective bargaining rights for one year if they strike. (Incidentally, nothing is said of depriving employers of anything if they engage in a lockout.)

3. Deprive workers of their right to free speech and assembly by prohibiting any kind of political contributions, either in primaries or elections.

On its face the bill is aimed purely and simply at disruption. A look at the timing of the Military Affairs report clinches this.

1. The three major CIO unions and many of the smaller ones have filed applications with the NLRB for strike votes to meet the employers' refusal to move on wages.

2. The labor-management conference called by President Truman opens November 5, with many expressions of hope and confidence that it will produce results.

3. CIO-PAC activity, especially looking to the primaries for the '46 Congressional elections, is beginning to hit its stride. The $1 fund drive is getting under way.

The new bill is aimed at crippling all three of these main items on labor's—and the nation's—agenda. It is aimed, as President Murray says "not at correcting the admitted evils of the Smith-Connally Act" but at "the very destruction of labor unions" and of collective bargaining.

President Murray warned against this bill last week when he said (Guide, Oct. 29): "No similar piece of legislation, whether it be the Ball-Hatch bill or anything like it, should take its (the Smith-Connally Act's) place."

This new bill (HR 3937) is aimed at taking the Smith-Connally Act's place. It is the House version of the discredited Ball-Hatch bill. It is timed to break the CIO's fight for restoration of take-home pay cuts, to balk the political strength of millions of union voters, to smash unions while protecing employers.

Add New Lows In Hypocrisy

Something new in Congressional hypocrisy has been added to the current tax bill, now passed by both House and Senate and awaiting President Truman's signature.

It's this: when the last tax bill was passed over FDR's veto, it had a "carry-back and carry-forward" business in it that allowed corporations to claim refunds on their excess profits taxes if postwar profits fell below 1936-39 levels. This was regardless of the level of operations.

When the Senate got the current tax bill, it went the House one better by ending all excess profits taxes. You might think that carry-back and carry-forward would end, too, since it's based on excess profits levies.

That's where you'd be wrong. The current tax bill carefully preserves carry-back and carry-forward, even though there's no longer a tax base for it.

In other words, corporations can ask for refunds on what would have been their excess profits taxes if they'd paid any, which they didn't. It may not make sense to you, but it makes plenty of dough for the corporations.

Equal Pay On Way To Floor

The equal pay for equal work bill (S 1178) finally started through the mill of Committee hearings on the way to action this week.

Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, appeared for President Murray, and Clifford T. McAvoy for the UE. Speaking of the way unequal pay for women drags down rates for men, Murray's statement said:

"Wherever there are two sets of rates in a plant, there is a continual attempt to bring all rates down to the lower level . . . It is perfectly clear that where wage rates are low, markets are smaller.

"We shall be defeating our end of full employment and a secure economy if we permit arbitrary differentials in pay to cut family earnings."

McAvoy told the Senate Labor Committee now hearing the bill some of the facts of discrimination in UE plants—that the lowest rate for men is higher than the average for women, that some 300,000 women workers are treated this way.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
HR 3937	Provides fines, jail for strikes "in violation of contracts"; makes political action illegal by banning all expenditures; repeals Smith-Connally Act.	Reported out by House Military Affairs, next to House Rules and then to floor.	Rush wires to your Representative to work and vote against this bill.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Does same job as HR 3937 with some extra flourishes; is most "respectable" piece of union-busting now on the market.	Hearings being urged by press in Senate Labor Committee.	Keep telling your Senators to stay away from this.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Puts big fines, jail sentences on unionists taking part in normal activities, such as a picket line. Uses "anti-racketeering" as excuse for union hobbling.	In House Rules Committee (Rep. Sabath, D. Ill., chmn.) waiting for a rule to go on House floor.	Wire Sabath and your own Congressman to oppose rule, work and vote against on House floor.
Equal pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work, no discrimination against women in layoffs.	CIO testified for it this week in Senate Labor Committee.	Urge Representative, Senators to support.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present 40c wage floor to 65c, then 75c; widens coverage to include agricultural processing workers.	Senate Labor Committee. Goes to Senate floor soon.	Wire Senators, Representatives to support, reject phoney "compromise" rumored set at 55c.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives country chance to rid itself of Rankins, Bilbos and their like in Congress.	HR 7 reported out by Senate Judiciary, also amendment which would take years to pass.	Wire Senators to support HR 7, demand it come first on floor; reject amendment as stalling device.

TELL YOUR CONGRESSMAN ABOUT TAKE-HOME PAY

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

"LIMITATIONS': The Gwynne bill (HR 2788) setting a one-year "statute of limitations" on workers' claims under the wage-hour, Wagner and other protective laws has been reported out of the House Judiciary Committee and is now in House Rules, waiting for action to send it to the floor.

If this bill is passed, workers will be swindled out of hundreds of millions of dollars in lawful claims under some 17 acts entitling them to claim back pay, damages, etc., from employers.

CIO is demanding a five-year limit in which claims can be filed. Wire your Congressman now to fight HR 2788 as a vicious piece of highway robbery.

CONSCRIPTION: CIO is strongly opposing compulsory military training, has testified against it on the Hill and passed a reolution condemning it at the Executive Board meeting this week.

CIO's position is that we must have full employment, adequate wages, real security as the basis for peace. When we achieve that, we won't need arms—and that's what we must work for now.

* * *

65-75c: CIO's "frayed white collar" workers, represented by the Office and Professional Workers Union, this week added their story to the case for the 65-75c minimum wage bill.

James Durkin, UOPWA national representative, told the House Labor Committee that the bill is a must "to lift purchasing power among those sections of American workers who need it most . . . and to eliminate the threat of hunger, privation and ill-health from the lives of millions, particularly the white collar workers we represent."

World Labor News

"SERIOUS misgivings among workers with regard to the trend of American foreign policy" are rising, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas wrote to President Truman recently. Misgivings are departures from the foreign policy laid down by FDR and enthusiastically supported by union members and other voters in 1944, he said.

Specifically, Thomas wrote Truman, workers are worried over departures from the policy of exterminating fascism laid down at Potsdam, Yalta and Teheran. He cited raising of Germany's steel production to 10 million tons as one example, saying "a nation with that volume of heavy industry is not a nation stripped of war-making power."

Aid to Colonials

British Navy seamen from warships in Sydney, Australia, joined this week with Australian and Canadian soldiers in supporting Indian merchant seamen who have refused to sail ships with arms to suppress revolting Indonesian partiots.

The British seamen thus have joined Australian and CIO Intl. Longshoremen and Natl. Maritime Union members in opposing attempts to suppress the fight for freedom from British and Dutch exploitation in the south Pacific. In recent weeks CIO ILWU and NMU members have refused to work such ships in this country.

As a matter of economic fact, Dutch and British colonial exploitation in Java, the Malay peninsula, Borneo and other sources of oil, tin, rubber, etc., costs U. S. consumers and workers hard money. Both Holland and Britain have always charged U. S. purchasers exorbitant prices for south Pacific raw materials, particularly in the rubber monopoly they used to enjoy. And by paying substandard wages to colonial workers, they prevent them from becoming purchasers of U. S.-made finished goods.

Yugoslav Relief

Support for the Yugoslav relief campaign now underway was expressed by CIO Pres. Murray in a letter to the American Committee for Yugoslav Relief, 235 E. 11th St., New York 3, N. Y., which said:

"The end of the war has not brought the end of suffering, and the freedoms for which we fought will be meaningless if people are permitted to die for lack of food, clothing and medicine. The efforts of the Committee for Yugoslav Relief to provide warm clothing for our destitute allies have the unqualified support of the CIO."

CIO, British Agree

British labor has endorsed the proposed CIO-Trades Union Congress Committee, ALN reports from London. This action is in line with endorsement by the CIO Executive Board (CIO NEWS, Nov. 5) of last week in endorsing the CIO-TUC committee and a similar one with the Soviet All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions.

CIO-BACKED MEN WIN IN 3 KEY CITIES

DEMOCRATIC administrations in three large cities packing terrific political wallops in the key electoral states of New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, were elected this week with strong CIO Political Action Committee support. The cities were New York, Pittsburgh and Cleveland, O.

The victories softened the blow of Richard T. Frankensteen's defeat in Detroit, where incumbent Mayor Edward Jeffries rode into a fourth term on a wave of Nazi-like racial and religious baiting.

The New York Democratic-American Labor Party victory, which swept into office not only William O'Dwyer but almost his entire slate, was interpreted as a resounding slap at Governor Thomas E. Dewey's chances for re-election in 1946 and for his availability as a possible GOP presidential candidate in 1948.

O'Dwyer got 1,119,225 votes to Dewey-backed Judge Jonah H. Goldstein's 434,000. Third place went to Newbold Morris, with 399,437.

In upstate New York, long domination of Republican forces was broken in Utica, with David Golden, Democratic-ALP candidate, elected mayor by a 4,000 plurality. Elected to the Utica Board of Supervisors was CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers official Frank Dardano.

In Worcester, Mass., PAC-endorsed Charles Sullivan defeated his Republican opponent for mayor.

In Cleveland, PAC-backed Tom Burke won the mayoralty race over Republican Ray Miller by 125,640 to 59,791. In the council election, 18 of 29 PAC candidates won and six out of seven endorsed by PAC for municipal court judges were victorious.

In Mercer County, N. J., Harry Dieth, acting president of the N. J. CIO Council, was elected to the state assembly with labor support.

Election of Rollin Everett, CIO candidate, to the City Council in Cincinnati was considered certain as incomplete returns on proportional representation voting there showed him running third.

In Detroit, George Edwards, CIO member, topped the list of council incumbents, to become president of the council, the first labor man to occupy the post.

The Detroit vote was the heaviest off-year ballot on record, with Frankensteen polling 216,917 to Jeffries' 274,435. In a post-election statement, Frankensteen said:

"Progressive forces do not look upon the election results as a defeat. We have polled the largest vote ever given a progressive candidate, even a winning candidate.

"This can mean but one thing—that despite the injection into this campaign of issues having no place in a democratic election, more thinking voters than ever have seen through the haze of race and class hatred to the basic truth that the aims of progressive forces are the ultimate aims of the American people."

LIBEL RULE UPHOLDS CIO

Calling dishonest union officials such names as racketeers, thieves, parasites and grafters does not constitute libel if proof can be established that such officials have betrayed the interests of workers they are supposed to represent, according to a ruling upholding a CIO union issued recently by Judge Ferdinand Pecora of the N. Y. State Supreme Court.

The decision was made in a libel action brought by the AFL Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers against members and officers of CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Local 65. The AFL suit was brought on the basis of circulars distributed by a committee of CIO sample card workers among employes in New York's sample card industry.

The CIO members presented a defense against the action in which reports of the NLRB and other government agencies were cited as proof that the AFL officials on a number of occasions organized workers to strike and then terminated the strikes in connivance with the employers.

SAY TEXTILE COS. STRIKE

Cotton textile manufacturers are refusing to run their mills at capacity, are deliberately provoking strikes, and in some cases are withholding finished goods from the market in an effort to force OPA to raise prices of textile products, officials of the CIO Textile Workers Union charged this week.

Solomon Barkin, the union's research director, and John W. Edelman, Washington representative, in a letter to Senator John Bankhead of Alabama, urged support of the efforts of factory workers to up their minimum wage rates. They declared that the "strike" of cotton textile manufacturers has reduced the consumption of raw cotton and that this is the principal factor in influencing cotton prices.

One of the major reasons for the mills' indifference to all-out production, the letter stated, is that "they have made so much money that they don't feel they have any incentive to make more."

The letter strongly urged the Senator's support of the 65c minimum wage legislation, S-1294.

Ban Atom Arms Race, CIO Urges

CIO took a strong position for international sharing of atomic information for the benefit of mankind, at last week's Executive Board meeting. The complete text of a resolution by the Board follows:

Congress and the President must take prompt steps to deal resolutely and intelligently with both the international and the domestic problems created by the release of atomic energy. As a first step the President should let Congress know that the May-Johnson bill is not an Administration measure. The authors should withdraw the bill, to free Congress for effective action.

The secrets related to atomic energy which are in the possession of the United States are in reality few and limited, and cannot be retained for any great length of time. Our industrial potential, a temporary advantage in any world race for atomic armament, could not protect us permanently.

To enter any such atomic armament race with other powers would destroy any hope of international cooperation and could only end in disaster for the world. Suitable international machinery must be established to bring the use of atomic energy under world-wide social direction.

This country should speak out now in favor of setting up such machinery and should declare its readiness to pool all its information and know-how on atomic energy jointly with all other nations when such machinery has been agreed upon and put in operation.

The domestic implications of the new discoveries are also of great importance. The vast powers which are now being liberated for industrial, scientific and medical purposes must not become the tools of monopoly, but must remain in the hands of the people.

Neither in the international field nor in domestic affairs is there any time to be lost. We urgently recommend that the following steps be taken promptly:

1. Immediate negotiations with Britain and Russia to agree on world-wide atomic energy controls, and extension of the agreement thereafter to the United Nations.

2. The United Nations to outlaw the use of atomic energy for military purposes, and all production of atomic bombs. United Nations control of atomic energy raw materials and production everywhere in the world, with full authority to inspect, investigate and police.

3. Improvement of the present machinery of the United Nations in order to make the above controls effective, and to reduce or eliminate all international military rivalry.

4. Full and continuous disclosure to the United Nations by all governments and their nationals of all information, discoveries and activities related to atomic energy after the above steps have been taken.

5. Broad world-wide public information and education on atomic energy, and stimulation of constructive peacetime development and use, after the foregoing arrangements have been completed.

6. In the United States, a democratically organized national agency to deal domestically with atomic energy, composed of representatives of government, labor, industry, farmers, churches, universities, scientists and military forces.

7. Complete public control of all atomic energy patent rights and licenses in the United States; all rights in new atomic inventions and discoveries must vest automatically in the United States; any pre-existing rights must be acquired at once, by condemnation if necessary.

8. Complete public control of uranium and thorium ore deposits and other raw materials in the United States: The agency should acquire all domestic deposits in the name of the United States and exercise the power of eminent domain where necessary for this purpose.

9. Full public information in the United States immediately on all aspects of atomic energy, subject to the retention of military secrets, as determined by the agency, during the period of consummation of the international arrangements referred to above, in order that the people shall be as fully informed as may be consistent with military security and their representatives may act wisely in this emergency.

Murray to Labor Meet

WAGE ISSUE A 'MUST'

By C. W. FOWLER

LED by President Murray, CIO's delegates carried the fight for wages to offset take-home pay cuts into the second week of the much publicized Labor-Management Conference here in Washington.

CIO's campaign, carried on against the opposition of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, the leaders of the AFL and John L. Lewis, has been aimed at bringing the conference out of the clouds of generalities down to the brass tacks of collective bargaining and honest discussion of the real causes of industrial unrest—wage cuts.

The CIO drive began with Murray's opening speech when he told the conference that collective bargaining in any real sense has broken down in this country, due to the fact that "the word 'no' has been the answer of American industry to the workers' plea for a decent life."

This word 'no,' Murray said, can't be waved away by confining the conference to questions of procedure. Unrest and strikes have basic causes that no amount of procedure, no matter how "effective and facile," can remove .

President Truman, the Office of War Mobilization and Secretary of Commerce Wallace, in recent speeches and reports, have given us the framework for solving these basic problems, and the conference must get to work in that framework, he said, asking:

"What greater contribution could we make to the welfare of our country than to use this conference as a medium for sponsoring the resumption of bargaining on the wage issue within the framework of the President's speech?"

Murray's challenge to the conference to do something concrete was immediately opposed by Ira Mosher of the NAM, William Green of the AFL and John L. Lewis, who teamed up to deny that the conference could or would, as far as they were concerned, have anything to do with wages or collective bargaining. Mosher put it most clearly for them when he said:

"In other words, this is not a national collective bargaining conference. . . . Our function, as individuals and as a group, therefore, is purely advisory—inspirational, if you please."

Lewis's role in the conference was made even more clear in closed sessions of the executive committee, where he was reported to have made long, bombastic speeches endeavoring to knock down the whole idea that wages, prices and the economic state of the country generally were any of its concern."

Murray, on his part, led a singlehanded fight both in the public and in the closed sessions of the meeting to bring the main issue up for discussion, offering a resolution to the executive committee which said:

"The representatives of labor and management assembled in this conference do hereby make an urgent call upon labor unions and the representatives of management to engage in genuine and sincere collective bargaining in an effort to resolve this all-important wage issue.

"The framework for such collective bargaining has been provided by the President in his recent message to the nation, in which he stated that 'wage increases are therefore imperative—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise the national income."

Support for Murray's stand came from only one conference source outside the CIO delegation — Secretary of Commerce Henry A. Wallace, who told the opening meeting:

"The other road (in contrast to cuts in purchasing power and depression) is that of industrial peace through a mutual concern for the general welfare—through full production, full employment, with higher real wages and more lasting profits than we have ever dreamed of before. In guiding us down this road you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you are pushing ahead into the new frontier of abundance."

Pres. R. J. Thomas of UAW-CIO, in his opening speech, also put stress on the futility of relying on procedure to produce industrial peace. "The best procedure in the world can't put one more slice of bread in any worker's mouth, create a single better home—or stop strikes," he said.

Going into another cause of industrial unrest, Murray also urged the conference to accept a resolution calling for "incorporation of an anti-discrimination clause in collective bargaining contracts which will seeek to protect the interests of all people regardless of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry."

Pres. Willard S. Townsend of CIO's Transport Service Employes was another delegate who stressed the need for removing race discrimination as a cause of labor unrest. Townsend's speech also called for action to make FEPC a permanent body. A misunderstanding had him saying that FEPC was not necessary "among men of good will," but this error was cleared up at the conclusion of his speech.

Early in the conference, a blitz move on the part of Lewis, Green and AFL Sec. George Meany kept A. F. Whitney, head of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, out of the meeting on the ground that the independent Brotherhoods were already represented by T. C. Cashen, head of the AFL Switchmen's union. This also was done over CIO—and Trainmen's—protest.

Evidence that rank and file AFL members did not accept their officials' refusal to bring wages into the meeting was seen in reports of protest telegrams pouring into AFL headquarters here.

In addition, Daniel J. Tobin, president of the AFL Teamsters and a delegate to the conference, was reported as saying: "We can't avoid a discussion of wages. It's an intrinsic part of the whole collective bargaining picture."

President Truman, as he opened the Labor-Management Conference in Washington, D. C. To the right is Judge Walter P. Stacy of the N. C. Supreme Court, who is presiding.

Resolution

Here's the wage resolution that CIO President Murray introduced in the Labor-Management Conference, meeting at Washington, D. C.

Resolved, that recognition must be given to the fact that collective bargaining between labor unions and representatives of management in many important situations throughout the country has broken down over the important issue of wages, which has created a very serious crisis for the nation.

The representatives of labor and management assembled in this Conference do hereby make an urgent call upon the labor unions and the representatives of management to engage in genuine and sincere collective bargaining in an effort to resolve this all-important wage issue.

The framework for such collective bargaining has been provided by the President in his recent message to the nation, in which he stated that "wage increases are therefore imperative—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise the national income."

Main Points of Murray Labor-Management Talk

A determined approach based upon the genuine and wholehearted acceptance of collective bargaining by labor and management is of the essence of our democratic society. This is the cornerstone of peaceful and satisfactory industrial relations.

However, I should be remiss in my responsibility in not stating frankly at this moment that I have become convinced by the events of recent months that there has been a steady deterioration of industrial relationships in this country since V-E Day. Today we are confronted with a major collapse in labor-management relations.

The very widespread character of our current differences with management, the bitterness which identifies the feeling of the American employes—this alone tells us that we are in the midst of a condition for which a procedural solution though helpful does not reach into the roots of the problem.

Where then does the answer to our problem lie? All over America workers have joined in a crusade for a very simple objective—the restoration to their pay envelopes of loss in take-home pay, the maintenance of a human standard of living.

Only an improvident shortsightedness could obscure the fact that what is involved in this universal wage restoration campaign is no mere quest for personal and private advantage. What is involved affects deeply the public interest, for fair-minded men cannot deny that the great debate which now rages through our land involves the fate of our entire economy and the avoidance of a deflationary spiral which threatens the welfare of all of us.

The shifting tides of our economy have left workers stranded, deeply mindful of the brutal depressions of past eras, eager to achieve for their families and for the nation as a whole that economic stability and purchasing power which characterizes the healthy, prosperous economy.

At the very time when history has cast collective bargaining in such a critical role, at the very time when it can yield the most for the common good, it has been rejected by many American employers.

The word "No" has, by and large, been the answer of American industry to the workers' plea for a decent life.

The word "No" has not been the answer of the President of the United States. In his recent radio address, he stated that "wage increases are therefore imperative—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise the national income." The President emphasized that the answer could not be the word "No" in enumerating the specific factors which, in his words, "add to the ability of industry to increase wages."

The word "No" was not the answer of the staff of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion whose recent report condemned the word "No" as lacking a dollar and cents basis.

The word "No" has not been the answer of the Department of Commerce which has recently sponsored assurances that substantial wage increases are now economically feasible.

Our true problem then cannot be defined as wholly a procedural one. Our true problem is the little word "No." And we must not forget that the most effective and facile procedures which the wit of man can devise can't conjure away the word "No," nor heal the wound which it threatens to our common welfare.

I therefore earnestly urge that the conference, to meet the basic industrial problem which now confronts the nation, address itself to the urgent need of promoting the wage standards of American workers.

What greater contribution could we make to the welfare of our country than to use this conference as a medium for sponsoring the resumption of bargaining on the wage issue within the framework of the President's speech?

NOT TO BE OVERLOOKED

The proper management of a Fire Department and the best procedures for preventing and putting out fires are matters of great civic interest and importance.

But the man whose house is on fire may be pardoned for considering that the saving of his house should be the first order of business in any fire-fighting doings in his vicinty.

A conflagration is raging today in industrial America and threatening to spread, while in Washington are gathered representatives of labor and management to discuss the cause and cure of such conflagrations and to recommend procedures for preventing them in the future.

The CIO, and indeed the American people generally, may be pardoned for feeling that this labor-management conference is fiddling while Rome burns, if it fails to act first and foremost on this immediate situation.

Industrial peace in America is seriously and extensively threatened today by what CIO Pres. Philip Murray calls "a major collapse in labor-management relations."

With the end of the war, millions of working people have suffered a huge slash in their take-home pay. Caught between shrinking wages and rising living costs, they find it impossible to maintain themselves and their families at a decent standard of living.

These workers, therefore, through their unions, are demanding substantial wage increases. And every competent and impartial survey has shown profits to be so great that such increases can be granted without any need for inflationary price increases.

This situation in itself would cause no threat to industrial peace, if the corporations concerned would bargain collectively and in good faith, as indeed the law requires them to do, for an adequate adjustment of wages.

But the collapse in labor-management relations which threatens America's industrial peace in in effect a collapse of collective bargaining, a rejection of collective bargaining by many of the country's greatest corporations.

Such employers, Murray points out, have just said "No" to the workers' plea for a decent life, have refused to bargain collectively in good faith, and have thus created a national industrial crisis.

A case in point is the arrogant refusal of the United States Steel Corporation to resume collective bargaining conferences with the CIO United Steelworkers of America, even when requested by the government to do so, and in face of the union's immediate favorable response to this request.

The CIO has therefore introduced a resolution in the National Labor-Management Conference, calling upon it to recognize the crisis caused by the breakdown of collective bargaining over wages, and to urge the resumption of "genuine and sincere collective bargaining in an effort to resolve this all-important wage issue."

The resolution further points out that the framework for such collective bargaining has been provided by President Truman, when he stated that "wage increases are therefore imperative—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise the national income."

In insisting that the Labor-Management Conference take such action, the CIO is making the most realistic and practical contribution it could to the success of the conference in its declared purpose to "make possible better human relationships in American industry."

What will surprise the members of other labor organizations, and most of the American people, is that so far the CIO has had to battle singlehanded, on behalf of labor and industrial peace, to inject this constructive note of realism and urgency into the conference.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

WE saw the Kremlin and Lenin lifelike in his tomb. We visited heroic Leningrad, the city that stopped Hitler. We saw devastation unparalleled. We saw new vigorous life sprouting from the ruins. Each day of our visit to the Soviet Union was crowded with vivid and significant impressions.

But curiously, the memories that stand out most vividly and persistently in my mind, as I look back over this trip with the CIO delegation, are memories of smiles, handclasps, hugs and plain human warmth, friendliness and good fellowship—and sometimes, yes, a few tears—things that you can see and feel without ever leaving the United States.

I think of the young factory worker in a Moscow plant trying to give expression to his enthusiasm for American-Soviet friendship as he walked arm in arm with two CIO delegates—and how he nearly tripped in his eager haste to do us some small favor.

I think of the Leningrad woman, with one arm lost in the siege, who brought us flowers as we left by train; and of the moist eyes of one of our union hosts, as we looked at exhibits of glue and shavings such as had barely kept his sick wife alive during those ghastly months of freezing starvation.

I think of Russian bear hugs and the feel of bristly cheeks; of long warm handshakes; of the friendly smiles of workers at union and shop meetings; and of the way the Russians laughed and joined in the fun of American horseplay and joshing, even when it must have been hard for them to know what it was all about.

It always seems to come as a surprise to Americans to find the ordinary Russians so like themselves—so easy to get along with, so warm and responsive, so lacking in stiffness and formality, and incidentally, pretty earthy and practical like most Americans.

But the Russians, for their part, are surprised that we should be surprised. More than this, they are not a little hurt that they should be so misunderstood, so misinterpreted and even hated by people in other countries whose friendship they want and deserve.

This feeling of hurt and indignation cropped up again and again during our visit—with particular and repeated reference to the Hearst and McCormick press and William L. White, whose latest book seems to have placed him in the running for No. 1 Heel, so far as the Soviet Union is concerned.

We were asked again and again by workers we met to tell the American people the truth fully and fairly in the interests of closer American-Soviet friendship.

One union man even got so enthusiastic in a speech on the subject that he said: "If you tell the truth, they'll be obliged to close the papers that tell lies."

The CIO delegates had to explain again and again that the same kind of American papers and interests that attack and lie about the Soviet people also constantly attack and lie about American labor and the CIO.

★ ★ ★

The deep desire for American friendship and cooperation which found so much personal expression during our visit, is no mere abstract sentimentalism for the Russians we met.

For people who have suffered as much in their own lives as have they, from invasion and all the hell of modern total war, understanding that will help to avert another war is a very practical matter of life and death.

It's also a matter of food and clothing and a more comfortable life for all. For the Soviet Union needs American machinery and other aid to speed industrial reconstruction and to achieve the production necessary for higher living standards for all the people, which is now the country's main goal.

In return, the Soviet people feel that they can contribute fully as much as we to the maintenance of world peace and to our common prosperity and progress.

So the CIO delegation was welcomed most warmly and hopefully as a token of the genuine friendship of American labor, and as a good omen for the future cooperation of our two peoples.

FACTS OF LIFE PROVE NEED FOR 65c FLOOR

THE WORKERS are telling the simple facts of the struggle for existence in America on sub-standard wages, at hearings being held in their home towns throughout the nation.

Sponsored by the CIO, the AFL and other groups of public spirited citizens, hearings have already been held at Richmond, Va., and Harrisburg, Pa. Two other hearings were scheduled for this week-end at New York City and Durham, N. C. Plans have also been made for hearings at New Brunswick, N. J., and in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

Better wages are needed to buy the bare necessities of life, CIO and AFL workers earning sub-standard wages declared in bread-and-butter terms at the Richmond hearing.

"People want more salt pork and bread," declared Clarence Cumber, worker at a Richmond paper factory, where half of the employes get take-home pay of $20 or less a week.

"They can't even buy the simplest luxuries on this kind of pay. If they can't buy radios and refrigerators, these things will pile up in the warehouses where they won't do anybody any good," he said.

"If I could earn 65 cents an hour," she asserted, "I wouldn't have to worry much about the children and keeping the rent paid, and I could get proper medical attention for my sick husband. Even 65 cents an hour is not equal to 40 cents an hour before the war."

"Out of my 54 cents an hour I have to buy not only special heavy clothing, but also rubber aprons and rubber boots," said Esther Winston, employed in the cold storage room of a Richmond meat packing plant.

"I get 58 cents an hour, which barely supplies me and my family with the bare necessities of life. I don't believe anybody can live in comfort on anything less than $35 a week."

A 65-cent an hour wage so that she could educate her 14-year-old son was the simple wish of Mrs. Sallie Byers, Lynchburg garment worker.

Joining the Workers in advocating the passage of the minimum wage measure, Israeul November, production manager for a Richmond clothing firm, said:

"New production methods and equipment have made possible economies and it is time these economies were shared with the workers." He was the only employer who testified.

Although others were invited to appear, only one opponent of the bill testified, Dr. Margaret DuBoid, director of the Clinic of the Medical College of Virginia.

She argued that operating costs of the clinic would rise 10 percent if it was compelled to pay 65 cents an hour. She admitted that some workers at the clinic received only $800 a year.

A number of prominent Virginia educators, clergymen and welfare workers joined the wage earners in their plea. These included Miss May O. Hankins, State Public Welfare Commissioner; Dr. Lorin Thompson, head of the University of Virginia's bureau of population and economic research; Dr. Gladys Boone, Sweetbriar College; Prof. Hylan Lewis, Hamtpon Institute, and Father T. E. O'Connell, chairman of the Catholic Committee of the South.

Miss Brownie Lee Jones, head of the Southern School for Workers, was another witness. The Southern School joined the CIO and AFL in sponsoring the hearing. Ernest B. Pugh, CIO Regional Director, and Robert A. Johnson, chairman of the legislative committee of the Virginia CIO Council, testified.

Congressman Gray (D) presided and a record of the hearing was sent to Virginia Representatives and Senators.

Action for the 65-75-cent minimum wage bill: Members of the CIO Textile Workers employed at the Lane Cotton Mills, New Orleans (below) are getting signatures to a petition to Sen. Ellender (D.) urging favorable action to get the measure out of the Senate Education and Labor Committee. Ellender is a member of the committee. The bill is also bottled up in the House Labor Committee. Esther Winston (left) said at a hearing on the minimum wage bill at Richmond, Va., that out of less than $22 a week she must buy these rubber boots, a rubber apron and special heavy clothing needed to work in a meat packing plant.

On the Air With CIO

Readers who get their papers Monday, Nov. 12, should mark up 10 p.m. E.S.T. on the day's calendar. CIO President Murray will discuss the wage issue then over ABC stations, in the third of four bi-weekly programs.

He'll be on again, same time, same stations, Monday, Nov. 26.

The Federal Communications Commission this week was asked to revoke the license of station WTRC, Elkhart, Ind. The request came from the Indiana and Elkhart CIO Councils.

The Councils charged that WTRC had censored a CIO script which cited facts connected with a trial of the A&P Grocery chain. Main point in the trial, as reported in the Congressional Record, a privileged document, was:

". . . how this company obtained $1,953,000 in 1941 through 'stock gains,' which in more understandable language is through short weights, overcharges, and price boosting. The government also charged, and produced evidence to that effect, that between 1935 and 1941, $21,714,000 was obtained from patrons of the A&P stores through such practices."

Radio education carries with it a huge amount of social responsibility, Kermit Eby, CIO director of education and research, this week told the Citizens' Radio Anniversary Committee, meeting in New York City.

"Since public opinion is largely influenced by what comes over the air, democracy is largely dependent on whether divergent opinions and ideas are presented," Eby said.

"The labor movement must find out how to command more time on the air. We must not continue to sit back while industrial management presents its case first and loudest."

Religious Students Study CIO Work

The Natl. Religion & Labor Foundation, an organization to promote cooperation among churches and unions, this week sponsored a three-day visit of 55 theological students from 22 Protestant and Hebrew seminaries to Washington, D. C., giving them an opportunity to see how the CIO is working for a prosperous America in the Nation's capital.

While the delegates were unable to attend sessions of the labor-management conference because attendance was limited to members of the press, they listened eagerly to reports of the parley, and heard speakers from management, labor and government, including Sens. Kilgore (D., W. Va.) and Morse (R., Oreg.) and Kermit Eby, president of the foundation and CIO director of research and education.

SHIPS IDLE AS GIs WAIT TRIPS HOME

FAILURE to provide ships to bring home high-point troops from abroad this week assumed the proportions of a national problem demanding immediate governmental action. Developments included:

1. Charges that 20 troopships available to bring servicemen back for discharge were lying idle in San Francisco Bay.

2. Charges that 175 merchant ships could be converted in eight days to troop carriers, in New York City, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Camden, Boston and other New England yards.

3. Decision by the national office of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union to set Dec. 1 as he deadline beyond which it would recommend that members refuse to man ships not used to bring troops home.

Six CIO Maritime unions were joined by one independent union in urging President Truman to investigate the failure to use 20 ships lying idle in the San Francisco area and in asking the Navy pointed questions concerning particular ships not being used for bringing troops here.

The ships could carry anywhere from 400 to 7,000 troops each, the unions said.

In New York City, Charles A. Leone, regional director of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, listed 11 shipyards where 51 merchant ships could be reequipped in eight days as troopships capable of bringing 50,000 troops home.

He added that there were facilities available in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Camden, Boston and New England ports for reequipping 125 more ships.

A special meeting of the NMU membership in New York City approved the decision of the national office of the union to set Dec. 1 as the deadline beyond which it would recommend that members refuse to man ships not used to bring troops home.

NMU Natl. Sec. Ferdinand C. Smith has telegraphed NMU members in all ports asking that they take similar action. Meanwhile, the union was receiving scores of letters, telegrams and telephone calls from servicemen's wives, servicemen's organizations and individuals all over the country in support of its position.

The Natl. Conference of Union Labor Legionnaires in a wire from Regional Vice-Pres. Genry Geisz endorsed the proposal of NMU Pres. Joseph Curran that emergency shipping procedures be instituted for furnishing priority crews to troopships.

"Your proposal will do much to allay the false impression created by unscrupulous people that organized labor is responsible for the delay in getting the boys back before Christmas," Geisz telegraphed.

Senate Vets' Deal Below CIO Request

THE Senate this week adopted an amendment liberalizing the loan and educational features of the GI Bill of Rights. The measure is an improvement but does not go as far as the CIO has been advocating.

For instance, the Senate-approved bill raises the subsistence allowance for veterans attending school to $65 a month for single men and $90 a month for men with dependents. The CIO asks that a single veteran receive $90, with $25 for each dependent up to a maximum of three. For disabled veterans attending school the allowance was boosted to $105 a month. The CIO asks a minimum of $115 for disabled veterans.

The provision that limited educational provisions of the GI Bill to men 25 or under at time of induction was eliminated—as the CIO advocated at hearings before the veterans' legislative subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee.

The Senate would allow the Veterans Administration to continue to approve all loans which it guarantees—50 percent of a loan up to $2,000. It is better than the bill which Rep. Rankin (Miss. polltaxer) forced through the House and which would turn the appraisal system over to banks and other lending institutions.

The CIO agreed with the study of Bernard Baruch which advocated that appraisal of loans be put in the hands of the U. S. Housing Authority so as to protect veterans fully from greedy real estate speculators.

The Senate bill makes no provision for boosting the unemployment benefits for veterans from $20 a week for a year up to $25 a week with $5 additional for each dependent up to a maximum of three. The measure will now go to the House.

CIO Board Urges:

BUILD A SOLID PEACE, NOT A WAR MACHINE

ASSERTING that "we cannot have both collective security and overwhelming national armaments," the CIO Executive Board this week called on the U. S. Government to join the other nations of the world in planning for disarmament and for an international police force — instead of for compulsory military training, as recommended to Congress by President Truman.

The board's resolution quoted the Atlantic Charter which called for collaboration between nations in the economic field in order to raise working standards everywhere, and outlined the CIO program for:

Jobs for all at good wages; adequate nutrition, child welfare, medical care and education programs; minimum wage standards; social security benefits to prevent interruption of income, and recognition of the freedom of association and collective bargaining.

Proclaiming that "the greatest contribution our country can make to the peace of the world is the achievement of full employment and security for 60 million Americans, the resolution asserted:

"The energies of all Americans, through their government, should be concentrated on the solution of the economic and the social problems which produce war and not on the development and acceptance of the policy of militarization which defies the ideals for which we profess to be fighting at this moment."

The board went on record for enforcement of international law by a world organization through an international police force and stated that "peacetime military training by the U. S. concerns all of the nations of the world and all of the peoples of the world."

"It seems to us that such action at this time by the U. S. would be equivalent to shouting from the house-tops, 'We do not believe it is possible to create a world free from war. So watch out for us'," the board stated.

MORE VETS' AID ASKED

THE CIO Executive Board at its latest meeting found the GI Bill of Rights inadequate, called on Congress to defeat all attempts to divide veterans from their fellow workers and to enact a comprehensive program for disabled veterans.

Urging Congress to go beyond the Senate Finance sub-committee recommendations for amendment of the GI Bill of Rights, the resolution called for these specific improvements:

Increased benefits; financial assistance to states for planning veterans' educational programs; higher subsistence and dependency allotments for student veterans; direct government loans for veterans going into business; proper safeguard of apprenticeship training programs, and appeal machinery for review of all courts martial.

Condemning the policy of releasing ships to shipping companies, the CIO board urged that these ships be used for the return of high-point servicemen. General Bradley was praised for his improvement of the Veterans Administration, but was asked to eliminate "all discriminatory practices in the administration of veterans' benefits."

UNION SLANT ON RUSSIA

Direct from the Soviet Union comes this CIO report on factory life, on hours of work and wages, by CIO NEWS Editor De Caux who visited Leningrad and Moscow after the Paris World Trade Union meeting.

By LEN DE CAUX

FOR the CIO delegates who visited the Soviet Union, as guests of that country's trade union movement, the kind of reception they received at the great industrial plants they visited was a new and strange experience. It evoked wry memories of very different receptions at some American plants when CIO organizers first arrived.

We were greeted in most cases by big signs and banners of welcome, written in English and hailing the CIO and American labor in glowing terms, and by welcoming delegations including the director, chief engineer, union officials, shop committeemen and active unionists.

Then we would be escorted to the director's office, where he and other plant officials and union representatives would tell us about their factory and answer all our questions. Next we would make a tour of the plant, and talk with some of the workers at their machines.

In some instances we attended shop meetings of committee members, shop stewards and active unionists; and in others, impromptu meetings would be called right in the shop, at change of shifts, attended by any and all workers passing by.

At some point in the visit, one of our hosts in the most innocent tone of voice would usually suggest that maybe "a little tea" would interest us. We would then be ushered into a room in the plant and confronted with a groaning banquet table, set for some scores of people. There our shop and union hosts would ply us with almost every kind of food and drink—except tea!

Other points of interest we would visit at most plants, as time permitted, included medical clinics, children's creches and kindergartens, workers' club rooms and the prophylactorium.

The last-mentioned is a most common Soviet factory institution, intended for workers who are not really sick, but who may be run down, or in need of special diets or medical treatment to avoid illness. There these workers can spend their nights, under restful conditions and medical supervision, and have the special food they need, while continuing to work in the plant during the day.

THE Stalin auto plant, on the outskirts of Moscow, is known as the ZES plant (Zavod Emeny Stalina). Starting with a production of ten trucks in 1924, it was expanded to a production of 100,000 trucks a year before the war began. When the Germans approached Moscow, 50% of the plant's equipment was shipped to the Urals, where a second ZES plant was started.

Production at the Moscow plant has already been reconverted to peacetime purposes, and trucks, passenger cars and busses are rolling off the assembly lines. Light trucks are being produced in the greatest quantity, but the plant's chief pride and joy seems to be the new model ZES seven-passenger car, a large and comfortable-looking job, somewhat comparable in appearance to an American Packard. Mass-production of cheaper-model passenger cars is going forward at other plants.

The Stalin plant has attached to it a "Palace of Culture" (workers' club house), capable of accommodating five or six thousand workers at one time, and with facilities for dramatics, sports, movies, library, children's section, etc. There are also kindergartens and creches for the children of working parents, and rest homes for the workers in the country. But we did not have time to visit these.

Wages and working conditions are established by collective agreement with the Auto Workers Union, to which all but a few of the workers belong. About half the employes are women, who receive equal pay for equal work with the men. Workers are entitled to two weeks' vacation with pay, but those employed on hotter and more physically trying jobs get four weeks, and three days vacation are added after five years employment.

Working hours are now eight a day, six days a week, with time-and-a-half for overtime for the first additional hour, and double time for the second. On hot or more trying jobs and on night shifts the straight-time hours are seven, with overtime rates after that. The workers rotate shifts, and the plant is closed Sundays, except for continuous operations.

Before the war, working hours were seven a day, and six in hot or unhealthy jobs. But during the war they went up to ten or more, with overtime rates paid for the additional hours.

We were told that actual take-home earnings have not declined since the war, despite the cut in working hours. In some of the mechanical operations, they declined a little when hours were cut, but they are now up to about the same level again as during the war.

Director Lickachev attributed this to the greater productivity of the workers with better machinery and to their being more rested with the shorter hours. He said that in the forging department, the workers are producing more in eight hours now than they did in ten.

At the Stalin plant, the CIO delegation attended a special union meeting in the "Red Corner," with about a hundred committeemen, shop stewards and active unionists present. We were told in some detail how the union functions, in regard to fixing wages, handling grievances, election of officers and stewards, social insurance, educational and cultural work, etc. (Since these procedures are similar in most Soviet plants and unions, this whole matter will be the subject of a later special article).

The unionists present emphasized that there is close cooperation between union and management, and little possibility of such friction as arises between unions and employers in the United States, since there is a common interest in increasing production when its fruits will go into higher wages and better living conditions for the workers concerned and into a greater and cheaper supply of commodities for all, rather than into private profits.

Some of the union's chief concerns at the present time at the Stalin auto plant, we were told, are social welfare work, and particularly obtaining enough housing to assure that all workers will be properly housed for the winter; fulfillment of the five-year plan; and obtaining more rest homes than the union has at present.

After Chairman James Carey had introduced the CIO delegates

All U.S. Needs an EMIC Plan

By ELEANOR FOWLER

OVER A million wives and infants of servicemen have been cared for to date under the Children Bureau's emergency maternity and infant care EMIC program. Applications are still coming in, too, at the rate of 35,000 a month.

No program of government assistance to service families has done more to contribute to family welfare. The service father was certain that regardless of cost, his wife and infant would receive every necessary service. The average cost was something under $100 a baby, but expenses in some cases ran over $1,000.

Nine out of ten babies under the program were born in hospitals, as compared with only seven out of ten in the general population. That alone meant far fewer deaths and a better start in life for those million infants.

The value of such a program to the individual family and to the nation is clear. The need for its extension to the rest of our people is clear also.

One baby out of every 25 born in the United States today dies before the end of the first year of life. Although this is the lowest infant death rate in our history, estimates are that perhaps half of those could live if they had adequate medical and hospital care. The death rate for Negro infants is 72% higher than for white infants.

MANY MOTHERS DIE

The maternal death rate has been cut in half in the last 10 years but still 7,000 mothers die each year from causes associated with childbirth. That could be halved again if all American mothers had the care this country knows how to give. The Negro mortality rate is two and a half times that for white mothers.

These are some of the figures which make Title I of the Pepper-Norton maternity and child welfare bill so urgent. The $50,000,000 which would be authorized by that title would provide $25,000,000 for maternity care and care of infants and pre-school children; $15,000,000 for additional health services for school children and $10,000,000 for children's dental care, which Selective Service figures showed to be so badly needed.

The second title of the Pepper-Norton bill would extend services to crippled children. Today over 100,000 such children are being aided through the $3,870,000 annual appropriation for that purpose under the Social Security Act. However, "fewer than 10% of the Nation's physically handicapped children are receiving care through services developed under the social security program," Catherine Lenroot, Chief of the Children's Bureau, recently told a Congressional Committee.

Half a million children with rheumatic fever, approximately the same number with T.B., nearly a million with congenital syphilis and millions with visual and hearing defects are still neglected. That is why $25,000,000 for additional services to crippled children is included in the Pepper-Norton bill.

Finally, Title III of the bill would provide $20,000,000 for additional child welfare services to improve present programs for the care of dependent, neglected and delinquent children, to improve institutional care for children and to help finance care for children of employed mothers.

Dining Car Workers Vote CIO

Dining-car cooks and waiters on the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. voted 330 for the CIO Transport Service Employes to 246 for the AFL Hotel & Restaurant Workers in a recent election conducted by the Natl. Mediation Board.

The B. & O. employes, formerly a part of the AFL Hotel Workers, are the second largest dining car group which has chosen the CIO Transport Service union as collective bargaining agent. The Southern Railroad's 1,052 dining-car employes are already covered by a CIO contract.

As part of its security drive for dining-car employes, the UTSEA-CIO is seeking to eliminate the many wage cuts practiced by the railroads in making deductions for meals and non-existent lodging.

The union has also filed demands with the railroad companies for a reduction of hours for dining-car employes from the regular 240 a month to 160 without reduction in pay.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., reports: Two victories in Northeastern Pennsylvania. Condenser Service employes at Scranton voted 100 for USA-CIO to 4 for AFL Bridge & Iron Workers, and 3 for no union. Luzerne Aluminum Co., Pittston, Pa., USA-CIO 45 out of 53 employes on day of NLRB card check. Since certification, USA-CIO has increased membership to 75. CIO Field Repres. Frank Vrataric handled both campaigns in fine style.

It is with regret that we announce the death of CIO Field Representative Severino Pollo in Detroit. He was an untiring and loyal worker in the cause of labor, and stood forthright for the CIO policies. Many friends will miss him. I extend to his family our heartfelt sympathies.

The CIO delegates are all back from Europe, where we visited Paris, Berlin, London and Moscow. The conference of the World Federation of Trade Unions came out successfully and our visit was most interesting. If space permits, I shall deal with some of these matters in future columns.

U.S. Steel's Turndown Arrogant, Says Murray

CIO Pres. Philip Murray called U. S. Steel's refusal this week to resume collective bargaining with the United Steelworkers of America, even when requested to do so by the Government, "a shocking and arrogant attitude."

Benjamin F. Fairless, U. S. Steel's president, turned down a request this week made by Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach to reopen the union-industry wage conference, with Arthur S. Meyer representing the U. S. Dept. of Labor as a special conciliator. Murray earlier had accepted the offer for the union.

"We are in complete accord with the suggestion in your letter of Nov. 3 that the collective bargaining conference be conducted in a spirit of the President's recent radio address to the nation," Murray wrote the Secretary of Labor.

In a statement to the press made after U. S. Steel's refusal to resume wage negotiations on the union's demand for a $2 a day increase, Murray commented on Fairless' curt turndown and called attention to his earlier arbitrary stand, when on Sept. 17 he "virtually negated an impending collective bargaining conference by saying in a public statement that the corporation could not meet the wage demands of the union."

In turning down Schwellenbach's offer of conciliation this week, the U. S. Steel Corp. head said that existing steel price ceilings "do not enable us to grant a wage increase at this time." Wage discussions would be futile, he added, until the price question was settled.

The situation at present, Murray told the press, is that labor has responded to the call of government and industry has refused.

"The answer must be provided by the Government," he declared. "It is up to the Secretary of Labor to take the next step." Up to now, Murray said, U. S. Steel has stalemated all wage negotiations for the industry. "U. S. Steel is the bellwether of the industry," he asserted. "Other companies await the outcome of negotiations with U. S. Steel."

Referring to U. S. Steel's claim that it could not afford wage increases, Murray cited figures to show that this was not true. The corporation has $300,000,000 more liquid assets today than in 1941, property value has been increased by $500,000,000, and the average productivity of the individual worker has gone up 25%, he stated.

General Motors Trying To Sandbag Public—UAW

CHARGING General Motors Corp. with "striking against the public" in the hope of pressuring an inflationary increase in the price of cars, Walter Reuther, director of the United Auto Workers' GM Dept., this week indignantly rejected the company's offer of a small purported cost-of-living increase, as a counter proposal to the union's demand for a 30% increase. He said a charge of violating the Wagner Act, by refusal to bargain, will be filed against GM.

"The union flatly rejects the corporation's bribe offer because we will not be a party to sandbagging the American consumers," Reuther said. "Such a course as the corporation proposes would limit the sale and production of cars and pave the way for inflation and a quick depression."

The GM offer, which the corporation estimated would increase wages eight to ten per cent, proposed in conformity with the Government's amended wage policy, to raise "wage rates by classifications which since 1941 have not been increased in proportion to the increase in the cost of living as determined by the Government agency responsible for administering these executive orders."

Reuther said that he asked corporation officials after the offer was made if they would offer any increase, even one per cent on the basis of no price increases, and that the reply was "No."

The company's conditional offer, he declared, "is consistent with the strike action pursued by General Motors in its efforts to force OPA to lift ceiling prices on 1946 cars."

The 34-page brief containing the GM wage proposal devoted much space to ridiculing the recent OWMR report which stated that industry generally could grant a wage increase of 24% without raising wages.

As negotiations between the union and General Motors reopened later in the week, Reuther charged that the corporation's refusal to permit U. S. labor conciliators to attend until after the conference became deadlocked, was "part of the defeatist policy the corporation has pursued throughout the negotiations—a policy of waiting until collective bargaining has broken down instead of taking steps to prevent its breaking down."

FAECT Turns The Tables

How technical employes at Lloyd-Rogers, New York engineering firm, turned a lockout into a big victory is told in a statement issued this week by the CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians.

When the company sought to break a collective bargaining agreement in effect since January, 1945, by locking out its employes at a moment's notice, the entire technical staff of 150 got together and put on a bang-up publicity campaign that made the company quickly pull in its horns.

Committees were set up to enlist support of other CIO unions, and to contact other groups of technical employes, and a flood of leaflets were distributed so widely that employes through the industry were made aware of what was happening at Lloyd-Rogers.

The company finally gave in and met the union's demands, reinstating the entire staff and agreeing to carry out the terms of the existing agreement.

Tannery Victory

The 600 workers at the John R. Evans Tannery in Camden, N. J., have returned to work with all their major demands granted, following an eight-week strike conducted by Local 206, CIO. Fur & Leather Workers to force the company to accept a War Labor Board maintenance of membership order. A 7½ cents hourly wage increase, paid vacations and other gains were won in a renewal of the contract.

Pin Money for American Tobacco Officials

American Tobacco could pay the 25 cents hourly increase asked by the 2,500 workers on strike at three of the company's plants with less than 10 per cent of the average annual excess profit taxes paid by the company during 1941-44, states the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers. The struck plants are in Philadelphia, Pa., Trenton, N. J., and Charleston, S. C.

The union maintains that on the basis of a 40-hour week for 52 weeks, the 25 cents hourly increase would mean an annual increase in wages of $1,300,000. "In the years 1941-44, the American Tobacco Co., one of the wealthiest corporations in America, paid an average of $13,833,945 annually in excess profits taxes," the union stated.

As further evidence of the company's ability to pay, the union pointed to action instituted by a group of American Tobacco stockholders in 1941, which revealed that more than $1,800,000 was held recoverable from six top officers for overpayments under the management profit-sharing plan. A 25 cents raise for 2,500 workers would be $500,000 less than this over-payment to six officers, the union said.

Then there is the matter of $522,005 paid to the company's three top officers in 1943. "A 25 cents hourly raise for the workers would be less than twice as much as three officers got in 1943," states the union.

CIO Conventions

Three CIO international and national unions have announced conventions for December. They are:

Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists & Technicians, New York City, Dec. 7-9.

Oil Workers Intl. Union, Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 10-16.

United Rubber Workers, Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 14.

CIO Oil Union Takes Wage Case to Public

Issues in the wage dispute between the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union and the oil industry were given to the public this week in ads run in the daily press.

In the form of an open letter to President Truman, a full-page ad in The Washington Post told the President, "We'd like to Practice What You Preach."

The wage dispute boiled down to essentials, the ad stated: "Shall oil workers' earnings be maintained at their present level when industry converts from the 48-hour week to 40 hours? Or shall they be slashed 30 per cent? . . . The union, in order to maintain take-home pay and thus preserve the purchasing power of its members, has asked for a 30 per cent upward adjustment in pay rates, not in earnings, in order to maintain the status quo in oil wages."

The ad pointed out that the oil industry enjoys the lowest labor costs of any major industry, with less than 8 cents out of every oil dollar going to meet the payroll, in contrast with labor costs as high as 50 per cent in certain other industries.

"Last year Standard Oil of New Jersey earned a profit equivalent to $3,000 for each employe—an amount greater than was paid in wages to the average employe," the union declared.

Spills Beans

George Romney, general manager of the Auto Manufacturers Assn., considered a key spokesman for the industry, spilled some beans at a press conference this week showing that a sly campaign aimed to bust the CIO Auto Workers Union is part of the auto bosses' strategy. He called for long-drawn out plant by plant negotiations instead of company-wide negotiations.

EDUCATION

Shipyard Union's Brain Work

IF anyone thinks the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers' educational staff is a bunch of lazy lugs, it's not so, and they can prove it. In a lively open letter to the union's rank and file printed in the November 5 issue of The Shipyard Worker, Educational Director Elwood Peoples tells what goes on, and it's plenty.

The department was set up in April, 1944, with one man, Peoples, and a two-page Exec. Board resolution outlining a pretty heavy program including the preparation of a lot of literature on various subjects. The staff has now grown to seven and the work already done and planned for the future is enormous. It keeps them "busy as tailors," says Peoples.

There's the Job Relations program, originally drawn up by a government agency for supervisors which was refitted into a suit of union clothes for shop stewards and sent into Baltimore, New York, North Jersey, New England and the Delaware River area.

While this was being tested in the field, the staff worked up material on public speaking; parliamentary procedure; structure and functioning of the union; collective bargaining and a history of organized labor.

Now on hand are five separate mimeographed manuals, long enough together to make almost two full length novels, not to mention the detailed work of endless reading and note-taking and interviewing that went into them. This mimeographed material is being revised for printed pamphlet form, and two of the pamphlets are now at the printers. Copies will be given to all members attending a class on the subject covered. These classes are scheduled to start later this month.

Five more manuals are being planned on: Labor legislation; labor economics; political action; analysis of press and radio propaganda, and business administration of a labor union. In between times, there goes on the regular preparation of leaflets, forums, rallies, recreation programs, educational committees, extension courses in schools and colleges, articles and even lectures. So you can see the educational staff are no slouches.

Arbitration Poll

Compulsory arbitration is mighty unpopular both with labor and industry, according to an extensive poll conducted recently by the American Arbitration Assn. Over-all returns of 35,000 ballots sent to labor unions and heads of 10,000 leading corporations, members of various committees of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, government officials and others, showed 69.7 per cent for voluntary to 30.3 per cent for compulsory arbitration.

Unions voted better than four to one, and corporations as a whole two and a third to one in favor of voluntary arbitration. AFL unions had a much lower ratio than CIO unions, voting three to one, to the CIO's six and a half to one in favor of voluntary. Editors of labor papers voted eight to one for voluntary arbitration.

Book Reviews

Grass Roots Cooperation

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

Two recent books on the cooperative movement, written from the common man's point of view, have ideas and stories in them that may be of interest to CIO unions and members in consumer co-ops and credit unions.

"I Speak for Joe Doakes," by Roy F. Bergengren voices the common man's plea for more cooperation at home and among nations. The author says he wrote the book "because I feel that through the more than four million members of cooperative banks and credit unions which I have helped to organize in the last 25 years, I have been in unusually close contact with the ordinary average worker (whom I here call Joe Doakes)."

"Ourselves, Inc.," by Leo R. Ward, professor of philosophy at Notre Dame University, is the personal story of the author's visits among typical families of the three million members of consumer cooperatives in the Mid-West. This is not a glib smooth book. The reader bounces with Father Ward in the Jackrabbit busses he rides across the prairies of Minnesota and the Dakotas and shares his rambling thoughts, his enjoyment of the countryside with its smell of blue alfalfa fields and pale wild roses, and sits in on talks with farmers' and workers' families.

Both writers are concerned with the broader aspects of cooperation, social, economic and religious, and the influence for good on the individual. The two books are published by Harper & Brothers, 49 East 33rd St., New York 16, N. Y.

Negro Education

A sum totaling $1,030,000 has been raised by the United Negro College Fund, 38 East 57th St., New York City, to promote higher education among Negroes in 32 colleges. The CIO was among the contributors to the Fund's second annual drive which was held in 45 cities.

New School At Cornell

Classes at the new School of Industrial and Labor Relations at Cornell University established by the State of New York opened November 5 with more than a hundred students enrolled, 60 of them veterans and 19 women. The school is endorsed by the New York State CIO Council.

Pres. Edmund Ezra Day of Cornell, said in an address at the opening ceremonies that the school was "one of the most interesting experiments in all university history in this country."

★ ★ ★

A campaign calling for election at large of the Board of Regents, top governing body of New York State's educational system, has been announced by Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council.

Charging that at present the Board of Regents "is nothing but a home for the aged," Hollander said that the system of election should be changed "to give wider representation and do away with political patronage."

Rosenwald Fellowships

Special opportunities for study, travel, or work experience for the development of men and women of unusual promise are offered under the Julius Rosenwald Fund's 1946 fellowship program. The grants are offered under three categories:

(1) To Negroes; (2) to white southerners who wish to work on some problem distinctive to the South and who expect to make their careers in the South; (3) to persons from any part of the U. S. working in the field of race relations.

"The fellowships are intended to provide opportunities for special experience or advance study to individuals who have already given evidence of exceptional ability and who wish to prepare themselves further," the announcement states. Candidates between 24 and 35 years of age are preferred, though very exceptional cases will be considered on their merits.

Term of the fellowships will normally be for one year, and awards will average $1,500 for a full year's work. Applications and further information may be obtained from Mrs. William C. Haywood, acting director for fellowships, Julius Rosenwald Fund, 4901 Ellis Ave., Chicago 15, Ill.

World Youth Conference

Two of the three women representing the American YWCA Nat. Board at the World Youth Conference now being held in London are members of the CIO. One is Miss Elsa Graves of Chicago, former Carnegie-Illinois Steel crane operator who belongs to the CIO Steelworkers. She is chairman of the YWCA Natl. Industrial Council. The other is Miss Lempi Matthews, chairman of the YWCA Business & Professional Council, who belongs to the CIO Office & Professional Workers.

The Youth Conference was called by the World Youth Council, formed in London in 1942 by representatives of Great Britain and the exiled governments of occupied countries, to promote international friendship and mobilize young people behind definite projects for relief, rehabilitation and elimination of fascism.

A total of 400 delegates from 63 countries are attending. There are 25 in the American delegation including representatives from the U. S. Student Assembly, Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, Jewish Welfare Board, CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Natl. Intercollegiate Christian Council, Unitarian Youth and war veterans and members of the armed forces.

Union Public Relations

The California Labor School, 216 Market St., San Francisco 11, announces that it has started the first Workshop in Public Relations in America. The Workshop program, designed primarily for workers in the community, "will give labor's representatives a complete training in the how-to-do-it of this supposedly mysterious profession," states the school's prospectus.

UNION SLANT ON RUSSIA

and addressed the meeting on American labor's activities and problems, questions were invited. They revealed a lively interest in the structure and functioning of American unions, and particularly in what happens to American workers when they are unemployed.

After the meeting, I heard that some of the younger Soviet workers present regretted the meeting could not have gone on longer, since there were many things that puzzled them about America. For instance, one said, he couldn't understand why American employers had to be urged or forced to increase wages, instead of just naturally improving conditions whenever possible and seeing that the unemployed were properly looked after!

AT THE Krasny Proletarier machine-building plant in Moscow, we found that the Director, Peter Taranichev, formerly a worker in the plant, had visited the U. S. He and the union officers and workers we met were extremely proud of their plant, which had repeatedly won the Red Banner award for top production.

Both when we first met, and in moving and emotional speech before we left, Taranichev emphasized again and again the heroism of the workers of this plant and the terrific war difficulties and hardships they have had to overcome. He did this, he said, "because the American press does not always tell the truth about us. We want the American people to know how heroically our workers worked, both men, women and youth."

Taranichev said that as many as a hundred incendiary bombs had fallen on the plant in one month alone, and that the workers had "saved the plant with their own hands" and none had left the job.

"The bombers came from all directions," he said, "but the workers stuck to the job. The times were very hard. It was cold in the plants and in the homes, because there was lack of fuel. There was little food. Clothing and shoes were lacking. But the workers never complained they couldn't work, no matter how great the hardships, and production actually rose month after month. Their slogan was everything for the front, everything for victory."

Taranichev said that when the plant had to be moved, because of the German approach, "the workers with their own hands moved the machines to the East" and had the plant operating there by March or April 1942.

The Krasny Proletarier plant is now in full peacetime operation in Moscow, chiefly making lathes. We noticed a number of American machines in it. There is a terrific need for lathes in the Soviet Union, to get new plants and industries in operation, and all the concentration is on this job. But as side-products, the plant is also making spoons and plans to make children's toys, baby carriages and a universal key and lock.

But here, as in most other Soviet plants we visited, the chief complaint is of a labor shortage. Taranichev said that his plant needed 1,000 more workers to achieve full production. There are Help Wanted signs everywhere in Moscow, and about the only advertising carried in Soviet papers is Help Wanted ads.

In the Krasny Proletarier plant, about 60% of the workers are women. Taranichev described the employment of many of them on even the heavier and rougher jobs as having been a wartime necessity, as also the employment of a large proportion of young workers. He said that he expected a much larger proportion of men workers as demobilization proceeds, but that this would not mean any reduction of the number of women employed.

Wages in this plant average 600 rubles or more a month, with the lowest paid unskilled and learners getting a minimum of 300 rubles, and the most highly skilled making sometimes as much as 3,000 rubles on piece work — "often more than the Director," Taranichev said.

As in the case of the Stalin plant, we were told that average take-home earnings were about the same as during the war, despite the reduction of working hours—and that this was chiefly due to increased productive efficiency and the workers being more rested from shorter hours.

In passing through the plant, we stopped to talk with a girl doing semi-skilled work at a machine. She told us she averaged between 500 and 600 rubles a month.

We also spoke with a middle-aged mechanic, a gear-cutter named Voronkov, who said he was averaging more than 1,500 rubles a month. Voronkov said his wife was also working and earning around 500 rubles a month, and that his daughter was being paid for going to college. He seemed particularly proud of his son, who he said had graduated from college and was now a doctor.

Due to their outstanding production records, the workers at the Krasny Proletarier plant earn above average wages, we were told. Another reward for their extra production is a special farm to improve their food supplies, with 100 cows, 40 horses and six tractors.

The workers have a rest home in a pine forest 40 miles from Moscow; a "children's village" 60 miles away, where 1,300 of their children from one to 16 years of age spend vacations; a child care center and two creches; a medical clinic, and a prophylactorium and night sanitarium.

We visited the prophylactorium, where 120 workers can be accommodated while still working, if in need of rest, special diet or medical treatment. It had dormitories for workers who wish to spend the night there, lounge, and dining room, along with nurses and special medical facilities.

We also visited the plant medical clinic, where a number of different doctor specialists are available to the workers, if they prefer to go there rather than to their neighborhood clinics, and where all medical service is free, as it is universally in the Soviet Union. And finally we went through a large building nearby, the child-care center where mothers working in the plant can leave their children during the day, for a nominal charge, to play, eat, nap etc. under the supervision of child care specialists.

WASHINGTON GUIDE

Congress On Strike vs. U. S.

Clear evidence that the reactionary GOP-tory Democrat combination in Congress is on a prolonged sitdown strike against the American people is seen in even a quick glance at the record since the end of the summer recess.

As the CIO Executive Board report on Congress said last week:

"In the two months since Congress reconvened Sept. 5, supposedly to face up to the problems brought about by the sudden end of the war, not a single piece of the vitally needed reconversion legislation has been passed.

"President Truman on Sept. 6 sent an excellent message to Congress outlining a comprehensive reconversion legislation program; the program is still words on a piece of paper instead of laws on the statute books."

Here's the proof:

1. Emergency unemployment compensation: Calls for aid to unemployed and veterans of up to $25 a week for 26 weeks — still bottled up in the House Ways and Means Committee after passage in much weakened form by the Senate.

Write your Congressman to demand action; send protests also to Rep. Doughton, (D., N. C.), the 82-year-old chairman of the committee who told CIO people the unemployed are loafers.

2. Jobs for all: Still bottled up in the House Committee on Executive Expenditures after passage in weakened form by the Senate.

Rep. Manasco (D. Ala.), the poll-tax chairman of the committee, publicly and openly sneers at efforts to get the bill out on the floor—even when the appeals come from President Truman.

This week, a proposal to set up a subcommittee to "study" the bill was approved. Wire your Representative to demand action.

3. 65-75c wage floor: Still in hearing stage in Senate and House Labor Committee, with Sen. Ellender (D. La.) leading the fight for the sweatshoppers against it.

In the House Labor Committee, members like Ramspeck (D. Ga.) openly talk of "compromise" on the bill—the "compromise" being set at 50 to 55c.

Wire your Senators and your Representative to hurry the bill along, warn against phony compromises or any figure less than the 65-75c in the original bill.

4. Tax bill: Here is the single instance where Congress has taken definite action on a bill that concerns the whole country's welfare—and that action was to hand profit swollen corporations and rich individuals even more gravy than they've been getting before.

Next time you hear anyone sounding off on strikes, tell him to take a look at Congress—there's a real one going on.

Inflation Drive Shaping Up

There's a drive shaping up in Congress to raise prices on almost everything you need and use that can lead us straight toward inflation and an economic blow-up unequalled by anything in past history.

The drive takes several forms, chief one of which is a steady campaign to remove existing controls on inflation and prevent new ones from being set up. This was shown most clearly in a recent blitz by 325 Congressmen against OPA's attempts to hold down prices of new cars.

Another step toward higher living costs is the removal of current food subsidies. Although this is directly under authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, Congressional pressure for removal has had a lot of weight in the Secretary's decision. Removal of the butter subsidy has already sent prices up seven cents, and more items will follow.

Meanwhile, Congress stalls on bills to offset economic disaster—full employment, emergency jobless aid, 65-75c wage floor, etc.

Three Evil Bills On Deck

Bad things, like good ones, can come in threes—there are three very evil bills cooking right now in the House.

1. HR 3937, the substitute for the Smith-Connally Act reported out of the House Military Affairs Committee last week and now in Rules Committee.

It opens unions to ruinous fines and union leaders to jail for strikes "in violation of contracts" which employers know very well how to provoke. It extends bans on political donations by unions to cover any expenditure for political action, even the cost of a leaflet, and extends the present ban from elections to primaries.

2. HR 32, the Hobbs bill, is getting set for House action soon. Under the disguise of stopping "racketeering" by unions, it puts heavy fines and jail sentences on normal union activity such as picketing.

3. HR 2788, the Gwynne bill that outlaws workers' suits for back pay under the wage hour act and about 15 other acts after a period of one year. This would cut workers off from benefits rightly due them under legislation previously passed.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Hatch HR 3937	Provides fines, jail for strikes "in violation of contracts"; makes political action illegal by banning all expenditures; repeals Smith-Connally Act.	Reported out by House Military Affairs, next to House Rules and then to floor.	Rush wires to your Representative to work and vote against this bill.
Ball, (S 1171)	Does same job as HR 3937 with some extra flourishes; is most "respectable" piece of union-busting now on the market.	Hearings being urged by press in Senate Labor Committee.	Keep telling your Senators to stay away from this.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Puts big fines, jail sentences on unionists taking part in normal activities, such as a picket line. Uses "anti-racketeering" as excuse for union hobbling.	In House Rules Committee (Rep. Sabath, D. Ill., chmn.) waiting for a rule to go on House floor.	Wire Sabath and your own Congressman to oppose rule, work and vote against on House floor.
Equal pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work, no discrimination against women in layoffs.	CIO testified for it this week in Senate Labor Committee.	Urge Representative, Senators to support.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Lifts present 40c wage floor to 65c, then 75c; widens coverage to include agricultural processing workers.	Senate Labor Committee. Goes to Senate floor soon.	Wire Senators, Representatives to support, reject phoney "compromise" rumored set at 55c.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives country chance to rid itself of Rankins, Bilbos and their like in Congress.	HR 7 reported out by Senate Judiciary, also amendment which would take years to pass.	Wire Senators to support HR 7, demand it come first on floor; reject amendment as stalling device.

TELL YOUR CONGRESSMAN ABOUT TAKE-HOME PAY

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

SAFETY: CIO is supporting a bill (S 1271) to aid state labor departments in promoting industrial safety. Testifying on the bill before a Senate Labor subcommittee, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said this week:

"Prevailing (safety) conditions are truly appalling. The most recent figures are those of the Natl. Safety Council. They reveal that last year 17,500 workers were killed on the job, 1,800,000 injured. Of these, 70,000 will live the rest of their lives permanently disabled in varying degrees."

The bill appropriates $5,000,000 for the U. S. Labor Dept. to allocate to state labor departments to aid in preventive and corrective work to raise safety standards. Urge your Senators to support it.

* * *

HR 7: The polltax repeal bill can come up on the Senate floor this week for final action—if the Senate is not led down the blind alley of a constitutional amendment.

HR 7 has been passed by the House, reported out by Senate Judiciary Committee, should be passed without difficulty if it gets to the floor ahead of the amendment.

The amendment is simply a stall, since constitutional amendments require ratification by 36 states, and can be blocked for years.

* * *

MORE ON SITDOWNS: Here's another item in industry's sitdown strike that you can tell your Congressman about the next time you write. According to reports, big manufacturers (especially in textiles) are not only refusing to make needed consumers goods, but are even refusing to deliver those already in stock until after Jan. 1. The reason is that the excess profits tax repeal goes into effect on that date, and sales made after it will not be subject to tax rates in effect now.

Technically this may not be a tax evasion, but it results in gyping the government out of revenue and you out of needed goods and jobs.

* * *

GUIDEPOSTS . . . "compromise" talk on 65-75c wage floor is set at 50c . . . which at present prices is actually less than the present 40c minimum . . . watch out or you'll be owing your employer money . . . $2 a day for steel workers will cost industry $250,000,000 . . . while industry is now saving $625,000,000 a year by return to 40-hour week, downgrading, repeal of excess profits . . . watch for Rep. Mike Bradley's (D. Pa.) Discharge Petition on emergency unemployment compensation . . . what's happened to the "honeymoon" Truman was supposed to have with Congress? . . . you can help bring them together again by telling Congress to follow Truman's written program . . .

CIO Study Warns:

UP PAY OR FACE CRASH

IF INDUSTRY takes too much money out of the nation's economic bloodstream in profits, the economy will slow down, consumers' income will decline, unemployment will grow, and another big depression will be upon America, CIO Pres. Philip Murray warned this week in releasing a study entitled "The CIO Case for Substantial Pay Increases."

Murray cited the fact that "wages were virtually frozen from 1924 to 1929" while productivity of workers rose 24 percent and profits 72 percent. He said this situation "brought about the devastating depression of the 1930's."

"Industry must not be allowed to drag America into the mire of another devastating depression," he warned. The study showed:

(1) Industry can pay a 31 percent basic wage and salary increase "and still earn 100 percent more take-home profits after taxes than in the prewar years of 1936-39." This doubling of profits after paying a 31 percent wage increase "is possible without tapping the vast reserves accumulated out of the wartime profits and the billions in actual and potential refunds available to industry."

(2) Making allowance for increased labor productivity, "it is found that manufacturing industry can raise basic pay by 38 percent and still double its take-home profits. In this connection, the CIO study says that the recent report of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion (OWMR) "is conservative, because it allows industry take-home profits more than double the level of prewar years and fails to take into account increased productivity."

(3) "The reasonable character of the CIO demands for pay increases is further demonstrated by the finding that during the war basic wage rates, which were frozen by government edict, lagged behind the cost of living and labor productivity."

(4) Industrial workers at present wage rates are "more than $20 a week short of the necessary income to provide for a health and decency standard, and with a 30 percent pay raise would still be 20 percent below such a standard."

(5) General price increases are not necessary to meet wage increases, and if they follow "will be the result of industry's political pressure on OPA in order to boost profits to more than double prewar rates."

NET WORKING CAPITAL HITS NEW HIGH

THE U. S. Securities & Exchange Commission this week reported that corporate net working capital had reached a new estimated high of $48 billion as of June 30, 1945, nearly double the $24.6 billion reported for 1939.

ONE WORLD AND LABOR

Asks U. S. Break With Franco Spain

Saying "I cannot overstress the importance of what I am about to urge," CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week wrote President Truman asking an immediate diplomatic break with Franco Spain and recognition of "a Spanish Republican government to serve as a provisional authority for that country.

"It is a matter of the utmost importance for world peace and democracy that the U. S. immediately withdraw its support of the Franco regime in Spain," Murray wrote.

"In 1937, Spain became the laboratory of fascism. Too many of us here in America refused to recognize the danger at that time, thought we could compromise with evil. The Spanish Republicans refused to make such a compromise, but they were ahead of their day and could not rally our support.

"Today we recognize the real debt we owe these heroes, and we must see to it that their effort was not in vain. There can be no real democracy as long as these innocent victims continue to suffer."

(At the 1944 convention, the CIO went on record condemning the Franco dictatorship and urging that "the people of Spain be protected and assisted in their desire for freedom and a democratic government." The resolution also described Franco as "the ally of Hitler and Mussolini" and demanded that Spain be kept out of the United Nations.)

Following the letter to Truman, Murray sent greetings to the "Voice of Fighting Spain" radio program in New York in which he said: "American labor is proud to honor the Spanish workers who defended Madrid and the millions of men of the United Nations who later fell in combat and who have built their own memorial—the everlasting ruin of the enemies of democracy."

Greetings to USSR

Greetings from President Murray marked the Nov. 14 meeting of the Council of American-Soviet Friendship, held in celebration of the 28th anniversary of the Russian revolution of 1917. Murray's message stressed the unity of CIO and Soviet trade unions as an example to "diplomatic leaders engaged in conducting the relations of governments.

"Now that the military war against aggression has been won, we must bend all our energies to the building of permanent peace and friendship among the governments and peoples of all nations," Murray said.

"We must allow nothing to dissipate the strength that we acquired through common struggle, because all of our united strength and effort are needed for the tasks of reconstruction that lie ahead."

Fight Intervention

Continuing protests from CIO affiliates against use of U. S. lend-lease materials and other aid in the fighting in China and Indonesia are coming into the authorities in Washington.

Out on the west coast, the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen have wired President Truman, Secretary Byrnes and others, offering to send longshoremen to China to help load lend-lease arms for return to the U. S.

The ILWU reminded Truman of its protest against shipping scrap iron to Japan seven years ago, and said that "we cannot sit idly by and allow American arms made by American workers" to be used "in the cause of the Chiang dictatorship's drive for civil war in China."

Similar protests were voiced by the Farm Equipment Workers, the New York City CIO Council, the Washington, D. C., Council and others.

GOP Gag on UNRRA

The GOP's trick rider on the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation bill (requiring "freedom of the press" in countries to be helped) is being vigorously denounced throughout the country.

The CIO Executive Board in its recent meeting denounced it as "intended to provide opponents of United Nations co-operation with a free forum in which to attack distribution of relief to starving peoples and to create international incidents which would make future co-operation with our Allies very difficult."

The Ohio Progressive Editors Association says that the rider is "a distinct disservice to the 90 million Europeans in friendly nations who face starvation this winter" and says it is "directed primarily at Soviet Russia and the Balkan countries within her sphere of influence."

The American Slav Congress says the rider would turn "UNRRA from a humanitarian relief agency into a political instrument, into a club over the heads of our starving Allies."

Freezing weather in France will make life tough for refugees like these, from Franco Spain. Some of the children have so little warm clothing that they are unable to attend school, and the need is even worse for adults, according to the Spanish Refugee Appeal which is conducting a clothing collection drive. New York City headquarters are at 192 Lexington Ave.

20% Federal Pay Hike Gets Nod

A favorable Senate Civil Service Committee report on S 1415, a bill to raise basic pay of Federal workers by 20 per cent, was seen this week as an encouraging sign in the campaign to get Congress to act directly on the wage issue.

Testifying for the Federal pay raise bill this week, CIO Federal Workers Sec.-Treas. Arthur Stein urged passage for three basic reasons:

1. "As part of a general wage increase for the nation, to avoid a $20 billion drop in purchasing power arising from the abolition of overtime and downgrading of workers.

2. "In order to maintain government workers at parity with industrial workers, who, I am certain, will achieve basic pay increases of 30 per cent through collective bargaining.

3. "To alleviate the hardships now being borne by Federal employes, whose take-home basic pay has remained almost unchanged during the past five years while the cost of living has gone up 45 per cent."

65c Floor Won't 'Cripple' Textile

The cotton textile industry can easily afford to pay a 65-cents-an-hour minimum wage, according to the CIO Textile Workers Union. The statement, and facts to back it up, were presented this week by letter to the House Labor Committee.

TWU Research Director Solomon Barkin said that cotton textile profits have jumped from $38 million in 1939 to $400 million in 1945. Profits per employe rose from $95 a year in 1939 to $952 in 1945, he said.

NAME UAW STRIKE STRATEGY GROUP

A SPECIAL six-man strategy committee was named this week by the CIO Auto Workers Union Executive Board to call strikes against General Motors, Chrysler and Ford if necessary to enforce UAW demands, including the 30 percent wage increase, during negotiations with the companies.

The board, meeting in Washington, D. C., also: Authorized incorporation of a company for each of the six FM (frequency modulation) radio stations for which the union is seeking charters; placed framing of wage policy for aircraft workers in the hands of a seven-man committee headed by Vice President Richard T. Frankensteen; and decided to hold the union's tenth convention at Atlantic City March 23 to 30.

Members of the UAW strategy committee are: Secretary-Treasurer, George F. Addes, Vice Presidents Walter Reuther and Frankenteen and Richard T. Leonard, national Ford director, and Norman Matthews, national Chrysler director.

Matthews, who is chairman of the radio stations' committee, received the board's approval of the committee's recommendation that 1,000-watt stations be constructed at Detroit, Los Angeles, Cleveland and Chicago, costing $50,000 each, and that 250-watt stations be built at Flint, Mich., and Newark, N. Y., costing $20,000 each.

It is proposed that the stations be operated on a non-profit basis with stock to be sold to the international and local unions. The UAW several months ago applied for licenses for the stations to the Federal Communications Commission.

Secretary-Treasurer Addes left the board meeting to go to Windsor, Canada, to attempt to settle the 10-week-old strike at the Ford plant there, where 10,000 members are demanding union conditions prevailing in Ford U. S. plants.

WHY RAISE BASIC PAY

2. Wages Lag Far Behind Profits

Basic money wages are up only 20% over pre-war rates —not counting the cut in real wages due to the rise in the cost of living. Profits are up 160% after taxes and are expected to rise to 200% in 1946. (CIO Wage Research.)

Ain't It Awful? Really!

By FRED ROSS

THE heart of the good, old Natl. Retail Dry Goods Assn. just bleeds for the American consumer, who, it claims, is taking a terrible chiseling at the hands of that terrible OPA.

Just to show how much it thinks of the consumer and how little it thinks of OPA, the Association has put on a display in the Old House Office Building with the cooperation of the Smith Committee to Investigate Executive Agencies.

The avowed purpose of the display is to show that the old, established manufacturer is unable to get higher ceiling prices and is being driven out of business by the new manufacturer who is allowed much higher ceilings for inferior goods.

The real purpose is to have Congress kill OPA.

The OPA is preparing an answer, which likely will include the fact that at least one new manufacturer put on the market an inferior article after he had been given a ceiling on a trustworthy product.

The American consumer is not being taken into camp by the display. The consumers advisory council (the public) of the OPA put on a display in another room in the Old House Office Building this week when at least 150 representatives of hundreds of thousands of consumers from New York City, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago and from Ohio and Kentucky appeared.

MISS DORIS PARRY

On a scooter which the Natl. Retail Dry Goods Assn. says is priced too high.

They did not come to see either of the displays but to tell the Congressional Committee for the Protection of the Consumer that now more than ever the OPA is needed and should be continued until the danger of inflation is over.

The CIO joined in the demand. Mrs. Faye Stephenson, president of the CIO Women's Auxiliaries, said that the maintenance and strengthening of price control is necessary to protect the workers, veterans and their families from runaway prices. She also said that "the greatest immediate threat" to price control is the lifting of WPB Order L412 which "has resulted in the development of a real estate boom . . . bound to bring increased pressure for higher rent ceilings."

Donald Montgomery of the CIO Cost of Living Committee said that the CIO Auto Workers, who have been offered a wage increase if the price of autos are raised, will not be a party to any such deal.

Both speakers were roundly applauded. The representatives of the consumers from North, South, East and West were not fooled by the bleeding heart act of the good, old Natl. Retail Dry Goods Assn.

MURRAY FIGHTS PLOT TO SPIKE ACTION ON WAGES

THE CIO will continue its fight for a declaration by the Labor-Management Conference in favor of "immediate and substantial wage increases," CIO Pres. Murray announced Friday, Nov. 16, immediately after the conference executive committee, dominated by a John L. Lewis-AFL-mangement combination, had refused to vote on his resolution and attempted to duck the wage issue.

AFL Pres. Green told the committee he would not vote for Murray's resolution for collective bargaining within the framework of President Truman's call for higher wages. Murray, "to yield to Green's whims," then offered to withdraw any reference to Truman's speech in his resolution and replace it with a plain declaration in favor of "substantial wage increases." But Green said he still would not vote for it.

John L. Lewis, also oposing Murray's call for collective bargaining for substantial wage increases, then introduced an obscurely worded resolution of his own calling for speedup and expansion of production to make possible lower costs, shorter hours and higher wages.

The management group meanwhile had introduced a resolution which Murray called "wholly unsatisfactory, because it did not express the immediate and imperative need for substantial wage increases."

Murray demanded an immediate vote on his resolution calling for collective bargaining and substantial wage increases, which had been on the table since Nov. 7. But the CIO's three members of the committee were outvoted by a combination of Lewis-AFL-management, which voted to duck the issue by referring all three resolutions to a subcommittee.

Murray said he would not serve on this subcommittee, because management, Lewis and AFL had all indicated their opposition to his call for collective bargaining and substantial wage increases. He said that if the committee voted down his resolution, he would bring it before the whole conference.

"We are going to continue our fight for a declaration on the need for substantial wage increases," Murray said. "It is the most important issue before the conference, which cannot dodge its responsibility to the nation in this regard."

Murray revealed that he had cited U. S. Dept. of Commerce figures showing that corporations would have estimated profits of $6.8 billion in 1946 and that they would have liquid capital assets of $55.5 billion by the end of this year. At the same time, wage earners in manufacturing alone will suffer an average loss in take-home pay of $10.75 a week. The total estimated drop in national income, he said, would be $36 billions.

"The nation cannot stand such a drop as this," Murray said. "It is therefore the duty of this conference to recognize this fact and to take a stand to correct it."

The CIO's insistence that the Natl. Labor-Management conference accomplish something concrete was aided by rejection of a unanimity rule for policy proposals backed by the AFL and by John L. Lewis.

Under the unanimity rule, proposed by AFL Sec.-Treas. George Meany, a unanimous vote of both management and labor's 18 delegates would be required for action on a basic policy question. Lined up with the CIO in the six to two vote in the rules committee were four management delegates, with James B. Carey and Clinton S. Golden casting CIO's votes against unanimity.

Hundreds of CIO unions, state and city councils have wired support of Murray's stand on the wage issue to the CIO office in Washington and to government officials.

Typical of the messages was this one from Local 1182, USA-CIO: "Local 1182 and millions like us are behind you all the way. Give them both barrels."

Local 617, UE, said: "Five thousand members of the UE here demand holding of discussion on wages and hours at labor-management conference. We support fully the proposal advanced by President Murray."

Representing 600,000 CIO members, the New York City CIO Council wired: "We wholeheartedly support demand of President Murray for full discussion of wages in conference. People of America, workers, farmers, housewives, small businessmen have a right to demand solution of their most basic problem of today—maintenance of purchasing power."

The Borough Council of Rankin, Pa., wired that its 100,000 people "are 100% behind you and condemn Mr. Lewis and Mr. Green on their stand for the bankers and industrialists."

Fifty thousand workers of UE District 1 in Philadelphia said through District President Harry Block that "it is our urgent desire that the subject of wages, as representing an interest of paramount importance to American workers, be placed on the agenda."

A similar message came from UE District 6, saying: "We agree with you 100% that mediation machinery will not stop strikes. Only wage increases will."

New York's Wholesale and Retail Employes wired Murray: "Avoidance of this issue (wages) will doom the conference to failure. Only a realistic approach to the question of wages will solve the most basic problem of today—maintenance of purchasing power."

Similar wires came from such widely scattered points as Chicago, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Charleston, S. C., Los Angeles, etc. White collar workers as well as industrial workers wired support, with messages from CIO State, County & Municipal Workers, Office & Professional Workers, Federal Workers, and others.

NEW HOUSING BILL

A first step to providing Americans with decent low-cost homes was taken this week with Senate-introduction of S 1592, a new bi-partisan housing construction bill scheduled for early hearings in the Banking and Currency Committee.

Put into the works by Sens. Wagner (D. N. Y.), who is chairman of the Banking Committee, Ellender (D. La.) and Taft (R. O.), the bill provides funds for study and development of low-cost housing projects, slums clearance, and housing for middle-income groups.

"Our total housing need is pressing and enormous," Wagner said in introducing the bill. "It is estimated that, exclusive of farm areas, we ought to build about 1,200,000 units of housing a year for the next 10 years.

"Of these, about 420,000 units will be required for the upper income groups who can pay more than $40 a month, on the average, for their housing. About 480,000 units will be needed for the middle income groups, who can pay, on the average, between $20 and $40 a month for their housing. And about 360,000 units will be needed for the low income groups, who can pay, on the average, below $20 a month for their housing."

The bill was praised by William Nicholas of the UAW-CIO, who is secretary of the CIO Housing Committee, as "a bill which for the first time in the history of our country covers the entire field of housing and seeks to provide the tools which should make it possible to have decent homes provided for all income groups—not just the top or bottom.

"S 1592 should have the backing of everyone in America who who is genuinely interested in better housing for our people and in an economy of full employment."

Quill Re-elected

Late election returns this week showed that Michael Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers Union, was re-elected to his post as N. Y. City Councilman.

Meanwhile, the CIO Political Action Committee reported favorable results from Ohio: CANTON—labor-backed Mayor Kline returned to office with working majority in city council; YOUNGSTOWN—three councilmen and municipal judge elected; DAYTON—labor-supported mayor, two judges, clerk of court and schoolboard member elected.

Murray on Air November 26

CIO President Philip Murray, leading labor's fight for adequate wage increases, again will broadcast over a nation-wide hookup at 10 P. M. (E. S. T.) Monday, Nov. 26, over American Broadcasting Co. stations.

Tentative plans are for a 10-minute dramatic presentation, followed by a brief talk from Murray.

Secretary - Treasurer Eleanor Fowler of the CIO Women's Auxiliaries appeared on the American Forum of the Air program this week, discussing with other women's leaders the question, "Are we facing a moral breakdown in America?"

She warned that elimination of poverty and the provision of community facilities to assist people in leading healthy, well-founded lives are "musts" if we are to reduce crime to the minimum.

Cool Drinking Costs Weirton Bosses $148,215

A $148,215 fine was assessed this week against the Weirton Steel Co., Weirton, W. Va., for illegally installing war-rationed air-conditioning equipment in the bar of a company-owned country club.

The company, which has long resisted organizational attempts by the CIO United Steelworkers, bought the equipment with the understanding that it was to be used in a hospital. The firm decided not to contest an indictment against it in Federal Court.

BLIND, DEAF AND DUMB?

Don't let the big-bellied beggars kid you.

They are not so blind, so deaf and so dumb as they seem to be. They just couldn't be.

With silk hats outstretched, the biggest corporations are pleading piteously for lower wages, higher prices and unlimited profits.

They'll take anything—the widow's mite, the worker's paycheck, the jobless man's dole, the housewife's savings, and even the contents of the children's piggy-bank.

They just have to, you see, according to them. It's mighty tough to sit on 52 billion dollars of war profits (after taxes) and 99 billion dollars of current assets.

They need some incentive, they say, to get up and get busy on the production the country is waiting for—and they need it to the tune of billions and billions more profits.

And where can all these extra excess profits come from but from a generous and long--suffering public—from the worker's wages, from the farmer's income, from the veteran's mustering-out pay, from the merchant's cash register?

Are they as blind, as deaf and as dumb as their beggar's sign would indicate? Let's see.

Are they blind to the country's plight?

Heck, no. They see the layoffs, the unemployment and the other dislocations of reconversion, the reduced take-home pay, the crying need for consumers' goods of all kinds.

They're taking advantage of them to whip labor and the public into submission to lower living standards and higher prices.

Are they deaf to argument? Can't they hear the unions' demands for adequate wage increases? Don't they know that, allowing for productivity increases, a 38 per cent increase in the present $22 billion wage bill is possible, without price increases and still keeping profits after taxes at twice the prewar level?

They're just playing deaf—waiting to see how loudly labor will holler, and how strongly organized the workers are to enforce their demands.

Are they dumb? In the slang sense, yes. To use one of their favorite expressions, they're trying to kill the goose that lays their golden eggs—the purchasing power of the masses of the people that makes the wheels of industry turn, and makes their own profits possible.

But they're not too speechless or tongue-tied to be able to say "No" when the unions call for genuine collective bargaining.

The CIO is leading the people's fight for adequate wages and mass purchasing power to get production going full blast.

With an aroused and well-organized membership, and with the public support which its constructive program deserves, it can make even the blindest, deafest and dumbest corporations see, hear, and talk turkey, across the collective bargaining table.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

THE BIGGEST hold-up in history is now under way.

Jesse James held up trains and banks and reckoned his loot in thousands.

Al Capone modernized the hold-up, took in more territory and counted his take in millions.

But today's hold-up is Big Business, with capital B's. It is directed against the whole American people, and the booty runs into billions.

★ ★ ★

Jesse James operated almost lone-handed, in constant peril of his life.

Al Capone had a big and well-armed gang. He could afford to buy some corrupt politicians and some police protection.

But today's Big Business hold-up gang operates with complete immunity, with everything on its side that great wealth and influence can buy.

It has a servile press at its disposal. It has flocks of lobbyists. And it has quite a contingent of its own in Congress.

★ ★ ★

It is directed against labor, which is told it can have work only with drastically reduced take-home pay.

It is directed against all consumers, who are to be black-jacked into paying higher prices for the goods they buy.

It is directed against the whole American people, from whom a full supply of peacetime commodities is being withheld until the Big Business hold-up gang is satisfied it has all the profit swag it can steal, from the workers in the lowered wages, from the consumers in higher prices, and from the government in reduced taxes.

★ ★ ★

An arrogant refusal on the part of some of the biggest corporations to bargain collectively with the unions on the workers' wage demands.

A Congressional blockade on unemployment compensation, full employment and social security legislation.

A sit-down on production of automobiles, radios, refrigerators, washing machines and other durable consumers' goods.

Plans to lock out the workers and force unemployment now, in the hope of beating them into submission to lower wages.

A press campaign designed to make black look like white, and to give the false impression that it is the unions' demand for a living wage, and not the Big Business hold-up, that is holding up reconversion and threatening industrial peace.

★ ★ ★

Consider a few items in the news of the last few days.

The U. S. Employment Service reports jobs now open pay 37 to 48 percent below wage rates last earned by the men looking for work, and 43 to 52 percent below those previously earned by women job-seekers. Reduced working hours account for a reduction of 23 percent in weekly take-home earnings.

The U. S. Securities & Exchange Commission reports that current assets of American corporations have risen this year to a total of nearly 100 billion dollars—$99,-300,000,000, to be exact—as compared with 54½ billion in 1939. Their net working capital has also doubled in the same period.

The biggest industrial lobby yet demands higher automobile prices. Other lobbies demand lifting of rent controls and no ceilings on new housing.

The U. S. Steel Corporation rejects the government's request to resume collective bargaining on the United Steelworkers' wage demands, though the union accepted this request, and U. S. Steel prints full-page ads declaring that until it gets the higher prices it wants, "nothing can be settled through collective bargaining."

★ ★ ★

Government surveys show that industry can expect huge profit increases (after taxes) in 1946; that workers' take-home pay will be still more sharply cut, unless wage rates are raised; and that wage rates can be raised at least 24 percent without even touching record profits.

Wage increases to this extent would be fully offset by reduced operating costs due to repeal of excess profits taxes, reduced overtime and elimination of wartime upgrading.

Many hold-up men of the past boasted that they stole from the rich to give to the poor.

But the big hold-up of today would rob the poor to add to the already overflowing coffers of the rich.

Just a few of the Liberty ships taken out of service by the War Shipping Administration and tied up at the Suisan Bay "graveyard" near San Francisco. Six CIO maritime unions and one independent union say these vessels can be converted into troopships to bring home high-point GIs. There are approximately 100 Liberty ships and tankers at this "graveyard" alone.

Union Legionnaires Join Protest Over Firing Vets

HENRY GEISZ, vice president of the National Conference of Union Labor Legionnaires, has written to Major Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective service head, and Sewell Avery, Montgomery Ward board chairman, protesting the firing by the Montgomery Ward company of three World War II veterans, two of them decorated with the Purple Heart.

Geisz's letters followed an appeal to veterans' organizations from Irving Abramson, chairman of the CIO Montgomery Ward Committee. The Purple Heart wearers, Robert Magnan and William Donovan, were fired at the Albany store of the mail-order house after a supervisor asked them if they would go on strike if called to do so by their union.

Eric Stainer, a former Navy man, who had been employed two and a half years by Ward's before the war, was fired the day after the Chicago plant was restored to Ward's by the Army, which had seized it following the failure to obey a War Labor Board directive.

Geisz wrote Hershey that the three deserved the protection of the Selective Service Act, which gives a veteran job rights for a year.

The letter to Avery called attention to the right of every man to join a union under the Natl. Labor Relations Act, and added:

"The affirmative reply to a query on whether a man would strike if called upon by his union is not cause for dismissal."

UE News Issues GI Supplement

A special supplement for servicemen and veterans, issued with the Nov. 10 edition of the UE News, weekly of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, has a lead article by Walter Bernstein, former Army sergeant who was correspondent of Yank and is author of the book "Keep Your Head Down," based on his Army experiences. In the UE News article he writes:

"I found out very soon after coming back from overseas that the most vigorous for veterans' rights are the unions. They were the only insurance a man had against the Rankins, who sabotaged the GI Bill; the Hearsts and the McCormicks, who lie about the home front to the soldiers, and all the other forces that have made the right to work a last-ditch fight."

UOPWA Gets Vet Program First Hand

The CIO United Office and Professional Workers went directly to its membership in the services when drafting its veterans' program, which is forcefully set forth in the union's booklet for veterans, "From Khaki to White Collar." On the basis of hundreds of letters from its men and women wearing Uncle Sam's uniforms it found that "First on the list was jobs—help in getting a job, and in assuring jobs for all.

"Other things our GIs want are: Improvement in the GI Bill of Rights, housing, free medical care for themselves and their families, concellation of tax indebtedness, advice about converting GI insurance, information about veterans' organizations and civilian or reorientation aids."

The union is not stopping with the program. It has set about raising $50,000 which will not only be used by its national veterans' committee to help carry out that program, but also for determining the additional needs of the returning servicemen and women.

Three CIO Men Vets' Guests

Guests of the executive board of the National Conference of Union Labor Legionnaires which met this week and will continue during the sessions of the American Legion convention at Chicago include Meyer Bernstein, representative of the CIO Veterans Committee, and Joseph Velosky and George Buckley of the CIO Auto Workers veterans department.

The CIO policy is to co-operate with all bonafide, democratic veterans' organizations.

Aid to Veterans

Putting into effect the CIO's policy of cooperating with democratic, bona fide veterans' organizations, the veterans' committee of the Gary, Ind., local of the CIO Steelworkers met recently with Dr. Gilbert Macvaugh, national employment director of the Disabled American Veterans, to set up a program to aid disabled veterans find employment.

Thousands of GI Letters Back NMU's Home-By-Xmas Drive

THE CAMPAIGN of the Natl. Maritime Union and other CIO maritime unions to have the War Dept. and the War Shipping Administration round up every available ship to bring home all servicemen not needed in the occupation forces gained momentum this week as:

1. Thousands of cablegrams and letters from servicemen, their wives and parents approved the stand of the NMU which is urging its members not to ship out after Dec. 1 on any ship not bringing home servicemen.

2. The Greater New York CIO Council this weekend distributed a million leaflets urging the public to send President Truman letters and postcards calling on him to use his influence to "ship the boys home by Christmas."

3. President Joseph Curran of the NMU hailed the removal of nine Liberty ships from the James River anchorage for repair and use as troopships as proving "the correctness of the position taken by the NMU that no ships should be laid up while a single GI awaits transportation home."

4. The Senate Naval Affairs Committee investigated demobilization delays.

DELUGE OF LETTERS

Cablegrams and letters from servicemen in Europe and the Pacific and their kin poured into NMU offices in New York City and San Francisco.

A letter, signed by 39 men in the Philippines, several with more than 75 points, declared "we wish we had Congressmen backing us like you are."

Another letter "written at the request and with the approval of the entire enlisted personnel of Co. B, 1301st Engineers," stationed in Luzon, asserted:

"We will always have respect and gratitude for the maritime union that sent its appeal for more troopships to President Truman and for its Dec. 1 ultimatum. We are convinced the union was subject to attempts to blame the utter failure on the union instead of on the War Department's demobilization policy where it belongs."

Curran received a letter from "Ten Disgusted GIs" who stated that all the men in their unit of approximately 600 men had more than 80 points and had been "in various camps in France awaiting shipment for a month. There is definitely something wrong with the shipping, as you say, and we are wholeheartedly behind you and agree with your policy concerning troopships."

Murray To Talk At Legion Meet

CIO President Murray will speak at 1 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 20, at the national convention of the American Legion, Chicago.

"Is this the place where ya get out of the Army?"

TB was an occupational disease when the fur industry was a sweatshop industry. But that was long ago. The CIO Fur Workers Union has fought the long fight to take the fur industry out of the sweatshop class. But the union's not taking any chances on the white plague.

This is the third time that mass X-ray has been put at the disposal of the members of the Joint Furriers Council in New York City. The first was in 1939; the second in 1943. Under the cooperative efforts of the Council, the Joint Board of Fur Dressers and Dyers, Local 125 of the Fur Floor and Shipping Clerks Union, the New York TB and Health Assn. and the New York City Health Dept., every effort was made to get the 100,000 fur workers and their families before the X-ray machines. Every shop had a special time and day during a recent three-week period.

The Health and Welfare Department of the Union took six important steps to insure the appearance of the appearance of the fur workers. 1) they mailed a notice to every individual worker; 2) they distributed leaflets during lunch hours at three different times; 3) shop stewards distributed cards with notices; 4) 2,000 posters were set up by time clocks in the shops; 5) the matter was taken up on the agenda of shop meetings; 6) every shop was given a specific time to appear during the three week period of X-raying. Employers cooperated by allowing time off during the day, to be made up at a later date.

The X-ray machines took something like 200 X - rays an hour. The Union paid 50c, and the worker paid 50c. Trained physicians will read each X-ray, and each film will be kept for six months. At the end of that time the analysis of each film will be mailed to the worker. The unions will follow up cases that require medical treatment and will endeavor to arrange hospitalization or other treatment found necessary by the diagnosis.

The X-ray is only one part of a vast health educational program conducted by the union's health and welfare department under Oscar Ward. A whole series of lectures by physicians, with movies to accent highlights, has been planned. Among these discussions are: Allergies & Skin Disease in the Fur Industry; Health protection for the Fur Worker in the Shop, Heart Disease, Colds & Pneumonia, What to Eat and Why, Cancer, Child Health, etc.

X-Ray for Every Union Man

Story by Helen Kay
Pictures by Marian Hille

1 Every fur worker was asked to register. For weeks before the actual x-raying apparatus was set up at the Furriers Joint Council, a six-step plan was gotten under way to make sure that 100,000 fur workers and their families marched before the x-raying machine.

2 Alma Susman is the wife of a furrier. She came to get x-rayed on the same night that her chorus meets. She said: "This is something very good. They should do it in all unions."

3 Registered Nurse Mrs. Mary Whitford of the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association was right on the job cooperating with the x-ray technicians, and the doctors.

Anti-tank defenses liked these helped stop the Nazis cold just outside Leningrad. More than 600,000 beseiged Leningraders died during the first terrible winter of 1941-42.

INSIDE LENINGRAD

By LEN DE CAUX

"LENINGRADERS are modest," is an expression the CIO delegation heard frequently during its three-day visit to Leningrad.

At first we smiled a little. The Leningraders who used these words usually attributed many other desirable characteristics to their citizenry and were not at all backward in expressing their civic pride.

But after we had seen many evidences of the amazing heroism of the people of Leningrad, we smiled no more. For the most glowing words are indeed modest and inadequate to describe their exploits.

Furthermore, the pride we heard so often expressed was always a group pride, rather than personal boasting.

One more little paradox to illustrate this point. To an American, it seems decidedly immodest for a Soviet speaker to join in the applause at the conclusion of his speech, as is frequently the case. But to the Russian, it seems much more modest for the speaker thus to assume that the applause is for the sentiments he expressed rather than for him personally.

FOR THE story of Leningrad we went first to its Mayor, Peter Popkov. A vigorous, youthful-looking man, with gray-tinged hair, he got down to business quickly. His manner was frank and forthright. He pulled no punches and dodged no questions.

Americans would call Popkov a go-getter, a live wire, a booster, a politician with the common touch and voter-appeal. Certainly no American mayor could beat him for pride in his city or salesmanship in describing its glorious past and its great future.

But in hearing the Mayor's story of the first city to stop Hitler, we forgot the teller and thought only of the millions of plain people of whom he spoke—civilians who froze and starved and bled, cut off from outside aid, but who never flinched or surrendered their city.

The conquering Nazi armies were sweeping all before them when they reached Leningrad and brought it under siege two months after their invasion of the USSR. Hitler was so confident of taking Leningrad at once, that he had made all arrangements, down to menu and seating arrangements, for a victory banquet at the Astoria Hotel—the hotel, incidentally, where the CIO delegation stayed.

This is the second of three articles, on life in the Soviet Union, by CIO NEWS Editor De Caux, who has just returned with a CIO delegation that visited Moscow and Leningrad.

German officers were appointed to govern Leningrad, occupation passes were printed and distributed, and all other arrangements were made for running a conquered city.

Surrounded by the Finns and the Germans, Leningrad's only lifeline was Lake Ladoga. But there were no ships to transport supplies across the lake. Until it froze over sufficiently to permit first horse-teams and then motor trucks to cross it, the only means of evacuating children and other civilians incapable of working or fighting, and of bringing in supplies, was in a few Douglas airplanes, Popkov said.

Meanwhile, the people of Leningrad were left almost without food, fuel and even water. In November and December, 1941, they had only bread to eat, and very little of that.

We saw a sample of the daily bread ration at that time, no bigger than a small child's fist, and with less than a 50 per cent flour content, the rest being synthetic ingredents, made from shavings, etc. It was not until January, 1942, that the city Soviet was able to announce an increase of three ounces in the bread ration.

Without fuel, the people were not only starving but also freezing, and 650,000 Leningrad civilians died in that terrible winter from these causes alone, according to Popkov. "I know of no battle in history where so many laid down their lives," he said.

In the Exhibition of the Heroic Defense of Leningrad, we saw the diary of a nine-year old girl, all of whose family of seven died in this period. In childish handwriting was the entry, "Grandma died today," and then later similar entries for Uncle, Mother, Father, Sister, Brother, until finally the pathetic entry, "I alone am left." Soon after, the little girl herself died in a hospital.

Popkov complained that the full and true story of Leningrad had never been told to the American people. He said that American correspondents could not understand the spirit that motivated the amazing resistance of the people of Leningrad.

"It is not only the heroism and patriotism of the people that you must understand," Popkov declared, "but the real and terrible suffering, the depth of the human suffering they went through. But with all this, no sacrifices daunted our people. They just made us more and more determined never to let our city fall into Nazi hands."

Finally, all civilians who could not aid in some fashion in the city's defense were evacuated. "Leningrad was transformed into a military camp, he said. "Every street, every house became a fortress. All civilians who remained must be considered just like soldiers in the Red Army—enduring no less danger and hardship than those fighting at the front."

The Mayor paid the highest tribute to the trade unions of Leningrad. He said they had been the most active helpers in the city's defense at every step, mobilizing three to four hundred thousand people every day to work at trench building, fortifications, etc., and maintaining the morale of workers producing munitions and supplies in unheated factories under constant bombardment.

But Popkov did not dwell only

Freezing weather as well as bombs and shells added to Leningrad's death toll. Women (above) sawed fuel wood in the streets. Leningrad became a military camp. Every house became a fortress. Fire fighters (below) worked despite bombs, carrying on as calmly as though they were only training.

1 "Sleep, people, sleep" croon the native fascists, portrayed in Stage for Action's "Joseph McGinnical." "We'll save you from the unions of labor. To demand higher wages is simply outrageous. You may call us contrary and reactionary, but honest, we're merely old fascists." Joe, fortunately, awakens, and in a call for action by the people sings: "Listen! I'm not Superman, so all you guys get off your can. We did a job in '44, but nevertheless and furthermore, we can get our dreams fulfilled and a world to build, so don't go to sleep, you creep, don't stop now."

She heartily agrees with CIO President Murray that Stage for Action is doing a job that couldn't be done in months of talking.

With branches now operating in New York, Chicago and Hollywood, Stage for Action plays before such diverse organizations as unions, the Salvation Army, Servicemen's Canteens, the YMCA and YWCA, the PTA, and religious groups. They have annual contracts calling for a minimum number of performances per year with the CIO Office & Professional Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, State, County & Municipal Workers, and Furniture Workers, besides appearing before hundreds of local union meetings. To organizations in cities where no Stage for Action branch exists, manuscript and production rights are offered for a small charge, thus assuring a nationwide audience for their progressive ideas.

Mixing fun with fundamentals, Stage for Action dramatizes a program that in many ways parallels that of the CIO. Their course is applauded by many. Perhaps the most appropriate tribute came from Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who said, "They represent a valuable contribution to our democratic form of government."

Stage for Action is located at 130 West 42 St., New York City. New branches are being formed in Washington, Philadelphia and Detroit.

6 Did they like it? Would this typical audience, at Wingdale, N. Y., be sitting three-deep on the floor to pack a huge hall if they didn't? What's more, the clever, effective presentation of the need for action brought home to the audience the truism that full employment and a decent world are ours for the making.

Vice Control Still Needed

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE REACTIONARY drive to turn back the clock in the United States is going on in every aspect of American life. The latest one which has been brought to my attention, one which threatens very directly our health and our homes, is the drive to reopen houses of prostitution.

During the war we made tremendous strides in combatting this evil. It was established beyond question that the only way to eliminate venereal disease is to repress prostitution, and that tolerating red-light districts inevitably results in the rapid spread of venereal disease. As a result over 700 communities abolished them and undertook vigorous campaigns to suppress promiscuity.

Now there is a grave danger of losing the gains that have been made. In 12 communities houses have already reopened. Since V-J Day venereal disease rates have been rising rapidly both among the armed forces and the civilian population.

The National Women's Advisory Committee of the Social Protection Division of the Federal Security Agency discussed the urgency of action by women's groups on this situation at its meeting this past week. Representatives of most of the big national women's groups, church, parent-teachers, club women and our CIO auxiliaries agreed that women must take the responsibility for understanding the causes of sex delinquency, for action to remove those causes in their communities and for backing the agencies which are now trying to combat prostitution and venereal disease.

CAUSES OF PROSTITUTION

The basic causes of prostitution, of course, are economic—substandard wages, slum housing, ignorance due to the necessity of leaving school early to work, utterly inadequate social security and health care for the great majority of the people. Family life is weakened, homes are more frequently broken when people do not have the minimum essentials for decent living. The CIO's program for full employment at adequate wages and full social security for all Americans is the basic answer.

While we continue to fight for that program as our first concern, we can help in our communities to meet the immediate problem of sex delinquency and social disease and to reeducate the women who have been led into this anti-social way of life.

We need, first of all, to find out what conditions are in our own community. The police and health departments and the welfare agencies will know.

We need, second, to realize that the women involved in prostitution are among the most miserable and exploited group in our society. Most of them are ill not only physically but mentally. Many of them suffer from physical handicaps. Many of them are of low mentality. We should not pass judgments on them but rather see to it that our communities have trained people and proper facilities to give these women a chance to become useful, self-respecting citizens.

Boom Mrs. F. D. R. for UNO Post

A conference of leaders of national women's organizations at South Kortright, N. Y., last weekend went on record as favoring naming women delegates to the United National Assembly in London next January. The consensus of opinion of delegates to the conference, which was attended by Mrs. Faye Stephenson, president of the CIO Women's Auxiliaries, was that President Truman should name Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as a delegate to the assembly.

The conference, which was held under the auspices of the American Women's Voluntary Services, called an international women's conference to be held next June in the United States. A conference group resolved to ask President Truman to press Congress for a $500 million appropriation for UNRR.

Discussion on Strikes

Management and labor will discuss the current strike scene at 8:30 p.m. Nov. 23, at the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the CIO Federal Workers Union, 1212 18th St., N. W. Irving Richter, UAW-CIO Washington representative, and Harlan V. Hadley, of the Automobile Manufacturers Assn., will discuss the subject, "What's Behind Industrial Strife?"

Indiana Wage Parley

A state-wide parley was called this week by the Indiana CIO Council for Nov. 24 in Indianapolis, where representatives of 220,000 Indiana CIO workers will map out a program for placing the full weight of labor behind the drive for jobs for all at living wages.

L-M Conference

The Labor-Management Conference called by President Truman is going on. It seems that some people never learn. The "laissez-faire" system of leaving business alone has been advocated by some, and if adopted it would take us back to the days of Hooverism—wild stock markets, wage cuts, bank failures, and economic disaster nationally.

The CIO has called upon the conference to declare in favor of substantial wage increases now as the crying demand of the workers of the nation and as a national necessity to maintain the purchasing power of the people. So far the CIO stands alone in the conference on this. President Truman and Sec. of Commerce Wallace have also declared for this. Empty phrases will not satisfy the situation or the people. President Murray is leading the fight for the adoption of this resolution. It is up to every organization, local union, and member to back the CIO's position.

Shipyard Union Seeks Industry Wide Raise

A prediction that the first industry-wide boost in workers' pay since 1942 will go to the shipyard workers was made this week by the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers. The union's request for a 30 per cent increase and a 17½ cents an hour boost to maintain take-home pay which dropped when hours were cut will be the No. 1 demand taken up at the national shipbuilding conference to be held Dec. 4.

The conference was decided upon at a meeting of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee held Nov. 6, attended by union, industry and government representatives. Authority to review wages was turned back to the committee by the National War Labor Board after the war ended. During the war all changes had to be approved by the NWLB.

The CIO shipbuilding union, headed by President John Green, took the lead at the Nov. 6 meeting in urging that a national shipbuilding conference be held. A statement issued by the union following the meeting predicted the Dec. 4 conference.

"We can win this without strike or lockout or intervention by an outside party," the union stated. "And by winning it we can show the way toward a settlement of the question in which every worker in the United States has a bodily interest—the wage question."

Spotlight on Pay Demands

Says Thugs Try To Bust Up CIO Textile Union

Cotton mill workers in three plants in Hill County, Texas, who called off a strike recently at the request of the Natl. War Labor Board, were brutally attacked by anti-union elements as they returned to their jobs, charges John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

In a letter to Sec. of Labor Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Edelman asked that immediate action be taken "to enlist the cooperation of law enforcement agencies of the U. S. Government to halt organized thuggery now rampant in three Texas cotton mills."

"It is only too obvious that the purpose of this campaign of terror is to coerce workers into withdrawing from the union, which about a year ago became the authorized collective bargaining agent in these plants," Edelman stated.

Some 1,000 workers in the three mills walked out several weeks ago in protest against the flagrant violation by the companies of WLB orders. The Board agreed to call compliance conferences in Washington on November 15 in the cases of two of the mills, and the strikers agreed to return to work. As they were going back to their jobs, imported thugs violently assaulted the first people to enter the mill.

Pres. B. B. Powers of Local 670, Millsboro cotton mills, who was recently medically discharged after years in the U. S. Army, was the principal victim. He was viciously kicked and suffered severe jaw injuries. The next day Martin Burnett, Local 669 secretary at the Itasca Mills, was attacked, receiving serious face injuries.

Glass Concerns Still Stalling

Top officials of the CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramic & Silica Sand Workers and representatives of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey-Owens-Ford companies conferred with the U. S. Dept. of Labor conciliators in Washington last week-end on the wage dispute which has closed down PPG and LOF plants in 10 cities.

Pres. Joseph Froesch, Vice-Pres. Leland Beard and Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken, who represented the union, said the company officials were still refusing to bargain collectively. Negotiations held last month in Chicago for more than two weeks broke down when company representatives continued to stall and finally withdrew because of a small strike which broke out at a plant in Ottawa, Ill.

Thereupon some 15,000 workers in plants of the two companies in ten cities walked out. A vote taken last June authorized a strike by ten-to-one.

Italian, Yugoslav Aid

CIO Transport Workers Union Local 236, in Chicago, this month collected $600 for Italian-Yugoslav relief.

U. S. Steel Corp. Again Cold Shoulders Govt.

THE U. S. Steel Corp. again this week turned down a government request to resume collective bargaining with the CIO United Steelworkers. Efforts of Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach to get the Corporation to "reconsider" its flat refusal to continue negotiations on the union's demands for a $2 a raise failed when Pres. Benjamin F. Fairless of U. S. steel informed the Secretary that the corporation would not send representatives to a conference called for Wednesday, Nov. 14.

Fairless told the Secretary of Labor that U. S. Steel would not consider further wage negotiations until OPA granted a request for a price increase.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray called this "a brazen attempt to bludgeon the Government of the U. S."

U. S. Steel, he said in a letter sent to Schwellenbach, "has the unmitigated gall to advise the Government that it will not perform its legal and public duty unless the Government agrees to unconditional surrender to the demands of the industry for immediate price relief, and a guarantee that for any wage increase that may be agreed upon in collective bargaining there will be additional price increases.

"At this time I wish to call to the attention of yourself and the OPA these cold facts: In 1944 the actual net profits of the steel industry, after taxes, were $407,531,000. The average annual net profits of the industry, after taxes, during the peacetime era of 1936-39 were $115,000,000.

"Bearing in mind the financial benefits which will accrue to the industry in 1946 due to the elimination of overtime, downgrading of workers, increased productivity and lower costs resulting from the elimination of obsolete equipment and the repeal of excess profits taxes, it is a conservative estimate that the anticipated net profits of the industry, after taxes, for 1946 will be approximately $500,000,000, or more than four times the peacetime level.

"This is the record on the basis of which the industry is wailing and pleading for increased prices. This is the record on the basis of which the American Iron & Steel Institute in a nationwide advertisement today said, 'Until OPA authorizes "fair" prices, nothing can be settled through collective bargaining.'"

Murray was referring to a newspaper and radio campaign put on this week by the American Iron & Steel Institute, purporting to explain "Why the Steel Institute Cannot Pay Increased Wages Now."

Ford Strike Vote

Ford Motor Co. workers voted 11-to-1 to authorize their union, the CIO United Auto Workers, to call a strike if necessary in support of their demand for a 30-per-cent pay increase. The poll, which was conducted by the Nalt. Labor Relations Board under the Smith-Connally Act, showed 42,235 in favor of a strike to 3,951 against.

The Ford workers were the last of the employes of the Big Three auto concerns to vote for strike action. Votes taken earlier among employes of General Motors and Chrysler showed similar heavy majorities in favor of a strike.

The three big strike votes were taken at the request of the UAW so that the union would be ready to call a strike if all other means of getting a wage settlement failed. Officials of the union expressed the hope that the wage issue may still be settled peacefully through collective bargaining.

CIO Leather Workers On 'Holiday'

A one-day work holiday covering 60,000 workers in the leather industry in 250 plants scattered through 16 states was called this week by the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Union in support of a demand for a 30% pay hike. It was 100% effective.

The stoppage was voted by special wage conferences in each of the union's districts and was approved unanimously by membership meetings of each local union. The one-day work holiday is the first nation-wide action ever undertaken by the workers in the leather industry, the union stated.

"The union's action is part of the national campaign of CIO unions to secure substantial increases to meet the high cost of living, to make up for reduced hours of work since V-J Day and to raise the standard of living and purchasing power of the workers as the only foundation for an expanded economy and full employment," the statement declared.

Facts for Action

A four-page leaflet, "We Must Have Jobs," containing excerpts from the testimony of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in support of the Full Employment Bill (S 380) before a Senate sub-committee has been issued by the CIO Dept. of Research & Education as No. 127 of its series of Facts for Action publications. Price $1 per 100, $8 per 1,000, $30 per 5,000 and $50 per 10,000.

UOPWA Convention

The CIO Office & Professional Workers Union has called a special convention to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, starting Feb. 18, President Lewis Merrill announced this week. Date of the convention was pushed up to give the membership an immediate opportunity to consider pressing salary problems and to take up the unusual organizing opportunities among the white collar workers.

The union's Executive Board, which decided on the convention, also authorized the calling of a general salary conference to which all white collar unions, CIO or independent, will be invited.

on the past. He was also full of Leningrad's plans for the future. In the next five years, inclusive of 1950, he said, it was planned to build new housing sufficient to provide comfortable living space for 400,000 people. Other plans he mentioned include a city subway, a great increase in street cars and busses, provision of gas and gas cookers for the whole city, and park planning which "will make Leningrad the finest garden city in the world."

The Mayor also described plans for the rebuilding of Leningrad's war-blasted plants and the development of its industries to a much greater productive capacity than before the war; for the development of a local steel industry; for the great expansion of metal and machine-building plants and of sea transport, inland waterways and railroad transportation.

But before we left him, Popkov again cited American publications he had read and complained that "the American press and much of your people don't understand us, what we have gone through and what we are trying to do." He was particularly bitter against William L. White, who had visited Leningrad and interviewed him. "I can't understand how he could have written such an unfair and untrue story of the Soviet Union in his book," he said.

LENINGRAD is a fine, modern-looking city. But everywhere we went, we saw evidence of the terrible punishment it had suffered from constant enemy bombardment. Industrial plants and workers' neighborhoods were particularly badly damaged, and the Pushkin and Peterhof suburbs which we visited, and which were actually occupied by the Nazis, were almost completely destroyed.

But at the big Kirov machine-building plant and other factories, we also saw substantial progress being made in reconstruction.

The Kirov plant was originally known as the Putilov works, and its workers boast of their long trade union and revolutionary traditions. Deputy Chairman Soloviev of the shop committee told us he had been a trade unionist since 1912. He described his plant as the oldest in the country and the first to have union organization among its workers.

The Putilov plant was first opened in 1801, Soloviev said, and was operated by the Czarist government to produce handcuffs, buttons and primitive bombshells. Lenin organized a workers' circle in the plant in 1905, and Kalinin, the president of USSR, once worked as a lathe-operator in it.

By the time of the 1917 revolution, the plant was a modern munitions factory employing 20,000 workers, one-third of whom were union members. After the revolution, it was one of the first to be nationalized, and during the war just ended it was used to produce guns, tanks, turbines, aviation motors and other heavy machinery.

When the Germans drew near Leningrad, much of the plants' machinery was moved to the East. But the plant continued operating all through the siege. Nine thousand of its workers volunteered for army service, and special measures had to be taken to keep many of them from joining the army, so the plant might not be drained of skilled labor.

During the siege, the workers in the plant were armed and organized by the union into workers' battalions. They were given military training after working hours. Every night armed workers remained on the premises, on guard at all times against Nazi attack.

The Kirov plant was only about three miles from the fighting front, and ten thousand shells fell on its grounds, most of them heavy artillery shells.

There was not enough fuel to heat the plant during the first bitter winter. There were times when there was no water. The workers had to exist on a ration of 250 grams (about half a pound) of bread and a few vegetables—and for one period of ten days there was not even any bread.

Plant Never Closed

But despite constant bombardment, hunger, cold and all other dangers and difficulties, the Kirov plant never ceased production for a single day during the siege, Soloviev said.

Exhaustion from hunger and cold so depleted the ranks of the workers, that every day the union had to make a check of those who could not show up. If a worker was found to be too weak to come to work, a sled would be sent to pull him to the plant. There he would be put to bed in the plant polyclinic, and given rest, some vitamins and a little extra ration of food until he was strong enough to work again.

In touring the Kirov plant, we saw whole sections completely destroyed by bombardment. But other departments had been repaired and were already operating full blast in peacetime production. The chief engineer, however, told us that the whole plant would have to be rebuilt from the ground up, on newer and more modern lines, to catch up with new technical developments on which it had fallen behind during the war.

Nearly all the workers now employed are members of the metal workers' union, we were told by union officials. The exceptions are a small number of newcomers, who usually join the union after a few weeks, once its purposes and advantages are explained to them by their fellow workers.

Insufficient housing and a labor shortage, particularly of skilled workers, are among the most serious immediate problems at the Kirov plant. Sixty per cent of the workers' homes in the vicinity of the plant were destroyed by bombardment during the siege, and some of the suburbs where other workers lived were completely out. One of the first and biggest appropriations for the rehabilitation of the plant has had to be devoted to workers' housing.

The housing shortage of course affects the labor supply, since many of the skilled workers needed cannot be brought back from the Urals until housing is provided for them and their families.

But in spite of all these enormous difficulties, all the shop workers we met evidenced the greatest spirit of optimism and determination; and the Kirov workers, in their union meetings, have pledged themselves to rebuild their plant and raise production to higher levels than before the war, in three years.

THE EXTENSIVE cultural, sports, entertainment and social activities conducted by the trade unions are a big factor in maintaining the high morale of Soviet workers.

We visited the Kirov "Palace of Culture" one evening. There we saw hundreds of workers having a good time, in fashions designed to suit all tastes.

The big dance hall was full of young people, dancing waltzes, foxtrots, tangos and even American boogie-woogie to a large dance orchestra.

Some remarkable acrobatics were going on in the gymnasium, along with physical culture drills and other gymnastics.

The movie theater was packed, and another theater in the same building was being used by an amateur dramatic group rehearsing a light comedy, with lots of love interest, about a Russian WAC who comes to Leningrad trying to find a boyfriend whose name is as common as Smith or Jones.

The library also seemed popular, and in an adjoining room a discussion group was listening to a lecture on modern poetry by a well-known Soviet poet.

In another part of the building, we looked in on a special room for chess-players, and visited a number of classrooms where classes were in progress on needlework, designing and other arts.

This whole huge Palace of Culture, or workers' clubhouse, was built in 1933 for the workers of the Kirov plant, but it is also open to other workers in the neighborhood.

It is one of two Leningrad workers' clubhouses belonging to the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, and is run by it in cooperation with an advistory committee elected by the local unions in the vicinity. But in addition to these two AUCCTU clubhouses, there are several dozen other workers' clubhouses in Leningrad that are run exclusively by the local trade unions.

Before the war, the Kirov Palace of Culture was capable of accommodating 10,000 people at one time, in its various entertainment, sports, educational and other departments. But during the war, it was seriously damaged by six direct hits and by many other bombs falling in its immediate vicinity.

The heating system and whole sections of the building were destroyed, and it is estimated that it will cost 22 million rubles to rebuild and refurnish it, restoring musical instruments, library books, art objects and other prewar equipment and facilities. "If we fulfill our plan by 1946, we shall only be back to where we were in 1941," the Director said somewhat disconsolately.

Unions Help Rebuild

But the unions have set about the work of restoration with a will. Although the whole building had to be closed on account of war damages, the children's section, lounges, refreshment rooms, sports section and gymnasium, theaters, lecture hall, library and study rooms have already been reopened, though none of them are operating on the same scale as before the war, the Director emphasized, and the lack of heating necessitated the closing of the children's section on chilly evenings.

The operation of this clubhouse is entirely an independent trade union activity. Twenty per cent of its budget comes in the form of a subsidy from the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, which goes over its plans and appoints the director. The rest of the income comes from admission fees to movies, theaters, concerts etc. in the clubhouse. There is also a charge for students who take special classes. But there is no charge for sports, dramatic groups, library, children's section and a number of other clubhouse activities.

EVERYWHERE else in Leningrad, as at the Kirov plant and its Palace of Culture, we saw similar evidences of terrific war destruction and of the vigorous, cheerful and united effort of the people to rebuild their plants, their homes, their clubhouses, and

Howard Univ. Concedes Union Rights

The rights of teachers and other personnel to join unions has been recognized by the Board of Trustees of Howard University in Washington, reports the CIO United Federal Workers. The union, which claims a majority membership among university employes in both teaching and non-teaching categories, made a request last summer for recognition as bargaining agent for the two groups. The trustees' recent action was in response to that request.

Howard University receives its funds both from Federal and private grants, and while wages of most Federal workers are set by law and are not subject to collective bargaining, wages and working conditions at Howard are entirely up to the university management, the union stated. Howard employes did not receive a pay increase as did other Federal workers when Congress passed the Federal pay bill last June.

The Board of Trustees has agreed to a "consent" election among non-teaching personnel and has stated that it would bargain with the union if a majority of the employes indicated a desire to be represented by it. No election among the teachers was requested by the union, as it was not considred necessary at the present time.

to raise their living standards to new and higher levels through increased production—a peacetime effort in many ways comparable to their war effort, in view of the great shortages and dislocations caused by the war.

At the Baltic Shipyards, for instance, which we also visited, bombardment during the war caused damage to the extent of 200 million rubles. In addition, the workers' clubhouse, the plant clinic and child care centers were almost completely destroyed. The union's rest homes and sanatorium in the country were entirely wrecked by the Germans, as were many of the workers' homes.

Because the streetcars were not running, many of the workers had to stay at the yards at night, and the plant hospital was constantly full of wounded, sick and exhausted workers. But despite all these hardships and dangers, and the general lack of food and fuel, these shipyards did not stop work for a single day, the union shop chairman told us.

The Baltic Shipyards are now producing minesweepers and other small vessels, though in less quantity than before the war, because it will take long to restore all the damage, and because of the shortage of labor, which is everywhere a chief complaint. But there was every evidence of enthusiasm and optimism on the part of the workers, among whom we mixed freely in the plant, and the director told us there is constantly increasing labor efficiency.

We saw the plant clinic repaired and in full operation again. The workers' clubhouse and child care centers have also been restored. Seven hundred of the workers' children were sent to summer camps this year, and hundreds of the shipyard workers themselves are being accommodated in rest homes and resorts belonging to the All-Union Council of Trade Unions, pending reconstruction of the local union's own rest homes.

Page Dickens!

This is the prize story to end all war stories. It concerns a Mississippi textile manufacturer who's No. 1 candidate for Scrooge in a novel by a 1945 Dickens.

Caught by the War Labor Board eliminating the 15-minute lunch period at his mill, he mixed outrage with innocence, and shouted, "I owe a responsibility to my Commander-in-Chief," and flaunted a quotation by the late President Roosevelt to prove his point.

The quotation read: "We must work unceasingly to win the war!"

Education Notes

Film Explains World Peace

Timed for widespread non-theatrical distribution in the United States while the General Assembly and Security Council of the United Nations Organization meets in London. "Now—the Peace" dramatic screen story of the world peace plans, will be released through a network of film distribution service points, announces Brandon Films, Inc.

A list of these points may be obtained from Brandon Films, Public Affairs Division, 1600 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. Purchase price of the film is $50; rental is $2.50 per day.

Teachers' Union Pamphlet

An illustrated 80-page pamphlet, "Education for One World," has just been issued by the New York Teachers Union, an affiliate of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers, with a membership composed of some 4,000 teachers in public and private schools and colleges in New York City.

The booklet contains material illustrating the educational policies and perspectives of the Teachers Union, as well as features by authorities in special fields.

An article on "Teaching Youth About Organized Labor," by the union's president, Samuel Wallach, and one on "Improving Veterans' Education," by William Hirsch, chairman of the union's Veterans Committee, are of particular interest.

Copies of the booklet may be obtained from the New York Teachers Union, 13 Astor Place, New York 3, N. Y., at 50 cents each.

Jobs for Negroes

Negroes made great gains during the war, but will suffer disastrous unemployment in the postwar period unless practical steps are taken to prevent it, declares Herbert R. Northrup in a pamphlet, "Will Negroes Get Jobs Now?" published by the Public Affairs Committee, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y. Price 10 cents a copy.

1 Harry Hardcastle takes his sweetheart on a vacation. He has won some money on a horse, and the family decides that vacations come so far between that he might as well spend the money and have the memory. Father Hardcastle says, "Once mother and I had a vacation, and we're still talking about it."

2 Harry is ordered out of his home. Helen is going to have a baby, and he wants to bring her to live in the Hardcastle house. But his father won't have it. Harry has no job, and is off the dole, because his father gets a few shillings a week, and his sister is working. The boy can't find a job, nor a place to take his wife.

3 Larry is Sal Hardcastle's sweetheart. He's a Labor Party man, and is always talking about working together and voting together, to do away with the conditions of life in Hanky Park. Here he explains to his fellow workers that money is "the things you buy."

4 Larry is killed, and Sal decides to take the easiest way out of Hanky Park. She makes sure that Sam Grundy can get her father and brother jobs first, and then she goes. The "shame" of it is too much for her father, and he slaps her—both victims of the blighted areas.

LOVE ON THE DOLE

"ON THE outskirts of every city there is a region of darkness and poverty where men and women forever strive to live decently in the face of overwhelming odds, never doubting that the clouds of depression will one day be lifted. Such a district was Hankey Park in March 1930."

Hanky Park was a blighted area. But there were many in the England of the 30's. Hanky Park was gloomy, poor, dirty, depressing. It's youth yearned for something better. It's elders were dried up, and all hope was lost to them.

When a working miner comes home and divides an egg three ways, for him and his working son and daughter one knows what poverty means. When that grown boy and girl must share the same bed, separated only by a sheet,, so that each might have some privacy, that family knows the bitter pill of want.

Movies Worth Seeing

But those were in the good days of the Hardcastles. They were all working. Sal earned her money at the mill; father at the pit, and Harry was apprenticed in the factory. And Harry's greatest dreams seem to be on the verge of fullfillment when his horse comes in, and the family decides that he can spend it as he wishes, he can go on a train, and take his fiancee with him and have a vacation.

In the meantime Sal is drawn toward a Labor Party soap-boxer who works at the mill. He talks of the possibilities of having another kind of Hanky Park, if only workingmen and women would work together. His talk fires Sal's imagination. She likes the dreams he kindles, and the books he reads, and the short excursions into the country. He shows her that there is some way to escape from Hanky Park. But that was not the way for Sal. Their wedding plans must be postponed, and then they never take place, for unemployment hits Hanky Park.

Sal became the only working member of the her family. Her father was on the dole, and her brother Harry is fired when he finishes his apprenticeship. He can't get his dole because of the Means test. His sister was working, and his father was drawing insurance; they could support him. To Harry this meant the end of everything. Helen is going to have a baby; he has no job; his father turns him out. The steady pounding of streets, the yearning for work, work, any kind of job, just for a place to take his Helen and the baby that is on the way.

But Hanky Park was full of Hardcastles. Their doles could not take care of their needs. The Means test meant starvation, ugliness, even greater than the poverty that was theirs while they worked. At least there had been the eggs that could be divided three ways. But the dole could feed no extras. They demonstrate against it; the police break it up; and Larry, Sal's fiancee, is killed.

Sal is hardened by his death. She takes Sam Grundy's offer of clothes and good times. Love is no longer for her, and this at least means work for her brother and her father.

Hanky Park may be an English film, but its lessons are for Americans, too, especially with long queques of workers before the USES and Unemployment Compensation offices. It is a picture that working men should see. It is a grim reminder of our 30's, too.

It is showing in Detroit and Los Angeles this week; in San Francisco and Ceveland on Nov. 21. Don't miss it. It's a topnotch film.

BLITHE SPIRIT (United Artists). An English fantasy about ghosts in "blushing technicolor." Very witty nonsense.

PARIS UNDERGROUND (United Artists). A case of good material that never jells into real drama. The good deeds of an English lady, and an American who rescued 240 RAF fliers, and were finally captured by the Nazis. The material is based on Etta Shiber's book, and is newsreel in character. Nearly every incident could have been the basis of a good film. Everything is most casual.

CONFIDENTIAL AGENT (Warner Bros.) An agent of Republican Spain has a mission in London to purchase coal so that the fascists won't get it. WASHINGTON GUIDE

Lobbying For Disaster

Some of the most powerful and determined lobbies in America are working day and night to drive the country into economic disaster via the inflation route.

These lobbies are large, well-financed, well-manned and utterly unscrupulous. The effect they have on Congress when they crack the whip is frightening.

Take the lobby of the Natl. Automobile Dealers Assn., denounced by OPA Administrator Bowles this week, as an example.

The NADA is out to wreck OPA's price policy on new cars, because it calls for absorption of increased prices by dealers. (The absorption amounts to about 4 per cent of a 30 per cent normal markup, and will not cut dealers' profits since they no longer have to lose on trade-ins.)

The NADA lobby sent out a hurry call for telegrams from its members. Over 50,000 hit Congress in one day. In OPA they were arriving at the rate of one a minute—incidentally, delaying other messages and disrupting OPA's work.

When the House Small Business Committee (Rep. Patman, D., Tex., chairman) announced it would hold a hearing on OPA's price policies, the NADA wired its state branches to get busy with the telegrams to their Congressmen.

As a result, 302 Congressmen came to the committee hearing, each under orders from the NADA to get down there "and register his presence."

The same 302 Congressmen have also indicated that they want to speak on the floor on the NADA position. As Bowles put it, this is the "neatest, slickest and best-timed" lobbying job ever seen on Capitol Hill—and, he might have added, one of the most dangerous.

Cost absorption is the keystone of postwar reconversion price control. If you let go on that you will have every selfish interest in the country getting price increases and passing them on to the consumers—and when that happens, you have inflation.

The NADA is not the only lobby working for inflation. The Natl. Real Estate Board is another, with its biggest success to date the lifting of building materials controls and consequent sky-rocketing of housing prices.

The Natl. Retail Dry Goods Assn. is still another, currently engaged in pressuring Congress for higher prices on clothes—in addition to the 15 per cent hike OPA has already given the manufacturers of "low-cost" clothing.

There's a terrific drive going on in Washington, directed by some of the strongest and most dishonest lobbies in the country. It's directed against you, through Congress—and it is aimed at inflation on a grand scale.

More on Lobbies

Organized lobbies such as those described in column 1 get plenty of help from reactionary Congressmen and from some people in government agencies.

The dry goods lobby, now fighting to wreck price control, is given a helping hand by Rep. Howard Smith's (D., Va.) committee "To Investigate Acts of Executive Agencies Which Exceed Their Authority."

The auto dealers' lobby, fighting for higher prices on cars, gets a helping hand from the House Small Business Committee and from 302 members of Congress who turn out at the dealers' whistle.

Frequently these lobbies have their representatives directly on a government agency's payroll, as the real estate agents' lobby had its men in the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion when building price controls were lifted.

The big monopoly food interests now driving for inflation in food prices throw their weight around in the Department of Agriculture, where Secretary Anderson announces the end of subsidides that have kept food costs down without a murmur of opposition.

Honeymooning?

Been on any good honeymoons lately? Like to take a nice romantic little trip to a place where troubles and cares and atomic bombs can't bother you?

Who wouldn't? Even Congress, which was supposed to have been on a honeymoon with Harry S. Truman not so long ago, wants to take another vacation and get away from it all.

Before Congress gets away, however, let them have a few notes from you on what you think they ought to pack along on that little vacation trip.

Item: S 380, the jobs-for-all bill, now laid away in mothballs by the House Committee on Expenditures (Rep. Manasco, D., Ala., chairman). Tell them you want this passed and not in the watered-down Senate version either, but as originally written.

Item: HR 3891, the emergency unemployment compensation bill, embalmed in the mortuary parlors of the House Ways and Means Committee (Rep. Doughton, 82, D., N. C., chairman). Tell them to sign Rep. Mike Bradley's (D., Pa.) Discharge Petition 11 to get the bill on the floor.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

A quick tabulation of bills now before Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
HR 3937	Sets fines, jail for strikes in violation of contracts; makes all political action by unions illegal; repeals Smith-Connally Act.	House Rules Committee, where it can get a rule sending it to the floor any time.	Wire your Representative to oppose.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Outlaws normal union acts such as picketing under guise of "anti - racketeering" which already comes under plenty of laws.	House Rules Committee, with tory-GOP-reactionary Democrat gang pushing it toward House floor.	Wire your Representative to oppose.
Ball, Hatch (S 1171)	Does same job as HR 3937 but with more "respectable" air to it.	Senate Labor Committee. Big push coming after labor-management conference ends in Washington, likely next week.	Keep saying "no" to your two Senators.
"Equal rights" HJ Res 49	Repeals all laws protecting women workers, ends aid to mothers, dependent children, opens door to repeal of all social legislation.	Senate Judiciary Subcommittee for it 3 to 1. Danger of early appearance on Senate floor.	Write your Senators to oppose as one of several union-busting bills.
Child care (S 1318)	Provides pregnancy, infancy and child care, aid to crippled children, dental care, etc.	Hearings not even started in Senate Labor Committee (Sen. Murray, D. Mont., chairman).	Write Sen. Murray and your own two Senators to urge early hearings.
Equal pay (S 1178)	Requires equal pay for equal work regardless of sex; forbids bias in layoffs.	Senate Labor Committee, with action being stalled.	Tell your Senators to support.

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

WARNING: a new anti-strike and anti-union blast is cooking on the GOP side of the Senate. When it comes, it'll be a killer—designed to scare the public into supporting Nazi-like labor control legislation.

Warning signs of the coming blast are Sen. Vandenberg's recent speech on "observance of contracts" and repeated threats that failure of the labor-management conference will call for Congressional action.

Another tip is an outburst of curiosity by the minority committee in the Senate, which is busy calling labor and government offices here for information on strikes.

ATOMIC: CIO is strongly opposed to the May-Johnson bill (HR 4566) on atomic energy (see CIO Executive Board resolution, CIO News, Nov. 12). Here's why:

1. The bill sets up a commission of part-time people who are not responsible to anyone, not even the President of the U. S.

2. The bill does not set up an administration for this commission removable by the President, and does not provide that he be a civilian.

3. It does not provide that the American people be the sole producer and owner of atomic energy materials.

Sen. Johnson and Rep. May both want to keep atomic "secrets" as a club over other nations. CIO will testify on atomic energy soon.

* * *

"LIMITATIONS": The Gwynne bill (HR 2788) that cuts off all workers' claims under the wage hour and about 16 other protective laws after one year is on the House calendar, which means that it can be brought up on the House floor any time.

Wire your Representative to oppose this bill, which threatens to make protective laws meaningless.

* * *

UNRRA: CIO is urging passage of the current $500,000,000 appropriation to carry out U. S. obligations for relief and reconstruction of war-devastated areas, and is backing Truman's plea for passage of another bill appropriating $1,350,000,000 additional.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has the first bill, with the House rider demanding "freedom of the press" attached. This rider is purely disruptive, aimed at making relief impossible.

* * *

SEAMEN'S RIGHTS: The Seamen's bill of rights (HR 2346) is still stalled in the House Merchant Marine Committee, where it's been for the past two years.

Merchant seamen, 6,000 of whom were killed fighting fascism, deserve the same break soldiers and navy seamen get. Wire your Congressman and Committee Chairman Rep. S. O. Bland (D., Va.) to support this bill.

ONE WORLD AND LABOR

Argentine Thugs Kill Workers

AT LEAST 15 workers have been killed, hundreds wounded and more than 3,000 jailed since the return to power of the fascist dictator Juan Peron in Argentina, CTAL News, organ of the Latin-American Confederation of Workers, reports.

"Armed thugs and scab-herders in the pay of the Peron-controlled Labor Ministry roamed working-class neighborhoods and factory zones forcing workers to join pro-Peron demonstrations and clubbing and shooting those who refused to take part," CTAL News says.

Despite this terror, workers refused to turn out in large numbers for the phoney "strike" that Peron engineered to facilitate his return to power a few weeks ago.

Incidentally, the Intl. Labor Organization, meeting in Paris last month, refused to seat the Argentine "union" delegation after protests by Jouhaux, Toledano and other labor delegates. The question didn't even come up at the WFTU meeting. Argentina is, however, a member of the United Nations Organization—put there by the British and by former U. S. Secretary of State Stettinius.

Marine Hero Speaks

Col. Evans Carlson, Marine hero and trainer of special Marine commando units, spoke at the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen's "Program for Living" show in San Francisco Nov. 16, saying on democracy:

"Statesmen today will do well to spend more time studying the grass roots and give less ear to the dictates of authoritarian leaders. As a nation professing belief in a democratic way of life, we must be consistent and regard with genuine sympathy the aspiration of other peoples to enjoy the benefits of democracy.

"Under no circumstances should we be a party to action designed to suppress movements which emanate from the people and which have as their objective the improvement of the welfare of human beings." State Dept., General Wedemeyer and assorted brasshats now shooting people down in Indonesia and elsewhere, please note.

Warns on Germany

Preventing Germany from starting a third world war will be a continuous and exacting job, UE President Albert J. Fitzgerald warned this week. Recently back from the WFTU in Paris, from Berlin and the Soviet Union, Fitzgerald told a Madison Square Garden U. S.-Soviet rally:

"This job, in my opinion, can never be successfully carried out without the full co-operation of the nations that won victory, working together now and in the future. Roots of Hitlerism that I saw still existing in Germany can grow into new dangers for world peace."

War Trials Start

After months of delay, the trials of Nazi war criminals are under way in Nuremberg. Some 20 top Nazis are finally being brought to trial, with the guilt of World War II and the death of 50 million people on their hands.

Missing are Martin Bormann, Hitler's most trusted aide; Ernst Kaltenbrunner, former police head, who is said to be sick; Dr. Robert Ley, who was reported to have committed suicide under his guard's eye, and many representatives of the German industrialists who were the real conspirators of World War II.

Alfred Krupp, head of the most notorious arms-making family of Germany, was to have been tried, but was saved by the British, who refused an American and Russian demand that he be put in the dock along with the others.

The Nazis now standing trial are a miserable lot of racketeers and murderers. The men behind them—the Junkers, the German industrialists, the cartel operators—are apparently to be allowed to go scot free.

The CIO Convention in 1944 put its finger on these forces responsible for Nazism when it resolved that "the German industrialists and Junkers shall not receive any amnesty through their business and social contacts in the victorious nations to renew their drive for a world conquest in the future."

Incidentally, here's an interesting note from the financial page of the newspapers: "Optimistic German investors have boosted prices of stocks in nearly two dozen major German concerns 10 to 15 per cent above what they were quoted under Hitler." German industry is evidently looking for a bullish market.

Denounce Gag

The editors of the Washington Post, including the Republican publisher, Eugene Meyer, have denounced the GOP-inspired "freedom of the press rider" on the appropriation for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation. Testifying at a House Foreign Affairs Committee meeting on the $1,350,000,000 appropriation bill, one of them said it was simply "a needling operation against Russia" and was "playing politics with starvation."

GET GIs HOME AT ONCE, MURRAY TELLS LEGION

CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a message to the American Legion convention at Chicago this week called for the full utilization of "all the ships which are available and which can be manned" to bring back quickly all overseas troops not needed for occupation duty.

Invited for the first time to speak at a Legion convention, Murray was unable to be present because of the necessity of attending the Labor-Management Conference in Washington. Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers spoke in his place.

In the speech prepared for delivery to the Legion Murray said:

"Our men saw these ships used to transport troops and supplies when the war was in progress. It makes no sense for them to be useless, tied up in port or sailed partially loaded when this important job involving the men themselves still has to be finished."

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union and other CIO maritime unions have called for the quick return of high-point and other troops not needed as occupation forces.

Murray told of increasing co-operation between the CIO and the Legion during the past year "not only on the national level but in many local situations as well" and said he hoped that in the year ahead the two organizations and their various units would continue to work together on many problems.

Assertng that the "interests of veterans are inextricably bound up with the welfare of labor generally, just as the interest of labor is bound up with the welfare of the whole nation," Murray called for increased wages, control of prices, full seniority credit equal to time in service even for newly employed veterans, special adjustments for disabled veterans, and a mailing plan to speed discharges.

Stressing the importance of higher wages, he declared he "was impressed" by the fact that "many of our uniformed men are returning to an economic system that does not provide them as high a standard of living as they enjoyed in the military service."

Murray pointed out that allowing for family, clothing and food allotments but excluding such items as lodging, medical and dental care the average compensation of a soldier in the European Theater was $2,460 a year, but to "match their total service income" veterans will have to receive a weekly wage of between $50 and $60 a week.

Attacking the Selective Service System's idea of seniority whereby a World War II veteran can take the job of a man having greater seniority, he asserted that the CIO wants to preserve the seniority system because "our interest—unlike Selective Service—is to protect the veteran not only one year after his return, but especially for the second and succeeding years when he will most need protection in his employment."

A member of the CIO Wholesale and Warehouse Union, New York City, distributes postcards urging President Truman to use his influence to "ship the boys home by Christmas."

Turning to employment of disabled veterans, Murray stated they should be paid "the full rate of wages for the job they are given" and should not be "exploited through payment of lower wages, on the theory that they get disability benefits and therefore can work for less."

Murray's stand on ships and seniority was backed by the executive committee of the Natl. Conference of Union Labor Legionaires, representing 128 Legion labor posts with a membership of 25,000.

The committee, which met simultaneously with the Legion convention, called on the convention to blast military authorities for delaying the return of overseas servicemen. A resolution charged that Victory C type and passenger ships were being diverted to commercial trade routes "instead of being utilized to bring our troops home."

The union Legionnaires also urged the convention to:

Withdraw the 1944 Legion convention action endorsing Selective Service's principle of super-seniority.

Support formulation by the Re-employment and Retraining Administration of rules governing the job rights of veterans to provide "a legitimate and liberal interpretation" of the Selective Service law.

Endorse government action to provide full employment if private industry is unable to do so.

Back establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee and condemn Jim Crow posts.

Support the 65-cent-an-hour minimum wage bill and the unemployment compensation measure to provide up to $25 a week for 26 weeks.

Sees Farm Price Cut If Wages Fall

Unless organized labor succeeds in offsetting wage cuts now being demanded by management, farm income will drop 15% next year, Pres. James G. Patton of the Natl. Farmers Union told a convention of its northeastern district this week at Utica, N. Y.

Vt. Labor Council

A Vermont Industrial Relations Council was formed this week by representatives of CIO, AFL and the Associated Industries of Vermont, to provide voluntary conciliation and arbitration services, and a group, interested in industrial good will, which might consider establishment of recognized practices in management-labor relations.

Jobs, Security Parley Dec. 7

Nineteen joint sponsors, among them Bartley C. Crum, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Philip Murray, Rev. Daniel Poling, Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, Walter White, A. F. Whitney and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, this week announced a national emergency meeting on jobs and security to be held Dec. 7 in Washington, D. C.

"America is in danger," the call to the meeting states. "Millions of her citizens face unemployment throughout the coming year. But the majority of Congress has refused to provide for the human side of reconversion and lay the basis for a national economy of full production and full employment.

"We, the undersigned, subscribe to the minimum program outlined by President Truman in his September 6 message to Congress. We are convinced that unless it is substantially enacted soon the country is headed for a more serious depression than we have ever before experienced."

GM STRIKE—THE FACTS

THEIR patience worn thin by weeks of stalling on their wage demands, more than 325,000 workers in General Motors plants throughout the country finally struck this week. The decision to strike was voted unanimously at a conference in Detroit attended by 200 delegates from more than 100 CIO Auto Workers Union locals in GM plants.

The final act that precipitated the strike call was the curt refusal of the General Motors Corp. to accept arbitration proposed by the union. The only reply to a union request for an answer by Nov. 20 was a curt note from H. W. Anderson, GM vice president in charge of labor relations, stating that an answer "will be delivered to you on or before Nov. 23."

Terming this "a stall, pure and simple," the union issued a statement declaring that the reply "does not contain even a hint that the corporation accepts the principle of arbitration."

"We have had 97 days of stalling, of refusal of this corporation to meet its responsibilities to its workers and to the public," the union stated. "The workers and the union have exhibited the utmost patience in the face of the most flagrant provocation, intimidation, and inflammatory challenges to strike ever exhibited by an American employer.

"We have exerted every effort to settle this issue on the basis of economic facts, rather than on the basis of economic power. We have laid our full case before the corporation and before the public in terms of facts and figures, while the corporation has delayed, evaded issues and refused to make available to the union and to the public, information essential to the settlement of this dispute. The records of this case in the nation's press show that this is true.

"Even behind closed doors, GM has refused to negotiate in good faith. It has refused conciliation. Now by its stall, it has in effect refused arbitration."

Charging that GM Pres. C. E. Wilson and other officials of the corporation had determined from the start not to bargain in good faith, and to stall and impede all efforts to settle the dispute, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas declared that the rejection of the union's last proposal was merely another attempt to "stall and delay a solution."

"Speaking for the workers in more than 100 GM bargaining units, the delegates to the GM conference, having seen every effort at peaceful settlement blocked by the corporation, have today voted unanimously to recommend that the UAW-CIO Strike Strategy Committee authorize a strike in all the plants of the GM Corp. under contract to the UAW-CIO," Thomas stated.

"The deliberate provocation and capricious irresponsibility of the small group of industrial and financial bureaucrats who control General Motors, and who contemptuously disregard the interest of workers, consumers and stockholders alike have left us no choice."

"We are confident that this dispute will ultimately be settled on the basis of the economic facts, including the arithmetic which the corporation has kept locked up in its vaults, inaccessible to the negotiators, to the public and even to the corporation's own stockholders. For our part we shall make every effort to settle it quickly," Thomas declared.

He concluded with a brief review of the union's proposal:

"We demand 30 per cent increase in wage rates to maintain take-home pay without increasing prices. If the corporation can show that it is impossible to pay 30 per cent higher wage rates without increasing prices and at the same time continue to pay substantial profits to its stockholders, we will scale down our demands to the point the arithmetic of the case requires. But until such proof is made, we will not reduce our demands by one red cent."

The UAW's demand for a 30 per cent increase for all workers in the automotive industry was announced last September. GM rejected the UAW demands on Oct. 3, and on Oct. 24, workers voted six-to-one in a poll conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board to authorize a strike if necessary.

Prolonged negotiations between the union and GM failed to break the deadlock. GM's only offer was in the form of a proposal made by Wilson that the UAW join in a petition to Congress for extension of the work-week from 40 to 45 hours. The UAW rejected the proposal and asked that the corporation reconsider its wage demands.

On Nov. 6, GM refused to accept an offer from the Secretary of Labor that a U. S. mediator sit in on negotiations, and, Nov. 8, the union filed charges with the NLRB of unfair labor practices against GM.

WHY RAISE BASIC PAY

3. Productivity Up, Wages Lag

Output per man-hour of labor has steadily increased in American factories. Wages, however, have not kept pace with increasing productivity of workers.

Report From Detroit

By PAT BRONTE

ON Thanksgiving Day, 1945, more than 300,000 Detroit workers were jobless. As quietly as though they were ending a normal work day, 30,000 Detroit - area General Motors strikers had walked out, joining those already unemployed by reconversion lay-offs.

It was the first authorized strike by the CIO Auto Worker's Union since Pearl Harbor, Pres. R. J. Thomas said.

Ending a 97-day period of company stalling, UAW officials announced the strike decision at 4 p. m., Nov. 20.

Wednesday, 11,500 Buick division employes at Flint streamed from the plant, chanting union songs.

Union sound trucks began cruising the vicinity of all the GM plants, summoning the employes to union meetings, sometimes in a nearby vacant lot.

Detroit police cars parked bumper to bumper close to the affected areas.

The weather was near freezing and raining slightly.

At 11 a. m., Thomas and Walter J. Reuther, UAW-CIO vice-president, formally informed the corporation that the union had struck.

Then, thousands of workers laid down their tools and left. Some finished their lunch before they gathered at local headquarters, paid their union dues and settled into discussions of the future.

Already reconciled to a long - drawn - out conflict, they parted from each other calling, "Merry Christmas," "See you in the Spring," "See you next year."

One declared grimly, "We'll stay out and we'll picket until our backbones and our stomachs grow together."

Mike Lacey, president of Chevrolet Gear and Axle Plant 1, reported that AFL construction workers on reconversion jobs in the plant had also walked out. AFL railway workers are supporting the strike too, he said.

"We didn't want this strike," Lacey said. "The workers couldn't go along any longer. I would like to know why the hell the common man has to fight to exist. I'd like to know how the men back from the services can rehabilitate themselves on $35 to $38 a week."

Reuther announced, "We will not be able to pay the workers any kind of compensation. We will fight to prevent evictions. We will pay rent where it is necessary. We will pay doctor bills."

The strike fund, he estimated, was about $500,000, plus whatever the locals and workers had on hand.

Building service employes at the GM building were instructed by union officials to remain at their jobs of running elevators and giving service to the building's tenants.

Company property will not be damaged. Maintenance men are staying in the plants to keep them heated and the furnaces going. Heat-treat workers will also remain on the job.

Strikers were told to spend Thanksgiving at home, and report at 6 a. m., Friday for picket duty. It will probably be Monday, Nov. 26, before strike machinery is set up—before signs appear on the picket lines—before soup-kitchens come back.

CIO BACKS HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week praised President Truman's newly announced Federal health program, pointing out that the CIO is already on record in support of it, including provisions for national compulsory health insurance and for insurance against loss in pay due to illness.

The program drew immediate opposition from the American Medical Assn. which branded it as "socialized medicine"—a charge specifically denied by the President. The program was supported by the liberal Physicians Forum, which pointed out that tens of thousands of doctors soon will be returning to civilian practice.

"Now," said the Forum, "is the right moment to set up such a system of national health insurance which will permit an equitable distribution of doctors throughout the country, before these young men flock to the cities, leaving vast stretches of the country unprotected."

President Truman, in noting that 30% of those inducted for military service had been rejected, declared that the nation cannot afford such a record and said that health security must be made available to all—"regardless of residence, station or race."

Among actions he urged were:

1. Construction of hospitals and other health facilities with Federal aid and with minimum standards of operation to be set by the Federal government.

2. Expansion of public health, maternal and child health services, with larger Federal aid.

3. A broad Federal program to stimulate medical research and education.

In discussing prepayment of medical costs by a compulsory insurance system that would protect virtually every person in the nation, President Truman said that only 3 to 4% of the population is protected now by sickness insurance.

Under a cost equivalent to about 4% of the nation's pay roll, the system should provide for dental as well as medical care, the President said.

"A system of required prepayment would not only spread the costs of medical care; it would also prevent much serious disease," the President declared. "Since medical bills would be paid by the insurance fund, doctors would more often be consulted when the first signs of disease occur instead of when the disease has become serious."

Truman said that provisions of the plan would not restrict freedom of professional choice either of patients or physicians. "The removal of financial barriers between patient and doctor would enlarge the present freedom of choice," he pointed out.

The points outlined in the President's message have been incorporated in a bill introduced by Sen. Wagner (D. N. Y.) and Rep. Dingle (D. Mich.).

ACT NOW TO AVERT A CRASH

The time to avert a crash is before it occurs.

But some folks aren't wise even after the event.

The CIO is working almost single-handed today to avert another economic crash, another depression like that of the 1930's, which resulted from the mistakes made following the first world war.

It is doing this through the wage demands of its unions. It is doing it by forcing the wage issue to national attention, at the Labor-Management Conference, and in every other way it can. It is doing it, yes, through the General Motors strike.

The depression of the 1930's resulted from too-low wages and too-high profits. Between 1924 and 1929, factory workers' wages rose only 5%, though their productively increased 24%. Meanwhile profits rose 72%.

Too much money was taken out of our economic bloodstream in profits. Too little was left for the purchasing power of the people. Unemployment grew, and America's worst crash followed.

Is history to repeat itself? Wage rates were frozen during the war below the level of increased living costs. Take-home pay has since been deeply slashed by loss of overtime. Meanwhile profits are rising to the dizziest levels in history.

Substantial wage increases are immediately necessary to avert another crash. They are possible without general price increases, and without cutting too deeply into record profits.

Government figures assembled by the CIO show that industry can raise wages 31% and still earn 100% more take-home profits after taxes than in 1936-39; and that, taking into account increased productivity, it can raise wages 38% and still double its take-home profits in 1946 over prewar years.

The CIO is leading the fight not only for labor but for all the American people when it insists on immediate and substantial wage increases to protect our country against the present economic trends, which otherwise will lead us straight to another major depression.

UAW FIGHTS FOR THE PEOPLE

If ever a strike was completely justified it is the strike of the CIO United Auto Workers against General Motors.

The union's demand for a 30% increase in wage rates to maintain take-home pay without increasing prices is reasonable and public-spirited. It can easily be met from record auto profits.

The workers and their union have shown the greatest patience in the face of endless provocations.

They have done everything possible to settle the issue around the collective bargaining table, and on the basis of economic facts. They have urged conciliation. They have proposed voluntary arbitration.

But General Motors has refused to negotiate in good faith. It has refused conciliation. It has been unwilling to submit the facts of the case to public and impartial scrutiny. And when it failed to accept the union's offer of arbitration, no recourse was left to the workers but to strike.

The exclusive responsibility for this stoppage rests with General Motors. It has in effect struck against labor and against the public.

The Auto Workers, on the other hand, are fighting not only their own but the people's battle—against profiteering and price increases, and for increased mass purchasing power to promote prosperity and avert depression.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

COUNTERFEIT money endangers our whole currency, and Uncle Sam rightly spends much effort tracing it to its source.

Counterfeit ideas can be even more dangerous. During the war, every effort was made to trace defeatist propaganda to the enemy sources from which it usually originated.

In peacetime, too, counterfeit ideas are dangerous. But there is no public service to test their validity, to trace their source, and to prevent them from misinforming public opinion.

We are indebted to the International Oil Worker, however, for effectively exposing one piece of such false currency.

It reports that when Secretary Morris Akin of the Texas CIO Council protested to Texas newspapers against a misleading editorial on oil profits and wages, he received the following reply from the Yorktown News:

"The Oil Weekly editorial in our issue of October 4 appeared as a contributed article in connection with an advertising contract we have with a large concern.

"It is the policy of all newspapers to run contributed articles or editorials in connection with substantial advertising contracts"

★ ★ ★

It is not true that "all newspapers" so directly prostitute their news and editorial columns to the service of large advertisers.

Such a practice is condemned by the American Society of Newspaper Editors and is scorned by many reputable publishers.

But past exposures of power trust propaganda have revealed a widespread practice of printing "canned editorials" and twisted news items from organizations representing large advertisers.

Much of the present propaganda against labor and its wage demands can be traced directly to such sources. The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, for instance, in a recent report of its Natl. Industrial Information Committee, makes the following boast:

"The 69 million people in the smaller cities, towns and rural areas of 'grass-roots' America serviced by hometown weekly newspapers are being reached increasingly through NIIC's weekly clipsheet of news and features . . .

"More than 50 per cent of the total family population in 22 states, including New York, Pennsylvania and California, are reached by papers using Industrial Press Service."

★ ★ ★

The most effective current anti-labor propaganda is that reconversion is being held up by strikes and threats of strikes, instead of by the big-business hold-up of production to boost prices and keep down wages.

The NAM helped to circulate this counterfeit idea by hiring an airplane and taking 20 leading newspapermen on a 31-day trip to 20 industrial cities and 50 plants.

The big-business propaganda ladled out on this trip was immediately reflected in many stories in leading dailies, quoting employers as saying that reconversion would go better if labor did not strike or threaten to strike, and failing to mention the real big-business hold-up.

The NAM was so pleased with the results that it reprinted in the NAM News a story by Morley Cassidy of the Philadelphia Inquirer headlined, "Newsmen Find Production Languishing From Strikes and Idleness."

It also reprinted in its clipsheet part of a report of Joseph Garretson of the Cincinnati Enquirer alleging that "so many war workers seem to prefer unemployment compensation to jobs;" and a story about the conclusions of Russell Porter of the New York Times predicting rapid reconversion "unless the present waves of strikes and labor disputes broadens into widespread and prolonged interruption of production."

★ ★ ★

Many people innocently circulate counterfeit money, without knowing it is counterfeit or how it originated. The same goes for counterfeit ideas.

To divert attention from its own hold-up of reconversion to get higher prices and profits, lower taxes and wages, big business put out the counterfeit idea that labor alone is responsible. This has gained so much currency that many editorial writers, radio commentators and others repeat it without investigation.

All newspaper readers and radio listeners can render a public service by immediately challenging this and other counterfeit ideas and giving their circulators the real facts.

SCORE TO DATE ON L-M MEET

By C. W. FOWLER

THE LABOR - Management conference, which started out with high official hopes for success, has been going on for some three weeks now, and at this writing seems not much nearer to a solution of basic labor-industry problems than it was the day it started in the pillared halls of the U. S. Labor Dept.

What's the score on this meeting of labor and industry's top men? What progress has been made on the basic issue governing worker-employer relationships in this third month of post V-J Day economic life in America?

Due to the initiative of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the conference has had the prime issue underlying all labor-management relationships before it from the opening day. This is the issue of wages and collective bargaining. Management, William Green and John L. Lewis have been trying in concert to dodge this issue.

President Murray put it this way in his opening speech to the conference: "I have become convinced by the events of recent months that there has been a steady deterioration of industrial relationships in this country since V-E Day. Today we are confronted with a major collapse in labor-management relations.

"At the very time when history has cast collective bargaining in such a critical role, at the very time when it can yield the most for the common good, it has been rejected by so many American employers. I say 'rejected' advisedly, not to call names but to recite a bare fact. For there is nothing quite so plain, clear and unadulterated as the word 'no'."

Following this statement of the issue before the meeting, Murray dropped a resolution into the executive committee of the conference that said:

"Resolved that the representatives of labor and management to hereby make an urgent call on the labor unions and the representatives of management to engage in genuine and sincere collective bargaining in an effort to resolve this all-important wage issue."

This was to be done, Murray said, in the framework "provided by the President in his recent message to the nation, in which he said that 'wage increases are therefore imperative—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise national income.'"

The CIO resolution was immediately countered by one from management:

"The executive committee recommends that the conference not consider national wage policies nor attempt to define formulas to implement the wage policy announced by the President and further defined in executive orders."

Meantime, John L. Lewis and William Green were making statements to the effect that the CIO resolution was (in Lewis' words) "namby-pamby" and not worth considering. Green declared that he felt the question of wages was "outside the agenda" of the conference. He further objected to using Truman's wage message as a "framework."

Green still objected, on the grounds that there might be some question as to the meaning of "substantial."

Lewis, on his part, followed with a resolution (presumably not at all "namby-pamby") which said: "Postwar facilities and formulas and quantitative production will lower unit costs to the consuming public and make possible shorter hours of work and higher wages for labor. Therefore, be it resolved that this labor-management conference call on industry and labor to apply themselves with all diligence to the execution and implementation of this policy."

The upshot of this meeting of the executive committee was a lay-away job on Murray's resolution. Nor has any action yet been taken on another resolution which he offered, calling for an end to racial and other discriminations in employment and collective bargaining, though Murray has continued to press for action on it.

The CIO, Murray told newsmen after the meeting, will continue to fight "for a declaration on the need for substantial wage increases. It is the most important issue before the conference, which cannot dodge its responsibility to the nation in this regard," he said.

What Truman Said

"The point at which the people of this country are entitled to become impatient, and to consider the need of government action, is when one of the parties fails to bargain in good faith or refuses a reasonable offer of conciliation or arbitration."
—President Truman, in his speech of Oct. 30, 1945.

What Truman Did

The oil industry, in conferences called by the U. S. Labor Department's conciliation service, refused to bargain collectively. The Oil Workers Intl. Union-CIO at all times was willing to bargain.

The oil industry rejected Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach's offer of arbitration. The Oil Workers Intl. Union-CIO accepted it.

At this point when "the people of this country are entitled to become impatient, and to consider the need of government action," the President ordered seizure of certain key plants by the Navy. Thus the back of the oil workers' strike was broken by military force. Thousands of strikers in properties not seized were left stranded, with their economic power broken.

The Oil Workers Intl. Union-CIO, with its hands tied behind its back, was then invited to negotiate with the major oil companies—America's most tightly integrated monopoly—on a local basis. We have so negotiated since Navy seizure, with not a single instance of a major company budging from the 15% take-it-or-leave-it wage cut.

Is this the appropriate "government action" to which President Truman referred? The Oil Workers Union was certain that, with Navy seizure, the President would set up machinery to settle the basic wage issue. To date he has not done so.

Is This What Your Union Can Expect?

We believe that what happened to the nation's oil workers is a threat to every other union. Military force used to break the oil workers' strike can break yours, too. Apparently we are harking back in the history of industrial relations to 1922 when Harding broke the railroad shopmen's strike through a federal injunction, and back into the 19th Century, when Cleveland broke the Pullman strike through military force.

WE ASK YOU

Through your International Union, your regional districts and your local unions, to request that President Truman:

1. Stop using the Navy for strikebreaking.

2. Take appropriate "government action" to end the deadlock in the oil wage dispute, through arbitration or other suitable means.

3. Support the Oil Workers Intl. Union-CIO and its locals in their fight for "52-40", for the maintenance of purchasing power, the American standard of living and our nation's prosperity.

SOVIET UNIONS

By LEN DE CAUX

THERE'S no "enigma" about the trade union movement of the Soviet Union. The CIO delegation visiting that country attended many union meetings, met hundreds of local union officers and shop workers, and had many opportunities to see how the unions function in the plants it visited. We found union procedures, meetings, problems and goals so similar in many respects to those in the U. S. that often it took the difference in language to remind us we were in another country.

The chief differences arise, of course, from the widely different systems obtaining in the two countries in respect to the ownership and operation of industry.

There is no continuing conflict in the USSR between the claims of employers for higher profits for themselves and the unions' demands for higher wages for the workers, since there are no private profit-making employers.

Correspondingly, there is much closer cooperation between unions and management for increasing production and in other respects, since the workers expect direct benefits in higher wages and a greater and cheaper supply of consumers' goods to result from increased production; and since management has no incentive to divert plant earnings into dividends for private stockholders.

But, within the framework of this broad general difference of system, Soviet trade unions function very similarly to those in the U. S. They negotiate collective agreements covering wages and working conditions. They handle grievances, have shop committees, shop stewards, conventions, elections of officers, and an organizational and dues structure that is not dissimilar to ours.

The scope of trade union activities, however, is wider in the USSR than in the U. S. Union membership is larger, amounting to about 27,000,000, and the unions perform many additional functions. They operate the social security system, for instance, for all wage and salary earners; have many rest homes, resorts, sanatoria, child care centers and summer camps; concern themselves with workers' food supplies and housing; and conduct far more extensive cultural, educational, sports and recreational activities than do most American unions.

THE administrative headquarters of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions are located in a big building in Moscow which has office space for some 1,200 union officers and employes. Half of these are employed by the AUCCTU itself, and the other half by a score of industrial unions that also have their headquarters in this building.

The set-up at AUCCTU headquarters reflects the wide scope of Soviet trade union activities. There are separate departments, each with its own director and staff, for wage negotiations; organization; social insurance; rest homes and sanatoria; housing; workers' supplies; publications; labor safety and protection; physical culture and sports; international affairs; educational and cultural activities; statistical research; as well as for personnel, office management, finances, etc.

Industrial Organization

Peter Kazakov, director of the Organization Dept. of the AUCCTU, gave us the additional information we needed on the structure of the Soviet trade union movement.

The unions in the USSR, like those of the CIO, are organized along modern industrial lines, he said, with all workers in each plant in one union, and one industrial union for each industry. There are 168 "All-Union" industrial unions affiliated to the AUCCTU.

The words "All-Union" apply to what we would call "national" organizations in the U. S. It must be remembered that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, as its name implies, is not a single nation, but rather a union of many different nations, each constituting a separate Soviet Republic—as for instance the Russian, Ukrainian, Byelorussian, Georgian, etc., Republics.

All elections of union officers and representatives are by secret ballot, Kazakov emphasized. The workers plant elect a shop committe sponding to an American loc departmental committees for e department of the plant; and union organizer" or shop ste each 20 workers, as a general collects dues, handles grievanc in the Soviet Union and includes benefits to women during pregnancy and childbirth; illness and accident insurance designed to maintain a worker's income at its average level until he can return to work; support for families whose breadwinner loses the capacity to work; old age and widows' pensions, funeral expenses and many other features.

For information about this social security system, we went to A. I. Gurbonov, Director of the Social Insurance Department of the AUCCTU.

Guaranteed Security

He told us that social security is a right guaranteed under the Soviet constitution, and that the workers have to make no contributions for it from their wages. All social insurance funds are provided by the government, which collects them from employing establishments in proportion to the number of employes in each. The trade union movement, however, has complete charge over the administration and distribution of these funds.

Besides paying for benefits, pensions, etc., the social insurance fund is also used for the maintenance of rest homes, sanatoria, prophylactoria, health resorts, children's summer camps, child care centers and other similar welfare services.

Medical and hospital care is free for all citizens of the Soviet Union. Up to 1937 this was provided through the social insurance fund, but since then it has been taken over directly by the government. Workers and their families may visit either factory or neighborhood clinics, or have a doctor come to their homes. The only occasion on which they need pay for medical services or supplies of any kind is when they are given prescriptions at home and have to fill them at a drug store—in which case the medicine has to be paid for at low, government-controlled prices.

Up to 1930, unemployment insurance was included in the social security system. But with the disappearance of unemployment in the Soivet Union, there were no further calls on the unemployment insurance fund and it has since been used for other purposes.

When we asked what happens to a worker who may be rendered temporarily idle through a breakdown of machinery, plant reconversion or similar causes, we were told that there is a general rule enforced throughout Soviet industry that, whenever production stops through no fault of the worker, he must continue to receive his average rate of pay until production is resumed.

In cases of prolonged plant shutdowns due to war destruction, reconversion, etc., the demand for workers in other plants is so great, Gurbonov said, that a worker need not remain idle for a single day.

If such changes of employment involve learning a new skill, a worker can go to a factory training school and be paid while learning. Not only is education of all kinds free in the Soviet Union, but students are paid allowances for living expenses, including support for their families, if they have dependents.

In addition to the union-administered social insurance system covering wage and salary earners, similar provisions are made for all other citizens. Collective farmers and self-employed handicraftsmen have their own mutual aid and benefit societies. The armed forces have a separate government system. And other citizens are covered by the government Social Welfare Department.

To fill out our information on the unions' part in determining wages, we went to Alex Stepanov, director of the Wages Dept. of the AUCCTU. Stepanov was a member of the trade union delegation invited to the U. S. by the CIO and was able to make many comparisons between American and Soviet wage determination methods.

The total payroll budget for each industry is part of a national plan and budget drawn up by a top government planning body, he told us. The AUCCTU is represented on this body, presenting the workers' demands and playing the greatest part in planning what proportion of the budget shall go to wages and how it shall be distributed by industries.

Once the total budget has been determined for a particular industry, the Commissariat (government department) directing that industry consults the industrial union involved on how this budget shall be divided between the various plants and sections of the industry.

Finally, the shop committee in each plant negotiates with its management the wage rates for the workers in that plant.

When any question affecting wages goes to the Council of People's Commissariats, a representative of the AUCCTU must always be present, and no wage matter may be submitted to the Council unless it has previously been discussed with the unions concerned.

Stepanov pointed out that, because of the great and generally recognized need for increasing production, and the immediate and tangible benefits the workers expect from it, the greatest stress is placed by the unions on wage incentives of all kinds to increase output.

Piecework is the predominant system, and progressive piece rates (with double or triple pay for extra units of production) are common in many factories and operations. Premiums, bonuses and other incentive payments are also provided for workers on day rates.

Rights of Workers

In determining wage rates and rate of output on particular operations, the workers concerned are in all cases consulted, according to Stepanov. They discuss the matter in factory meetings, and the shop committee takes up their suggestions and demands with the management. The rates finally set have to be referred back to the shop committee and cannot be placed in force until it has attached its signature to them.

Individual grievances over wages and conditions are referred to a "rates and conflicts committee," on which union and management are equally represented. This committee can discuss a particular grievance only in the presence of the worker who advances and must render its decision openly in his presence. The decision can be appealed up through a whole series of higher union-management committees, but if it still remains unsettled, the final decision will rest with the AUCCTU.

Once a decision has been duly rendered, a plant director who fails to comply with it can be taken to court and made to pay damages, if found guilty.

Because of the great labor shortage, workers are seldom fired from Soviet plants, according to Stepanov. If a worker proves unsatisfactory on one job, he will be transferred to another, and the plant will nearly always find some kind of work he is qualified to do rather than let him go.

If a worker deliberately violates shop and union rules, he is first reprimanded, and if he persists is hailed before a "Comradely Court." This "court" is a meeting of workers in his department or shop, at which violations of rules are discussed and offenders are subjected to the arguments, explanations and exhortations of their fellow-workers.

A hardened and persistent offender, who still fails to reform, may be taken to court and fined, if found guilty. The maximum penalty in such cases is 25% of wages for four months, but Stepanov said there were few if any cases on record where it had been found necessary to impose this maximum penalty.

As to the workers' take-home pay, some sample figures of actual earnings have been cited in earlier articles on plants visited by the CIO delegates. Stepanov gave us figures for a typical steel plant, where the lowest paid unskilled workers averaged 270 rubles a month, while the highest skilled at piece rates averaged between 2,00 and 3,000 rubles.

A typical plant director's salary is 3,000 rubles a month. But if his management results in the plant producing 5% in excess of its plan, he may get a 3,000 rubles bonus in addition, or a bonus of 6,000 roubles for 10-15% excess production.

In regard to the purchasing power of Soivet wages, we went for additional information to Matthew Berbasov, director of the Workers' Supply Dept. of the AUCCTU.

The amount of a worker's ration varies according to the kind of work he per-

I ASK YOU

I ASK YOU if American kids should eat less food, drink less milk, get less medical care—because the war has ended?

It's take-home pay that feeds the kids.

Today, take-home pay is shrinking.

Labor is asking for take-home pay high enough to keep purchasing power up and depression down.

I ASK YOU to take an active part in this fight—for your sake—for your children's sake—your country's sake.

Place a card in the window or on the cash register of your grocer, butcher, barber, baker and cafe with the slogan "SUPPORT THE CIO PAY DEMANDS." Use this same slogan on a sticker or card for your car and in your homes.

Secure these from your local union secretary. If he does not have them, demand that your local union executive committee prepare such materials.

Prepare a petition in support of the CIO case which can be presented to the editor of your community newspaper and other non-labor organizations. Ask them to back our fight against a new depression.

Talk to your friends, your neighbors, your priest, minister or rabbi, your fellow workers and explain why take-home pay must be maintained.

It's your fight. I ask you to GET IN IT!

State CIO Conventions

GEORGIA: Charles H. Gillman was re-elected president of the Georgia CIO Council at the sixth annual convention held at Athens, Ga., Nov. 3-4. The convention voted to enlarge the executive board to include a member from each affiliated international union and set up a state strike fund, and mapped out an intensive organizing drive.

MINNESOTA: Walter Smith was elected president of the Minnesota CIO Council at the eighth annual convention held in Minneapolis Nov. 9-11. He succeeds Sander Genis, who declined to run after serving three successive years.

Rodney C. Jacobson, who was named secretary-treasurer by the executive board last April upon the resignation of Leonard Lageman, was elected without opposition. The convention adopted an extensive legislative program and backed the stand of the National CIO on a number of important issues. One resolution urged an "unrelenting struggle against the evils and dangers" of Catholic-baiting, Jew-baiting, Negro-baiting, alien-baiting and other group discriminations that go hand in hand with labor-baiting.

CONNECTICUT: Kermit Eby, Natl. CIO director of research and education, was one of the leading speakers at the convention of the Connecticut CIO Council held at New Haven Nov. 17-18, along with Lt. Gov. Wilbert Snow, U. S. Sen. Brion McMahon, chairman of the Senate committee on atomic energy, and Thomas F. Burns, assistant to the chairman of the CIO-PAC.

Edward C. Moran, Jr., this week resigned as one of the assistants to Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach. The move leaves John W. Gibson and Daniel W. Tracy as assistants in the department.

Six Packers Raise Pay

An agreement providing for a general 15-cent hourly increase has been reached between the CIO Packinghouse Workers and six major packing companies, announces Lewis J. Clark, the union's president. In addition to the 15-cent increase, 2½ cents an hour will be granted employes to compensate them for time spent in changing clothes, and 50 to 75 cents a week will be given for purchasing work clothing.

Packing companies covered by the agreement are Hormel, Cudahy, Kingan, Hygrade, Tobin and Rath. Clark said that negotiations with the Big Four packers—Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Wilson—and the Morell Packing Co. will be carried on during the week of Nov. 26.

UE Wage Demands

Reports on latest negotiations with General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors' Electrical Division were made last week to delegates representing 270,000 CIO electrical and radio workers employed by the three companies in 76 industrial centers.

The conference, called by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers last week-end in New York, heard reports on national negotiations between the UE and the General Electric Co. in New York, Westinghouse Corp. in Pittsburgh and General Motors in Detroit.

The companies involved, largest manufacturers of radio and electrical equipment in the nation, rejected the union's wage proposal prior to President Truman's Oct. 30 address defining government policy on wages and prices. The union has petitioned the Natl. Labor Relations Board for a strike vote, which will take place Dec. 6, unless the deadlock on the union's demand for a $2-a-day increase is broken.

Ward Strike Called

A strike in Montgomery Ward & Co. stores organized by the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes was to be called Monday, Nov. 26, according to an announcement early this week by Pres. Samuel Wolchok of the union.

The strike was called after Sewell L. Avery, ward president, rejected the union's offer to arbitrate even after Wolchok had dropped demands for a union shop and checkoff of dues.

Avery, who said he originally opposed the union because of the union shop demand, again balked at bargaining by saying that he could not trust the company's destiny to the decision of a third party, destpite the fact that this is accepted procedure in scores of businesses.

Tobacco Strike Morale High

Morale of the 2,500 striking workers at three plants of the American Tobacco Co. remains high as the walkout enters its second month, reports the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers. The union is demanding a 65c hourly minimum wage, 25c hourly increase, a union shop and no discrimination against Negro workers.

The plants on strike are in Philadelphia, Pa., Trenton, N. J., and Charleston, S. C.

The union states that hired goons, "back-to-work" movements and other means of intimidation have been used to break the strike. One incident took place in Charleston, where Pres. Reuel Stanfield of the union's local was attacked by four husky cab drivers and slashed in the face with a knife.

Wild rumors aimed to stampede the workers back on the job have been circulated in both Philadelphia and Trenton, but the picket lines continue their march, and workers refuse to return.

Congressman William T. Granahan believes strongly in labor's demands for higher wages. Here he is on the picket line in front of the Philadelphia plant of the American Tobacco Co., where members of the CIO Food, Tobacco, Agricultural & Allied Workers have been on strike since Oct. 15. Granahan (center) is accompanied by Strike Committee Chairman Peg Kendig and FTA Intl. Organizer Emil Dean.

Wounded GIs Back Unions' Wage Case

Thirty-three soldiers hospitalized at Fort Knox, many of them wounded in combat, this week petitioned the American Legion "to endorse publicly the present demands for sizable wage increases by the working people and their trade unions." The petition continued:

"High prices, and less work-hours make wage increases essential to America's economy. Hugh war profits can afford it.

"Returning servicemen simply cannot support their families at today's prices on wages of $25 to $30 weekly. We veterans have won with our blood the right to earnings which will permit us a respectable American standard of living. We know that adequate wages for the working people mean adequate wages for returning veterans.

"We respectfully urge the coming Legion convention to give all its support to the drive for higher wages."

How Soviet Unions Function

forms, Berbasov told us. Those doing heavy work get more food, for instance, than those doing lighter work, and extra rations are provided for expectant mothers, children, tubercular persons and other special groups.

Prices for food and other supplies to which people are entitled on their ration cards are strictly controlled at pre-war levels at government stores. A worker may buy the living necessities to which his ration entitles him for as little as 100 to 200 rubles a month, we were told. Rents are also controlled at low levels, varying from 5% to 14% of a worker's wages.

But purchases beyond rations may also be made at much higher prices at the so-called "commercial stores," or for still higher prices on the open market. The prices at "commercial stores," though high, are government-controlled and are periodically reduced as supplies increase, to bring down prices on the open market by competition, and with the eventual aim of reducing all prices to the low level of the stores selling rationed goods.

It is difficult, however, to make any comparison between American and Soviet wages. The artificially fixed legal exchange rate is 5 rubles to one American dollar. But the diplomatic exchange rate is 12 rubles to a dollar, and neither rate bears any particular relationship to the comparative purchasing power of the two currencies.

As to the actual purchasing power of the Soviet worker's wage rubles, that is equally difficult to assess, because of the differences in prices for goods bought within the ration and the same kind of goods legally purchased beyond the ration; because of the various medical and other social services which a Soviet worker receives free or for a nominal charge; and because of the acute shortage of consumers' goods, which makes a worker less concerned with the amount of his wages than with finding commodities to buy them with.

It is because the raising of living standards depends less on wage rates than on increasing the supply of available commodities that the Soviet trade unions place such great stress, as indicated repeatedly in these articles, on increasing production in every field and by every means possible.

If the child can work with you and he feels your appreciation of his value, then even the youngest will like to help. If you can be a little jolly and have some fun while working together, companionship will deepen and household machinery is likely to stay well oiled.

Making Eating Count

Up-to-Date Slants on Some Old Ideas

Prepared By Nutrition Service, D. C. Chapter, American Red Cross

"IF YOU want to be smart, eat lots of fish and celery; they're good 'brain foods.'"

"Milk is constipating."

"It's unhealthy to eat proteins and starches at the same meal."

"Potatoes are fattening."

When friends make these and other plausible-sounding statements about what you should eat and drink for health, do you believe them? It wouldn't be unusual if you do, for according to true and false tests on food facts and fads, more than half of the people tested say they believed such superstitions.

Here are the experts' answers to such common food puzzlers.

- We don't know any special "brain foods" (you can feed your brain to this extent—that eating a good diet makes you feel better and think faster).
- There are no foods that can't be mixed at the same meal. Nature mixes the nutrients in almost every food, why shouldn't you?
- All foods are fattening if you eat more than you need.
- Milk is not constipating. It is so completely digested that it leaves no residue.

Certain men and women were not satisfied with guesses about food. They wanted proof. Curiosity led them to test their ideas by experiment. This testing has given us the modern science of nutrition. Today we have knowledge about food in place of homemade superstition.

This is the first of several important columns on food, offered as a service by the Red Cross to CIO readers in the interests of better nutrition.

The trouble is, we have not yet begun to make nutrition work for us in a practical way. Studies show that large numbers of Americans—rich and poor alike—are badly nourished because they don't get enough of the right kind of food.

It's not necessary to memorize vitamins to learn to eat right. It is important to remember the food groups and their special health virtues, and to know how to cook food so that it looks good, tastes good and saves food value.

Here are some of the fundamentals:

All food is good if you enjoy it. The trick is to balance it. To do this, use several servings of each of the protective food groups in your three meals every day. The daily "must" foods are:

2 or more servings of milk or cheese.

2 or more of fruits—one must be citrus or tomato.

2 or more of vegetables—one should be a green leafy or yellow kind and one potato.

2 or more of cereals or bread—whole grain or enriched.

2 or more of meat, poultry, fish, eggs or dried beans.

Let's Remember That Europe Is Starving

By ELEANOR FOWLER

THE HOLIDAY season this year is a time of deep rejoicing for all Americans. As we celebrate let us remember the heroic struggles of our allies which helped make victory possible.

They cannot celebrate the victory as light-heartedly as we. Millions of them are cold and hungry. And we must send them food and clothing.

We can push for immediate Congressional action on appropriations for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration—UNRRA. Two bills are now up. One is an appropriation of $550,000,000. It is desperately needed, but it has been held up for weeks.

The House attached an amendment to the effect that UNRRA supplies shall go only to countries which have a free press. This is a direct slap at our allies. It would mean that we were using food and clothing as a political weapon. The CIO Executive Board called upon Congress to reject that amendment.

$550,000,000 won't do the job in Europe this winter. That is why UNRRA is asking member nations to pledge an additional 1% of their national income. The House Foreign Affairs Committee is now holding hearings on this new request which calls for authorization of $1,900,000,000 for next year.

We can also help to assure food for European countries by urging continuation of rationing to be sure that supplies will be available for shipment abroad.

Another way to help is to start work now on the Victory Clothing Drive which begins January 7.

Finally comes the personal response of each one of us to the war relief drives which are carried on in our communities.

One group of victims of fascism who will not get help from UNRRA and for which we in the labor movement should feel special responsibility are the Spanish republicans.

CIO President Murray, in urging President Truman to break off relations with Franco Spain, wrote: "Today we recognize the real debt we owe these heroes, and we must see to it that their effort was not in vain. There can be no real democracy as long as these innocent victims continue to suffer."

Vacation Jobs For You to Do

Best gossip of the week is that Congress will start its vacation December 20, rest (from doing nothing) until February.

However undeserved, the vacation has its advantages for our side. It enables us to talk to our Congressman face to face, and that's the best way of lobbying yet found.

Here's a list of things to talk about. Don't feel you have to wait until the vacation starts, either. Start refreshing your Congressman's memory now. Ask action on:

1. Wages: Congress has three chances to act on the wage issue. These are the 65c wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914); Federal 20 per cent pay raise (S 1415); equal pay for equal work (S 1178).

Meantime, keep telling Congress what's happened to your take-home pay.

2. Jobs: the jobs-for-all bill (S 380, HR 2202) has been weakened in the Senate, is threatened with lynching in the House Committee on Expenditures (Rep. Manasco, D., Ala., chairman).

Tell your Representative to vote against a meaningless bill such as the House Committee report contemplates; work for HR 2202 as originally written.

Along with jobs for all goes emergency jobless pay (HR 3891), still laid away in embalming fluid in the House Ways and Means Committee.

3. Anti-union: there's a string of anti-union bills waiting the go sign—which can come after the labor-management conference ends. Chief of these are Ball-Hatch (S 1171), which ends collective bargaining; HR 3937, which prohibits political action as well as fining, jailing unions and leaders; HR 32 (Hobbs), which prohibits normal union activity such as picketing.

4. Civil rights: Polltax repeal (HR 7) and FEPC (HR 2232) are both on deck in Congress, with HR 7 only waiting Senate action for final passage. Discharge Petition 4 is circulating to bring FEPC to the floor.

Tell your Senators and Representative to support HR 7, sign DP 4—and also sign DP 12, which calls for an end to the Dies-Rankin un-American Committee.

5. Housing, health: CIO is supporting the new housing bill (S 1592) and the new health bill (S 1606) just offered in the Senate. Urge your Senators (and Representative too) to work 1 vote for both bills.

Hoaxing the U. S.

Any resemblance to any character, living or dead, that looks like full employment will be wholly accidental in the pending report of the House Expenditures Committee on HR 2202, the jobs-for-all bill—if newspaper stories and quotes from committee members are correct.

This is the judgment of the CIO on the report on the original Murray-Patman bill expected this week from Rep. Carter Manasco's (D. Ala.) bitterly hostile group. Here's what CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan told Congressmen about it in a letter to all 435 of them:

"The CIO endorsed and vigorously supported the original full employment bill, but we will vigorously oppose any bill which evades the issue of government responsibility for full employment and does not provide the machinery for carrying out that responsibility if private enterprise cannot fulfill its obligations.

"We urge all Congressmen to vote for the original Patman bill, to vote against any meaningless substitute, and to refuse to pass any bill in preference to perpetrating a hoax on the American people under the guise of full employment legislation."

The committee was said to be set this week to delete all reference to full employment, to a U. S. budget of jobs and production, to U. S. aid on jobs, and finally to call for a "high level" of jobs—which could mean up to 10 million unemployed.

Housing & Jobs

CIO is behind the new Wagner housing bill (S 1592) not only as a means of alleviating the critical housing shortage but also as a means of providing jobs for thousands of U. S. workers.

As everyone knows, housing is one shortage that affects almost every person (especially returning veterans) in America. Selfishness and greed of real estate interests—represented by the Natl. Real Estate Board—are mainly responsible.

The new bill would provide funds for low and middle income families, would provide funds for slum elimination, etc.

Censorship Bill Up

The un-American Rankin Committee has produced a bill (HR 4775) to gag liberal radio commentators and censor their scripts. Trick clause in the bill calls for a record of nationality and "political affiliation" of all commentators.

Most radio commentators are anti-union, employed by big business to smear CIO. A few are fairly liberal, try to give labor an even break.

It's these few that the un-American committee is after, not the NAM and Chamber of Commerce mouthpieces.

The bill was sent to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Write your Congressman to vote against it.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobs (S 380, HR 2202)	As originally written, sets government policy to aid in creating full employment.	Watered-down version passed in Senate; House Expenditures subcommittee set to report utterly meaningless bill this week.	Tell Senators and Representative to demand bill as originally written; oppose House committee report.
(S 1592) Housing	Provides funds for study and building of low and middle cost housing, will provide many jobs.	Senate Banking and Currency Committee; hearings set for Nov. 27; CIO to testify Dec. 11.	Tell Senators to support without weakening amendments.
Wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Raises present floor from 40c to 65, then 75c. Extends coverage.	May reach Senate floor by mid-December. House prospects not so good.	Congress not getting nearly enough CIO mail. Write now. Oppose "compromise."
Polltax Repeal (HR 7)	Gives vote to 10 million white and Negro citizens.	Senate action hanging on technicalities.	Urge quick vote, no substitutes, filibusters.
Un-American Committee (DP 12)	Discharge Petition out to end infamous Dies-Rankin witch-hunts.	DP 12, started by Rep. Patterson (D. Cal.), has about 40 signers.	Urge your Representative to sign DP 12.
Health (S 1606)	Aids states set up health facilities; helps maternity. child welfare; provides funds for medical care of needy.	To Senate Labor Committee, with support of CIO and President Truman.	Urge Senators to support in full.

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

ANTI-STRIKE: as predicted in this column, the anti-labor blitz has started in Congress.

This week, reactionary Republicans and southern Democrats gave a rule to HR 32, the Hobbs bill and HR 3937, the anti-strike and anti-political action bill.

Both can go to the House floor at any time. Wire your Congressman, tell him this is no way to answer the needs of the workers for adequate take-home pay.

* * *

ADD SITDOWNS: Here's a direct admission that industry is on a sitdown strike against the public from one Republican who helped make the sitdown possible (and profitable) by voting for repeal of profits taxes. The Republican is Sen. Morse of Oregon:

"There seems to be an indication that some producers of consumers' goods such as textiles appear to be somewhat hesitant about putting them on the market until after Jan. 1." (Profits taxes end then.)

And from another source, a Mr. Lovell of the Shirt and Pajama Mfgrs. Assn.: "The passing of the old tax period Dec. 31 might bring out a bigger flow of goods that may have been held up for tax purposes."

Or, to put it more briefly, Congress not only robbed the Treasury of hundreds of millions of dollars when it repealed profits taxes, but it also robbed you of much-needed consumers' goods.

* * *

PRICE CONTROL: Purpose of industry's sitdown is to get rid of all attempts at price control, let inflation loose and the devil take the hindmost.

The price control act expires June 30, 1946. Friends of inflation in Congress plan to kill OPA by that time, then turn all pricing over to different government agencies.

OPA head Chester Bowles will fight to hold price control, and he needs our support. The fight will be tough, since the House Judiciary Committee has already recommended that all controls (rationing, allocations, etc., as well as pricing) end by June 30.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

GM strikers in Detroit welcome hot "java" in near freezing weather. Their philosophy: "We beat GM in '37 and we can do it again!" UAW-CIO Pres. R. J. Thomas said strikers' spirit all over the U. S. is the highest he's seen.

STEEL VOTES STRIKE 'IF NECESSARY'

HUNDREDS of thousands of steelworkers flocked to NLRB polling booths this week to vote overwhelmingly for strike action if necessary to back up the wage demands of their union, the CIO United Steelworkers.

This was the largest strike poll ever taken in the country. It covered some 700,000 workers in steel, aluminum and affiliated industries, including the five major operating subsidiaries of U. S. Steel, and four "Little Steel" concerns—Inland, Bethlehem, Republic and Youngstown Sheet & Tube.

Mail returns from outlying districts delayed announcement of the final total, but ballots from most of some 850 plants covered showed a better than 5-1 vote to authorize a strike.

In the Pittsburgh area, returns from the first 45 units showed more than 42,000 pro-strike votes to 11,000 opposed. The three Carnegie-Illinois plants there voted 3,160 to 644 for the strike. At the John A. Roebling wire mill, Trenton, N. J., workers voted 1,872 to 194 for strike action.

Other overwhelming pro-strike votes reported were:

Aluminum Co. of America, Edgewater, N. J., 1,659 to 249; Baldwin Locomotive Works, Burnham, Pa., 1,432 to 355; Natl. Supply Co., Etna, Pa., 892 to 163; American Bridge, 1,363 to 268, and Pittsburgh Foundry Corp., 897 to 123.

The workers voted on their own time. Management refused to permit balloting during working hours. The NLRB, which conducted the vote under requirements of the Smith-Connally Act, staggered voting hours beginning at 5:30 a.m. and closing in some places at 11:30 p.m. More than 500 temporary election agents were hired in the Pittsburgh area alone. It was estimated that the poll would cost the board $300,000.

In written instructions sent to all district officials, the union's executive officers stressed that the vote must not be regarded as a strike call, and warned against any premature strike action. Such action can be taken only after authorization by the wage committee, the executive board and the international officers. A meeting of the USA-CIO wage committee will be held some time in mid-December.

The vote merely authorizes the union's officers to call a strike as a last resort in pressing for its demands for a $2 a day increase, which the USA-CIO maintains the industry can easily pay out of its high wartime profits without increasing prices.

Steel Price Hike Denied

A careful study of financial and cost data submitted by the steel industry discloses that there is no cause at this time for a general increase in prices, the Office of Price Administration stated this week.

The OPA said the situation will be reviewed again when the next financial returns of the steel companies are submitted after Jan. 1, 1946.

The OPA study used the base period 1936-39 as a standard in measuring price requirements. "OPA's studies show that the (steel) industries' earnings for the first nine months of 1945 are well in excess of this standard, and that based on current operations they would be in excess of this standard for the full year of 1945," the OPA declared.

Price Administrator Chester Bowles stated that OPA could not properly adjust prices on the basis of profits experienced in the period immediately following V-J Day, for which operating data are now available. This period was short, confused and abnormal, he said. The industry's entire operations were upset by heavy cancellations of war contracts and were, therefore, completely unrepresentative of the more normal operating conditions which it is expected will be reached early in 1946.

ONE WORLD AND LABOR

CIO Sets Up World Units

Carrying out the general scheme of promoting world labor unity, CIO President Murray this week announced formation of joint union committees with the British, Soviet and Italian trade union centers.

The committees are five-man affairs, to meet with a similar number from the British Trades Union Congress (TUC), the USSR's All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions (AUCCTU) and the Confederazione Generale Italiana del Lavoro (CGIL).

The CIO does not expect to be able to hold an early meeting of the committees, Murray wrote, due to "present critical events in the U. S. (which) would not permit at this time several of our members either to leave this country or depart from their national headquarters."

Named to meet with the TUC were: Murray, Sidney Hillman, Allan S. Haywood, James B. Carey and Joseph Curran; with the Soviet unions (AUCCTU): Murray, R. J. Thomas, Albert J. Fitzgerald, Sidney Hillman and Lee Pressman; with the Italian unions (CGIL): George Baldanzi, August Bellanca, John Green, L. S. Buckmaster and Joseph Germano.

Argentine Workers Hit Peron

Pretensions of the Argentine fascist dictator, Juan Peron, to support of Argentine workers were blasted by four underground union leaders meeting here with the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee. The four leaders also slashed at an outbreak of anti-Semitic crimes in Buenos Aires.

"We have received information that the worst underworld elements were sent out into the streets of Buenos Aires in order to assault peaceful men and women," they said, revealing that Peron's police helped in these near-pogroms. Lack of worker support is evidenced by the fact that Peron's phonies were kept out of the WFTU meeting in Paris, out of the CTAL in Latin-America, and even out of the ILO meeting just concluded.

Indonesian Seamen Fight Imperialism

Indonesian seamen in this country are doing their best to help their countrymen fight British and Dutch oppression by refusing to sail ships carrying arms and soldiers to the Dutch East Indies. More than 200 of them paraded through New York this week with picket signs on their way to surrender to U. S. Immigration authorities—which seamen are required to do if they leave their ships.

On their way to the Immigration office, they stopped outside the War Shipping Administration in New York—where they mingled with CIO members demanding speedy return of U. S. armed forces from China and other overseas parts.

How UNRRA Works

Reactionaries in Congress have been playing politics over UNRRA appropriations—both the $550,000,000 authorized last year as the balance on the $1,350,000,000 contribution and the request for a second $1,350,000,000. For lack of the first sum, UNRRA's relief shipments for immediate months ahead have been stymied. If the second is not granted, UNRRA's essential operations will have to cease.

Meanwhile, starvation and need in Europe and Asia cast a lengthening shadow. The lands this shadow covers are a shambles which their destitute people will be unable to rebuild without assistance. They must have food to work, let alone live, medical assistance to stave off epidemics and tools and raw materials for rebuilding.

The one organization equipped to render aid on any sizable and efficient scale is UNRRA. It has full programs in five countries: Greece, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Albania.

In Italy, UNRRA's limited program has made subsistence possible for thousands of mothers and children and saved countless others from disease. In western Europe, over a million displaced persons are receiving care in UNRRA camps. UNRRA relief is rapidly getting under way.

Byelo-Russia and the Ukraine, Austria, Korea and Formosa are also slated for UNRRA aid. All this now hangs in the balance.

A brief review of how UNRRA is set up will pave the way to an understanding of its role and significance.

UNRRA was formed in November, 1943, by 44 United Nations. Today, 47 nations belong. At that time, each nation which had not been invaded was asked to contribute one per cent of its national income for the year ending June 30, 1943. A request for a second one per cent was made last August. Each member nation of UNRRA, including the invaded countries, contributes to administrative expenses.

UNRRA supplies are delivered to the needy countries. Non-partisan, multi-national UNRRA missions render assistance and overseas operations—distribution, however, is in the hands of the needy countries' governments, according to the terms of the agreement. The agreement always provides that there shall be no discrimination in distribution of supplies. It also provides for free passage of UNRRA observers as checkers.

Within the country, UNRRA's role is advisory. The actual job of rebuilding, of working with the relief supplies, is carried on by the people themselves.

Labor News In Brief

A strike vote among 7,000 Western Union employes in the New York Metropolitan area represented by the CIO American Communications Association was conducted last Thursday by the NLRB under the Smith-Connally Act. Returns were not in as The CIO NEWS went to press, but there is little doubt that the vote will be overwhelmingly in favor of a strike, as an unofficial vote taken by the union the day before was unanimously in favor of it.

★ ★ ★

Members of the Industrial Insurance Agents Union picketed the home office of the Colonial Life Ins. Co. in Jersey City, N. J., recently in protest against the company's refusal to accept directives of the War Labor Board. The union accuses the company of paying the lowest salaries in the entire insurance industry and of following "medieval practices" discontinued by all other major life insurance companies.

★ ★ ★

An NLRB strike poll, the first sought by the New York Newspaper Guild since Pearl Harbor, will be conducted shortly among employes of Billboard, theatrical magazine, reports the union, which charges the management with stalling for weeks on the union's demands for a cost-of-living pay increase.

★ ★ ★

The executive board of the United Brotherhood of Telephone Workers of Northern California and Nevada has voted unanimously to request a charter from the CIO American Communications Assn., reports the West Coast Telephone News, ACA news bulletin.

WHY RAISE BASIC PAY

4. Wages Lag Behind Cost of Living

The worker's dollar buys 1/3 less in 1945. A 1941 dollar buys only 69c worth of goods today. Cost of living is up 45 per cent, yet basic wages have increased only 16 per cent.

CONTROL GM: (l. to r.) Lammot and Pierre du Pont of the fabulously wealthy munitions family that contributed $109,832.83 to Dewey's presidential campaign; GM Pres. Charles E. Wilson whose pay check is $459,000 a year; and GM Chairman Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., who makes $166 an hour even when he sleeps—a working rate of $669.75 an hour for an eight-hour day. Each of 32 GM executives earns in salary alone more than President Truman's $75,000. The average auto worker has had take-home pay cut from $51.65 a week to $40.48. It takes him three months to earn as much as Wilson earns in a day!

UAW Confident As GM Balks

'WE WON IN '37--WE CAN DO IT AGAIN!'

By FRED d'AVILA

"WE whipped GM in '37 and we can do it again!"

Backed by more than 300,000 striking and militant General Motors workers and by a united labor movement, CIO United Auto Workers Union Pres. R. J. Thomas and Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther told a Washington, D. C., press conference this week that GM's plans to bust the union would be a complete flop.

Their statement came just after President Truman and the Advisory Board of the Office of War Mobilization & Reconversion had asked GM's Pres. Charles E. Wilson to reconsider his decision not to bargain with the union, on its demand for a 30% wage increase provided that the raise did not boost the prices of GM products.

The head of the most profitable manufacturing enterprise in the world replied that he would talk only to President Truman, and that the corporation in any event would not discuss a single issue raised by the UAW until "illegal" picketing had been halted.

A transcript of a Wilson press conference in Detroit quoted the GM president, who is paid $459,000 a year, as declaring that now he would not even consider as much as the 10% counter offer that GM had previously made.

GM's attitude lent additional substance to the UAW's charge that the corporation is spearheading a union-busting move. The UAW said earlier in the week that:

"GM's rejection of our offer of arbitration again emphasizes the fact that GM, viewing itself as a leader of American industry, is bent upon establishing an industrial economic dictatorship.

"In the still free air of this country, such dictatorship can be established only by the dark and bloody methods of industrial conflict, aided by a federal government, and state governments, that would intervene on the side of management. It requires, to succeed, the use of the Mohawk Valley Plan and the Massilon Plan for breaking strikes by using paid 'missionaries' to spread lies and confusion by encouraging vigilante action of local businessmen, chiefs of police, sheriffs, state police and militia.

"Plainly GM's management has committed the Corporation to industrial war all along the industrial front, war to break the back of organized labor, both craft and industrial unions; to turn the clock back to the days of tame plant or company unions, helpless against the strength of great employing groups; to bring back a longer work week in the face of rising unemployment; to maintain on a relief subsistence basis a large pool of unemployed to hold down wages; to charge the consumer whatever the traffic will bear; to stretch out and speed up American industrial production with disorganized labor and, finally, to capture the world's markets by selling sweated goods for American dollars made cheaper abroad and dearer at home by spiralling inflation."

Controlling stockholders in GM are members of the duPont family, dominant munitions and chemical manufacturers. GM, one of the largest industrial empires in the world, has total assets of nearly $2 billion, owns more than 100 plants in the U. S., and before the war had 36 plants abroad.

Various members of the duPont family were the principal backers of the mis-named, fascist loving Liberty League and some are known for their contributions to the Christian American Assn., the organization that has been promoting anti-closed shop, anti-picketing, and union registration laws in state legislatures.

The duPonts dominate a small clique of GM stockholders which refuse to throw open company books to impartial arbitrators so that they can make an accurate assessment of the validity of the union's wage demands.

Meanwhile the UAW was doing its best to obtain a satisfactory settlement of the strike, which started Nov. 21 after 97 days of stalling by GM.

Thomas and Reuther conferred with Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach and Dept. of Labor conciliators in Washington, and Schwellenbach said he would do everything he could to start negotiations rolling again.

The UAW has been concentrating on GM while negotiating with other auto manufacturers, and will do its best to keep them in production despite GM-instigated reports of a pending parts shortage.

Both Thomas and Reuther accused GM of trying to spread a "fear complex" that the entire industry would shut down. They said if this occurred, it could be only as the result of a manufacturers' conspiracy, inasmuch as sufficient parts are available to turn out cars, particularly at Ford.

Pledges of support for the UAW's fight flooded the union's Detroit headquarters from CIO, AFL and independent unions and other liberal organizations. AFL and Railroad Brotherhood workers promised not to cross picket lines. One AFL union's resolution said: "Every worker, regardless of his trade or union affiliation, has a stake in the outcome of this struggle to establish a fair relationship between wages and the cost of living." The UAW Auxiliaries volunteered to set up strike kitchens.

GM's refusal to bargain has thrown out of work 50,000 World War II veterans who are members of the UAW. Thomas urged the Veterans Administration, Congress and state legislatures to take steps to provide unemployment compensation benefits to them.

"These veterans may be ruled ineligible for unemployment benefits under the GI Bill of Rights. They are getting no benefits under state unemployment compensation laws," Thomas said.

Meanwhile, Ford workers who had been laid off early in the week due to a claimed parts shortage, were expected to be back on the job Dec. 3. Negotiations with the company are continuing, with management introducing a unique and unwelcome suggestion that the UAW agree to pay $5 a day per member for every employe involved in an unauthorized work stoppage.

Why GM Won't Talk Profits

General Motors won't talk profits or prices with the UAW-CIO--and there is good reason why it is afraid to, as government figures show.

The union has made a simple request. It reads:

"We demand 30% increase in wage rates to maintain take-home pay without increasing prices. If the Corporation can show that it is impossible to pay 30% higher wage rates without increasing prices and at the same time to continue to pay substantial profits to its stockholders, we will scale down our demands to the point the arithmetic of the case requires."

GM's reluctance to consider profits in relation to wages is understandable in the light of a Federal Trade Commission report which said that GM averaged 35.5% in profits from 1927 to 1937, inclusive, and added that GM "is often referred to as the world's most complicated and most profitable manufacturing enterprise."

Economists point out that $1,000 invested in 10 shares of GM stock in 1917 have earned the investor $930 a year in dividends and increase in value—a 93% return!

The UAW-CIO points out that GM could have paid 30% greater wages than it did pay from 1936 to 1941 and would have earned an average net income after taxes of $132 million a year--more than 12% a year on its investment. For every dollar paid to GM workers from 1936 to 1941, inclusive, GM earned 91c in profits before taxes.

"In its postwar production GM can make as much profit, before taxes, as in the best profit year of its history (1941) even though producing at less than capacity, and even though paying 30% higher wage rates than it now pays," the UAW says on the basis of a detailed statistical estimate.

EQUAL ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

Two major issues were forced to the forefront at the National Labor-Management Conference by Pres. Philip Murray and the rest of the CIO delegation.

One of them was the breakdown of collective bargaining and necessity for immediate and substantial wage increases, on which the CIO had constantly to fight alone against the opposition not only of management but also of John L. Lewis and the AFL.

The other issue is also basic to better relations in industry, and indeed to our whole democracy. It is the matter of the all-too-prevalent discriminations in employment and other treatment practiced against Negroes and other racial, religious and national minorities.

The CIO has long led the fight against all such discriminations, and it carried this fight into the conference right from the start. Its delegation was the only one to include a Negro member, and this delegate, Pres. Willard Townsend of the United Transport Service Employes, took the floor on the subject on the first day.

President Murray then followed up by introducing a resolution before the executive committee urging "the incorporation of an anti-discrimination clause in collective bargaining contracts which will seek to protect the interests of all people regardless of race, color, religion, national origin or ancestry."

CIO's fight for this resolution finally resulted in the introduction of a substitute resolution from management. When other executive committee members expressed their preference for this substitute, Murray threw CIO support behind it, after one amendment, to assure unanimous action.

As a result of CIO's fight, therefore, the executive committee and finally the full conference adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, that the Labor-Management Conference urge on all elements of labor and management the broad domestic spirit of tolerance and equality of opportunity in respect to race, sex, color, religion, age, national origin or ancestry in determining who are employed and who are admitted to labor union membership."

The unanimous adoption of this resolution by such a representative body of labor and industry is a victory for truly American democratic principles.

But it will remain only a pious expression of good intentions unless it is followed up by concrete actions, on the part of industry, labor and government, to remove the foul blot of discrimination from our industrial and national life.

The CIO will vigorously continue its fight, by every means at its disposal, to assure real "equality of economic opportunity" to all minorities.

We hope that the other labor organizations which also subscribed to this declaration will set their own houses in order and match their deeds with this expressed intention; and that American employers, too, will note what their representatives voted for and will put an end to the many discriminations that are still practiced.

But experience has shown that governmental action is also needed, in the form of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission and state laws to outlaw discrimination.

The unanimous resolution of the Labor-Management Conference should be most helpful in impressing on Congress and state legislatures the growing demand, from all quarters, for speedy action along these lines.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

WHAT'S happened to our champion puff-and-snorters? How many times in the past have they told us our country is "on the brink" of ruin, because people are "paid to be idle," because the "profit-incentive is removed," because the "public is being inconvenienced," "the government challenged," "public opinion defied," etc., etc.

Most of their past cliff-hanging perils have been as phony as those of a movie thriller serial. Our handsome hero, the good old USA, has always managed miraculously to survive for the next episode.

But today there's really something to puff and snort about.

An organized minority, led by troublemakers, is holding up the country for its selfish advantage. It is being paid to be idle. Its incentive to produce has been removed. It is defying public opinion, challenging the government, stirring up unrest, rejecting peaceful counsels, refusing conciliation and arbitration.

Here's your chance, you puff-and-snorters. Everything you imagined in the past is now actually coming to pass.

But before you clear your throats for a real bellow, one little word more. It happens to be employers, not unions, that are doing all these things. Does that make a difference?

Apparently it does.

★ ★ ★

The country is suffering from serious employer trouble.

The big corporations have been coddled by the government. They have grown fat and sassy on juicy war contracts. They have accumulated huge profit reserves.

Class legislation has been passed for their benefit. Through the carry-back and carry-forward provisions of the tax law, they are guaranteed a "normal rate of profit" out of public funds, whether they earn it or not.

Their incentive to produce is further undermined by the fact that the excess profits tax will be removed next year, so they would rather postpone their profit-making till then.

Some of the biggest corporations have therefore chosen to force a showdown with labor now. They have gone on strike against the American people for lower wages, higher prices, reduced taxes and unlimited profits.

The behavior of General Motors is a clear case in point.

Every responsible person in public life, from the President down, has proclaimed the imperative need for wage increases to maintain the workers' take-home pay and provide mass purchasing power for postwar prosperity.

The United Auto Workers Union tried to avoid a shutdown by following the orderly procedures of collective bargaining on its wage demands, by proposing conciliation and arbitration, and by agreeing to every government proposal for resumption of negotiations.

General Motors, on the other hand, was not willing to bargain in good faith. Its officials barely bothered to go through the motions, ostentatiously reading newspapers at times while union representatives pleaded their case.

It rejected conciliation and arbitration and deliberately tried to force a showdown.

Now that it has had its way and forced its workers out on strike, General Motors shows no disposition to resume negotiations.

In most states affected by the General Motors strike, the auto workers are denied even the meager unemployment compensation that should be coming to them.

But General Motors receives substantial "strike benefits" from the government in tax refunds to guarantee normal profits; it is paid to be idle.

★ ★ ★

The behavior of the U. S. Steel Corp. to date is so similar to that of General Motors as to suggest a planned big-business offensive.

It, too, has rejected genuine collective bargaining and government offers of conciliation, and has forced the steelworkers to take a strike vote.

But with their arrogant "public-be-damned" attitude, even the biggest corporations may well be biting off more than they can chew.

Thanks to the CIO, labor is more powerfully organized industrially and politically than ever before in American history. The corporations cannot get away with what they did to the much weaker union movement after the first world war. And their defiance of public opinion and the public interest will line up many allies on labor's side.

L-M PARLEY SHUNS CIO PAY RESOLUTION

IN ITS final full session late Friday (Nov. 30), the Labor-Management Conference turned down President Murray's wage resolution with the negative votes coming from management's side.

In presenting his resolution to the full session—after it had been denied consideration in the executive committee since the opening of the conference—Murray said:

"I believe that every member of the conference must agree with me that the issue of wages is the major question before the nation, and that all our people have the right to expect that this meeting will not discharge its responsibilities unless it does consider this question and act upon it affirmatively."

Murray's motion was followed by an amendment offered by Pres. Green of the AFL, which did not substantially alter its meaning. This in turn was followed by a resolution presented by Ira Mosher of the NAM, which denied that the conference could even consider the subject. Procedure was all the meeting could consider, the management resolution said.

"American wage earners don't want strikes,' Murray said in his speech. "What labor wants is fair and equitable treatment—and it knows that industry has more money in its corporate belly than it can digest. The danger of a clot in the economic bloodstream is imminent."

Two victories for CIO were acceptance of an anti-discrimination resolution (See editorial on page 4) and an agreement to abide by the unanimity rule not only in full conference decisions but also in decisions of the executive committee where proposals for the full sessions originate.

The CIO wage resolution read:

"Recognition must be given to the fact that collective bargaining between labor unions and representatives of management in many important situations throughout the country has broken down over the important issue of wages, which has created a very serious crisis for the nation.

"Representatives of labor and management, assembled in this conference, do hereby make an urgent call on the labor unions and representatives of management to engage in genuine and sincere collective bargaining in an effort to resolve this all-important wage issue.

"The framework for such collective bargaining should be the imperative need for granting substantial wage increases now—to cushion the shock to our workers, to sustain adequate purchasing power and to raise the national income."

The wage resolution differs from the first text (see CIO NEWS, Nov. 12) only in omitting direct reference to President Truman's wage message, which was done in deference to AFL President Green's objections. It has been before the conference since its opening day, Nov. 7, with Murray consistently attempting to bring it to a vote.

Speaking on the unanimity rule, Murray reminded the conference that he had consistently supported "negotiated understandings—that is, unanimous agreements" rather than majority rule, and that he had always stood for the rights of all minority groups.

This was done, he said, throughout the business sessions of the conference, adding, pointedly: "I've had no collusive agreements with employers inside or outside this conference room. I have offered no suggestions or proposals outside the business sessions of this meetting."

Majority rule, he continued, had brought him some "not altogether pleasant experiences" in the conference, and the CIO stood "foursquare on the principle that unanimity should prevail."

On discrimination, the conference unanimously accepted the following resolution: "That the labor management conference urge on all elements of labor and management the broad democratic spirit of tolerance and equality of opportunity in respect to race, sex, color, religion, age, national origin or ancestry in determining who are employed and who are admitted to union membership."

Three other reports were adopted by the conference:

On initial agreements, the report called for bargaining in good faith on both sides, with the aim of reaching a signed contract, and use of conciliation only if bargaining breaks down.

On existing agreements, the report called for training of labor and management representatives in the operation of the contract and in grievance work, set forth various steps in making appeals and stressed voluntary arbitration as a final step.

The report on conciliation urged creation of a Federal conciliation service with an expert and adequately paid staff, plus a labor-management committee to advise and support the service.

Each of the three reports stressed the rejection of compulsory arbitration.

The conference also set up a permanent labor—management committee of eight.

Murray, Sheil Honored

THE CIO seeks "human rights for the benefit of the whole people" by its insistence on full employment, guaranteed annual wages and raising the present legal minimum wage standards, Pres. Philip Murray declared this week when he and Auxiliary Bishop Bernard J. Sheil of Chicago received the first annual Msgr. John A. Ryan Award.

The award was given them as "the Catholic clergyman and Catholic layman who have done the most for inter-racial amity and human rights" by the Committee of Catholics for Human Rights at a dinner in their honor in New York City.

Appearing this week before another religious group, the Washington (D. C.) Ministerial Assn., Murray urged clergymen to join with the CIO in seeking legislation to improve the standard of living and thus wipe out "the one big sin of our times."

"We believe that human rights are co-extensive and that an attack on any human right is an attack on all . . . Our Natl. Committee to Abolish Discrimination concerns itself with facts, not with theories . . . We seek for the Negro and all other minority groups economic and political equality, the opportunity to work and receive equal pay, and the right to participate in the government of his country."

CIO Strike to Aid GIs

SPEARHEADED by the Natl. Maritime Union, scores of thousands of members of CIO maritime unions are planning a 24-hour work stoppage beginning at 8 A. M., Dec. 3, to protest diversion of ships that could be used to speed the return home of overseas troops not needed for occupation duty, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said that during that period all shipping would be suspended, except ships at sea, legitimate troop carriers and relief ships.

Timed to coincide with the stoppage, a rally sponsored by the Greater New York CIO Council which Curran also heads will be held at 8 P.M., Dec. 3, at Manhattan Center with Maj. Melvyn Douglas, husband of Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Calif.) and Rep. Hugh DeLacy (D. Wash.) as speakers.

Curran said that a telegram to War Shipping Administrator Land demanded a certified list of legitimate troop carriers and relief ships for each NMU port agent, but that if such data were not furnished, the cooperating unions would decide for themselves which vessels are engaged in commercial traffic.

Cooperating with the NMU, Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen's Union telegraphed from the West Coast to WSA that union members would cease loading on Saturday all ships capable of transporting troops which were not being used for such service.

Curran listed the other unions cooperating with NMU as follows: Marine Cooks and Stewards Assn., Inland Boatmen's Union, American Communications Assn., Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn., all CIO, and the independent Marine Firemen, Oilers and Watertenders.

Taking the troopship snafu to the public, Curran this week in a radio broadcast gave the lie to War Dept., statements that strikes on both coasts were holding up troopship movements.

He read off the names of 14 Victory and C-type vessels, capable of bringing troops home, which he said WSA allocated for private intercoastal runs. He also said that an NMU member had written him that 87 ships, including Victory type ships, had been idle in the Saipan-Tinian harbor area and in the Carolines since June 17. Curran added that 300-odd American ships were lying idle in domestic anchorages.

Returns to CIO

Honorably discharged from the U. S. Navy, Eugene Cotton this week returned to his post as assistant to General CIO Counsel Lee Pressman, Washington, D. C.

CIO Protest To Army Gets Action

AS a result of a protest by the CIO that most officers of the 735th Military Police Battalion at Fort Custer, Mich., were making derogatory remarks about strikers while training troops to surpress civil disorders, the Provost Marshal General has directed that the practice be discontinued.

Meyer Bernstein, representative of the CIO Veterans Committee, protested to the War Dept. after CIO Pres. Philip Murray received a letter from a member of the battalion who wrote:

"The general approach of most of the officers training us is, that strikes are illegal, result in violence, and must be crushed. Various statements have been made such as:

" 'These strikers are not fooling. They are tough customers, and you must be one step ahead of them.' "

A War Dept. spokesman said that the Provost General has requested that MP commanding officers be directed "to adhere to the War Dept. policy concerning control of rioting and to make certain that subordinate officers under their command make no remarks critical or derogatory of any group or class of individuals."

Warning

With the ending of the National Labor-Management Conference, the wolf-pack in Congress is getting set to do a wrecking job on the rights of unions and the living standards of workers and their families.

They have two main weapons with which they hope to do this wrecking job. These are the Hobbs bill (HR 32) and the Smith-Connally Act substitute (HR 3937). Both bills will be brought up on the floor of the House this week, probably by December 4 or 5.

The Hobbs bill makes almost all of a union's normal activities, such as picketing, illegal. HR 3937 makes strikes illegal and prohibits union political action. Both bills carry heavy fines and jail sentences for unions, their members and their leaders.

Wire your Congressman as soon as you read this. Tell him to vote against HR 32 and HR 3937. Tell him that repressing unions and jailing union members is not the answer to America's needs today, nor ever will be.

For the mail order section, ILWU-CIO 826, against 639; retail section, ILWU-CIO 128, against 73. Reps. Howard Goddard, Holloway and Ruth Cohen were in charge. Good work! This victory answers the cry of the arrogant Sewell Avery that the workers don't want unions.

The United Steelworkers of America are taking a strike vote. The steel corporations have arrogantly refused to bargain. The writer addressed a pre-strike vote rally in Youngstown, Ohio. The place was packed and loudspeakers had to be made available to accommodate the crowd. The workers enthusiastically pledged their support to bring about victory in the vote and support USA-CIO policy.

The United Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes' one-week protest strike at Montgomery Ward is on, brought about by Avery's refusal to accept ordinary decent practices of collective bargaining and arbitration. He professes his willingness to arbitrate if he can pick the subjects that will be arbitrated, and the arbitrator.

ON GM STRIKE

General Motors continues to refuse to bargain in good faith. The strike is 100% effective in all plants called out by the UAW-CIO. Much is being said by the enemies of labor about public accounting. In answer to some commentators the UAW-CIO and the USA-CIO published their accounts. Many Congressmen and Senators are in possession of these reports. What about the corporations' accounts? Shouldn't the public know of the fabulous profits these corporations have made on the people of this nation?

The President of the United States has proclaimed that substantial wage increases are necessary to maintain the purchasing power of the people and to support a sound economy. The question is, will he take action to force these corporations to reveal to the public the facts and to meet and settle with labor on the basis of these facts? Shall these corporations be permitted to inflict upon the country the sort of laissez-faire system that prevailed from the Harding to Hoover regimes, with such devastating results to the people of the nation?

These are questions labor wants answered. The CIO's fight is the fight of every small businessman, farmer, worker, returning soldier, and citizen of the United States.

Urges Equal Pay for Women

The principle of equal pay for women where they do the same work as men was approved this week by the Natl. War Labor Board in a case involving the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The Board recommended that General Electric and Westinghouse Electric negotiate with the CIO union to work out a formula "for narrowing in the immediate future unreasonable wage rate differentials now existing between men's and women's jobs."

The Board stated in telegrams sent to both parties, that it "approves the principle of a single evaluation line for all jobs in a plant regardless of whether the jobs are performed by men or women."

Conventions

Woodworkers Nominate Fadling

MORE than 300 delegates from 22 states and Canada attended the ninth annual convention of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers Union at Eugene, Oregon, Nov. 13-20. The convention, presided over by IWA Pres. James E. Fadling, set up eight major committees to deal with the political, economic and administrative problems of the union's 75,000 members and nominated a slate of officers to be voted on by referendum. The officers will serve for two years.

Delegates approved unanimously the 12½-cent wage increase won by the union's Negotiating Committee and adopted a series of resolutions, constitutional amendments and organizational policies to meet problems facing the IWA. These included a program for obtaining the cooperation of other CIO unions in stopping the movement of logs produced in IWA camps to AFL mills, and for an organizing drive to bring AFL lumber workers into the CIO, and withdrawal of the no-strike pledge with a recommendation that contracts containing the pledge be amended.

Other resolutions supported legislative and economic policies formulated by the National CIO calling for full employment, guaranteed income, extension of the GI Bill of Rights, control of atomic energy for peacetime uses and other matters.

Pres. Fadling was unanimously nominated for re-election by the delegates, as was Second Vice-Pres. William Botkin. Others nominated were: First Vice Pres., Claude Ballard, incumbent, and Karley Larsen; Sec-Treas., E. E. Benedict, incumbent, and Ed Laux.

Adolph Germer, representing the National CIO, addressed the convention and brought the delegates fraternal greetings from CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization.

IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling, speaking at the Woodworkers Convention in Oregon. He was later nominated unanimously for re-election on a referendum vote.

Back Strong Wage Program

CIO President Philip Murray's wage stand and the CIO program for jobs and security were strongly supported at the eighth annual Wisconsin CIO convention in Milwaukee, Nov. 24-25, with 400 delegates, representing 100,000 CIO members, acting in complete harmony in approving a wage and political action program for the coming year.

Charging that the refusal of American industry to negotiate substantial wage increases for their workers unless accompanied by price increases is a "sinister attempt to repeat the disastrous inflationary policy of American business in the twenties," the convention gave its unanimous support to the resolution of the National CIO Executive Board on the National Wage Policy, and called upon representatives of industry to comply with President Truman's mandate by "engaging in bona fide collective bargaining and granting substantial wage increases."

A resolution voted full support to the General Motors strikers.

Linking industry's sit-down strike and Congress' do-nothing policy with attempts of spokesmen of big business to revive international cartel ties, the convention condemned the "Big Stick" imperialist policy of the U. S. State Department, demanded the breaking off of all cartel arrangements, denounced the "get tough with Russia" policy as a step towards World War III.

Speakers included Len De Caux, CIO publicity director; Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee and Elmer Benson, ex-Governor of Minnesota and chairman of the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee.

Vote to Strike

Miners and smelter workers employed by Anaconda Copper Mining Co. at Butte, Anaconda and Great Falls, Mont., voted overwhelmingly in favor of strike action in a poll conducted by the Natl. Labor Relations Board under provisions of the Smith-Connally Act, Pres. Reid Robinson of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers announced this week in Chicago.

One-Week Strike Hits Wards

A one-week stoppage affecting 75,000 workers at 646 stores and nine mail order houses of Montgomery Ward & Co. was called this week by the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes in protest against refusal of the firm to arbitrate the union's wage demands.

Vice-Pres. Leonard Levy of the union said the series of stoppages were called to draw public attention to Montgomery Ward's rejection of the union's offer to submit 19 disputed points to arbitration. The union had earlier agreed to drop demands for a dues check-off and closed shop.

Main union demands are for a 15½c hourly wage increase and a 65c minimum. Ward's president, S. L. Avery, whose previous clashes with the union had twice forced government seizure of Ward properties, refused to comment on the union's strike action.

TAKE-OFF ON SEWELL AVERY: Striking employes in the picket line outside Montgomery Ward's store in Albany, N. CHRISTMAS SHOPPING

The best gifts promote fun, skills and general development. While shopping, think of your child's particular needs and interests. Does he need encouragement to play by himself or with others? Paints, clay, dolls, small autos stimulate solitary play. Wagons, dishes and blocks are conducive to play with children. When buying, remember: toys should be durable, well made, allow for varied usage over a long period of time. Avoid sharp corners and rough edges. Toys that break easily encourage carelessness and destructiveness. Sturdy blocks and doll buggies, expensive to begin with, can be used differently year after year. In the end they may prove the best buys.

GM Strikers Need CIO Auxiliaries' Aid

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE vigor and enthusiasm with which the UAW Auxiliaries are getting behind their union's fight for a 30-percent wage increase should be an inspiration to all of us. A fighting emergency letter from UAW Sec.-Treas. Catherine Gelles with practical advice on setting up strike kitchens reached every local Auxiliary the morning after the General Motors strike began.

The next step was a meeting of all Detroit UAW Auxiliaries. They voted all-out support in strike kitchens and on picket lines.

A mass meeting for all GM strikers' wives to explain developments and urge them to join the Auxiliary and help their husbands win the strike comes next.

Every woman in CIO should rally behind these GM strikers and their families. They are fighting our fight for a 30% increase. For 97 days the UAW tried to negotiate with management which refused to invite conciliators to aid negotiations and arbitration.

We all want to help. What can we do? First, in any community where there is a GM plant, volunteer our services to the strike committee for any work. Second, in other communities, put on a campaign to explain the GM strike and the CIO wage demands to the people.

This would include a stream of letters to the newspapers; talks with civic leaders; speeches at meetings; circulation of petitions and personal word of mouth explanation to every person we come in contact with.

Finally we can start to raise funds. GM workers can get their meals in strike kitchens but somehow they have to manage to pay all the expenses of their families. They are excluded from unemployment compensation.

Price Control In Danger

Higher living costs, leading to inflation and depression, are threatened for all of us unless the attack on price control now shaping up in Congress is turned back.

CIO's warning on this is sounded in letters from Legislative Director Nathan Cowan to OPA Head Chester Bowles and to CIO affiliates in the field.

Writing to Bowles, Cowan said:

"It is apparent to us that powerful forces in this country are determined to scrap the entire price-control program and allow our people to go through the same kind of inflation and collapse which followed World War I.

"We in the labor movement fully realize that abandonment of price control now or six months from now would be a major disaster for the vast majority of the American people. The wage increases we are fighting for would be meaningless if prices were uncontrolled.

"We have been impressed with the fight you have been putting up against powerful odds to keep price control intact. We know that you are faced with several of the strongest lobbies in the country, the real estate men, the textile manufacturers, the retailers; and we congratulate you on the way you have stood your ground."

Cowan asked CIO members to tell their Congressmen to "back continuation of price control for at least another year" and to urge ceilings on real estate sales as a specific means of heading off a "boom and bust" cycle.

Cowan told CIO members how the inflation lobbyists make Congressmen toe the line, revealing that:

"Over 360 Congressmen signed the attendance sheet at a hearing called to try to force OPA to change its policy of making dealers absorb price increases on new cars . . .

"The retailers got the Smith Committee," Cowan continued, "to issue a report urging Congress to require that OPA pass right on to the consumer every price increase granted a manufacturer. Real estate lobbyists are trying to blame the housing crisis on rent ceilings . . ."

And so on, down the shameful line of pressure groups lobbying for inflation. As Cowan said:

"Congressmen don't hear from us on this issue. It is urgent that you get letters to them urging that they back continuation of price control for another year."

Backed by CIO

UNRRA: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey this week told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that CIO supports the full $1.35 billion fund (in HR 4649) for United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation—without trick riders on "freedom of the press."

Said Carey: "The CIO urges the adoption of HR 4649 as quickly as possible so that the famine and frost that now stalk the people of the liberated countries can be partly stayed."

U. S. PAY: CIO Pres. Philip Murray, writing this week to Senate Leader Alben Barkley (D., Ky.), urged quick passage for S 1415, which raises Federal workers' pay by 20 per cent.

"Like other workers, Federal employes have suffered reductions in take-home pay which will make it impossible for them to maintain an adequate American living standard," Murray wrote.

"I therefore urge you to do everything possible to secure the passage of S 1415 as a step toward a sound wage policy in the Federal Government.

HOUSING: Legislative Director Nathan Cowan told Rep. Patman (D., Tex.) of CIO support for his bill (HR 4761) to put house building materials back under control as a means of preventing real estate profiteering.

The bill also allocates materials to low-cost housing, especially for veterans.

Hit Intervention

The lid blew off on U. S. intervention in China this week when Rep. De Lacy (D., Wash.) and five other West Coast Congressmen put in a bill (H. Res. 408) demanding immediate withdrawal of all U. S. armed forces from that country.

One immediate result was the resignation of U. S. Ambassador Hurley, who has been a leading force in the drive to commit us to all-out aid to the reactionary Chiang Kai-shek regime.

"Step by step, Ambassador Hurley's reversal of the Roosevelt policies in China have made the present civil war unavoidable," De Lacy said. "He and General Wedeyemer have now committed us to armed intervention."

The resolution (introduced by Reps. De Lacy, Savage, Coffee of Washington, and Douglas, Patterson, Healy of California) calls for immediate withdrawal of U. S. troops and military supplies.

At least 60,000 U. S. Marines are committed in China on the side of Chiang. In Indonesia, where the British have been intervening, more than 200 British lives have already been lost—four months after V-J Day.

Former Chief of Staff General Marshall is going to China as President Truman's special envoy. Liberal hope is that Marshall will avoid a buildup for World War III in Asia.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Jobs (S 380, HR 2202)	As first written, set U. S. policy to aid in creating jobs for all.	Watered-down version passed in Senate; House voting on its meaningless version this week.	Tell Senators and Representative to work for return to original bill; oppose House version.
Housing (S 1592)	Provides funds for study and building of low and middle cost housing.	Hearings start this week in Senate Banking Committee.	Urge Senator to support as written.
Wage floor (S 1349)	Ups wage floor to 65-75c, extends coverage.	To Senate floor soon. House stalling.	Urge action, no phoney "compromise."
Health (S 1606)	Expands public health facilities; provides maternity, child aid.	Senate Labor Committee (Sen. Murray D. Mont.) Fought by American Medical Association.	Write your Senators to support, disregard rich doctors' opposition.
Building materials (HR 4761)	Puts building materials back under control, orders allocations to low and middle cost housing.	House Banking and Currency Committee.	Urge Representative to support.
Employment (HR 4407)	Hands U. S. Employment Service to states with no U. S. standards set despite U. S. financing; disrupts job service when most needed for veterans, unemployed.	Passed by Senate and House, now to Pres. Truman for OK or veto.	CIO urging veto not only for sake of job service but also as bad precedent in lack of U. S. standards.

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

ANTI-UNION: Acting on a speed-up schedule, the House Rules Committee last week (see Guide, Nov. 26) gave the "go" sign to two anti-union bills —HR 32, the Hobbs bill, and HR 3937, the substitute for the Smith-Connally Act.

Both bills are set to come up on the House floor by Dec. 3 or 4. Rush wires to Congress demanding their defeat.

* * *

65-75c: Best bet on the minimum-wage amendments is that the Senate Labor Committee will act this week, send the bill to the floor by mid-December. House action still lags.

Senators are getting petitions, letters, etc., from low-wage areas urging passage. Textile Workers sent one to Ellender (D., La.) with 4,000 Louisiana signatures on it. Needed are many more messages from all parts of the country and from all varieties of industrial workers.

* * *

CENSORSHIP: The un-American Committee's bill (HR 4775) to gag radio commentators, require statements of their political affiliations, etc., is up in the House Interstate Commerce Committee. Writing to Chairman Lea (D., Calif.), CIO President Murray opposed the bill, saying:

"The CIO, which has frequently been the victim of utterly unfair and biased radio interpretation, is unterably opposed to attempts to censor or gag radio broadcasts.

"Our experience with such attempts as have been applied by radio stations in the past has led up to this policy, which we propose to maintain now and in the future.

"We are also unalterably opposed to any step that would require an invasion of the rights of radio commentators as citizens, while we recognize that their responsibility to the public must be safeguarded."

Murray reminded Lea that the people own the radio frequencies, and that CIO as representative of six million people wants to appear in testimony on the bill.

* * *

REVOLT: Deep cuts by the Appropriations Committee in funds for veterans' housing and hospitals were too much for the House to swallow, as it showed this week when it overrode the committee's report by large majority votes on the two issues.

The revolt, however, did not extend to restoring the funds for NLRB strike votes.

Stop That Anti-Strike Bill!

The Truman anti-strike bill is in the House and Senate Labor Committee this week. Wire your Congressman at once to vote against it.

President Murray denounced the Truman plan as designed "to weaken and ultimately destroy labor union organizations."

"The American people have not participated with all of their energies and resources in the recent ferocious struggle against fascism in order to have democracy weakened and threatened through proposals leading to industrial serfdom," he said in his radio speech of December 4.

Read the full text of this speech on pages 6 and 7. Write to CIO News, Washington 6, D. C., for reprints to distribute to your friends and fellow members.

"Every Ship a Troopship" is the motto of these members of the NMU and other CIO maritime unions who stop work for 24 hours to demonstrate for their demands. GIs heartily back this action. (See Page 5 story.)

LET THE RECORD SPEAK

With this issue, The CIO NEWS begins a new, exclusive feature designed to keep you up to date on what cooks in Congress.

"Let the Record Speak" will do just that by reprinting (verbatim) excerpts from the Congressional Record and other official U. S. government sources.

It will help you to keep your own record of what is said in Congress, who says it, and what the issues are.

This week "Let The Record Speak" deals with comment in the Senate and House on President Truman's strike-breaking message of Dec. 3.

By His Friends Shall Ye Know H

Excerpts from the Congressional Record of Monday, December 3, after the reading of President Truman's message calling for passage of legislation to straight-jacket labor.

SENATE

Senator Ball, Republican, Minnesota, co-author of Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill:

"Mr. President, I merely wish to comment for myself, personally, that I think the President's message calling on the Congress to enact legislation dealing with the field of labor disputes and the prevention of stoppages of production is the most hopeful word I have heard on this particular front for a long time, and I hope we can proceed expeditiously to consider legislation to carry out the President's recommendations."

Senator Reed, tory Republican, Kansas:

"It is a timely thing that the President has sent to the Congress the message which was read a moment ago, and I certainly hope the Congress will move promptly to enact legislation along the line of that mentioned by the President."

Senator Wherry, tory Republican, Nebraska, author of the Wherry amendment to wreck price control:

"I feel that the suggestion of the appointment of a fact-finding committee is a very hopeful sign . . . I think the President's suggestion is a wholesome one."

Senator Hickenlooper, tory Republican, Iowa:

"I am very much encouraged by the message which the President sent to Congress today. I hope it will bear some fruit in bringing order out of the inexcusable chaos which apparently exists in certain sections of the country in the industrial field."

HOUSE

Representative Vito Marcantonio, American Labor Party, New York, author of HR 7, the anti-poll tax bill, opened the debate by denouncing the President's message as:

"One of the most serious blows against the interest of the working people."

Representative James Priest, poll-tax Democrat, Tennessee, interrupting Marcantonio:

"Personally, I feel that the President's message was very constructive."

Marcantonio, continuing:

"Mr. Chairman, we find industry bloated with profits. We find it is the beneficiary of tax legislation which has benefited it to a tremendous extent. We find labor's income being cut down daily. Labor expected that in this dangerous period it would receive from the President that aid which labor has justly earned. Instead, we do not even get neutrality. We get a proposal which is anti-labor in character, a proposal which would deprive labor of its only weapon with which it can enforce collective bargaining, a proposal which is one-sided, on the side of industry, despite the fact that it has been industry's greed which has held up the reconversion program."

Rrepresentative Clare Hoffman, Republican, Michigan, one of labor's bitterest enemies:

"The President asks that strikes and lock-outs be postponed for 30 days. Certainly there is nothing unreasonable in asking the postponement of a strike which vitally affects the public interest, especially when we are engaged in an attempt to bring about reconversion, prevent unemployment . . . The only fault I can find with the President's message is that it does not go quite far enough."

Representative Jerry Voorhis, Democrat, California, ex-member of the Dies Committee:

"Certainly no one, least of all myself, will defend the breaking of a contract. The problem, however, is to find a fair and just way of preventing it. . . The suggestion of the President with regard to this all-important question is a fundamental one, and to my mind, is fair and just . . . I believe the suggestions of the President in his message today are altogether proper and that this should be the No. 1 thing on the program in this field."

Representative Howard Smith, Poll-tax Democrat, Virginia, co-author of Smith-Connally Act:

"I have on my desk an analysis of strikes that took place in three months this summer in the automotive industry and strikes that were in violation of contracts not to strike . . . there were over 400."

Marcantonio, interrupting:

"It seems to me that the gentleman proceeds on the premise that the responsibility for these industrial disputes is to be placed at the doorstep of labor. The gentleman entirely neglects the responsibility on the part of industry for having provoked these industrial disputes."

Form 65c Wage Unit

Formation of the National Committee for a Fair Minimum Wage consisting of educational, farm, social service, industrial, labor and religious figures was announced here yesterday. The Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago, who is the founder and director of the national Catholic Youth organization, has been made chairman of the committee.

In accepting the appointment, Bishop Sheil said, "The fight for a national minimum wage of 65 cents an hour is an attempt through legislation to give concrete expression to a basic element of economic social justice: the annual living wage."

"I deem it a patriotic and social imperative to aid and assist the National Committee for a Fair and Minimum Wage in its work for the passage of the Pepper-Hook bill," he added.

Vice-chairman of the committee is Dr. Frank P. Graham of Chapel Hill, N. C., president of the University of North Carolina. Miss Elizabeth S. Magee, general secretary of the National Consumers' League, has been named secretary of the group.

Objectives of the newly formed group are to "mobilize public-spirited men and women throughout the country behind the Pepper-Hook bill amending the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938."

The committee has stated that "the measure is vital to the welfare of the country as a whole and particularly to the several million wage earners who now are struggling to exist on submarginal wages."

CIO Hails Job Parley

Representatives of more than 50 national organizations crowded into Washington's National Press Club hall for a one-day conference on jobs and security this week.

Chaired by Bishop Sheil of Chicago, the conference held panel sessions on full employment, discrimination, radio, anti-labor legislation and similar subjects. CIO speakers were Van A. Bittner and James B. Carey.

In a message to the meeting, CIO President Murray said:

"Today we are threatened with an economic disaster which can shake the foundations of our democratic way of life. We can avert this disaster only if we Americans rally around a postwar program to promote the best interests of all of us."

CIO Hits At Hatch Act

The Hatch act which outlaws normal political action by U. S. employes makes "political eunuchs" of three million Federal workers, CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman told the Supreme Court this week.

Acting for four United Federal Workers members fired under the act, Pressman told the court that it violates all constitutional guarantees of free speech, free press and free assembly.

The act, he pointed out, specifically illegalizes publication of a newspaper, or an article or letter in a newspaper, a speech, a petition, participation in a parade or meeting, etc., which can be construed as being of aid to any "political candidate, party or measure."

ONE WORLD AND LABOR

CIO will be host to a group of visiting French trade unionists, probably some time in February, according to plans made by President Murray and Leon Jouhaux, head of the Confederation Generale du Travail (CGT).

At the same time, the CIO and the CGT moved to set up a Franco-American Trade Union Committee similar to the Soviet-American and British-American committees announced in CIO News last week.

Australian Take-home

Australian workers—and their wives—have the same trouble with cuts in take-home pay that CIO workers meet here. They also have a big beef with their government, which has fixed basic wage rates far too low even for subsistence.

Writing to President Faye Stephenson of the CIO Women's Auxiliaries, Mrs. Daphne Gallan, head of the auxiliary to the Federated Ironworkers of Australia, had this to say:

"There is intense nation-wide dissatisfaction over the basic wage rates generally. The basic wage has never provided more than a bare subsistence, but now with an inflated cost of living it is hopelessly below even subsistence levels.

"The basic wage, as you may know, is the minimum rate paid to the unskilled worker and is fixed according to a confused and antiquated standard set by the Arbitration Court.

"The Arbitration Court, in both aspects of its work, consistently operates against the workers to keep wage levels down, to blunt the demands of the unions by wearing away their militancy in lengthy and tortuous legal proceedings, and to cloud issues in legal argument."

Mr. Truman, who wants to fix just such a millstone on labor's neck here, should be told that the workers and their wives have had it tried on them in Australia, and they're agin it.

China Intervention

Behind the Hurley resignation and his wild charges of "communism" in the State Department (of all places) lies a pretty sordid tale of U. S. and British greed for super-profits from exploitation of the Chinese people and their resources.

The story is just beginning to come out, due to the tremendous public pressure for withdrawal of U. S. armed forces from China and an end to our interventionist policies.

The pot boiled up again in Congress this week when Rep. DeLacy (D. Wash.) answered a vicious attack from Rep. Luce (R., Conn.), the vinegarish middle-aged glamor girl who married the Luce Time-Life-Fortune millions.

DeLacy read a letter into the record from a group of highly respectable foreign correspondents, including men from the N. Y. Times, Herald-Tribune, and the like, blasting Hurley and praising the men he's been trying to smear as "reds" in the State Dept. Included among the signers of this letter was one of Time-Life-Fortune's correspondents whose career with the Luce organization will probably terminate pretty soon.

CIO affiliates protesting U. S. policy in China now include the Indiana Council, the Hudson County, N. J., Council, District 8 of the UE, whose president, Wm. Sentner, wrote sharply to his fellow-Missourian in the White House, Local 6 of the ILWU in San Francisco, and mumerous others.

800 Women Meet In Paris

Forty-three nations were represented by over 800 delegates at the Women's Congress which finished its work in Paris this week, Allied Labor News reports. A new organization, known as the Women's International Democratic Federation, was set up. Its constitution pledges the WIDF to "combine the activity of millions of women who in the course of the war got together to oppose fascism, defend the liberty of their peoples, the future of their children and the security of their homes."

The meeting denounced Franco, Spain, the fascist regime in Argentina, and British and Dutch terror against the native patriots in Indonesia, as well as the use of lend-lease arms against them—with or without U. S. Labels.

Starvation In Europe

Despite Truman's bland assertions that premature ending of rationing here would not cut our food shipments to Europe, literally millions of men, women and children are going to die this winter from starvation.

They will not die in the countries of our enemies but in the countries of our friends, the liberated people who fought for us against Nazism in Europe and Japanese fascism in Asia.

The German people, as a matter of fact, will be better fed than most in Europe, since they built up huge food stocks looted from conquered countries which have not yet been exhausted. Meanwhile, people like Sen. Ellender (polltax Democrat of Louisiana), the unspeakable Hearst and the no less unspeakable Roy Howard weep publicly for "poor, starving Germany."

Here are some figures that show how "poor, starving" Germany fares in comparison to other European countries. The amounts shown are the daily calories each person is supposed to get. 3200 is a normal amount.

Greece: 970. Italy: 1,000. Albania: 1,200. Czechoslovakia: 1,384. Poland: unknown, but descibred by UNRRA as "probably the worst food situation in Europe." Germany: average is around 2,000.

Detroit Sees UAW Victory Coming

By PATRICIA BRONTE

The auto workers' fight is now recognized for what it is —not just a battle for higher wages, but a determined effort to hold the line for a new, stable national economy.

The Dec. 6 report of the 14-member National Citizens Fact-Finding Committee, declared:

"The union in refusing to accept a wage increase contingent on a price increase has lifted the whole matter of collective bargaining to a new high level by insisting that advancement of labor interests shall not be made at the expense of the public."

"If President Truman and his advisers had access to this record," they agreed, "we believe they would have been in a position to insist more firmly on full use of collective bargaining process before suggesting intervention of the government."

Committee members included Dr. Henry Hitt Crane, of Central Methodist Church, Detroit; Dr. Harry A. Overstreet, of City College, New York; Mrs. J. Birdsall Calkins, YWCA Natl. Pres.; Rabbi Leon Fram, Temple Israel, Detroit; Robert E. Garrigan, Asst. Director, New Council of American Business, Washington; Mrs. Dorothy McAllister, Natl. Consumers League, Grand Rapids, Mich., and Walter White, secretary, Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, New York.

Detroit workers and shop officials were unanimous in declaring that the Truman "solution" was "outrageous," and "the worst attack ever made on labor."

As newspapers headlined "Anti-Strike Law Speeded," the strikers themselves were more determined than they yet had been. In a situation where history was being measured by minutes and hours, most union officials kept well-informed.

Company spokesmen do not deny that GM Pres. C. E. Wilson may have been ordered by the du Ponts to get the strike settled.

But non-striking unionists were quietly meeting this week to levy extra assessments on their membership to provide Christmas baskets, toys and trees for the families of the militant auto workers.

General Motors Offers UE 13½c Increase

A pay increase of 13½ cents an hour with a minimum hiring rate of 80 cents an hour for male and female employes was proposed in a new wage offer made to the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in direct negotiations with the General Motors Corp., Neil Brant, Intl. representatives of the union, announced this week in Washington.

UE represents 25,000 workers in a group of plants in GM's electrical division located in Ohio and New York.

Brant, who is in charge of UE's General Motors Dept., said that the proposal was made in a letter signed by GM Vice-Pres. H. W. Anderson after a week of continuous negotiations. The offer was put before the membership of the UE locals involved and voting was in progress at press time. Results will be announced next week.

If the offer is accepted on or before Jan. 7, 1946, the wage increase will be made retroactive to Nov. 7, 1945, Anderson's letter stated. He also agreed to the union's request that any wage adjustment finally negotiated shall continue in effect for the duration of the contract, which runs until Apr. 18, 1946.

A previous offer of a 10% general increase made by GM on Nov. 14 was rejected by the union and further negotiations requested. The Corporation agreed to continue the negotiations during the week of Nov. 26. It was at this conference that GM made the 13½c offer.

Brant said that UE Organization Director James J. Matles decided that the offer needed the joint consideration of top CIO leaders, and that after consultation with CIO Pres. Philip Murray a conference was arranged in Pittsburgh and held on Dec. 4, to review negotiations between GM and both the UE and the CIO United Auto Workers.

Murray Details Fight For L-M Wage Action

By C. W. Fowler

The much-touted labor-management conference, called by President Truman at Republican Senator Vandenberg's suggestion, ended this week not with a bang but a whimper.

The whimper came when management after almost four weeks of meeting, maintained its stubborn policy of refusing to let the conference talk about the thing that's been causing labor unrest—wages.

CIO, in the person of Philip Murray, tried from the beginning of the sessions to get the wage issue on the top of the agenda. But management wasn't alone and unaided in its struggle to keep the wage question buried. William Green and John L. Lewis helped right from the start, when they sided with management in opposing Murray's wage resolution.

The collaboration between Green, Lewis and management was so glaring that Drew Pearson, one of the country's top "inside dope" columnists, wrote this less than a week after the conference was over:

"Just before the conference ended, Murray rose and offered a new resolution calling for 'substantial wage increases now' for labor.

"Murray's unexpected bid put the AFL in a tight spot. Earlier the AFL had made a secret agreement with Lewis and Ira Mosher of the NAM to maintain a united front and not ask for increased wages at the conference."

As it happened, Green and Lewis were both forced by Murray's insistence on a vote on the wage resolution to violate their deal with the NAM and vote for the Murray resolution—after Green had tacked a meaningless amendment onto to it for the sake of prestige.

The vote was lost when management voted nay. Under the unanimity rule, this was enough to kill it.

Reviewing the CIO fight to get the resolution first considered in the executive committee and second brought up on the floor of the full session for action, Murray went over step by step the way in which it had been postponed and pigeonholed.

In his speech moving the resolution (CIO NEWS, Dec. 3), Murray pointed out:

That he had originally moved his wage resolution the first day of the conference, November 6.

That he had been asked November 8 "to clarify the intent of my original resolution, which was done."

That it was then agreed to "resume discussion of the resolution" on November 14. That on November 14 he asked about the resolution and was told by Ira Mosher that management was "unable to set a date for consideration of Mr. Murray's first proposed resolution."

That he asked again on November 15 and was told management would be ready to talk about it the next day.

Following this, management presented a substitute resolution (Nov. 16) which said nothing about wage increases, and John L. Lewis presented another substitute which talked vaguely about production and left increases out.

At this point, Green moved that all three resolutions be referred to a special subcommittee, which Murray refused to serve on "inasmuch as the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the NAM, the AFL and the United Mine Workers had already stated their unqualified opposition to the support of my original resolution."

Murray then began asking the special subcommittee, consisting of Green, Lewis and a representative of management, what was cooking on the CIO resolution. He was repeatedly told that the subcommittee was not ready to report.

This went on until November 29, when Green finally reported that the subcommitte could not support Murray's resolution. The same day, the full executive committee refused to permit a vote on the CIO resolution and Murray announced that he would take it to the floor of the closing plenary session.

In presenting the resolution to the final session, Murray said:

"I believe that every member of this conference, no matter what organization he may represent, will agree with me that the major issue before the nation today is wages, and that all of the people have the right to expect that this conference would not fully discharge its responsibilities without giving expression to its point of view with regard to this all-important question of wages, and it was with that thought in mind that I have consistently advocated since the opening of this conference a discussion of this issue."

Then, in the final rites of the labor management conference, the vote was taken. Said Judge Stacy, chairman of the meeting:

"The question then arises upon the original resolution offered by Mr. Murray. All in favor let it be known by saying aye. All opposed, no. The motion is lost."

Battle WLB Phonies

By LAWRENCE KAMMET

A rough and tumble session of the War Labor Board was held this week in a dispute involving the American Communications Assn., CIO, and Western Union during which ACA President Joseph P. Selly asked the board to disqualify itself from sitting on the case, charging that two public members, Lewis Gill and Edwin Witte, had assured Western Union that they would throw ACA's case "into the waste basket."

The hearing was attended by more than 500 members of ACA, who arrived from New York in a fleet of busses to show the board that they would not be cheated out of an award made October 23rd by the New York Regional Board granting 10 cent an hour increases plus other benefits. The case had come before the Board on appeal by the company when it refused to abide by the New Yord decision.

Selly served notice that the union would not abide by any board decision which violates the rights of the union. He presented evidence that public members of the board had already prejudged the case and were preparing to consider the ACA case together with another one involving Western Union workers elsewhere which had been presented by the AFL. The AFL union had received a four cents an hour wage award, after a perfunctory hearing before the board. Both the company and the board were now attempting to whittle down the ACA-CIO wage award to the "degraded level" of the AFL wage award, Selly charged.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S RECORD

Some of labor's critics have expressed surprise at the vigorous and sweeping character of CIO President Murray's denunciation of the Truman administration, in connection with its call on Congress for anti-strike legislation.

They profess to believe that the Truman proposal is a mild one, and that in the light of the rest of the administration's record it should have been credited with good intentions.

But if these critics followed all of Murray's speech, they should feel no surprise. For he fully explained that labor's indignation is due not only to the far from "mild" character of Truman's proposals but also to the administration's preceding record.

There is nothing mild about legislation directed against labor's basic right to strike, compelling workers to work against their will and destroying their bargaining power until the threat to strike has lost its effectiveness. This, and not the "fact-finding" camouflage (who has been more insistent than labor on real fact-finding?) is the essence of the Truman proposal.

There is certainly nothing mild about the language of the bill embodying Truman's demand. It declares that, during the compulsory cooling-off period, "it shall be unlawful for any person to coerce, instigate, induce, conspire with, or encourage any person to interfere with or prevent such work or operations by lockout, strike, or otherwise, or to aid any such lockout or strike or other means of interfering with or preventing such work or operations by giving direction or guidance, or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike or other benefits to those participating therein."

This bill is not only vicious, repressive and undemocratic in itself, but its endorsement by Truman encourages labor's worst enemies to use it as an opening wedge for even more savage assaults on labor's hard-won rights.

But this administration attack on labor has even more serious and far-reaching implications in the light of a long record of craven appeasement of reactionary wealth in its aggressions against the public welfare.

The workers' take-home pay has been cut from 23 to 50 percent. They have been denied emergency unemployment compensation, full employment legislation, increased social security and other legislative relief, with little or nothing done by the administration.

At the same time, industry's profits have risen to a point where it could raise wages and salaries 24% and still enjoy more than 100% increase in net profits after taxes; and legislation has been swiftly passed to add billions more to profits through repeal of the excess profits tax.

Encouraged by the subservience of the administration, big business has staged a sit-down strike against the American people, holding up production until it can get higher prices and even more exorbitant profits.

Confronted with labor's wage demands, some of the biggest corporations have arrogantly refused to bargain collectively and have repeatedly rejected the government's requests for conciliation.

Yet in the face of such defiance, and such repeated assaults of the public interest, the administration has not even slapped the wrists of the industrial aggressors. Instead it has turned with all its venom against the victims of this aggression, to break their strikes and to shackle them with anti-labor legislation.

Is it any wonder that labor's wrath has been aroused, and that the CIO has had to speak out with all the vigor at its command against such shameful betrayal of the public trust by an administration that labor's votes did so much to elect?

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

ARE YOU living in a dream world? Do you suffer from hallucinations? Are you subject to irrational outbursts when you stub your toe on the hard facts of life?

If so, brother, you aren't the only one.

In Washington, hard facts are not popular. It's embarrassing to think about workers' take-home pay being cut from 23 to 50 percent; about government-guaranteed profits and the gift of billions more through repeal of the excess profits tax; and about profit-drunk corporations refusing to bargain collectively while they hold up labor and the public for lower wages and higher prices.

To escape from this rough, crude world of reality, the Washington powers-that-be have created a world of fantasy in which the American people are neatly divided into Labor, Management and The Public—while a fairy godfather Government flits around in mid-air like Barnaby's Mr. O'Malley.

In this dream world, Labor is a problem child, in fact, The Problem. Government has been very kind to Labor, letting it live and grow, instead of strangling it at birth.

Management and The Public think Labor has been coddled, if not spoiled. Management is perhaps a trifle biased. But The Public is all-wise—or at any rate, all-powerful—and very patient, if you don't annoy it too much.

★ ★ ★

But the peace of this idyllic dream world has recently been broken by harsh words and blows between Labor and Management.

With magnificent impartiality, Government refuses to notice who struck the first blow or what it's all about. And The Public only knows that Labor always "strikes," while Management is always "struck."

Anyhow, The Public doesn't care about such details. It just demands that "something be done."

So Government first gives Labor and Management a chance to "do something." Then, when no formula for lasting peace results, it ACTS.

Protesting its reluctance (but The Public demands action) and its stratospheric impartiality, Government orders Labor to cease striking Management and bids Management cease from being struck.

With an air of this-hurts-me-more-than-it-hurts-you — and "in Labor's best interest," lest worse punishment befall — Government demands a law to tie Labor's hands from striking (not permanently, of course, but only long enough to give Management the advantage.)

But Labor is so arrogant and ungrateful to kind Government as to object. Its "best friends" are shocked. They tell Labor it should be glad of such a mild and reasonable punishment—doesn't it realize that "The Public's patience is exhausted?"

Unfortunately for its creators, none of the characters in this dream world are real or even true to life, nor does it touch the real problem.

The real Public is the American people, most of whom are working people or folks dependent on the workers' welfare and purchasing power. And Public Opinion is what they think and want, not the sum total of editorials in the big business press.

While the real Labor is the largest element of the Public, Management (really the owners of industry) is a small wealthy minority, whose financial interests are in no sense comparable or of equal weight to the human interests of labor and the general public.

Government is no Mr. O'Malley. It is an administration and a Congress elected by the majority of the people, including labor.

The real problem is to remove the causes of industrial unrest and promote prosperity by maintaining and increasing the workers' take-home pay. Anti-strike and other repressive legislation will not end, but rather accentuate, industrial unrest.

★ ★ ★

Truman's message to Congress, like the Labor-Management Conference (despite CIO's efforts), completely avoided the real problem.

Instead of bringing pressure on the corporations to bargain on labor's wage demands, the administration chose to crack down on labor and threaten it with anti-strike legislation.

No wonder it was so loudly applauded by chuckling Republicans and big business publishers, delighted to see an administration elected largely by labor votes turning so viciously and suicidally on its own supporters.

WHY RAISE BASIC PAY

5. Workers' Huge Savings A Myth

Savings are no substitute for adequate wages. Three-fifths of U. S. families have only 15%—$21 billions—of total savings held by individuals. Workers' small savings will not support high purchasing power.

GI's Cable CIO Thanks For Ship Stoppage

FAVORABLE returns came in immediately from the GIs this week when the NMU and other CIO maritime unions stopped work at ports throughout the nation for 24 hours to demand "every ship a troopship."

"The boys are going crazy—they'd come home in a rowboat," Elmuth Harder, veteran and former NMU member, just home from Okinawa, told 6,000 members of the NMU and other unions at Battery Park, New York City.

"Boys, you've got 8,000,000 friends!" read a cablegram from England signed "GI Joe," which arrived at NMU headquarters after the stoppage began.

Seven hundred and fifty high-point GIs cabled NMU from Camp Philip Morris, France:

"This is a little note of appreciation from GIs on foreign soil. Authorities have given us the greatest let-down in history. . . . We have received promises of early shipment which are constantly being broken. This decisive action by your union is the most outstanding act taken in this entire deployment mess-up."

Even before the stoppage occurred this letter from T/4 Lloyd R. Kenyon, Haneda Airdrome, appeared in the Pacific Stars and Stripes, Tokyo:

"Take my word for it, there's practically an entire company hoping you'll print this. Each and everyone of us ought to thank Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO-NMU, for his ideas. He desires to withdraw crews from vessels in commercial or other operations, allowing only crews for troopships.

"Can anyone think of a better way to get us home sooner? He makes sense in our books."

Soldiers watching the demonstration on its way to the park were outspoken in their praise of the purpose of the work stoppage in which the NMU estimated that 60,000 of its members and members of other CIO unions took part at ports throughout the U. S., including San Francisco, where 40,000 participated, Baltimore, Norfolk, Boston and Houston, Tex. At some ports the AFL Longshoremen refused to cross the NMU picket line.

At San Francisco the CIO Longshoremen joined the NMU in spearheading the work stoppage.

CURRAN ANSWERS LIE

In New York at an evening rally called by the Greater New York CIO Council on the day of the stoppage, Pres. Joseph Curran of the NMU, who also heads the council, gave the lie to the newspaper stories quoting the War Shipping Administration as that only 39 ships were tied up along the entire Atlantic Coast. He declared:

"The stoppage was 100 per cent successful throughout the country by WSA's own admission. The NMU made a pledge to the GIs and we are not going to let them down now. We helped take them overseas, and we are determined to help bring them home."

The rally sent a statement to President Truman protesting the use of only 550—out of the U. S. merchant fleet of 4,500—to bring the GIs home; and the use of our ships to aid the British and the Dutch to crush rebellions and of U. S. vesseels and troops to intervene in China.

CIO Asks Truman For Housing Aid For Vets

Realizing the gravity of the crisis caused by lack of housing for millions of returning servicemen, the CIO is pressing not only for passage of the long-range Wagner-Ellender-Taft Housing Bill (S 1592) and the Patman Bill (HR 4761), but also for emergency measures.

Pres. R. J. Thomas of the Auto Workers, who also is chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, this week sent a letter to President Truman requesting appointment of a Housing Director on veterans' housing. With leaders of other CIO unions he will appear Dec. 11 before the Senate Banking Committee considering the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Bill. Thomas wrote Truman.

"Families of over two million veterans are already living in doubled-up quarters. Many more are homeless, living in tents, vacant stores or public shelters. It is anticipated that these numbers will increase sharply as demobilization spreads."

As an emergency measure Thomas called for passage of Con. Res. 122, appropriating 160 million dollars for the relocation and rehabilitation of temporary war housing for veterans. As other emergency measures Thomas urged that hotels, apartment houses and other buildings leased by government agencies be converted into temporary homes, that unused and under-occupied dwellings be requisitioned and that military and naval facilities be used also to house veterans.

The Patman Bill, which would put housing materials back under control as a means of preventing real estate profiteering which hurts not only the veterans but the rest of the population, this week remained in the hands of the House Banking and Currency Committee, where the CIO is seeking to dislodge it.

Smart To Be For Jobs Bill, Bosses Told

CLINTON S. GOLDEN, assistant to Pres. Philip Murray as head of the CIO Steelworkers, last weekend told the Society for the Advancement of Management, meeting in New York City, that it should support the Full Employment Bill because its stated purpose is to "stimulate, encourage and assist private enterprise."

"It is the sound relationship, not the specific plan itself, that has brought constructive results. . . . If we are really sincere in our desire to achieve the fullest measure of cooperation between labor and management and thereby undertake to improve living standards of all, there are certain steps that can be taken at once.

"First, management could well afford to lend its active support to the Full Employment Bill, as originally introduced. In doing so it could undoubtedly recapture some of the confidence of both workers and the public that it has lost as a result of its hostile attitude toward labor organization and progressive legislation."

Veteran Joins Battle Against Anti-Labor Bills

Just discharged from the Army, Jack London soon turned from fighting the Nazis to battling anti-labor legislation. This week he visited his sympathetic representative, Congressman Sabath (D., Ill.), to tell him the harm that would be done by HR 32, the Hobbs bill, and HR 3937, substitute of the Smith-Connally Act.

Former president of the CIO Auto Workers local at the Chicago Buick plant and a veteran of the Battle of the Bulge, London—who is no relation to the famous author—served three years in the Army.

Deflates High Wages Stories

Just to set homeward-bound veterans straight on reports that workers were being "paid a hundred dollars a week," the Army in quiz contests for use on transports sets forth the economic facts of life.

The War Dept. is telling the veterans that average wages were approximately $45 weekly and is pointing out that clothing prices rose 35 per cent and food prices increased 45 per cent above the 1939 levels.

Murray Blasts Truma

Following is the text of President Murray's speech on December 5 on President Truman's plan to restrict the right to strike through "cooling-off" periods and similar measures, now before Congress in bill HR 4908.

A very serious crisis faces our nation today. It would be unwise and hypocritical not to face this fact.

After our historic victory over the fascist forces the nation turned with both relief and hope to tackle the problems of reconversion. The American people justly anticipated the opening of an era of unparalleled prosperity and international peace.

Have these hopes materialized?

Wage earners through reduced working time, down grading to inferior jobs, have suffered pay cuts ranging from a minimum of 23 per cent to as much as 50 per cent. The Office of War Mobilization officially advises us—very blandly—that we can expect by the spring of 1946 approximately eight million people to be unemployed.

Official government figures reveal that since V-J Day approximately 25 billion dollars on an annual basis have been extracted from the pay envelopes of wage earners through wage cuts and unemployment.

Are these the conditions which furnish a basis for prosperity and security?

Facing Facts

Faced with these cold hard facts, American workers through their unions, have sought to engage in collective bargaining for an immediate wage increase.

Our objective is to restore the huge cut in the national pay envelope. Unless we do, clearly America faces bad times. If the workers do not have the purchasing power to buy the goods—the wheels of industry cannot keep turning.

Depressed wages means curtailed business. Depressed wages means continued and developing unemployment. Depressed wages means a decrease in farm income. Depressed wages means disastrous conditions for the small store keeper.

But in Collective Bargaining, Management revealed a determined arrogance. They would not bargain. They ignored the facts. They simply said "no" to each suggestion offered by the unions.

In the case of the negotiations between the CIO union and General Motors Corporation—the corporation insisted that its profits were irrelevant to the issue whether the employes were entitled to wage increases. To the suggestion of the union that the issue be arbitrated—the corporation said "no." To the suggestion of the union that the parties continue in collective bargaining to negotiate, the answer of the corporation was "no."

In the case of the collective bargaining negotiations between the CIO union and the United States Steel Corporation—the corporation took 40 minutes in all to hand the union a letter flatly rejecting its demand for a wage increase.

No and Still No

The United States Steel Corporation did not discuss the issue. The United States Steel Corporation made no counter offers. The United States Steel Corporation did not bargain. It just said: "No."

The United States Government then offered to mediate both disputes.

But even to this suggestion of the Government, General Motors Corporation said "no." The president of the corporation answered that he could not come to Washington to discuss efforts to reach an early settlement.

The Secretary of Labor asked the United States Steel Corporation and the union to renew their negotiations and collective bargaining. The United States Steel Corporation said "no."

The Federal Government repeated its invitation to the corporation. Again the United States Steel Corporation said "no."

Twice—within one week—the United States Steel Corporation arrogantly and arbitrarily refused to heed the call of its Government to comply with the obligation to bargain with the union in good faith.

A full description of current conditions also requires a few facts covering the extortionate profits which American industry extracted during the war period and which they insist upon increasing during peace time.

The office of War Mobilization, through its staff experts, has in a recent report stated that American industry can raise wages and salaries 24 per cent and still earn more than twice as much take-home profits as it did before the war.

Let me repeat—industry can raise wages 24 per cent and still enjoy more than 100 per cent increase in net profits after taxes.

Faced with these economic conditions—what has the Federal Administration done?

Industry Appeased

It has completely ignored human rights. But American industry has been appeased with ever greater opportunities for increased profits at the expense of the American people.

The administration has given lip service to a suggested need for Federal legislation that would increase unemployment compensation benefits and acknowledge a Federal obligation for full employment. The complete failure to obtain such legislation has proven that the activities have been limited to a mere gesture.

But, at the same time, in the face of the astounding profits of American industry, legislation has been swiftly enacted to eliminate excess profits taxes so that these profits can become even more extortionate.

In addition, the Federal administration tolerates—without adverse comment—a sitdown strike by industry—knowing that the American people are financing industry's arrogance and making it profitable.

You are not now getting radios, washing machines, children's underclothing and other much needed goods.

Why?

It cannot be because of strikes, because there are no strikes in these industries.

Industry's Holdup

It is simply because industry is not producing these goods—THIS YEAR—or it is holding them from this year's market. Here is why:

PHILIP

The Federal administration very generously, as I have said, repealed the excess profits taxes as of January 1, 1946. A company that sells goods this year is subject to a maximum tax of 85 1/2 per cent on each dollar of profit. But beginning next year, the maximum tax has been cut to 38 per cent.

On every dollar of profit this year industry can only keep 14 1/2 cents, but next year, it can keep 62 cents out of every profit dollar.

n Anti-Strike Plans

You are waiting for your goods—and as a taxpayer you are financing an industry holdup.

But that is not the entire story. Through tax laws which the Federal administration supports, any corporation is guaranteed by you as taxpayers, for two years, through tax refunds from the resident

United States Treasury, against any loss and a minimum of net profits which will be in excess of their peacetime average.

Is it any wonder that American industry can be arrogant and determined to smash labor unions, to break the OPA and its price ceilings—because while doing so, failure to produce does not mean any financial loss but is repaid by you, Mr. American Taxpayer.

Confronted with this situation, American labor, in self-protection and in the interest of the entire nation, has turned to the right to strike.

Workers' Right to Strike

This is what the workers of General Motors Corporation were compelled to do.

This is why over half a million steelworkers have voted five-to-one authorizing a steel strike.

This is why electrical manufacturing workers, aluminum, packinghouse, and rubber workers and others are also voting overwhelmingly in favor of strikes.

What is the answer of the Federal administration to this diabolical plot of American industry?

Does the Federal administration call to the attention of the American people the basic causes of this crisis?

Does the Federal administration condemn the sitdown strike of American industry and put an end to the public financing of these outrageous practices?

The sole answer of the Federal administration is to seek legislation directed against labor.

Industry has refused to engage in collective bargaining. Industry has refused to accept voluntary arbitration in the automobile dispute. Industry has refused to meet with the union in the steel industry though specifically requested by the Federal Government.

Abject Cowardice

To all this arrogance the Federal administration yields in abject cowardice.

Its rancor is confined to labor.

The recent message from President Truman to Congress calls for legislation which would authorize the President to establish fact-finding boards in major industries where industrial disputes may be threatened. In addition, it is recommended that where such boards are established it shall be unlawful for labor to strike during the pendency of the work of any such appointed board.

I desire to make it perfectly clear that labor has never feared the public disclosure of facts pertaining to a labor dispute. We warmly welcome the public attention addressed to the facts which underlie our claims submitted in collective bargaining.

Only recently a report of experts of the office of War Mobilization was being buried by Mr. Snyder, its director. This report fully disclosed all the facts pertaining to the financial condition of American industry and the crying need for substantial wage increases. It was only through the determined efforts of the CIO that this report became available to the American people.

The specific facts involved in the automobile and steel industries have been thoroughly analyzed and made public by several government agencies.

This should make it clear that President Truman's requested legislation cannot be justified on the ground that it is facts which are sought. There is some other design which prompts its recommendation.

Recently the labor management conference held in Washington unanimously agreed that there was a joint responsibility to engage in genuine collective bargaining and where this fails to cooperate with conciliation and mediation.

On the basis of this agreement between prominent representatives of labor and management—why did not the Secretary of Labor or the President endeavor to bring the General Motors Corporation or the United States Steel Corporation into collective bargaining conferences with the unions?

Abandons FDR

Instead—legislation is requested. Legislation that can have but a single purpose—the weakening of labor unions—the curtailment of the right of free men to refrain from working when they choose to do so.

I am profoundly disturbed at the implications inherent in the President's proposal. It marks a very serious departure from the policies which the people of this country have repeatedly approved within recent years under the leadership of President Roosevelt.

We have known of previous periods in American history when rapacious industry greedily seeking ever increasing profits has for a time succeeded in the endeavor.

Economic Disaster

But in the wake of these policies has come economic disaster. The economic debacle of 1929 followed a period where industry was given an open and free hand to run amuck. But the mass unemployment and human distress which followed will never be forgotten.

To date the Federal administration has completely ignored the grave human problems which stand unsolved.

The Federal administration instead is embarked upon a policy of continued appeasement of American industry in the face of its contemptuous attitude toward the American people and the Government itself.

The CIO is opposed to the basic policies thus pursued by the administration.

It is within this framework that the proposed legislation of President Truman must be viewed and its real intent understood.

The design of the specific legislative proposal is to weaken and ultimately destroy labor union organizations. It can be but the first step for ever more savage legislative repression. For this reason the CIO shall mobilize its entire membership and the American people to defeat this specific measure and all similar attempts directed against labor.

The American people have not participated with all of their energies and resources in the recent ferocious struggle against fascism in order to have democracy weakened through proposals leading to industrial serfdom.

The CIO is firmly of the belief that in pursuing its policy to achieve a higher standard of living for American wage earners it is serving the interest of the nation to assure the fulfillment of our national aspirations so eloquently expressed by President Roosevelt in his historic economic Bill of Rights.

We seek for all—jobs, security, full employment and peace.

To this objective—we dedicate the CIO and its membership.

New Pamphlets

"Letters to Dad"

Many farmers have a lot of false notions about organized labor given them by the conservative newspapers and farm journals they read. They may think that workers get too high wages; that farmers have to pay a high price for farm machinery because of exorbitant labor costs; that there is no excuse for strikes; that unions are run by racketeers.

These and other misconceptions farmers may have about labor are examined and the real facts explained in farmers' terms in a new pamphlet issued this week by the National CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

In the form of "Letters to Dad," Kermit Eby, director of the department, whose father is an Indiana farmer, has undertaken, as he says in an introductory letter to the reader, "to state the case of farm and city workers as I see it, as simply as I know how."

"You farmers are in the business of filling stomachs," says one letter. "You're after big eaters. You won't find them on Wall Street. A millionaire can't hold a candle to a factory worker when it comes to eating."

"Maybe it would be different if a millionaire's stomach grew as fast as his millions. Then Ford would eat 576,000 plates of ham and eggs for breakfast, and Ford would be just as important to farmers as Ford's workers are.

"It's us little fellows who work for wages who'll eat up your farm surpluses. Why, we spend a third or more of all we make at the grocery store. And we'd buy more if we had it, because we work hard."

Letters to Dad, CIO Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C. Ten cents a copy, 15 for $1; 100 for $5; 500 for $20.

Restrictions On Voting

Devices used to keep the majority of Southern citizens away from the polls are exposed in an illustrated pamphlet, "Voting Restrictions in the Thirteen Southern States," issued as a report by a Committee of Editors and Writers of the South. Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, is chairman of the committee.

The report gives state-by-state surveys on election practices and regulations and shows that in the 13 Southern states, 27.9 per cent of the potential voters cast their ballots, compared to 61.9 per cent in the other 35 states.

The information in this attractive pamphlet should be of great value to trade unionists and PAC members, particularly in the South. It may be obtained free from the Committee of Editors and Writers, 502 Chamber of Commerce Bldg., Atlanta 3, Ga.

Housing Evils

An excellent illustrated pamphlet on the evils of race restrictions in housing has been issued by the American Council of Race Relations under the title "Hemmed In." Residential segregation of Negroes and other minority groups has created overcrowded and filthy slums, aroused fear and distrust and brought on other social ills too numerous to mention, the pamphlet declares.

"Hemmed In" may be obtained from the council's office, 32 West Randolph St., Chicago 1, Ill., at ten cents a copy; discount on quantities.

Education Notes

HIGHLANDER REUNION: One hundred Southern labor leaders, CIO and AFL, heard Organization Director Aubrey Williams of the Natl. Farmers' Union tell of the amazing changes brought about in the South since the CIO started organizing there. Williams spoke at a student reunion, the first held in four years at Highlander.

The labor leaders, representing more than 20 international unions, joined in a pledge to bring better working conditions to Southern workers through democratic trade unionism and education.

In the operating room Dr. Edwardes gives the first clue that something is wrong. Director Hitchcock at right arranges his actors for maximum drama.

SPELLBOUND First-Rate Mystery

SPELLBOUND, a David O. Selznick production, directed by Alfred Hitchcock, based on the novel "The House of Dr. Edwardes" by Hilary St. George Saunders (Francis Beeding), released through United Artists, with Ingrid Bergman, Gregory Peck and Michael Chekhov.

When it comes to spine-thrilling mystery melodramas, there's nobody who can do it like Alfred Hitchcock. The same cunning hand that gave us Thirty-Nine Steps, Rebecca, and The Lady Vanishes has done it again. This time the master uses psychoanalysis to solve his mystery.

Movies Worth Seeing

Gregory Peck, suffering from amnesia, is suspected of murder. With no memory of the past, he believes that he might be guilty. Ingrid Bergman is a psychiatrist, in love with Peck and desperately trying to save him from punishment for a crime that she is blindly sure he has not committed. Both Peck's identity and the solution to the mystery are discovered by psychoanalysis. The analysis of a dream Peck has figures importantly in the solution.

The suspense in the story comes from the need to cure the hero of his neurosis before the police catch up with him. The lovers are only one step ahead of them throughout the picture.

I took a psychoanalyst along to see the picture. He said that there were many obvious errors, probably necessary to the melodrama. The first flaw from the analytical point of view, is that an analyst must never fall in love with the patient. This makes it a good movie story, but not good analysis.

"The patient falls in love with the analyst, yes, but not a doctor with his patient. For an analysis must end. No analyst would attempt to cure someone he loved, not even a good friend," this analyst said.

"The logical thing for Ingrid Bergman to do, as a doctor in love with Gregory Peck, would be to take him to her old teacher, as she does anyway, and have him bring Gregory Peck out of his illness. But one really can't hold that against the picture. It's good anyway."

The final denouement is detective story stuff and not analysis. The guilty one makes a slip, deliberate or not, and Ingrid Bergman's trained analytical mind carries it through to final solution.

I also asked if it were possible for a trained analyst to be so blindly sure of her lover's innocence. He felt that if she were well analyzed—and she must have been to be a full-fledged doctor of the mind—she had a sound basis for knowing herself, and could rely on her instincts. As a matter of fact her old professor finally is drawn into the attempt to cure Gregory Peck not by her feminine wiles and pleas, but a reliance on her intution and her judgment rather than his cold and objective intellect.

Albert Deutsch, PM's Science Editor, also points out that by means of injections the patient could have been cured of his amnesia much more rapidly. But how could Hitchcock do that when the amnesia is the whole basis of the plot? Another criticism is the very elegant mental institution, used as the background of the movie. Most such public instiutions are ugly and overcrowded.

Michael Chekhov as Dr. Alex Brulov really steals the show. His lines are magnificent in the tough explanations of the importance of dreams and the subconscious, and his acting superb. He is a son of the famous Russian writer.

Salvador Dali designed the sets for the dream sequence. Actually the clue to the mysteries in the picture have been given before the dream sequence takes place. The dream summarizes the clues in a different form through the distorted associations of things and people in the subconscious mind of a man with real mental illness.

Like all Hitchcock pictures the details of the film are as intersting as the main story. The two detectives on the chase are on a par with the hockey players in A Lady Vanishes. The use of music and a sudden chord at a high moment of suspense made me jump out of my chair. The glass of milk blackout is a high point.

Only the beginning is overtalky and slow in getting started.

Late Films

SARATOGA TRUNK (Warner Bros.) in which Ingrid Bergman is the lush peach of a period piece set in Louisiana. She keeps Gary Cooper constantly dazed in Edna Ferber's story. Warner's claims for this production 12,000 properties, including 75 vehicles of the period and two full-sized railroad trains with authentic 1875 locomotives.

MARIE LOUISE (Myer-Burstyn) in French and Swiss with English titles. A bombed out French child from Rouen is evacuated to a Swiss home. This is the drama of a terrified 13-year-old girl becoming accustomed once again to the comradeship of peace, set against the natural magnificence of the Swiss horizon.

THE DOLLY SISTERS (20th Century) in which producer George Jessel gives you plenty of what he loved about vaudeville, the behind-the-scenes drama, and the never ending procession of song and dance numbers.

LOVE LETTERS (Paramount). Again it's love and amnesia, but a tender story about a girl who marries the wrong guy. Jennifer Jones and Joseph Cotton turn in a convincing performance in a not too logical story.

YOLANDA AND THE THIEF (MGM). Slow extravaganza in technicolor. But if you like Fred Astaire's dancing . . . .

THIS LOVE OF OURS (Wm. Dieterle). A tear jerker about misunderstandings. When a young doctor distrusts his actress wife, and runs off with their child, years pass before the haze lifts.

Facts of Oil Dispute

Profits of the major oil companies, average wages of oil workers and other data are given in an eight-page pamphlet, "Facts About the Wage Dispute in the Oil Industry," issued by the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union, Ledge Bldg., Fort Worth 2, Tex.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Robert C. Edwards, Dir. of Orgn., Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers, reports the CIO won recognition at the following plants:

Athens Brush Co., New York, N. Y., 11 workers ,oragnized by Jack Waldman. Keene Plastic Co., Keene, N. H., 120 workers, organized by Esther Turini and Rita Gannon under the direction of Tom Leone, business manager. Yelenik Mfg. Co., New York City, 25 workers, organized by Perfecto Gonzales and Miriam Sample, under direction of L. T. Koletka, asst. organization director for N. Y.

J. E. Crossland, CIO Sub-Reg. Dir., Houston, Tex., reports: Gaylord Container Corp., Houston CIO, 100; against, 2. CIO Rep. Garland Butler directed the campaign.

Paul Roesch, CIO Field Rep., reports: O'Keefe & Merritt Stove Co., Los Angeles, Calif., involving 950 workers, USA-CIO won by a 3-to-2 vote against the AFL Metal Trades, despite the fact that just before the election the company asked the employes to vote AFL. Joslyn Mfg. Co., USA-CIO won by a 2-to-1 vote. Utility Foundry Co., USA-CIO, 126; against, 47.

W. A. Copeland, CIO Sub-Reg. Dir., Memphis, Tenn., reports: Plough Chemical Box Division, UGCCWA-CIO, 35; AFL Printing Pressmen, 1. UGCCWA Rep. Tolleson and MIUC Rep. Riley Williams handled this campaign.

Joseph J. Lovas, CIO Field Rep., Buffalo, N. Y., reports: CIO won election among craft employes, Birge Wallpaper Co., Buffalo, N. Y., CIO, 15; AFL, 7. Local 138, PWOC has been bargaining agent for all production and maintenance employes since 1937.

G. George DeNucci, CIO Sub-Reg. Dir., Columbus, Ohio, reports: After several years of bargaining for members only at the Union Metal Mfg. Co. of Canton, Ohio, I. W. Abel, Dist. Dir., USA-CIO, announced that they have won exclusive bargaining rights for the 500 workers of the above firm. After filing an NLRB petition the company agreed to sign a clause giving the union sole bargaining rights.

The steel strike poll conducted by the NLRB recently resulted in a more than 5-to-1 vote in support of the National union's wage policy. The United Packinghouse Workers also voted for a strike Nov. 30. The strike vote taken at the request of the MMSW among workers in Butte Miners' Union No. 1, Great Falls Smeltermen No. 16 and Anaconda Smeltermen No. 117 resulted in a 3-to-1 vote in favor of a strike.

L-M Conference Over

The Labor-Management Conference adjourned with no recommendations on the wage policy as mentioned by Pres. Truman in his speech, and as proposed by CIO Pres. Murray. It did bring about agreement on acceptance of collective bargaining, conciliation and voluntary arbitration. Yet General Motors and U. S. Steel continue to defy these principles and nothing is done about it by the government. On the contrary, Pres. Truman came out with a proposal to shackle labor. The corporations have made more profits after taxes than at any time in the history of this nation. They definitely are on a sit-down strike now and a lot of things the public needs are not being produced, because they are required to pay higher taxes this year than they will next year. Congress has relieved them of excess taxes for 1946 in spite of fabulous profits made.

Pres. Truman by his recommendations to the Congress has definitely attacked labor's rights, but under the gallant and inspired leadership of Pres. Murray and the CIO, the workers of the nation will resist this onslaught and will object to being regimented to the slightest degree.

The American public will know the facts through the CIO. Industry can pay increases to guarantee the take-home pay and maintain the purchasing power and still make more profits than they did in 1939. The sit-down on the part of industry against reconversion to maintain their profits is similar to industry's sit-down when the nation was rearming.

We regret to announce the death of Brother Gus Strebel, who served with the writer as secretary when I was head of the New York State CIO Council and later became president. Brother Strebel was an honored member of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, having served that splendid organization for years.

Back from Service

The following have returned from the armed services after serving abroad, and all have been placed back on our staff: Ray Maki, assigned to Wyoming and Colorado; O. W. Singleton, assigned to the West Virginia area; William E. Lewis, assigned to Omaha, Nebraska; Lloyd P. Vaughan, assigned to the Virginia regional office; Robert Edwards, assigned to the Plaything, Jewelry & Novelty Workers as director of organization; J. H. Stocker, assigned to Omaha, Nebraska; W. J. Widman, assigned to the Optical & Instrument Workers Organizing Committee.

Fred Pieper has returned from the Pacific and is now on the West Coast, but not as yet demobilized. We hope that he will be back on the job very soon. We welcome these boys and are confident that the experience they have gained will serve our movement well.

One-Day Strike Called

A one-day work stoppage in all Cudahy plants under union contract was called this week by Pres. Lewis J. Clark of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers in protest against the "arrogant" refusal of Cudahy officials to discuss the union's wage demands. The stoppage involves some 10,000 workers in Cudahy plants throughout the country.

Some 100,000 packinghouse workers voted better than 20-1 in favor of calling a strike if their wage demands were turned down, in a poll conducted Nov. 30 by the NLRB under provisions of the Smith-Connally Act.

Big Electric Companies Drop 15 War Plants

The General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp are "abandoning" 15 government-built factories valued at $132,000,000 and at the same time are building new plants in "small towns and rural areas where wage standards are low," charges the CIO United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers. The claim was made as the union pressed its demands in Washington for a Congressional investigation of the radio and electrical manufacturing industry which UE charges with "a deliberate hold-back" of electrical appliances from the Christmas trade.

James J. Matles, UE organization director, said that the industrial uints which are being abandoned, including entire plants as well as plant additions, "could have been converted speedily and have produced tens of thousands of radios, refrigerators, washing machines and other electrical appliances for an appliance-hungry public."

Conversion of the 15 government-built structures, Matles declared, could also supply sorely needed products, such as small motors, generators and wiring devices for other industries whose reconversion is hampered by failure to obtain such products. He revealed that the General Electric Co. has purchased or will build a total of 32 new plants, while the Westinghouse Co. has purchased or will build seven new plants and has purchased two others through subsidiaries.

GE and Westinghouse have both rejected the union's demand for a $2 a day increase, Matles said. A strike vote under the Smith-Connally Act will be conducted December 13 among some 270,000 hourly and salaried employes represented by the union in GE and Westinghouse plants, and also among workers in the Electrical Division of General Motors.

GM Developments

General Motors agreed this week to resume full scale collective bargaining with the CIO United Automobile Workers following a conference of union and company officials with CIO Pres. Philip Murray in Pittsburgh. Officials of both the UAW and the CIO United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers were present at the meeting, including Pres. R. J. Thomas, Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther and Sec.-Treas. George Addes of the Auto Workers, and Organization Director James J. Matles and Intl. Representative Neil Brant, both of the UE, which is union representative for workers in GM's electrical division.

General Motors representatives were headed by Harry W. Anderson, corporation vice-president in charge of labor relations. Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, also attended the conference, which was called by Pres. Murray "for the purpose of exploring the status of negotiations between the parties."

As a result of the conference, negotiations on the union demands for a wage increase were resumed this week in Detroit.

Earlier developments in the UAW's wage dispute include:

A wire sent to Pres. Truman by UAW Pres. Thomas and Vice-Pres. Reuther, director of the union's GM division on Dec. 3 in reply to a wire from the President asking that the strike against GM be called off pending an investigation by a fact-finding committee appointed by the President.

Pointing out that the strike was called upon the "overwhelming request and democratic vote of the workers employed in the hundred General Motor plants throughout the country," Thomas told the President that his proposal would be laid before a conference of elected representatives of GM workers at a conference to be held in Detroit Dec. 8.

This GM National Conference, Thomas said, "will report its recommendations to the respective GM local unions for action by the membership."

A meeting of 15 nationally distinguished citizens who accepted the UAW's invitation to go to Detroit to hear a reading of the transcript of negotions between the union and GM was also announced by Thomas and Reuther.

Missouri CIO Makes PAC Its No. 1 Job

Recognizing the building of the State PAC for 1946 as its No. 1 job, the Missouri State CIO Council at its annual convention held Nov. 17-18 at Jefferson City, Mo., set up a State Political Action Committee with the Council executive board as its nucleus, and added one cent to the monthly per capita of the Council, to be used for PAC only.

A complete structure for PAC was worked out on state, county, congressional districts and local levels. The resolution on PAC passed by the convention declared that Missouri, home state of Pres. Truman, was of key importance in the CIO's efforts to bring Truman back to the policies of FDR, by making the 1946 elections a clear mandate for those policies.

The Democratic organization in Missouri "as led by Robert Hannegan," was denounced as "a major obstacle to progressive independent support for the administration."

Council Pres. Harold Edwards, United Steelworkers, and Sec.-Treas. James A. Davis, United Auto Workers, were re-elected without opposition.

Labor News In Brief

CRUCIBLE DISPUTE: Pres. John Everett of United Steelworkers, Local 2194, at the Crucible steel plant, Harrison, N. J., charges in a grievance filed with the company that his recent transfer to a lower paid job was an act of discrimination against him as a union official. He also charges that the company is deliberately provoking labor unrest by violation of seniority rights and adoption of a days-off stagger system.

LAUNDRY AGREEMENT: A general stoppage of 25,000 laundry workers in Greater New York, Weschester and Long Island, has been averted by an agreement reached with eight laundry owner associations granting a general 10c pay increase, a 60½c minimum, and holiday, vacation and insurance benefits.

SCREEN OFFICE GUILD: New contracts calling for salary increases, classifications and rate ranges and other benefits have been signed between the Screen Office & Professional Employes Guild in New York and Loews, United Artists and 20th Century-Fox New York Exchanges, Republic Pictures and Artkino Pictures.

STAGE PROTEST: In a last minute effort to speed contract negotiations and avert a strike, the CIO Wholesale & Warehouse Workers Union this week scheduled a demonstration of some 500 union members at Bachrach Bros. dry goods wholesalers in New York City.

URGES ANNUAL WAGE: A resolution supporting labor's drive for full employment, decent living wages and guaranteed annual pay, was passed by the 72nd annual state convention of the Junior Order United American Mechanics meeting at Columbus, Ohio, through the efforts of Jacob Rentschler and Al Jordan, members of the USA-CIO Local 1861, Cincinnati.

Backs Murray

By HARVEY O'CONNOR

The Executive Council of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union at a pre-convention meeting this week sent a wire to CIO Pres. Philip Murray fully endorsing his "splendid statement of the CIO position regarding President Truman's desertion of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt's policy of friendship toward America's workers." The union's convention opens Monday, Dec. 10, in Fort Worth, Texas.

"In particular we support your position on proposed repressive legislation which Pres. Truman has recommended to Congress," the Council declared. "This is the first step in taking from America's workers their only means of defense against arrogant, money-minded industrialists."

Praising Murray for his "courageous leadership," the Council said that his action had "enheartened the oil workers from coast to coast. Together with the American people, we are prepared to fight for the preservation of our liberties against totalitarian forces operating within industry and government."

The Council stated that the Oil Workers Union had discovered "the true bias of the Truman Administration two months ago," when the union called off a successful strike and agreed to arbitrate the dispute.

"Pres. Truman answered the cooperation we gave him in good faith by placing our members under military control, breaking our strike and threatening oil workers with prison terms if they defended themselves," the Council said.

HAVE YOU A DAWDLER IN YOUR HOME?

More than likely, if you have a 2-, 3- or 4-year old, she dawdles over dressing and undressing. She dawdles over meals, she never finishes what she starts. She is slowly, maybe quickly, driving you mad. Relax! Know that 80% of children this age dawdle sometimes—about 30% dawdle every day in every way. This means grown-ups (that's you) must allow extra time and have extra patience until children can naturally do things at a faster pace.

Making Eating Count

Slim Breakfasts Help to Cause Accidents

FAT or thin, old or young, rushed or idle—everyone needs to break the night's fast with nourishing food.

Teacher can tell when Johnny comes to school without breakfast—he is inattentive and does poor school work. Mother has less system in her tasks if she breakfasts on coffee, while father is cross, slows down and gets tired faster on the job than he would with a good meal under his belt.

What is a good breakfast? Fruit, cereal, milk and bread is a good basic breakfast. An egg or other "main dish" are extra, but help fill up for the heavier eater.

Consider fruit: In your five daily servings of fruits or vegetables you should have orange, grapefruit, lemon or tomato. One-half orange or grapefruit, or small glass of juice will supply nearly all the vitamin C you need for the day. A tumbler full of tomato juice, 10 strawberries or one-half canteloupe would also supply it.

Vitamin C builds resistance to infections, keeps your gums healthy, keeps every cell in your body at par.

WHY CEREAL

Are you a cereal scorner? Do you think cereal is fattening and not much else? A small serving of cereal with milk has fewer calories than a doughnut with coffee and "fixings." Besides, cereals are a good source of body-building protein, high in important B vitamins which aid digestion and strengthen nerves, good in iron which builds red blood.

We are always pushing milk! Some can go on the cereal. Drink some or make cocoa (for this either canned or dried milk may be used.) Milk has fine quality protein for growth and body upkeep. No other food supplies as much calcium for good health, sound nerves and strong teeth and bones. Without milk it is almost impossible to get enough riboflavin, one of the B-vitamins important to your eyes and nerves.

A meat or egg main dish gives a full feeling that lasts till lunch time. Hard workers need to avoid the 11 o'clock let-down.—the breeder of mistakes and accidents.

South American Women Aroused

By ELEANOR FOWLER
Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Women's Auxiliaries

THE organization of women in workers' families into Consumer Leagues to protect their buying power was one of the most interesting new developments reported by Mary Cannon, head of the Inter-American Division of the Women's Bureau, on her return from a three-month trip to South America.

The initiative in this new consumer organization came in part from one of the Chilean women who spent three months in this country in 1944 taking training. Women have been so enthusiastic, in spite of their inexperience in organization, that there are already 32 Consumer Leagues functioning in Chile.

The League program is two-fold. They educate their members to buy wisely. Low income Chilean families were being charged from four to six times legal prices because they bought by money (a peso's worth, for instance) instead of by weight. The League is changing that by teaching its members to read scales and to buy only by weight.

They also have nutrition classes and cooking classes to help these housewives get the most out of the food they buy and to reserve the vitamins and minerals. They learn, for instance, that cheap rice—a very important part of the diet—is better for the nutrition of the family than expensive polished rice.

HAVE PRICE CONTROL

The League has no action program, too. There is price control in Chile and League members are taught to report overcharges. When shortages develop in working-class neighborhoods the League demands government action to relieve the situation — and it has been successful, too. During a recent milk-shortage, for instance, it got a milk station opened to serve its members in one area.

This is only one sample of the growing activity among Chilean women. Women are active in the unions, too. The basic problem women workers face is the low wage scale. They are working to raise it and to put up safeguards so that higher minima will not mean dismissal of women workers.

Equal pay has been established for bank employes in Uruguay and for teachers in Peru, but, as in this country, there is a long road ahead to achieve economic equality for women.

Did The NAM Have A Tipoff?

Washington is the city of tips and tipsters. Sometime the tips are pretty phoney—like most of those the columnists pass on to gullible readers. Sometimes they're pretty hot—like the tip the Natl. Association of Manufacturers seems to have had on Truman's anti-strike message.

Here's the evidence that indicates the NAM knew in advance of publication what was coming in the President's message to Congress of December 3:

On December 1, the NAM News, official Washington organ of the NAM, said gleefully; "It is all too clear that the Management-Labor Conference has failed. . .

"What next?

"The Administration is on the spot in the strike crisis and knows it well. Therefore, one of the next moves may be a Presidential message asking Congress for legislation to curtail industrial strife.

"Even while the conference was in session, high administrative officials were working on a labor legislative program.

"Very little is known about it, except that serious study is being given to the establishment of some fact-finding and voluntary arbitration procedure.

"This program must take account of growing demands that labor cease wildcat strikes in violation of contract. . ."

The NAM News is dated December 1, the Saturday before the President's message was given to newspapermen for release to the public.

According to news stories, the message was finished on a yacht in the Potomac Sunday, December 2.

Query: did the NAM know what was in the message, or what was going to be in the message, two days in advance of the newspapers and the general public?

As all readers know, weekly publications are invariably dated in advance. The date of December 1 on the NAM News does not mean that its stories were written on December 1.

Query: how far in advance did NAM know the contents of the Truman message? Two days? Three? A week?

But no matter how far in advance the NAM's tipoff was, when the message was finally given to the public, NAM was ready and bubbling with praise. Said NAM head Ira Mosher within an hour of publication:

"It (management) applauds the President's recognition of the function and responsibility of the Congress for attempts to find sound solutions to labor strife through fact-finding as well as other needed changes in the law."

WASHINGTON GUIDE

Anti-Union Buildup In Congress

President Truman's message openly declaring war on the right to strike was no overnight bombshell. Like all important policy statements, it has a background.

Much of the background to the Truman gag plans lies in Congress, which is now rushing with indecent haste to carry out Truman's orders.

This haste contrasts with the extreme slowness of Congress to do anything about unemployment, social security and a host of other issues.

Just for the background, let's review them:

Jobs for all (S 380): introduced 11 months ago. Passed in watered down form by the Senate, followed by a House version this week so meaningless that CIO is opposing it.

Unemployment compensation (S 1274): introduced five months ago. Passed in watered down form by the Senate, still bottled up in House Ways and Means.

Social Security: (S 1050): introduced seven months ago. No action of any kind.

Polltax repeal (HR 7): passed for the third time by the House six months ago. Still no action by the Democratic leadership in the Senate.

FEPC (HR 2232): introduced 10 months ago, still stalled in House Rules Committee.

Wage floor: (S 1349): introduced six months ago, action expected in mid-December.

Missouri Valley (S 555): introduced 10 months ago, hearings still hanging fire in Senate Committee.

These are only some of the bills of benefit to labor that have been pigeonholed or filed in the Congressional wastebasket.

What about bills aimed against labor? Here you find a startling contrast. Within a week of its introduction, the May-Arends bill (HR 3937) that outlaws union political action, jails and fines strikers, had a rule from the Rules Committee and was on the House floor. Similarly with the Hobbs bill (HR 32) that prohibits normal union activities.

So the indecent haste to act on Truman's anti-strike message stands out in contrast to the extreme slowness and failure to act on any message of benefit to the people.

Remember that when you tell your Congressman to vote against HR 4908, the anti-strike legislation requested by President Truman December 3.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Anti-strike (HR 4908)	Carries out Truman's anti-union message of Dec. 3. Provides anti-strike machinery.	House and Senate Labor Committees.	Wire Senators and Representative to work and vote against.
Jobs (S 380, HR 2202)	Started out as a full employment bill; now a farce.	Reported out of House Expenditures Committee (Rep. Manasco, D. Ala., chmn.)	Tell your Representative to vote against the committee's bill; demand return to original.
May-Arends (HR 3937)	Outlaws all political action by unions and members; jails unionists for strikes in "violation of contract."	Reported out of House Rules Committee; expected on House floor this week.	Wire your Representative and Senators to oppose.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Using racketering as a cover, this one prohibits normal union activities such as strikes and picketing.	Same status as HR 3937 above.	Same as above.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Gives Southern voters chance to kick out men like Bilbo, Cox, Rankin et al.	Being stalled by majority leadership in Senate.	Wire Sen. Barkley (D. Ky.) and your own two men to pass at once.
Housing (S 1592)	Step toward housing for low and middle income people.	CIO testifies Dec. 11 in Senate Banking and Currency Committee.	Urge your Senators to support.

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

TRUMAN BILL: the Truman anti-strike proposal was put to the House in the form of a bill (HR 4908) this week by Rep. Ramspeck (D., Ga.), retiring Democratic whip. Senate action was due at CIO NEWS press time.

This indicates that the Democratic machine in the House (and in the Senate, too) will turn on the steam as hard as it can for quick passage of the bill.

This in turn means that a number of Congressmen who would ordinarily vote against an anti-union proposal such as this will be under heavy party pressure to vote for it.

Such pressure must be counteracted by the voters from each Congressman's district.

Tell your Representative and your two Senators that you want them to ignore the Democratic party machine and work and vote against the Truman proposal.

Remind them that you, the registered voter, are the real machine that puts them in office and keeps them there—not the party hacks in Congress or outside of it.

RADIO: Rep. Celler (D., N. Y.) has a new bill (HR 4314) designed to break monopoly in radio broadcasting and to cut down on advertising commercials.

Under the bill, the Federal Communications is to fix the amount of "sustaining" (i. e., non-commercial) time that a station must provide as a condition of receiving a license. Excessive advertising will be a bar to license renewal.

In addition, stations may not be sold for more than the actual material worth of the equipment. This is designed to stop the payment of grossly inflated prices for stations, which is done in order to promote monopoly control of radio.

The bill is up in the House interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which also has the un-American Committee's gag bill (HR 4775) described in The CIO News of December 3.

ANTI-LABOR ARMY PLOT? CIO President Murray this week asked Secretary of War Patterson to investigate alleged preparations of some Army officers for intervention in industrial disputes. The request was based particularly on a plan (above) signed by Col. T. H. Murphy, Chemical Warfare Service, Camp Monmouth, N. J., which recommended that smoke, tear and irritant gas grenades be used against strikers. Murray told Patterson that this was only one of several such reported plans, that such activity violates U. S. Army regulations, and that "it would be a flagrant violation of the basic democratic rights of the American people."

PICKETS ON WHEELS: Protesting General Motors' refusal to grant the UAW-CIO a 30% wage increase to offset the cut in take-home pay and the rising cost of living, mobile pickets circle the GM building in Detroit.

GM INJUNCTION PLEA ASKS PICKET BAN

THE General Motors Corp. this week continued to defy the public and the CIO Auto Workers, whose strike is almost a month old.

GM's continued defiance of the UAW-CIO was shown this week when it rushed into court in Cleveland and Chicago—on the very day negotiations were resumed—to ask injunctions against picketing its office buildings in those cities.

The turn the negotiations took also showed the huge corporation's defiance of the public and the strikers. Emerging from the negotiation sessions, UAW Vice-Pres. Walter P. Reuther said that the company thought that "hope" was the basis of the cost of new cars but the union maintained that "cost accounting" was the basis and reiterated its demand for "arithmetic" which the company has steadfastly refused to discuss.

UAW has maintained that the company can well afford to grant a 30% raise in wages without boosting the cost of its cars.

Referring to the requested injunctions, Reuther said that the firm could ask "for all the injunctions they want, but the judges can't make automobiles."

Further showing its belligerent attitude, the company this week announced cancellation of its current contract with UAW.

Meanwhile, although Congress has not acted upon President Truman's proposals for anti-strike legislation, he this week named a fact-finding board in the dispute—one of his recommendations. UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas and Reuther were quick to state that the union would cooperate 100% with the board.

"We will place before the committee all of the facts and figures in our possession relating to the corporation's ability to pay the 30% wage increase," Thomas said. "We know the arithmetic of the situation, as revealed by those facts and by the committee's examination of the corporation's books, will clearly demonstrate the soundness and the practicality of our 30% wage increase demand."

GM Vice-Pres. Harry W. Anderson belatedly said that the corporation expects to attend the first meeting of the board scheduled to meet in Washington on Wednesday. Members of the board are Chairman Walter P. Stacy, chairman of the recent labor-management conference; Lloyd K. Garrison, War Labor Board chairman, and Milton Eisenhower, brother of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

A national delegates' conference of the GM department of UAW, meeting last week, rejected Truman's request that they return to work while the fact-finding board deliberated, and also backed CIO Pres. Philip Murray in his denunciation of Truman's anti-strike proposals.

The negotiations will be resumed Dec. 17.

UAW negotiations with the Ford Motor Co. were continuing, with the UAW proposing a production guarantee plan which would allow the company to fine wildcat strikers $3 a day for the first offense and $5 for the second. The company rejected the union's wage demands and asked a speed-up in production.

In New York City a special joint CIO committee announced plans for a mass picketline at the GM office building, and a mass rally in Columbus Circle Dec. 20 in support of the GM strikers. Thomas and Reuther are scheduled as main speakers at the rally.

STEEL STRIKE JAN. 14 LINES UP 'BIG 3' FOR PAY SHOWDOWN

A unanimous vote this week of the CIO United Steelworkers 175-man Wage Policy Committee to strike the steel industry Jan. 14 lines up CIO's three biggest union's for a showdown fight involving their nearly 3,000,000 members in a struggle with America's biggest corporations for wage increases necessary to maintain an adequate standard of living (see UAW and UE stories).

The steel vote, taken in Pittsburgh with CIO Pres. Philip Murray presiding as head of the Steelworkers Union, unanimously passed resolutions which:

1. Condemned President Truman's proposed anti-strike legislation as "viciously anti-labor and an attack upon our basic democratic liberties."

2. Rejected his proposal for a fact-finding committee on the grounds not only that it would cause months of delay but also because "the clear-cut facts involved in our present disputes with the steel industry are in the possession of the government."

3. Charged that the industry's refusal to bargain collectively on wages, and the threats made by many concerns to cancel contracts in the event of a strike, have "revealed its true present design to destroy the union and thereby freeze the wages of the steelworkers for ever increasing extortionate profits."

The vote to strike was supported by a previous NLRB ballot of steel workers, which showed them 5-1 in favor of a walkout to secure $2 a day requested wage increases.

Both votes came, the union charged, after the industry had openly rejected attempts of Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach to secure resumption of collective bargaining.

It is expected that the proposed strike will affect nearly 800,000 workers, who are fed up with delays in negotiations as conducted over a period of many months during the war by the Natl. War Labor Board and who are completely disgusted with the three-month delay since the union first called for current direct bargaining with the industry.

The Committee said that government statistics show not only the need of the steel workers to receive a wage increase but the ability of the corporations to pay it.

"The Office of Price Administration has a full report on the financial condition of the steel industry," the Committee stated. "The Office of War Mobilization & Reconversion has a complete report on the financial condition of American industry. In spite of the repeated demands of the United Steelworkers and President Murray, that these reports be made public, they are repressed within the government."

Company propaganda that the union does not have the right to strike under the contract was answered by a resolution based on a comprehensive statement by Lee Pressman, general counsel for the Steelworkers and for CIO.

Pressman noted that the provisions in the steel contracts relating to the right to reopen wage negotiations during the life of the agreements were incorporated under a WLB directive.

He pointed out that another WLB directive on Oct. 25, 1945 noted that there has been a change in national wage policy justifying the reopening of the matter of a general wage increase under clauses such as contained in the steel agreements. The WLB said that such issues should be the subject of collective bargaining, and could not be presented to the Board because no such new disputes would be accepted.

"The union," Pressman said, "clearly maintained that all matters covered by the agreement—except the issue of a general wage increase—would be fixed for the full term of the agreement until Oct. 16, 1946.

"The issue of a general wage increase, however, under the agreement could be reopened for collective bargaining at any time prior to the termination date provided there would occur a change in the national wage policy.

"In the event the subject is reopened and in the course of collective bargaining the parties cannot agree—clearly—the union would have a perfect right to strike on this issue.

"To deny the union this right is to make meaningless the right of the union to reopen the matter of a general wage increase. If the right to reopen means merely the right to discuss the union's request with the corporation and to hope for a mutual agreement, this right is devoid of meaning."

PASS THE AMMUNITION! IT'S FREEZING IN DETROIT

By PATRICIA BRONTE

THE sober-faced little boy was bundled up against Detroit's below-freezing weather. One mittened hand clung to his mother's heavy slacks. Behind them walked his 10-year-old sister, a woolen scarf wrapped tightly around her head and throat, a warm coat buttoned against the biting cold.

It was Sunday. They had come directly from church services to duty on the CIO United Auto Workers' picket line at Turnstedt-Chevrolet. Probably the little boy was estimating how soon, during the next three hours, he would be given a bowl of hot soup and a ham sandwich.

Women workers' children often join them on the picket line. They usually march the whole three-hour shift, and their seriousness is impressive.

In the 20 picket lines at Ternstedt, about one in every five strikers is a woman; women's auxiliaries man the strike kitchens.

Strike kitchen food isn't fancy, but it sticks to your ribs. Hot coffee, soup, doughnuts and tuna fish, cheese, bologna and ham sandwiches are the usual fare. The orders are phoned in by the picket captains, and are prepared at local headquarters.

The Ternstedt strike committee has taken over all small restaurants. There they serve complete hot meals to pickets who prefer to put in all their time, rather than the regular, three-hour, every-other-day stint.

The other day, a woman striker, who's been raising chickens on the side, surprised everyone by bringing down 20 dressed broilers. A neighbor had chipped in some canned goods she put up last summer.

Strikers also pitch in and do other jobs, like distributing hundreds of copies of the UAW-CIO take-home pay posters—"must your children eat less because the war is over?" on street cars and buses and in neighborhood store windows. So far, they've never been refused space for a poster.

Servicemen, some in uniform, dot every picket line. Ternstedt has about 50 veterans on regular duty. One sailor, the son of C. W. Tanner, a finisher, spent every day of his furlough on the picket line. He said:

"My dad backed me up in wartime; I'm backing him up in peacetime."

Last week the first test case of a serviceman's rights to unemployment benefits came up before the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission. No decision has been reached.

General Motors complained to the cops when the Ternstedt strikers began using a public address system to entertain picketers. "Maintaining a public nuisance" was the complaint, but the cops came out and said it was okay.

Two accordianists tour the 20 picket lines constantly.

Every day, non-striking, sympathetic workers make up at least 10 per cent of the picket lines. About 150 came over at one time from Ford Local 600; they circled the plant with their cars. Another day, the entire crew of the S.S. James Watts, NMU members, spent their three hours ashore in Detroit on the lines.

The marchers stay on duty from 6 a. m. until 10 p. m. After dark, strikers' scout cars patrol the plants, with lone sentries posted at each gate.

COOL-OFF AIM—UNION BUSTING

THE national industrial picture is so "thoroughly fraught with danger to our future well-being that we cannot afford now to tolerate the kind of stupidity and bungling that characterized the rush to enact such bills as the Smith-Connally Act of 1943," CIO Pres. Philip Murray told Congress this week in opposing the Truman anti-strike bill (HR 4908).

Appearing at the House Labor Committee hearings on the Truman proposal to impose a 30-day "cooling-off" period and "fact-finding" boards on labor, Murray asked:

"Are we in crisis today because labor has failed to 'cool-off'? Are we in crisis today because the facts are not known or not available?"

There has been no lack of cooling-off on the part of labor and certainly the cuts in take-home pay, contrasted with enormous increases in profits, are available to everybody, he said.

Citing two major CIO wage cases, he pointed out that the Steelworkers "formulated their wage demands in September and sought immediate negotiations with the steel industry.

"It is 90 days since that time and in their action of this week the Steelworkers have still deferred the final resort to strike—an action which the attitude of the industry has forced upon us—for still another 30 days.

"In the automobile industry the workers thrashed about for over 60 days in futile efforts to induce General Motors to engage in real collective bargaining.

"No one can suggest that there has been action in haste or in heat. These workers have been cooled off and cooled off until they have almost been frozen out of the picture.

"Against that background, I ask you gentlemen whether it is not sheer nonsense to propose as a total solution for our present ills 'cooling-off periods.' Does labor speak too strongly when it suspects in such proposals an effort to cloud some of the real problems and to evade the responsibility for taking action in directions that will really meet them?

"Such proposals, in the light of the facts clear to everyone, must be born either of a complete lack of understanding or complete hypocrisy."

Under questioning by Acting Committee Chairman Ramspeck (D. Ga), Murray said that the CIO is strongly opposed to any legislation "looking toward compulsion of labor or robbing them of their constitutional right to strike.

"The purpose back of this bill is to destroy labor," he said, "and the effect of it would be the same. Perhaps the sponsors of this measure do not agree that it has such a purpose, but it is there."

Pressed by labor-baiting Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.) for "some kind of action" to allay industrial unrest, Murray let the committee have his answer: "Repeal this abominable carry-back and carry-forward provision of the tax laws."

Explaining that carry-back and carry-forward amounts to "lock-out benefits for industry," since they are guaranteed their 1936-39 profit level no matter how little they operate, Murray continued:

"This carry-back is an atrocity against the American public. It permits industry to be as irresponsible as it likes, with no penalty attached. It should be repealed in the interests of all the American people."

Asked in shocked tones by Rep. Buck (R. N. Y.) if he considered U. S. Steel and General Motors irresponsible, Murray answered the Staten Island Congressman by bluntly saying "yes" and adding: "Both corporations, by their refusal to bargain collectively, have utterly disregarded their public obligations."

After reading his prepared testimony, Murray elaborated on the fallacies of fact finding as a means of settling industrial disputes. "The Truman bill seeks to give the impression that cooling-off would only last 30 days, during the fact-finding process.

"But what about an industry refusal to hand over all their books. What about a lengthy litigation in the courts to compel an industry to produce everything the fact finding board needed?

"It is impossible for any board to do a complete job in 20 days. The proposal is impractical and unworkable. Yet during all this delay, workers are regimented and compelled not to take strike action."

Murray sharply criticized reports that the House Committee was planning to blitz through the report on the bill. Despite a contradiction from Ramspeck, this is what is taking place—as the committee showed when it voted to go into executive session Dec. 15 for apparently final consideration of the measure.

Turning to the proposed "fact-finding" boards, second main feature of the Truman bill, Murray pointed out that the facts of life on a present-day wage earner's income are not a rare and baffling element in the industrial picture that must be sought out by elaborate and time consuming special studies.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has just published a study showing that workers in 1944 needed a minimum of $42 a week take-home for living at "minimum levels not injurious to health and well-being." For 1945, with steadily rising living costs, the amount needed is higher.

The OPA has "complete data on the economic conditions of the steel industry" that led it to deny a price increase, though this information has not been made public.

The Commerce Department has similar figures on the whole picture of industry, again unreleased but known to show huge profits and reserves. Similarly, the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion has figures showing that industry can afford a wage increase of 24% and still maintain profits double pre-war years. This report (revealed in The CIO NEWS of Oct. 29) was unsuccessfully suppressed by the director of OWMR.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has established that industry will have a net working capital of $50 billion by 1946. 1946 profits will "equal or exceed pre-war figures," and 1945 profits after taxes are three times 1936-39.

"If it is facts that we need," Murray asked, "why have these government agencies attempted to conceal these facts from the public? If it is facts that we seek, the facts are there ready to speak forth in full vigor as soon as the gags are removed."

CAN'T GET A RADIO? BOSSES ON STRIKE

BULLETIN: The NLRB announced that early returns showed that members of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers voted 6-1 for a strike.

THE CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week charged that the electrical industry is deliberately holding back radios, refrigerators, washing machines and other electrical appliances from the Christmas trade. They've called for a Congressional investigation.

UE's executive board rejected an offer to increase pay in the electrical division of General Motors plants only 13 cents an hour and announced that it will not be forced into a strike by GM, Westinghouse Electric or General Electric Corps. before Christmas. The union is demanding a $2-a-day increase for employes of the three firms.

Meanwhile, early returns from a vote conducted this week under the Smith-Connally Act, showed that the 270,000 employes of the three corporations would favor striking when necessary.

Armed with facts collected by 39 special union investigators, a UE committee headed by Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald called this week on Secretary of Commerce Wallace, and on Sen. Murray (D., Mont) and Sen. Mead (D., N. Y.), chairmen, respectively, of the Education & Labor Committee and of the Special Committee to investigate the Natl. Defense Program. These two committees are being asked to conduct the probe.

Fitzgerald said that while many appliance manufacturers are storing their products rather than placing them on the market, the majority "have deliberately held back production, falsely blaming shortage of parts on 'labor troubles' or conversion difficulties.

"Actually the reason for the hold-back of appliances is the fact that for every dollar of profit from products sold during 1945, manufacturers will make four times as much in 1946, because of the repeal of excess profits tax. In addition, because of their compaign to abolish OPA price ceilings, electrical manufacturers are holding back their products now, hoping to reap larger profits later.

"A third fact of the manufacturers' hold-back is a drive to weaken labor unions—an effort to combat the UE's and the entire CIO's demand for desperately needed wage and salary increases.

"A congressional investigation of these warehouses would be a good place to start," UE said in making public the addresses of GE and Westinghouse warehouses.

Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak of UE said fear of a Congressional investigation "has already helped to release for Christmas shoppers a small number of radios and other electrical appliances."

Emspak deplored "the fact that OPA is lifting price ceilings in the face of the fact that the companies are showing unequaled arrogance in rejecting the demand of their employes for urgently needed $2-a-day wage increases."

Wires Praise Murray

MORE than 150 telegrams congratulating CIO Pres. Philip Murray on his Dec. 4 radio speech attacking President Truman's anti-strike proposals were received from local and international CIO unions, and from church, civic and progressive organizations, some of them enclosing copies of protesting letters sent to the White House.

- "I have been instructed by our membership to notify you that you have our wholehearted support in your fight to better the living conditions of all of us," wrote the Chevrolet Unit of Local 14, CIO Auto Workers.
- "We pledge to mobilize the widest possible support behind the struggles of the CIO in auto, steel, electrical equipment and all other industries and to defeat the Administration's plan," wired the N. Y. CIO City Council.
- The executive board of Local 65, CIO Steelworkers, Chicago, tuned in Murray's speech while in session and immediately sent a congratulatory wire.
- The N. Y. County executive committee of the American Labor Party let Murray know that it was conducting a wide campaign to defeat the Truman proposals in Congress, including printing 100,000 post cards urging defeat of HR 4908, the anti-labor bill, to be distributed among voters for mailing to Congress.

WHY RAISE BASIC PAY

6. LABOR IS STILL SUFFERING FROM WARTIME WAGE FREEZE

President Roosevelt's wartime Economic Stabilization program aimed to control profits, wages and prices. Actually only wages were effectively frozen. Prices and profits soared, and now are rising faster than ever while wages still lag.

WHAT CAUSES STRIKES?

To hear some people talk, you'd think labor wanted strikes and called them just for the hell of it.

Actually, working people have least reason of all to like strikes. They bear the full brunt of them, in loss of income while they last, and in every other attendant discomfort and disadvantage.

As the most substantial section of the public, working people have the most reason of all to want industry operating at full blast and without interruption, to make available a greater supply of goods and services at lower prices, as well as to provide steady jobs for themselves.

Why, then, are so many workers today voting by overwhelming majorities to go on strike?

They do so because other people have created intolerable conditions under which the workers have no other recourse but to strike. The strike vote does not cause a strike, it is the effect of strike causes which lie much deeper and which are not created by labor.

The United Steelworkers' decision to strike on January 14, after 400,000 workers have voted by secret ballot for such action, is a case in point.

Here are some of the causes:

Wage rates were frozen during the war while living costs soared. Since the war, take-home pay has been so cut through loss in working time and downgrading that the workers can hardly make ends meet, let alone provide the purchasing power necessary for a prosperous community.

So the union demanded a wage increase of $2 a day, as partial restoration of the wage cut suffered.

Meanwhile, steel profits during the war rose 276 per cent over prewar levels—from $933 million to over $3½ billion—and net profits, after taxes, rose 113 per cent.

The steel industry is in a position to pay the $2 increase and still earn next year over $400 million in net profits after taxes—or 3½ times its peacetime average.

There is nothing, therefore, in the steelworkers' wage demands that need cause a strike.

The orderly procedure required by the law and desired by the workers is that employers and union should sit around the conference table and bargain collectively until a satisfactory settlement is reached.

But the steel corporations have refused to bargain collectively. Even when the government asked a resumption of collective bargaining, and the union at once accepted, the U. S. Steel Corp., still said "No," and ran full-page ads saying "nothing can be settled through collective bargaining."

Instead of bringing sharp pressure to bear on the corporations to abide by the law, which requires collective bargaining, the administration supinely yielded to their arrogance and called for a law to shackle labor.

So three CAUSES of the steelworkers' strike vote at once emerge, none of them created by labor: (1) the intolerable economic condition of sharply cut wages in contrast to fantastic profits; (2) the refusal of the corporations to bargain collectively; and (3) the failure of the Government to require collective bargaining.

The answer to the question, "Why do workers want to strike?" is: They don't; they're forced to by conditions and employers' actions over which they have no control.

But the real question that should be asked is: Why do employers force strikes?

The answer, certainly in the case of steel, lies partly in their greed for exorbitant profits at the expense of labor and the public; and partly in the emergence of increasing signs that they're trying to start another union-busting campaign similar to that which followed the last war.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

REMEMBER the old anti-New Deal cracks about Santa Claus in the White House?

Well, Santa Truman is full of Christmas spirit, or something. He insists that his gift be ready for labor to wear by Christmas.

It's a nice new pair of handcuffs.

•

We kept cool with Coolidge, only to get hungry with Hoover. Is it now to be "cooling off" with Truman?

•

With wages frozen during the war and then cut to the size of an ice-cube after V-J Day, they cooled off for three chilly months listening to U. S. Steel say "No."

•

One of the chilliest parts of these cooling-off periods is the cold shoulder turned to the workers by corporations and government, so long as they think the unions are too frozen to fight.

•

The first fact we find about the Truman bill (introduced by Rep. Norton and Sen. Ellender) is that it denies the right to strike.

Labor fought for decades to win this right. Abraham Lincoln thanked God for it. But Harry Truman wants to destroy it—for 30 days at a time.

•

Workers have always had the right to walk off the job when their employers want them to.

The whole point of the right to strike is being able to walk out at a time when the employers don't want it.

A law which forbids striking only when the iron is hot is as undemocratic as a law forbidding voting only during the election period.

•

Labor may voluntarily refrain from exercising its right to strike, as during a union agreement or through the adoption of a wartime no-strike pledge.

Such decisions are the prerogative of free men.

But only slaves submit to being forced to work against their will—even for 30 days.

•

The love of liberty is such that anti-strike laws (short of complete fascism) never stop strikes and usually have the opposite effect.

The Smith-Connally anti-strike act provoked so many strikes that even the labor-baiters who forced it through are now demanding its repeal.

In Australia, where an anti-strike compulsory arbitration law has long been in effect, the hundred thousand or so workers now on strike represent a larger proportion of strikers than in any other country.

•

If there were a Nobel peace prize for the industrial field, it should go to Philip Murray.

For he and the movement he heads are doing more than anyone else to remove the causes of industrial warfare by demanding adequate wage increases through genuine collective bargaining.

•

The Iron Cross for the worst industrial war-monger is a little more difficult to award.

Leading contenders are the corporations that spurn collective bargaining while they hold up labor and the country for lower wages, higher prices and higher profits.

But running neck-and-neck with them are the sponsors of the May-Arends, Ball-Burton-Hatch, Hoffman, Hobbs and other anti-labor bills, in whose company Truman now chooses to run.

Such bills will encourage employer aggression, call forth labor resistance and raise general industrial hell.

•

If the administration really wants to find facts, it hasn't far to look.

The OPA has a full report on the financial condition of the steel industry. The Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion has a complete report on the financial condition of American industry generally.

These and other impartial government studies show conclusively labor's need for substantial wage increases and industry's ability to pay them.

•

But to get back to the Christmas spirit, every day is Christmas now for Big Business.

Uncle Sam is its Santa, giving guaranteed profits the year around through tax refunds carried back and carried forward by Treasury reindeer.

And Santa's best gift to Messrs. Claws is yet to come—repeal of the excess profits tax for their Happy New Year.

LET THE RECORD SPEAK

CIO News' new, exclusive feature, giving verbatim excerpts from debate in both House and Senate, this week, deals with FEPC and price-control.

Next week we'll give you sections from the debate on the Hobbs anti-union bill and on the Truman anti-strike bill—if debate on the latter has started by that time.

Passing the Buck

REP. ALBERT GORE (D., Tenn), speaking on the new GOP platform, which reaffirmed its formal support for a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, announced last week:

"It is strange, of course, for the Republican Party to officially put their foot down and stand there. But here is where they have done it. Yes, sir; with audacious courage and inspired leadership they say: We favor 'a 'strong, solvent, free America.' And that is where everybody is supposed to shout 'hurray.'"

REP. CLARE HOFFMAN (R., Mich.), who boasts that CIO officials have "condemned and opposed me." "Is it not true that the Democratic Party put its foot down on this FEPC issue?"

GORE: "For one thing, the Democratic Party put its foot down on that issue in its platform. For another, it has put its foot down through the statements and the messages of two great Democratic presidents, and the House Labor Committee has favorably reported it.

"A discharge petition to bring the bill to the floor of Congress is lying on the speakers desk. It requires 218 signatures. There are 157 signatures and only 50 of them are Republicans."

REP. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., (R., Mass.), Republican House leader:

"As one who is for the FEPC, and is doing everything he can to see that it passes this House before we adjourn next June, I hope the gentleman will cooperate in getting that additional vote in the Committee on Rules."

REP. VITO MARCANTONIO (ALP. N. Y.), co-chairman of the Steering Committee for the passage of FEPC:

"We all know that the situation is in the Rules Committee. There is a petition on the speaker's desk, and the Republicans have been lagging behind. If the minority leader leads the parade down to that desk and gets his followers to sign that petition, we will have FEPC before the House. Let us stop this bluffing on that proposition."

REP. MICHAEL BRADLEY (D., N. Y.), author of the discharge petition to bring the bill for $25 for 26 weeks before the House for a vote:

"I believe there is not a single Republican in the House from the State of Pennsylvania who has signed that discharge petition. If I am wrong I wold like to be corrected."

MARTIN: "I do not know what the rules of the House are now, but I think formerly petitions were secret. I will tell the gentleman I will be glad to cooperate with the majority leader any time he wants to unite to get the legislation to the floor through the discharge petition."

GORE, returning to his description of the Republican Party platform:

"About all this masterpiece of evasion says is this:
'We're against taxes,
'We're against sin,
'We're against keeping The Democrats in.'"

Sky's the Limit

SEN. W. LEE O'DANIEL (polltaxer, Tex.), the same Pappy O'Daniel who has just ousted 14 District families from an apartment building to give his family "adequate" living quarters, and author of S 1676, a bill to repeal the Price Control Act:

"During the war somebody had an idea that the winning of the war would be aided if we established an OPA. So we established OPA. All of our enemies have now surrendered unconditionally and the war is over, due to the heroic efforts and sacrifices of our armed forces on the fields of battle and in spite of the antics of OPA on the economic home front.

"It seems to me to be perfectly in order to ask for the unconditional surrender of the OPA so that our economic system of free private enterprise may get back into gear and function as it did before the OPA was born.

"Therefore, Mr. President, I am sending to the desk a bill which would abolish the OPA."

SEN. GLENN TAYLOR (D., Idaho), young Liberal elected with PAC support:

"I heartily disagree with the sentiments which have been expressed by the Senator from Texas. I feel that if we were to abolish the OPA at this time we would simply surrender to uncontrolled inflation which could very conceivably end in the complete break-down of our economic system."

ALTERED GI MEASURE WOULD ROB VETS

THE real estate lobby is gradually getting what it wants in the GI Bill. The compromise measure agreed upon this week by Senate and House conferees does not give the lobby all it wants but it makes it "easier" for a veteran to get a loan by eliminating the necessity of getting the approval of the Veterans Administration. Congress is expected to pass the bill.

The hand of the lobby is given away by the change in the wording which states that loans may be given to buy properties of "reasonable value" rather than "normal reasonable value"—which means that although many veterans will be glad now to buy properties at inflated values because they "must have some place to live" they will later rue their investment. The amount guaranteed by Government loan was raised from $2000 to $4000.

The CIO asked in testimony before a Senate subcommittee that appraisal of property values be put in the hands of the U. S. Housing authority. Under the compromise the power of approval will be given to banks, veterans and VA-approved local appraisers. Chairman Rankin (Miss. polltaxer), of the House Veterans Committee, wanted to remove all controls, forcing through the House a bill which would have turned over the appraisal system to the banks alone, and his reported anger at the compromise indicated that the real estate interests did not get all they wanted.

Some of the features of the compromise are definitely on the credit side of the ledger, although the changes did not go as far as the CIO recommended.

Under the new compromise veterans would not be barred from future bonuses if they take advantage of the educational and loan features of the bill.

The age factor—now 25 years—would be eliminated in the educational provision—which is what the CIO asked. The subsistence allowances for ex-GIs in school would be raised from $50 to $65 a month for single veterans, from $75 to $90 a month for married ones, and from $92 to $105 a month for disabled veterans. In all cases the CIO asked for more.

On another front, the CIO hailed the passage by the Senate of the Mead Resolution to provide temporary housing for veterans, as part of the demands on behalf of homes for veterans as proposed by Pres. R. J. Thomas of the Auto Workers as chairman of the CIO Housing Committee in a letter to Truman.

Fearing that the cost of homes for veterans and others would continue to advance, Thomas this week wired vigorous objection to allocation of scarce materials to homes costing $10,000 or less, urging that the ceiling be lowered to $7,500 "with proper safeguards on standards to assure stabilization of value as well as prices."

On Foreign Policy

"Today organized labor understands better than ever in its history that foreign policy and domestic policy are interwoven," Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, last week told the Philadelphia Council of American-Soviet Friendship.

Conscription Called Blow to Peace

Universal conscription will not keep the nation alerted, is harmful to youth and "will make impossible the dream of world peace amid nations distrustful of each other," Nathan E. Cowan, CIO legislative director, this week told the House Military Affairs Committee.

"We believe the greatest contribution our country can make to the peace of the world is the achievement of full employment and security for 60 million Americans," said Cowan. "We believe the accomplishment of such an end will go a long way toward the stabilization of our economy and that of the nations of the world, and would do more to insure world peace than the acceleration and building up of our armed might.

"We believe that the advent of the atomic bomb has revolutionized the strategy of war. There can be no defense against its destructive possibilities. Only a greatly strengthened United Nations Organization, with power to control the use of the bomb and to police its production, offers any hope for security."

Meyer Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee told the committee that the U. S. ought to have a small armed force at home and ought to contribute personnel to an international police force. He urged that the Army, Navy and Marine Corps be democratized to eliminate the caste system which puts the enlisted personnel and the officers in the relation of slaves and masters.

Back March of Dimes

CIO President Murray, with heads of other national labor organizations, has been named a co-chairman of the Natl. Labor Division of the 1946 March of Dimes fund, to aid infantile paralysis victims.

RECONVERSION VICTIMS

FAILURE of reconversion planning in the period following V-J Day has resulted in a huge casualty list among American workers, with Negroes, women, veterans and aged persons most widely affected, President Truman was informed this week in a report by the Natl. Committee on the Human Aspects of Reconversion.

The social workers' survey on the aftermath of victory in 19 cities found "confusion and tension throughout the nation, with anticipation of an increasingly grave situation a few months from now." Conclusions of the survey were in sharp contrast to a recent optimistic report on reconversion issued by Truman.

"Problems of the Negroes, veterans and aged workers were found to be the most acute of all," said Clarence King, professor at the New York School of Social Work and chairman of the committee. "These groups are already bogged down by unemployment, housing shortages and discrimination to the extent that their plight becomes a serious threat to whole localities."

The committee proposed a six-point program to avert widespread human suffering: (1) immediate action for federal responsibility for full employment, (2) extension of federal social security measures to include a category of general relief and special relief for transients, (3) increased unemployment insurance benefits, (4) federalization of U. S. Employment Service, (5) a permanent national FEPC, (6) amendment of the wage-hour act to increase minimum wages.

20c A MEAL PER PERSON

Fables about "high" wartime wages and savings were exposed this week in a U. S. Labor Dept. survey of family expenditures and savings in 1944 in more than 100 urban communities.

Although 1944 set a record for wartime profits, one-fourth of city families in the nation did not have enough income to meet their most essential needs, the survey reveals.

In this period of high prices, these families had to live on an average expenditure of less than 20 cents per meal per person and less than $30 a month for rent, fuel, lighting and refrigeration.

Food alone took four-fifths of their income, and they had to borrow to buy war bonds and to pay their life insurance premiums.

The incomes of these families ranged from less than $500 to less than $2,000 a year, though the Labor Dept. estimates that it took approximately $2,400 for a family of two or three to "break even" in 1944.

The survey shows that families with an annual income of $2,000 to $2,500 had average net savings of only $122.

"Even if net savings of these amounts were made in each of the previous three or four years," the report states, "the total would still not be large enough to tide most of these families through extended periods of unemployment. Families with lower incomes accumulated no reserve."

The figures show that in half of the families with incomes of $3,000 to $4,000 two or more persons contributed to the family funds, and that net incomes of $4,000 or more meant an average of two workers per family.

One World And Labor

PUBLIC anxiety over the administration's failure to take thought of starvation in areas liberated from the Axis is reflected in a broadcast Raymond Swing made over the ABC network this week in which he said:

"Quite a number of letters have reached me lately that suggest that their writers are not sleeping well because of anxiety for the food situation in Europe and the Far East, and our responsibility for it.

"They have cause for anxiety. One cause is a statement issued by the Dept. of Agriculture recently which spoke of reducing food production so as to maintain prices.

"So at a time when many Americans are willing to continue rationing, and to undergo a certain amount of sacrifice for the sake of hungry allies, there is this disconcerting talk of reducing production to maintain food prices."

Important to note here is that farmers will not get the major benefits from price hikes brought about by reducing production. The big share of such price raises goes to food monopoly concerns. And note this—our own food prices will go up as well.

WORLD LABOR UNITY

Progressives in the AFL are continuing pressure for affiliation to the World Federation of Trade Unions. In a recent New York meeting, delegates at a meeting of the "Committee for AFL Participation in WFTU" heard reports from AFL observers at the Paris meeting which formed the world labor body call for pressure "to force the leaders of the AFL to listen to the clamor of our seven million members."

The meeting resolved that the WFTU, as the voice of world labor, has a leading part to play in United Nations decisions, "and in shaping decisions on atomic energy for peace and progress instead of war and destruction."

LATIN-AMERICAN LABOR

Membership in the Confederation of Latin-American Workers (CTAL) is now up to six million with the admission of Brazilian unions and growth in CTAL's 19 other affiliates, President Lombardo Toledano said in Mexico City this week.

According to an Allied Labor News report, Toledano pressed labor's attack on the Argentine dictatorship, saying that CTAL "will continue to support all proposals for joint aid by the Americas to the democratic Argentine people in their fight against the fascist dictatorship."

Speaking on CTAL friendship with CIO, Toledano said: "Our relations with the CIO are excellent and close and have been so for a long time."

The CTAL does not contemplate asking for a joint CIO-CTAL committee such as has been set up with the British, French and Soviet unions, he said. CIO has had a Latin-American Affairs Committee, headed by Jacob S. Potofsky, for over two years now.

'MURDER' IN THE CRADLE

Stern demands of war exposed the deplorable physical condition of hundreds of thousands of our citizens. The problem now, in peace, is: How to improve the nation's health. This is the first of several articles, by prominent physicians, on what is wrong and what to do about it.

By MARTHA MENDELL, M. D.
Member, Executive Committee, Physicians Forum

IN this age of medical miracles it is hard to understand why we, as a Nation, continue to allow the needless death of thousands of mothers and infants every year.

Certainly, expectant mothers and newborn babies have a special claim—if anyone has—to the very best that modern medicine has to offer.

Yet, the quality of medical care for mothers and babies is very uneven in this country. Expectant mothers in some places have much less chance of getting safely through the maternity period than those in others. In New Mexico, for example, the maternal death rate is 47 per 10,000 live births, whereas in Minnesota it is only 14.

CIO Exclusive

Likewise, babies born in some parts of the country stand much less chance of getting through their first year alive than those born elsewhere. For the child born in New Mexico, the chances are 9 out of 100 that he will die before his first birthday. But for one born in Connecticut the risk goes down to 3 out of 100.

Suppose every mother in the U. S., regardless of residence, were given the same chance of survival as the Minnesota woman. And suppose every child got the same break as the youngster born in Connecticut. This would mean saving the lives every year of almost 3,000 American mothers and 31,000 American children!

There is no good reason why this cannot be done. There is no mystery about what is needed. First, every part of the country should be provided with the kind of hospitals, health centers, clinics, and laboratories needed for the practice of up-to-date, scientific medicine. Secondly, we should take steps to reduce the cost of medical care to the individual and to make sure that no one is denied good care because of inability to pay.

Good medical care during pregnancy is not cheap. The expectant mother should be examined by the doctor at regular intervals. If the doctor is to do his job well he must be aided by laboratory tests that will give warning signals when something is wrong. Then precautionary and life-saving steps can be taken before it is too late.

Likewise, expert care is needed when the baby arrives. Such care can best be given in a good hospital, where equipment and trained personnel are available. If special treatment such as a blood transfusion is needed, it can be done safely in a hospital.

The baby's first year is the most dangerous. During this period the child needs especially careful attention. Health and vigor in later life is likely to be determined to a considerable extent by the care given during these crucial 12 months. Therefore, every mother should be able to look to a good physician or clinic for advice and help.

Most of the needless deaths of mothers and babies occur in those rural States where people have little money to spend for medical care or any of the other good things of life.

In these places there are few, if any, good hospitals, clinics or laboratories. Doctors, too, are scarce because most doctors want to practice where they have the advantages of a hospital and where the people can afford to pay for care.

In large cities, more than 90% of children are born in hospitals, but in rural communities about 50% of births still take place at home. In 1943, 600,000 rural mothers were delivered in their homes, and of these 160,000 did not have a doctor to attend them.

Only about one-fourth of our rural counties have prenatal clinics conducted by physicians under the supervision of state health agencies. Two out of three rural counties have no "well-baby clinics" under such supervision where mothers can take their children for periodic check-ups by a doctor. One-fourth of our small and medium-sized cities have no such clinics.

Passage of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill (S. 1050) would give a square deal, medically speaking, to ALL the mothers and children in this country. The Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill would provide, among other things, a nation-wide network of hospitals and other needed facilities, as well as expanded public health programs in maternal and child health. At the same time, it would remove the financial barrier to good medical care by establishing a national health insurance system through which everyone, by paying a small percentage of his earnings, scaled in accordance with his income, would receive all the high-quality medical care needed.

This bill deserves the earnest support of all who have not only the interest of mothers and children at heart, but that of the rest of the population as well.

CIO POLICY MEET CALLED JAN. 29-31

THE CIO will hold a Natl. Policy Conference at Atlantic City, N. J., Jan. 29, 30 and 31, it was announced this week by Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. The meeting, at the Hotel Chelsea, will include 250 delegates, and will be held in lieu of the regular and larger CIO convention because of travel difficulties.

The CIO Executive Board will meet at the Chelsea Jan. 28 to draft a conference agenda.

In a call sent to CIO affiliates, Murray and Carey listed the apportionment of delegates as follows:

National, international unions, organizing committees . . . one-half their normal number of delegates.

State CIO councils . . . one delegate each.

County or city CIO councils "with the larger membership" . . . one delegate each.

Local industrial unions "with the larger membership" . . . one delegate each.

Emphazing the importance of the meeting, Murray and Carey warned: "Is is not impossible for fascist ideas to conquer America even though Axis military might is crushed. Reaction, which was temporarily partially silenced by the war, is again becoming prevalent. Those who place profits before people, those who believe the Negro should be kept 'in his place,' those who seek a scapegoat in the Jew, are now as vociferous as ever.

"Likewise, those who seek to crush labor as the protagonist of democracy are determined to use unemployment as their tool and the financial reserves built at the taxpayers' expense as a weapon.

"Now, more than ever, the need for cooperation between all men of good will becomes evident."

CIO ON 2 NETWORKS WEEKLY STARTING JAN. 5

WATCH for CIO's regular Saturday radio shows, starting Sat., Jan. 5 over ABC and CBS stations. CBS at 3:45 p.m., ABC at 6:45 p.m. Details later.

ABC, in announcing the program, said:

"We feel that by extending these public service features, we can help to keep Americans fully informed on one of the most crucial issues of our time."

Says FM Field Open To Small Business

FM (frequency modulation) broadcasting is open to small business, labor, cooperative and educational groups because of the low cost—less than $10,000 for a 250 watt station—the Senate Small Business Committee pointed out this week in a report prepared for it by the Federal Communications Commission.

"The manufacturers' estimated costs for principal technical equipment for a small 250 watt station average around $9,508," said Sen. Glen H. Taylor of the committee.

"Although other expenses such as real estate, studio furniture and construction must be met before a station is ready to go on the air, this low cost for the static-free, high-fidelity FM transmitting equipment means that it is possible for ownership in the FM band to be widely dispersed.

"Nothing would be more unhealthy for the future of free speech and open and fair discussion of public issues than to allow control of this new FM broadcasting to become concentrated in the hands of a few people," Sen. Taylor said.

Urging that newcomers to radio file FM applications immediately, Taylor said that manufacturers as of November estimated that deliveries on FM equipment could be made as follows:

250 watts, June, 1946; 1,000 watts, April; 3,000 watts, May; and 10,000 watts, July.

Medium estimates of the costs of transmitter equipment include:

250 watts	$ 9,508
1,000 watts	14,758
3,000 watts	17,858
10,000 watts	27,308

Form Group To Push Job Program

Delegates from some 200 labor and other civic groups met in Washington this week to set up a permanent organization to fight for a legislative and political program of jobs, security and peace.

Chaired by the Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, Bishop of Chicago, the meeting held a one-day conference which heard panel discussion on full employment, civil rights, social security, and the like.

Highlight of the conference was a lunch meeting with British scientist Julian Huxley, who told the meeting of some of the potentialities of atomic energy, for peaceful work or for the ultimate destruction of mankind.

Van A. Bittner, who with James B. Carey, spoke for CIO, drew applause when he said of the Truman anti-strike bill: "Suicide is the most ignoble form of death, but if the present administration wants to die that way I suppose there's nothing we can do to stop them."

The permanent committee formed at the meeting resolved to undertake five major issues for its priority campaign: Full employment; permanent FEPC and elimination of the polltax; passage of 65-75 cents minimum wage legislation; adequate housing for veterans and other groups.

Speakers included Rep. Chase Going Woodhouse (D., Conn.); Johannes Steel, liberal radio commentator; Millard Rice, Disabled American Veterans; Clark Foreman, Southern Conference for Human Welfare; Elmer Benson, Natl. Citizens PAC, and Martin Miller for the Railroad Brotherhoods.

ACW Obtains Big Pay Hikes For 150,000

Some 150,000 clothing workers will receive wage boosts and other benefits amounting to a 20 to 31% per cent increase under a new agreement negotiated with the Clothing Manufacturers Assn. of the U. S., according to Pres. Sidney Hillman of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

These increases and other improvements, Hillman said, follow similar gains obtained earlier for cotton garment workers, laundry workers and others in the apparel industry where the union has jurisdiction.

The agreement with CMA provides a general 15c hourly increase with raises up to 25% on certain classes of work, six paid holidays and an old-age retirement fund into which the employer will put the 3% of the weekly payroll.

Carey At Russ Rally

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who recently headed the CIO delegation to the Soviet Union, will be one of the principal speakers at a Madison Square Garden rally December 18, which will officially launch Russian Relief's 1946 New York campaign to help send $25,000,000 worth of relief supplies to the Soviet people.

Way Down East Textiles 90% Organized

New England's cotton textile industry is now 90% unionized, it was reported at the quarterly meeting of the CIO Textile Workers Natl. Executive Council held last week in Boston. Ten thousand new members in Northern cotton mills were added to the union in recent weeks as a result of contract negotiations and strikes.

In the New England area some 76 mills are covered by agreements won with and without strikes. Stoppages occurred in 21 plants, but all except four involving 1,000 workers have already been settled by improved contract terms.

An 8c-an-hour pay boost with a 65c minimum was obtained and six paid holidays a year are included in each contract in addition to the standard one and two weeks' vacation clause. The union estimates that the average wage will be around 82c an hour.

A report on gains made in the carpet and rug section of the industry disclosed that 20,000 workers were covered by contracts providing pay benefits and closed shops. In the rayon and synthetic division of the union, covering 25,000 workers, a 10c increase was secured. Average hourly pay is about 90c an hour.

The council voted to raise a special strike fund of at least $250,000 through special voluntary contributions from members to augment benefits now being paid workers on strikes in New England and the South.

Ward Workers At Chicago Win Boost

The minimum wage of Chicago employes of Montgomery Ward & Co. has been boosted to 60c an hour as a result of increases offered by the company during a nation-wide one-week demonstration walkout.

The company offer, first break in five years of labor strife between the mail-order firm and United Retail Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes (CIO), was accepted by the Chicago local on behalf of approximately 8,000 employes.

Pres. Henry Anderson of Local 20 emphasized that union acceptance of the increase, which included a general 5c boost for all employes, was "without prejudice" to 19 other issues in dispute between the company and union. Without an arbitration clause, primary issue in dispute, the union would never sign a contract, he said.

FAECT Will Join UOPWA

THE CIO Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, at its Eighth National Convention in New York City this week, voted to amalgamate with the CIO United Office and Professional Workers. The convention action will now be acted upon by a membership referendum.

"This action was taken to create within CIO a more effective medium for extending organization among the nation's technical, professional and salaried employes," said Pres. Lewis Alan Berne of the FAECT. "It is our intention to create this new instrumentality to launch a nationwide organizational drive among salaried employes and to improve their economic status by extending the benefits of collective bargaining to such employes . . ."

"The Truman Administration," Berne noted in his keyonte address, "has embarked on a policy which points to the destruction of the labor movement, the repudiation of international agreements, and encouragement to big business and reaction."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray made his recent denunciation of the Truman Administration's labor policies because President Truman's recommendations to Congress on strike legislation were not mild but sweeping and dangerous, Len De Caux, Director of Public Relations, told the convention.

"Labor wants genuine fact-finding," De Caux said. "We have asked for it in the General Motors strike, in steel, etc. But that is not the issue; the issue is the anti-strike character of Truman's proposals. These proposals mean depriving labor of its basic bargaining power just when it can be most effective in the interests of the entire nation."

Love Laughs at Sewell Avery: Lila Root and William Criss, Montgomery Ward employes, met, fell in love and were married while picketing the Kansas City plant of the firm during the one-week stoppage protesting the failure of the mail-order house to arbitrate the demands of the CIO retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes. The union is seeking to restore Criss to his job. He was fired.

UPWA Delegates Set Up Strike Committee

ONE hundred and twenty-five thousand members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers throughout the nation prepared this week for a strike in the Big Four meat packing companies and a majority of the balance of the industry. The Big Four are Swift's, Armour's, Cudahy and Wilson.

Complete returns from a Natl. Labor Relations Board election showed that 56,160 favored the strike, with only 3,204 opposed.

Two hundred UPWA delegates, representing local unions throughout the U. S., unanimously directed a strike strategy committee to call a strike in the meat packing industry within the next few weeks at a time to be determined by the committee in support of its demand for a twenty-five-cent-an-hour general wage increase.

Pres. Lewis J. Clark of UPWA said:

"Up to date the major packers have made offers varying in amounts from two to four cents an hour. These offers were made to workers who have received no general increase in wage rates since August, 1941, and who are today among the lowest paid workers in American mass production industry, two-thirds of whom work at hourly rates of 82½ cents per hour and less, with some in the South receiving as low as 50 and 55 cents per hour.

"The insolent and arrogant disregard for their employes' welfare by the meat packing trusts makes strike action inevitable.

"During the period of the war while the packinghouse workers maintained an unparalleled record of support for the no-strike pledge, the Big Four packers amassed tremendous profits in doing the greatest volume of business in their history."

Shipbuilding Meet Shows the Way

INDUSTRY-WIDE collective bargaining, through a procedure which has worked successfully for five years, is continuing even in the post-war period at the national shipbuilding stabilization conference now being held at Colorado Springs, Colo.

There representatives of the shipbuilding unions, management and the Navy, Maritime Commission and War Department are meeting under the terms of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Agreement to conduct the industry's annual wage review.

The CIO Shipbuilding Workers maintain that this method of tripartite collective bargaining used since 1941 for all matters affecting the entire industry resulted during the war years in high production, efficiency of workers, effective collective bargaining and no strikes.

Present wage demands of the CIO union call for a 17½c-an-hour wage increase to make up for the rise in living costs plus a 30% general increase to compensate for the loss in take-home pay caused by the reduced work week.

Commenting on the shipbuilding conference, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said this week in Washington:

"If President Truman and the anti-labor Congressional bloc would focus attention on the Colorado Springs conference instead of urging the passage of unneeded laws, they might be pointing the way to future settlement of wage disputes and laying the pattern for adjustments in America's industries during this post-war period."

California IUC Lauds Murray

THUNDEROUS support for CIO Pres. Philip Murray's declaration on the Truman administration featured the five-day "Jobs for All" convention of the California CIO Council at San Francisco last Sunday.

"As President Murray has pointed out, Truman has made labor the scapegoat for the administration's failure to supply us with a reconversion program," stated the main resolution on political action unanimously adopted.

The convention was opened with a motion stating "as we face the battle to achieve the goal of 'Jobs for All,' we are deeply aware of the nation's need for the kind of leadership which Franklin D. Roosevelt would have given."

In his keynote speech, Regional CIO Director Harry Bridges said of Congressional anti-labor proposals, "if Congress is stupid enough to think it can stop justified strikes it will be sadly disappointed if I know the working class of the United States. The President's proposal to shackle labor was certainly answered to the point by Philip Murray."

Pres. James G. Thimmes, regional director of the Steelworkers, announced he would not be a candidate for re-election. Morris Zusman, president of the Los Angeles joint board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, was elected without opposition as his successor, as Thimmes urged.

Sec. Mervyn Rathborne was elected to his fourth term, and Thimmes was elected a council vice president.

A political action campaign for 1946 was outlined, calling for replacement of the present Republican state administration of Gov. Earl Warren, re-election of California's Liberal Democratic Congressional majority of 13 and defeat of certain key anti-labor Congressmen; all-out support for an initiative campaign for a state Fair Employment Practice Commission, and defeat of Warren-appointed GOP U. S. Senator Knowland.

New Jersey IUC Backs GM Strikers

DELEGATES to the convention of the New Jersey CIO Council last week-end in Newark joined the Auto Workers delegation in a parade around the convention hall in a spontaneous demonstration of support for the General Motors strikers. The convention later went on record for all-out support for the UAW strikers and for all the CIO internationals now in the front line of the battle for decent wages.

"This is the fight for all of us," Carl Holderman told the delegates. "In this fight and the others which are bound to come because of the concerted effort by big business to hold on to all its war-won profits, we must all take part."

Holderman, the Council's secretary-treasurer for the past five years, was elected New Jersey CIO president to succeed Irving Abramson, who has been on leave of absence from the Council since last March to direct the organization of Montgomery Ward.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was the main speaker at a testimonial dinner for Abramson in recognition of his work in establishing the New Jersey Council as a strong force in the state, and also spoke at the convention and a forum.

FLYNN ELECTED

Peter Flynn, former executive secretary, who with Holderman has been in office since Abramson's first term as president, was elected secretary-treasurer.

Allan S. Haywood, Natl. CIO vice-president and director of organization, in a speech on the opening day outlined the CIO's fight for a decent wage and price structure in the postwar era.

The convention voted unanimously to set up a Food-for-Strikers Fund to aid the UAW-CIO.

Murray's Stand Backed by GIs

Unqualified approval for CIO Pres. Philip Murray's denunciation of Truman's anti-strike proposals was received this week in a letter to Murray from six non-commissioned officers at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. The letter said: "We are sorry to see labor forced in the position of having to strike . . . Since business has taken such an uncompromising position we support your organization in the steps it has taken to force business to see reason. . . . We fully recognize the fight of labor is our fight . . ."

Unanimous Vote

Non-teaching employes at Howard University, Washington, D. C., designated the CIO Federal Workers as their collective bargaining agent by a vote of 203-0 in a Natl. Labor Relations Board election this week. Organization work was in charge of Helen Shonick, business agent, Local 10, UFWA, and Dr. Joseph Johnson, president of the Howard University branch of the local.

Hike Pay in Govt. Cafeterias

In a photo-electric finish of a race between an agreement for a new contract and a strike, a new contract between CIO Federal Workers Local 471 and Government Services, Inc., operators of 54 cafeterias in Government buildings in Washington, D. C., was approved by the members of the local two hours before a walk-out was scheduled to begin this week.

The new contract is a step toward ending substandard wages in the cafeetrias, bringing wage increases of from 20 to 23 per cent. About 60 per cent of the 2800 workers will receive 55½ cents an hour under the new pact.

Cut Luckies, Strikers Tell Neighbors

The American Tobacco strikers, now in the ninth week of their strike in Philadelphia, are conducting a house to house visiting campaign in West Philadelphia where the struck plant is located, to bring the story of the strike to the community. The strikers of the CIO Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers are giving their neighbors a letter telling the issues involved in the strike and urging them to boycott American Tobacco products, including Lucky Strike cigarettes.

The issues which led to the strike, the letter says, are the strikers' demands for a 65 cents hourly minimum wage and a 25 cent an hour increase, "so we could have a decent standard of living in this community, for ourselves, you and our kids."

Meet the Townsleys of South Bend—J. B. Townsley, the father, is 56. W. B. Townsley, the son, is 25. Their expert craftsmanship is the kind that puts extra miles of fine performance into every Studebaker. You never have to pay any premium for this plus value.

Unchanged in a changing world!

Studebaker's trustworthy father-and-son craftsmanship

CARS vary in appearance with the years. Mechanical improvements come along to add new zest and convenience to driving.

But there's one thing unchanging in the ever-changing automobile picture—Studebaker's unique father-and-son craftsmanship.

Back from the Army Air Forces to the Studebaker job of apprentice tool maker he left 'way back in 1942, has come W. A. Smith, Jr. His proud father, W. A. Smith, tool supervisor, and a veteran of 26 Studebaker years, is seen here giving the young man a helpful suggestion.

That trustworthy craftsmanship is one of the best reasons for buying a Studebaker today as it was back in motoring's goggle-and-duster era. Because of that painstaking craftsmanship, Studebaker cars stay singularly free from the need for frequent and costly repairs—they continue to command good prices as used cars, after they've left the hands of their original owners.

For generations, responsible workmen who are friendly neighbors and solid citizens with their roots deep in South Bend's history have zealously maintained Studebaker quality.

Home-loving, home-owning family men themselves, these craftsmen have been encouraging their own sons, through the years, to join with them in building Studebaker cars to the very highest standards of excellence.

Auxiliaries Bolster Strikers' Morale

By ELEANOR FOWLER

Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Auxiliaries

THE need for special efforts to reach American women with an understanding of the issues in the CIO wage campaign is underlined by a recent survey of public opinion conducted by the Washington Post. Asked "In general, how do you feel about the strikes now going on?" 57% of the women interviewed said they were opposed, as against 43% of the men.

There are many reasons for this backward attitude on the part of women. Millions of them are isolated in their homes where they have little chance for discussion of labor questions. They are exposed day after day to reactionary comment on the radio and in the commercial press.

Taking advantage of this lack of understanding, employers try to line up the women to urge their men to go back to work.

Women's auxiliaries have been one of the instruments through which unions have mobilized families solidly behind the union. The work which the UAW auxiliaries are doing now in calling meetings of women in the families of GM strikers to enlist their active support in the struggle is an example of the kind of job women's auxiliaries can do.

But auxiliaries in most places are not strong enough to do the job alone. The unions are beginning to recognize that direct union action is needed. The CIO Electrical and Radio and Machine Workers, for instance, have announced that they are calling conferences of women in the families of GE, GM and Westinghouse workers in every area where they are organized. These conference will hear the issues of the wage campaign explained and will be asked to set up committees to help the union. The UE plans call for a national conference of representatives of these committees.

SEES ISSUE CLEARLY

Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, Democratic Congresswoman from Connecticut, made the stakes very clear in her speech before the National Emergency Conference on Jobs and Security in Washington, December 7.

"Higher wages to maintain the level of war time take home are not a gift to the worker," she said. "They are the real insurance for continued prosperity for industry. Without higher wages we will have a larger edition of 1929. And all of us will suffer."

This is the message which we must get across not only to the women in our CIO families, but also to women's groups of all kinds in our communities. We need to show them that high wages will enable American workers to buy the output of our industry and our farms, and that American industry can increase both wages and profits by operating at capacity as it did during the war.

Finally we must make them see, as Mrs. Woodhouse said in concluding her speech, that "maximum employment and production in the United States" is "a vital basis for world conditions which will make peace a real possibility."

Pleads For Helping Mothers, Babies

BOTH babies and mothers have a far better chance of survival now than 10 years ago, the U. S. Children's Bureau announced this week, as Dr. Martha M. Eliot, Associate Chief of the Bureau, pleaded for a greater reduction in the present high mortality rate.

From 1933 to 1944, the birth rate, which was an all-time low in 1933, rose 30%. The number of live births rose from 2,000,000 to almost 3,000,000 babies born, and in that same period, the infant mortality rate was reduced almost one-third and the maternal mortality rate was slashed more than one-half.

The infant mortality rate was cut 31%, from 58 to 40 deaths per 1,000 live births. The maternal mortality rate in the same period dropped from 62 to 24 deaths per 10,000 live births, a decline of 61%.

"Great as the reduction in mortality has been," said Dr. Eliot, "the record is still not good enough, for thousands of the 118,000 babies and of the 7000 mothers whose lives are lost each year, die needlessly. If the care we know so well how to give were available to all groups of the population in all parts of the country then we could cut still further the present tragic loss of life."

Public-spirited physicians assert that the mortality rate would be greatly curtailed by the passage of the new Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill (S 1050) and the Pepper-Norton bills (S 1318, HR 3922), which provide extention of the present maternal and child health programs.

Bosses Told Unions Guard Free Society

"Organized labor and collective bargaining are the only real safeguard you have to continue private enterprise in the U. S." Van A. Bittner, assistant to Pres. Philip Murray as president of the CIO Steelworkers, recently told the Golden Anniversary meeting of the Congress of American Industry held in New York City. Bittner continued:

"We are the last industrial nation in the world that enjoys the right of private enterprise . . . Let us as men and Americans make up our minds that we are going to have full employment in the U. S. during times of peace. We must not—we cannot—say that it takes war, with all its horrible aspects, to bring about full employment."

'Thanks,' Mr. Truman

Thanks to President Truman, the Hobbs anti-union bill (HR 32) passed the House this week by a voice vote—which has the additional advantage of allowing the GOP-polltax Democrat coalition to conceal its record on the measure.

The bill, which makes strikes, picketing and other legitimate union activities a crime, now goes to the Senate, where it was pigeon-holed two years ago.

It could not have been passed without the aid of Truman's anti-strike message of Dec. 13. This message, now embodied in HR 4908 and S 1661, gave the Hobbs bill just the amount of jet propulson it needed for a successful take-off on the House floor.

Consider the history of the Hobbs bill. It first passed the House two years ago, in the Congress before this one. It then lay dormant in the Senate. Though Hobbs could have brought it up again any time after Jan. 3, 1945, when the present Congress opened, he waited until Truman had been in office for months even before he put it into the hopper.

On Dec. 12, nine days after Truman sent his anti-strike message to Congress, Hobbs and his gang were emboldened to put the bill to a vote—and were able to get it passed.

President Truman and his friends have defended his message on the ground that it would keep Congress from passing "something worse."

The "something worse" has already been passed. Another "something worse"—the May-Arends bill—has been set back once on a technicality, but can come up again.

Congratulations should go to the Congressmen who fought the Hobbs bill. They include such men as Celler (D., N. Y.), Eberharter (D., Pa.), Marcantonio (ALP., N. Y.), Welch (R., Calif), Gallagher (D., Minn.), Havenner (D., Calif.), Patrick (D., Ala.), Sabath (D., Ill.), Biemiller (D., Wis.), La Follette (R., Wis.) and the others who tried for the floor in opposition to the bill and who voted against it in the voice vote.

Letters should go to all Senators pointing out the anti-union character of the Hobbs bill and reminding them that President Truman opened the door to the Hobbs bill and every other kind of anti-labor legislation with his "moderate" message of Dec. 3.

WASHINGTON GUIDE

CIO Fights For Decent Housing

CIO's fight for decent housing for veterans, workers and low and middle income groups generally was carried to Congress in testimony on S 1592, the new housing bill, this week.

Testifying before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, UAW Pres. R. J. Thomas said in a statement read by William Nicholas:

"The CIO believes that an annual production of 1,750,000 dwelling units is the only realistic estimate (of needed construction) for a nation that wants and must have full employment and full production.

"The CIO supports the bill (S 1592) generally. It is a good bill; a bill which sets our housing policy, as a nation, far ahead of what it has been in the past."

Appearing for the CIO Clothing Workers, Sec.-Treas. Jacob S. Potofsky, after pointing out that local or state authorities cannot do the full job, said:

"The major portions of the bill point the way to a national policy of decent, livable housing. . . . The bill is a great step forward, and we endorse it subject to the reservations here outlined."

UE-CIO Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, centering much of his testimony on the housing plight of returning veterans, said:

"We in the UE-CIO are vitally concerned with this problem. 200,000 of our members are returning servicemen. We want to see them taken care of when they come back. This applies to housing as well as jobs and wages.

"That is why we are here today to urge you to provide veterans with adequate housing so that they can set up new homes or re-establish old ones broken by war."

"Housing and community redevelopment are the largest single 'frontier' now available to American economic development," Robert K. Lamb said for USA-CIO. "With the impending provision for health and medical care, housing can afford the the greatest impetus to an economy of full production and full employment."

"And for the CIO Textile Workers, John Edelman testified: "The bill . . . should make it possible for 10,000,000 families in the $1,000 to $3,000 brackets and who are now, for the most part, excluded from the home buying markets, to become purchasers."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Anti-strike (HR 4908, S 1661)	Carries out Truman's anti-union message of Dec. 3 by setting up anti-strike apparatus.	Murray to testify in House Labor Committee this week, next in Senate Labor.	Wire Senators and Representative to vote against.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Prohibits normal union activity such as picketing under mask of "anti-racketeering."	Passed House. Now to Senate.	Wire Senators to oppose; check your Representative's vote. (See CIO News Dec. 24).
May-Arends (HR 3937)	Outlaws union political action; provides fines, jail for strike in "violation of contract."	Rules Committee move to bring on House floor defeated this week; bill can come up again in House.	Congratulate Congress on first defeat; urge continued vigilance against new attempts to pass.
Jobs (S 380, HR 2202)	Passed by Senate in watered down version. House bill worthless.	Passed in House.	Write Congressmen to protest House version.
Housing (S 1592)	Sound step toward housing for low and middle income groups.	CIO Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas testified for this week.	Urge Senators to support as written.
FEPC (S 101, HR 2232)	Makes FEPC permanent government agency.	Stalled in House Rules Committee; Discharge Petition 4 has 157 signers, needs 218 to bypass Rules.	Urge Representatives to sign DP 4, with special attention to GOP men.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Makes it possible to retire polltaxers like Bilbo, Rankin et al.	Passed House, still stalled in Senate.	Keep pressing for Senate action; no amendments or filibusters.

CONGRESS IS GOING HOME DEC. 20—HAVE YOUR WELCOME READY

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

TRUMAN BILL: CIO's Congress fight against the Truman anti-strike bill (HR 4908, S 1661) is being taken to the House Dec 14 by President Murray.

Administration strategy is to blitz the bill through by the Christmas recess, which is still set for Dec. 20.

CIO NEWS will publish full voting records on this anti-labor measure as they are taken in both House and Senate. Next issue (Dec. 24) will carry the record vote on another of the two anti-union measures—the May-Arends bill (HR 3937).

* * *

HOBBS BILL (HR 32): passed by a stampeded House this week, the bill now goes to the Senate for action.

"Anti-racketeering" is simply a mask for anti-unionism in this measure. Fact is that there are ample Federal and state laws now on the books to curb racketeering, as an analysis of HR 32 prepared by the CIO's Legal Dept. points out. Hobbs merely wants to apply a strait-jacket to labor.

The 1934 "anti-racketeering" act has a clause which prevents it from being applied in a biased manner to unions. Hobbs' bill removes this clause.

"All that the Hobbs bill does is to remove 1) the provision which prevents application of the 1934 act to the payment of wages by a bona-fide employer to a bona-fide employe, and 2) removes the provision which prevents application of the law to impair 'the right of bona-fide labor organizations lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof.'"

In brief, HR 32 is an anti-union fake. Wire your Senators to defeat it.

* * *

PETITIONS: When a bill is stalled in the House Rules Committee, which is dominated by GOP men and Democratic polltaxers, a Discharge Petition is circulated to bypass the Committee.

Three such petitions are out now; DP 4 on the permanent FEPC, DP 12 on Rep. Patterson's (D., Cal.) resolution to abolish the un-American Dies-Ranklin-Wood committee, and DP 11, by Rep. Bradley (D., Pa.) to get the unemployment benefits bill out of the Ways and Means Committee. The FEPC Petition has about 157 signatures, need 218. Patterson's petition has 46.

Give all three a plug when you write to your Congressman next.

GUIDEPOSTS . . . House-Senate conference has put the "free press" rider back in the UNRRA appropriation . . . at the same time House has a bill (HR 4775) to gag U. S. radio commentators . . . "freedom of the press" is good enough to harass our allies with . . . but not good enough for us . . . Rep. Frank Havenner (D., (Cal.) heads a Naval Affairs sub-committee investigating shipping bottlenecks holding up return of GI's . . . this plus China intervention drawing tremendous mail from the voters . . .

"Santa Claus" ~ Profiteer Style

THIS IS THE first peacetime Christmas in five years. Its peace was born of struggle. That struggle was based on the common people's demand for real security — from war, from unemployment, from low-wage exploitation. We Americans who helped our Allies wipe out Nazi oppression will not tolerate its expression at home. We hold that human wants—decent homes, enough for our children to eat, adequate wages to care for our families in health and sickness—far transcend the "right" of industry to unbridled profit-taking We know the facts—they are plain to all who can read. Net profits are higher than ever. The first nine months of 1945 they rose 3% over the same period in 1944 for 261 big manufacturing corporations—a total of $943,854,710 after taxes. These are government figures. For organizations that fail to cash in on reconversion, there are guarantees of U. S. refunds—out of the taxpayers' pockets—that maintain the level of pre-war profits for the next two years! What has happened to the workers' income? The latest government figures show that workers' take-home pay has been cut from a minimum of 23% to as much as 50%. 40 cents an hour is still the minimum wage! Only $16 gross a week, with children's shoes selling at more than $5 a pair. We speak frankly. We do not believe that the American people will stand by idly while corporations refuse to bargain for needed wage increases. We do not believe that they will support in political office those whose policies lead to a drastic cut in real wages; to a sharp reduction in dollars spent for food, clothing and other life necessities; and to the inevitable crash that will blanket this nation in the shroud of another depression. This is Christmas, 1945—not 1929. It is time for some industrialists and some politicians to tear a few sheets off their calendars.

DETROIT CITY EMPLOYES picket against pay cuts. Above, members of the CIO State, County & Municipal Workers protest Mayor Jeffries' plan to "raise base pay 15%"—really a wage cut because of the elimination of overtime work. SCMWA is asking for a 30% base pay hike, pointing out that nearly 1,500 city workers' take-home pay is less than that paid people on relief.

GM RESUMES NEGOTIATIONS WITH UAW AFTER TRUMAN SAYS 'SHOW BOOKS'

FORCED into an untenable position after President Truman in a surprise move said that employers should submit their books to fact-finding boards in wage disputes, General Motors resumed negotiations with the CIO Auto Workers Dec. 21 in Washington, where union and management representatives had come to appear before such a board.

UAW Vice-Pres. Walter Reuther had told the board that the union would not enter into any collusion with GM to get increased wages at the public expense and that it stood firm in its demand for a 30% pay hike, which he said the "arithmetic" of the case showed was justified.

Referred to as a member of the scrub team by Pres. R. J. Thomas of UAW, Walter Gordon Merritt, labor-hating lawyer, whose claim to infamy is that he was the company attorney in the Danbury hatter case, represented GM. He had accused Reuther of advancing " radical" and "revolutionary" ideas in collective bargaining and said that GM would withdraw from the fact-finding panel if asked to furnish the company books, a threat which failed to materialize.

Reuther had replied and demolished Merritt's arguments, and Panel Chairman Lloyd K. Garrison was telling the disputants that the board wanted a few days to decide what it should do—ostensibly trying to decide whether it should ask the company for its books.

Then an attache handed Garrison copies of President Truman's statement. Assuring the tensely hushed and crowded room that the board had not consulted with the White House about the statement, Garrison read, "The fact-finding board should unquestionably have the right to examine the . . . books where it deems necessary in order to make up its own mind as to whether a demand for an increase is justified . . ."

There followed a lively give-and-take between Reuther and Wilson—who has not been taking part in the negotiations as he had in the past. Reuther pressed for a resumption of the negotiations immediately, but Wilson, aided by Anderson, hemmed and hawed, but finally agreed to bargain.

A factor contributing to GM's decision was a statement by Thomas released to the press a few moments after Truman's statement was received, and which said in part:

"GM is in open revolt against the nation's determination to increase the real living standards of its people."

Having earlier cancelled the UAW contract, GM this week also set forth its demands on the union in which it called for ending maintenance of membership, for company security and censoring by the union of remarks in its publications and those of its locals attacking company officials.

Call U. S. Pay Plan Inadequate

The CIO Federal Workers Union this week accused Senators who voted in favor of the Byrd amendment to the Federal pay bill of acting "in shameful disregard for the real and pressing needs of Federal workers," and said the union will now demand 30% raises when the bill goes to the House.

The union statement included figures showing that if the Byrd plan were finally adopted purchasing power of a CAF-3 employe would be $166 per year less than it was in 1941.

The union charged Senators—particularly Byrd of Va.—with acting to aid big corporations which are refusing wage increases to their own workers, but predicted that "CIO will win its battle for substantial wage adjustments" and that Senators will reverse their position.

For The Record

STEEL PACT OK'S RIGHT TO STRIKE

FULL-PAGE ads by the American Iron & Steel Institute have been belaboring the tune that the CIO United Steelworkers "haven't got the right" to strike the steel industry, which has flatly refused the union's request for a $2-a-day wage increase.

The following resolution, passed unanimously at the recent Steelworkers' Wage Policy Committee meeting at Pittsburgh, outlines clearly the union's position:

1. The major steel companies in this country have banded together in a strong and well-financed propaganda campaign to deceive the American public into the view that a strike by the United Steelworkers would be a violation of its contracts with these companies.

2. This campaign is an effort to perpetrate upon the public a legal hoax. The companies have wilfully concealed from the public the following facts with respect to the contracts and their background:

a. Each and every contract between the union and the major steel companies contains a clause permitting the union to reopen the contract for a general wage increase upon a change in national wage policy. The union has served notice under each of these contracts in accordance with these clauses.

b. These wage reopening clauses are based upon the following background:

(1) In the Steel Wage Case decided in November, 1944, the WLB explicitly declared that it was not closing the wage question but retained the power to reconsider it.

(2) In a Directive of February 25, 1945, the WLB, in fixing the termination date for the contracts with the steel employers as October 15, 1946, again expressly provided that the matter of a general wage increase would be reopened whenever a change in the national wage policy occurred.

c. A change in national wage policy has been announced and the WLB, in a unanimous resolution, has expressly recognized that the union is free to bargain with respect to a general wage increase.

d. Under the terms of its contract, the union may now exercise all of the rights and remedies which would be available to it in bargaining for a new contract with respect to a general wage increase. These rights and remedies include the right to strike.

3. The no-strike clause in the contracts which the companies have so blatantly misrepresented does not surrender the right to strike with respect to general wage increases but deals only with strikes concerning grievances and matters subject to arbitration. A general wage increase is not subject to the grievance and arbitration machinery provided in the contract.

4. Despite the fact that the union has meticulously adhered to the terms of the contract and will continue to do so, the companies have wilfully repudiated their solemn obligations under the terms of the contract to engage in bargaining with respect to the requested general wage increase.

5. The true design of the steel companies is plain. Using the false charge that the union is violating its contracts as a pretext, the companies seek to conceal the fact that they themselves have refused to bargain in accordance with their obligations under the contract. But their self-righteous arrogance goes further than this. Under the cover of pious pronouncements about the sanctity of contracts, they now threaten to achieve their long-standing objective of violating their contractual commitments with respect to check-off and maintenance of membership. This campaign is merely a smoke screen behind which Messrs. Grace and his associates hope to restore the steel industry to the open-shop citadel which it was in the 1920's.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the union is now fully within its rights under the contracts to strike concerning a general wage increase.

2. That the campaign of the titans of steel is a maneuver to conceal from the American public the justice of the union's demand for a general wage increase.

3. That any attempt by the employers to repudiate their obligations under their contracts is a violation of such contracts and a contemptuous disregard of commitments solemnly undertaken.

These Nazi civilians are being hanged for the outright murder of six American fliers. These are the small fry of the German Nazi murder machine, who carried out their orders to kill willingly and eagerly. No German big shot has yet been executed by Allied occupation authorities.

Herman Goering, Rudolf Hess, Joachim von Ribbentrop, top Nazis after Hitler (above), feel the hangman's noose getting closer. These are the men who ordered the Nazi barbarities. Behind them, however, stand still bigger and more sinister figures—the German industrialists (below) who built up Hitler and the Nazi Wehrmacht for their attempt at world conquest.

NEW BATTLE OF GERMANY

By C. W. FOWLER

(First of a Series)

A NEW battle of Germany is being fought today—not in open warfare, but in the no less terrible preparations for World War III, which scientists say may well be humanity's last.

Today's battle of Germany is being fought out between the organized forces of reaction in control of American and British military government and an outnumbered few officials who see the danger of renewed German aggression and who are trying to halt it before the next and final world war is launched.

The struggle is basically between the legacy of anti-fascist policy left by Franklin D. Roosevelt and former Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., and the arrogance and profit-hunger of American and British corporations with their fingers deep in the anti-democratic doings of international cartels.

The fight now going on is led on the side of new German aggression and new war by the agents, open and concealed, of the same corporations that are bitterly opposing the wage demands of CIO workers in this country.

General Motors, currently refusing UAW wage demands and preparing to tell the U. S. government to go to hell, is one U. S. firm involved. DuPont, owner of GM and leader in the chemical cartel, ally and associate of Germany's IG Farben, is another. Henry Ford, whose German branch built motor vehicles for the Wehrmacht and who contemptuously offers CIO workers here a 15c wage increase, is also involved. General Electric, with close ties to both English and German electrical trusts, also currently refusing wage increases to its workers, is still another.

In fact, there is scarcely a billion dollar corporation—all of which are now fighting CIO union wage demands or refusing to allow organization in their plants—which is not involved in the campaign to rearm Germany.

Standard Oil, Intl. Telephone & Telegraph, Intl. Business Machines, Republic Steel, Britain's Imperial Chemical Industries—are in on the conspiracy. Topping such industrial corporations are the big British and U. S. banks, who made millions out of phoney German bonds after the last war and who want to repeat that performance now.

And going along with the direct economic interest of monopoly corporations in German rearmament is the never-absent hope that Germany can again be turned to the east, against Soviet Russia, as was planned at Munich.

Who are some of these agents, open and concealed, willing or unwitting, who are helping to lay a base for World War III? What is the evidence of their work?

In the occupation of Germany, they sometimes come directly from British or American financial interests—as does Gen. William H. Draper, economic adviser to the U. S. commander-in-chief in Europe. Draper comes to the U. S. Army and to Germany directly from Dillon, Read & Co., New York bankers and promoters of more German bonds than any other single firm. Or there are General Motors' Peter Hoagland, also attached to the army of occupation, Republic Steel's Rufus Wysor, and others with equally clear corporation backgrounds.

In this country, and also in Germany and Britain, there's the entire "soft peace" crowd today striving through every propaganda medium to raise sympathy for poor, downtrodden Germany.

Typical of this crowd is Byron Price, former U. S. censor, whose report on German conditions to President Truman was a plea for the preservation of German industry and thus of American interests in a strong and aggressive German industrial machine.

In Congress, the "soft peace" crowd is typified by Rep. Colmer (polltaxer, Miss.) who came back to report that German heavy industry must be preserved to enable Germans to pay for food.

This gang had its scholarly aids too, led by Professor Calvin B. Hoover, of Duke University, property of the Duke tobacco & power trust, whose report and recommendations also weep for "starving Germany."

The line of those who would keep German industry strong and aggressive goes even beyond such figures as these to the State Dept. and the White House itself.

It is known, for example, that President Truman prevented the appearance of three of I.G. Farben's top men before the Kilgore Committee in the Senate. These three men, Herman Schmitz, George Schnitzler and Karl Krauch, were to have been questioned on Farben's role in the Nazi party, in the Nazi state, and in the preparation and prosecution of the war. They were kept in Germany, despite Senators' request for their presence.

These people, busy now preparing to rebuild Germany as it was rebuilt for war after 1918, are in the crowd that the people of the U. S., and particularly the members of the CIO, repudiated when they voted for FDR.

Now they're in the saddle in occupied Germany—and only a strongly aroused public opinion can unseat them.

(Next weeks Exploding the myth of German industrial destruction)

WE FOOT THE BILL

When big corporations reject collective bargaining and provoke industrial stoppages, they can rely on the government and the taxpayers (which includes you and me and the workers they are fighting) to carry them through.

Not only are they guaranteed a normal rate of profit, whether they produce or not, through the carry-back and carry-forward provisions of the tax laws, but John Q. Public pays—and plenty—for the publication of their propaganda on a scale which labor cannot even dream of affording.

Lately, for example, General Motors and the American Iron & Steel Institute have been placing full-page advertisements in all the major newspapers of the country, attacking the unions and completely misrepresenting the issues.

To give you a small idea of the cost of this type of propaganda, Transradio press service reports that General Motors spent $96,000 for its December 15 advertisement alone.

And who foots the bill? More than 85% of the cost comes out of the U. S. Treasury and the pockets of American taxpayers, since advertising is considered a legitimate business cost and money can be diverted for it which would otherwise be paid out in taxes.

But what about the character of this propaganda for which the government pays and which leaves a one-sided impression in the public's mind, since unions have not got the millions necessary to answer ad for ad?

The Iron & Steel Institute is pulling a legal hoax on the public by alleging in its full-page ads that the strike called by the CIO United Steelworkers for Jan. 14 is in violation of its contracts with the steel companies.

The facts which expose this hoax are that all steel union contracts involved have a clause permitting the union to reopen the contract for a general wage increase upon a change in national wage policy, and due notice has been served by the union in strict compliance with its contracts.

From every legal and contractual angle, the union is now free to exercise all its usual rights, including the right to strike, in bargaining for a new contract with respect to a general wage increase.

The Steelworkers have explained their position fully, knocking the companies' misrepresentations into a cocked hat. They have released their answer to the press, but naturally it does not get so much space as full-page ads paid for by multi-million dollar corporations out of money that should go to taxes.

Similarly, General Motors has been running full-page ads, crudely distorting the facts about auto wages and the union's position.

According to Walter Reuther, head of the GM Department of UAW-CIO, three of five points in the Dec. 15 GM ad are "radically falsified," the fourth is "incompletely stated" and only one, the fifth, is accurate.

Points one and two, the UAW says, are based on the assumption that there will be a 45 to 48-hour week in postwar GM. Even if this were true, the union would not accept it—because that would mean selling out at least 50,000 veterans and other workers who would be unemployed as the result of the longer hours.

Point three of the GM ad is based on the corporation's offer of a "cost-of-living" raise of 13.5%. This, the UAW says, would mean a hi-jacking operation on the public in the form of added prices on cars.

Point four (dealing with possible take-home) is similarly based on a false assumption—that wartime earnings went up higher than they did, that they continued through 1945, and is also based on the proposed 45 to 48-hour work week.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

LIKE the faithless husband in search of "sympathy" from ladies other than his wife, the industrialists of America are a much "misunderstood" class of people.

What's more, they don't really want to be understood, and most of them are lucky that they aren't.

•

This reflection is prompted by an editorial in the Binghamton Sun, which whimsically proposes that our industrialists should organize union (The United Industrialists & Executives of America is the name suggested) and go on strike.

•

By using the word "association" instead of "union" and the word "strike" not at all, they have concealed from him and a lot of other people the fact that they have unions and strikes of their own that are really de luxe.

•

He has his local union, his industrial union council, his national or international union, and his national CIO.

Only he prefers to use names like trade association, chamber of commerce, Iron & Steel Institute or Automobile Manufacturers Assn, and Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

•

While union workers are always calling attention to their earnings, to demonstrate their need for more, the organized industrialists are doing everything they can to conceal theirs.

In fact, they regard any "prying into their books" as the worst thing that could happen to their case for higher profits.

•

When it comes to going on strike, the United Industrialists of America really do things in style—and so smoothly that most people don't even know they're on strike.

Organized labor made a no-strike pledge during the war, but not organized industry.

The latter struck often, it struck hard, and it struck against the government, by simply holding up production until its profit demands were granted.

•

Now that the war is over, the organized industrialists have become so accustomed to bullying and being supported by the government, that they even expect it to finance their strikes—which it is doing.

•

When union workers go on strike, they're strictly on their own. They lose their wages, they're denied even the meager dole of unemployment compensation, and they find the government's hand usually turned against them.

But not so with the United Industrialists. When they go on strike, they don't have to walk out; they just pull a swivel-chair sitdown. And a kind government provides them with enough strike benefits and unemployment compensation to maintain them in the standard of living to which they are accustomed.

It does this, under the tax laws, through the carry-back and carry-forward tax refunds, which are designed to guarantee industrialists their normal rate of profits whether they produce or not.

•

Since the war ended, the organized industrialists have struck more often, longer, on a larger scale and against more people than organized labor has ever dreamed of doing.

By withholding consumers' goods from the market until the excess profits tax is repealed, they have for months been striking against the whole American people.

In industry after industry, they have also been holding up reconversion by striking for higher prices, through the lifting of OPA ceilings.

And the present labor strikes should more properly be called industry strikes against labor to cut wages, showing as they do the employers' preference to stop production rather than grant the increases necessary to maintain the workers' take-home pay.

•

But the crowning irony in the government financing of industrialists' strikes against itself and against the people, is that the government and the taxpayers are even paying for their strike propaganda.

The hundreds of thousands of dollars now being spent by the Iron & Steel Institute, General Motors and other corporations for full-page ads to mislead the public are paid for by the public out of money which would otherwise go to the government in taxes.

Failure To Pay Striking Vets Benefits · Blasted

THE CIO has joined with two veteran organizations in protesting to Veterans Administrator Bradley against the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Board ruling that General Motors' and other strikers shall not receive unemployment compensation. Under the GI Bill a veteran is entitled to unemployment compensation—"readjustment allowance" — of $20 for 25 weeks. The letter said:

"The Michigan ruling does, in effect, prevent the men who fought the world's fight for freedom from fighting their own battle for a fair wage. The average veteran has little or no money to meet the needs of food and shelter for his family when he is forced to strike.

"Further, the fact that several States, such as N. Y., Penna., Tenn. and others, offer unemployment compensation to civilians who are on strike over a certain period makes the practice of not granting unemployment compensation to veterans who are in the same position a discriminating practice against veterans.

"By approving the Michigan ruling, the Veterans Administration places itself in the position of depriving veterans in dire need of any kind of Government help or compensation."

The Natl. Conference of Union Labor Legionnaires and the Army and Navy Union joined the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee in lodging the protest with the VA head, at the same time asserting that they would urge Congress to change the GI Bill provision.

General Bradley replied that an appeal could be filed with the VA against the Michigan ruling, and that when Congress is asked to change the GI Bill provision the VA will furnish "upon request such information as may be available."

NMU Members Live To Tell Of Jap Camp

Thirteen survivors of the torpedoed SS Sowakla, who arrived in the U. S. recently after three years in Jap prison camps, told blood-curdling tales of Japanese inhumanity.

After their capture, they were herded with 900 other prisoners on a ship for a 27-day trip during which 50 died of dysentery, heat exhaustion and berri-berri. Imprisoned in the largest camp in Japan, they were forced to work in the shipyards, coal and iron mines 13 hours a day and were fed daily two bowls of rice and a cup of soup made of seaweed, leaves and grass.

At least three times a week, they and other Americans were lined up and slapped by a Japanese guard. Through a radio smuggled into their camp piece by piece from the shipyards, they learned of the American victory six days before the Japanese acknowledged it. Freed, they were told by the Army in Manila there was a ship shortage, but they were shipped home promptly when the crew of the SS Agustin Stahl learned of their plight and offered to give up their bunks to the released prisoners.

U. S. Mail Denied Merchant Fleet

San Francisco Port Agent James Drury of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union this week roundly condemned Army, Navy and War Shipping Administration officials responsible for a decision to cease transporting mail to men of the merchant marine now overseas.

"There might be a slight measure of logic in this callous cutting off of merchant seamen from getting mail from their wives and families if mail service by air and ship was entirely discontinued," Drury said. "But this is not the case. Thousands of our troops are overseas, still waiting for ships to bring them home. Merchant seamen man those ships, and to refuse to service them while servicing GIs in the same areas can be nothing more than provocation."

VFW, Union Blast Firings

Camp Bowie Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, this week joined with Warehouse and Distribution Workers of the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union in protesting the discharge of four veterans within two weeks by Montgomery Ward & Co., Fort Worth, Tex.

Moral—Vets, Keep Union Contacts

A pictorial story of how CIO Wholesale and Warehouse Union Local 65, New York City, is taking care of member-veterans is told in a recent issue of the local's publication, Union Voice. The paper says:

"Many members who went directly to their old shops without consulting the union found, to their chagrin, that the patriotic talk of many bosses during the war is now out of style. Veterans were greeted coldly, were discouraged from coming back, 'because business isn't so good any more.' Others were told they could come back—at the salaries they were making before they left for service, and with no mention of the sizable increases to which they were actually entitled."

Carlson Hits China Intervention

"I know that irrespective of what goes on in China, it is incompatible with our democratic institutions to interfere in the domestic affairs of another country," Marine Col. Evans F. Carlson told the convention of the California CIO Council last week.

Colonel Carlson, a grizzled hero who borrowed the battle slogan "Gung Ho" from the Chinese guerrillas, said that he was heartily in accord with the resolution of the convention which insisted that Marine and other military and naval personnel be returned home immediately, that all military equipment and personnel given Chiang Kai-shek be removed and that no further arms be shipped to him.

Vets Unemployed

An increase of 83,598 unemployed veterans during the week ended Dec. 1, bringing the total to 330,958, was reported by the Veterans' Administration.

Ads like this one in the Washington Post, Dec. 17, give the answer to the GIs stranded overseas for lack of ships. Pres. Joseph Curran, of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union and the N. Y. City CIO Council, this week asked the War Dept. and the War Shipping Administration to reply to a cablegram received from 255 men of the 29th Infantry Division in Bremen complaining that ships scheduled to carry the division home from Bremenhaven have been cancelled three times.

East And West Spur Drive For Ships For GIs

On the West and the East the campaign to "make every ship a troopship" is continuing.

Members of the San Francisco CIO Council and CIO Womens' Auxiliaries have erected colorful booths and obtained from the Christmas shopping crowds signatures to petitions to President Truman and Congress to "bring the boys home."

Literature was distributed showing pictures of shipping tied up in boneyards and advertisements for commercial shipping while servicemen were prevented from returning home due to lack of shipping space.

The campaign spread from N. Y. City to Newark, N. J., where members of Local 7, CIO Office & Professional Workers stormed the downtown department store section with thousands of leaflets asking the public to support the campaign.

Bilbo Ouster Aim Of New Group

Formation of the "Veterans-Citizens Committee to Oust Bilbo" which will continue the picketing of Sen. Theodore G. Bilbo until the Mississippi politican is no longer a member of the U. S. Senate, was announced this week by Veteran Robert Lee of Washington, D. C., chairman of the new committee.

In addition to maintaining the picket line which has been continuous since last Oct. 14, the Veterans-Citizens Committee is undertaking a national petition campaign demanding that the Senate remove Bilbo as a member for his conduct "which is contrary to our American principles of equality, regardless of race, creed, or color and which is a discredit to the dignity of the United States Senate."

Superduper Seniority Rapped

THE attempt of Selective Service Director Hershey to give veterans super-seniority was rejected this week by Arbiter Dudley E. Whiting, Detroit, in the case of the Dow Chemical Co. and Local 804, CIO Auto Workers. This is one of a series of arbiters' decisions upholding the CIO, which maintains that veterans shall be given seniority equal to their time in the service.

Selective Service advocates that veterans bump workers with greater seniority, doing them an ill service, because such procedure would set them as a class apart and would not offer them any protection after the year's employment, that is guaranteed them under the act, expires.

LAW IS CLEAR

Referring to Selective Service's interpretation of the law, Whiting ruled:

"Since the statute itself is perfectly clear and unambiguous, it would be highly improper and contrary to accepted rules of statutory construction to distort its language to concur with the executive construction of the act made by Natl. Hdq. of the Selective Service System.

"Without the use by Congress of specific language to say so, I cannot believe that, by the reemployment provision of this act, it is intended to rehabilitate the veteran at the expense of other and older industrial workers (in point of seniority)."

The arbiter took occasion to rap the decision of Federal Judge Abruzzo, Brooklyn, N. Y., upholding super-seniority, saying: "I cannot accept the decision . . . Since it is not a court of last resort, I am not bound thereby."

Although it got off to a late start, the Honolulu Labor Canteen (above) is making up for lost time. In addition to having entertained tens of thousands of servicemen since its opening four days after V-J Day, the Canteen is issuing a magazine and giving courses, both designed to give GIs the score on labor and the world in which they live.

ONE WORLD & LABOR

AUSTRALIAN workers are having their own troubles with the system of "cooling-off" and enforced arbitration that President Truman seeks to fasten on workers in this country through the Norton-Ellender bill (S 1661, HR 4908) designed to carry out Truman's anti-strike message of Dec. 3.

According to Allied Labor News, this is the situation in a three-months' strike involving the Amalgamated Ironworkers & Munitions Workers in a struggle with Australia's biggest monopoly—the Broken Hill Proprietary:

A new anti-union offensive by the Broken Hill Proprietary monopoly threatened this week to put the majority of Australia's labor force out of work. Power, gas, transport and factories in many cities will be shut down unless BHP agrees to discuss labor's demands in a three-month-old strike which now involves ironworkers, seamen, miners and transport workers.

BHP, Australia's most powerful monopoly, embraces steel, aircraft, shipbuilding, metal trades, chemicals and coal and zinc mining. Strikers are demanding higher wages and a 40-hour week.

The strike broke out in BHP'S Port Kembla plant, where the Amalgamated Ironworkers & Munition Workers charged the company with violating a union delegate's seniority. It soon extended to Newcastle, where BHP was accused of a similar violation. Labor spokesmen regard the parallel actions as an outright attempt at union-busting.

Prior to the violations, union leaders point out, court rulings had favored the monopoly in 122 out of 123 consecutive major arguments. The New South Wales Industrial Arbitration Commission had followed this by "de-registering" the unon, which prevented it from taking its case to the State Court.

Although the Commission's action did not disqualify the union as a bargaining agent, BHP used this as an excuse to refuse negotiations and thus compel a strike. Seamen, miners and transport workers voted overwhelmingly in favor of sympathy strikes.

U. S.-Soviet Friendship

Once the U. S. and the Soviet Union, "the two great nations, are willing to collaborate and aid each other, there will be no new war," Leo Krzycki, vice-president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, said this week in Moscow. Krzycki, who is also chairman of the Polish-American Labor Council, addressed the plenary session of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions. He came from Poland, where he attended the congress of the Polish Federation of Trade Unions.

The American people "are proud of having become allies of the Soviet people and of having come to know this great people," he asserted. "No force can now prevent us from callaborating in the establishment of a real peace. We've won the war, but we still have to win the peace and it must be a lasting, effective and real peace. The masses of the people will never forget the sacrifices exacted by the recent war. The people will do everything that this should not happen again."

Krzycki observed that "hope has arisen for the Slav people. This hope is the Soviet Union. Life is improving in Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Czechslovakia. I've just come from Poland. For the first time a government has been set up there which represents the entire nation. And if Poland is closely allied with her older brother and neighbor, the Soviet Union, it will be a great achievement."

Carey Urges Aid To USSR

"With all the sincerity at my command I appeal to the people of the U. S. to share their comparative abundance with the people of the Soviet Union.

"The facts regarding the living standards, the working conditions, the personal problems and the hopes and aspirations of the people of Russia have been deliberately falsified to the American people. The man on the American street knows nothing about the man on the Russian street. By the same token I am convinced that the Russian worker knows equally little about the American worker and his problems.

"We are confronted with two grave questions regarding the needs of our fellow workers in Soviet Russia. These are: First, is there need? Second, is that need deserving?

"I answer both those questions with an emphatic 'Yes.' I maintain that there is need in Russia. I maintain similarly that this need is deserving.

"I certainly saw nothing on my trip that moved me to fear that the Russian people are planning an aggressive war against the people of the U. S. I am equally certain that the American people are not planning any such aggressive war."

HIGH COURT RULING AIDS LABOR

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

IN a decision of far-reaching importance to labor, the U. S. Supreme Court last week ruled that the Natl. Labor Relations Act requires that an employer make no changes in wages, hours or conditions of employment without first bargaining about the proposed changes with the union which represents its employes.

This ruling was made when the court upheld a Natl. Labor Relations Board order which directs the Famous-Barr Dept. Store of St. Louis to bargain collectively with the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes.

The CIO won a Labor Board election among bushelmen at Famous-Barr. The store refused to bargain, claiming that the union could not legally bargain for the bushelmen until it had won an election involving all the 4,500 Famous-Barr employes.

The Supreme Court decided against the store and for the CIO. The court recognized that it would be unfair to make the bushelmen go without collective bargaining until the whole store was organized. This part of the court's decision will mean that as soon as the CIO gets one part of a store organized it can at once petition the Labor Board for an election and begin bargaining for that portion of the store.

Not only did Famous-Barr refuse to recognize the CIO, but shortly after the NLRB election the company announced publicly that it had applied to the War Labor Board for permission to grant each of its employes a $2-a-week increase. The company did not notify the CIO that it was going to make such an application nor did it offer the CIO the opportunity to join in an application for a wage increase.

The CIO had previously handed out leaflets announcing that if it should win a Labor Board election it would attempt to get the company to join with it in an application to the War Labor Board for wage boosts to eliminate differentials between the wages paid women workers and those paid men, to eliminate substandard conditions, to meet the rates paid by other employers for like work, and to adjust for the rise in the cost of living. The company's application for a straight $2 raise was, of course, much less than the CIO felt the WLB would have granted.

The Supreme Court held that the company committed a separate unfair labor practice by going to the WLB without first bargaining with the CIO and giving it an opportunity to join in the WLB wage application.

The court said that "employer action to bring about changes in wage scales without consultation and negotiation with the certified representative of its employes" constituted unilateral action in violation of the Natl. Labor Relations Act.

"Such unilateral action minimizes the influence of organized bargaining," the court said. "It interferes with the right of self-organization by emphasizing to the employes that there is no necessity for a collective bargaining agent."

Labor unions for many years have insisted that it was essential to collective bargaining that employers be prohibited from changing wages, hours or working conditions without bargaining with the union representing its employes as to each contemplated change. The Supreme Court has now held that the Natl. Labor Relations Act, by requiring employers to bargain collectively, thereby also requires that the union be consulted before any changes affecting employes are made by the employer.

On The Air With CIO

Here's the line-up for the first four CIO 15-minute regular Saturday radio shows over CBS stations—3:45 P. M. EST—with William Downes, crack CBS commentator, asking the questions and with rank and file CIO members frequently providing the answers.

January 5—GM strike: What the auto workers think.

January 12—Congress and labor legislation, featuring Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, and Robert K. Lamb, legislative representative, United Steelworkers.

January 19—On the steel strike (if it starts as scheduled on the 14th).

January 26—Broadcast from a union hall on what the CIO does for veterans.

A 59-year-old World War I widow who rents out rooms to make a living is typical of hundreds of people throughout the country who are writing CIO President Murray about his recent wage broadcasts.

Her homespun, personal letter was included among other correspondence containing much praise and a little condemnation, a few unsolicited contributions, and even a pat on the back from a Los Angeles employer, who said that the American Broadcasting Co. should be congratulated for selling CIO time to present its case.

The widow told how her New York City rooming house was a virtual "League of Nations" and described "how interesting it is to hear the workers tell of the hardships in their countries, especially where they can't have unions."

"When wages went down, jobs got scarce," she continued, "and I would lower the rent. Men would sleep in the parks in summer and in someone's cellar in the winter and come up to me to dry their socks.

"Of course people want decent wages, and though you never meet us there are many of us that are rooting for you all."

Sees 3rd Party As Possible

Possibility of labor support for a third party was underscored in the annual financial statement of Sec.-Treas. George F. Addes of the CIO Auto Workers this week. Addes said:

"Our policy has been and must continue to be, to give full support to any progressive candidates for office, be they Republican or Democrat."

MISSISSIPPI GLASS COMPANY

LET THE RECORD SPEAK

ON Dec. 11 the House of Representatives adopted a rule to bring the Hobbs Bill, HR 32, before the House. On Dec. 12 the bill passed. Here are some excerpts from the debate on those two days:

Adolph Sabath (D. Ill.), chairman, Rules Committee:
"Mr. Speaker, once more I have the unpleasant duty of calling up a resolution dealing with an anti-labor bill, HR 32, known as the Hobbs bill."

Hatton Sumners (poll-taxer, Tex.), chairman, Judiciary Committee, which approved the Hobbs bill and recommended its passage: "Does the gentleman think he is justified in the statement he just made?"

Sabath: "It is also one of those anti-labor bills; yes."

Sumners: "It is an anti-racketeering bill, is it not?"

Sabath: "Mr. Speaker, if the bill actually provided what the title denotes, I would be for it, but this is not the case. This bill goes beyond anything that could possibly be construed as fair legislation. It would make it a crime for a man to talk to a non-union driver or to drivers who bring in goods, merchandise or other things into the black market."

Francis E. Walter (D. Pa.), member of the Judiciary Committee:

"Will the gentleman point out to the House where in the hearings it appears that black marketeers were stopped by these labor leaders with such lofty ideals?"

Sabath: "If you, sir, will tell me that any recognized, lawful, legal labor organization had the opportunity to appear before your committee when this last Hobbs bill was reported, then I have nothing to say. But they were not given an opportunity to appear."

Eugene Cox (polltaxer, Ga.), notorious labor-baiter and member of the Rules Committee which decides what bills shall come before the House:
"I should like to say to my distinguished chairman that I am very glad to see him get lots of pleasure out of the management of a bill which he opposes. This is the last time, let me promise the gentleman, that this farcial procedure shall ever be enacted again."

Sabath: "When I give a rule to the gentleman from Georgia or to the gentleman from Virginia, invariably the opponents do not obtain any time to be heard."

Graham A. Barden (D. N. C.), member, Labor Committee:
"This law will not inconvenience, will not harm, will not incarcerate one single, honorable, honest, decent man in America. Now, let somebody challenge that statement."

Charles Savage, (D. Wash.), member, Intl. Woodworkers, CIO:
"A gentleman who is on strike for better working conditions could be an honest gentleman."

Thomas J. Lane (D., Mass.):
"The act of 1934 was directed against gangsters. Let us look at the state of the nation. Where are the gangsters of 1934? Dead or in jail. What, then, is the real target of this legislative double-talk? Labor. Behind the smoke screen of legal verbiage the opponents of organized labor are trying to prepare an ambush. I contend that there is no need for this bill."

Adam Clayton Powell (ALP, N. Y.):

"Extortion and robbery are crimes in all 48 states. Ample state laws and police are provided. Why, then, gentlemen of the state's rights school, do we need federal legislation? This is a notorious work. It is anti-labor."

Clarence Hancock (R., N. Y.), ranking Republican on the Judiciary Committee:

"This bill has been labeled an anti-labor bill. That is not true. It is not anti-labor in purpose or in fact. This bill is designed simply to prevent both union members and non-union people from making use of robbery and extortion under the guise of obtaining wages in the obstruction of interstate commerce."

"It has been said by some opponents of this measure that if in the exercise of legitimate union activities in connection with organizing a group of persons or individuals who are not members of a union, a truck, for instance, may be stopped, which truck is engaged in interstate commerce, then they would be subject to the penalties imposed by this act. In other words, they would be accused of attempting by threat, force, violence or intimidation to extort money, whereas the intention may be only to convince the non-union person that he ought to join the union."

Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), who fought the Hobbs bill in the Judiciary Committee:
"This bill does strike, and strikes hard, at organized labor. It is significant that the present anti-racketeering law contains this clause:
"'Provided, that no court of the U. S. shall construe or apply any of the provisions of this act in such manner as to impair, diminish, or in any manner affect the rights of bona fide labor organizations in lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof, as such rights are expressed in existing statutes of the United States.'

"Read the provisions of the current bill and you will find that proviso is deliberately eliminated. Why? It was eliminated to hurt labor. The courts, if we pass this bill with that proviso eliminated, would have to construe that the so-called Hobbs bill actually does impair, actually does diminish, actually does destroy the right of labor to strike, to boycott, to picket.

"Labor opposes the bill not because labor opposes anti-racketeering legislation but because this bill is not in any respect an anti-racketeering measure. It is a strike-breaking bill. It is a time bomb with a false label. It is a booby trap."

Clyde Doyle, D., Calif., elected with CIO support:

"The committee claims that this bill will only apply to the illegitimate law-breaking activities of any person, including labor unions. If that be true, why did the committee strike out the proviso in the present law and leave it out?"

William J. Gallagher, (D., Minn.), elected with CIO support: "This bill is a declaration of war on organized labor."

Jerry Voorhis (D., Cal.), endorsed for reelection in 1944 by CIO: "This is a bill which may be resisted and opposed by labor officially but when one attempts to read the bill with care, it just is not possible to find in the bill the dangers that are alleged to be there."

Sumners: "I may say to the gentleman from California that insofar as I can understand this bill, there is not a thing in it to interfere in the slightest degree with any legitimate activity on the part of labor people or labor unions, unless somebody thinks it is legitimate for them to rob and extort."

Voorhis: "Nobody believes that. My understanding of the bill coincides with the gentleman's."

Hobbs: "May I add that the gentleman, in my opinion, is exactly correct and takes the proper position."

Voorhis: "I thank the gentleman. I am just trying to make the record absolutely clear."

Raymond S. Springer, (R., Ind.), member of the Judiciary Committee:

"It has been said by some of those who have spoken upon this bill that this is an anti-labor bill. To my mind is a bill that protects the honest laboring people in our country. There is nothing contained in this bill that relates to labor."

William Whittington, (polltaxer, Miss.), member of the House committee on Expenditures in Executive Depts., who helped gut the full employment bill:

"There is no justification for labor unions opposing the bill as it constitutes no invasion of the legitimate rights of labor."

Alexander Resa (D., Ill.): "Offenses against persons and property which the pending bill would make punishable are already punishable under existing laws of the several States. They can be prosecuted more effectively under the laws of the states than they could be under this bill if it became a law. This is another instance of objectionable duplication by the Federal government of the functions and activities of the states."

Franck Havenner (D., Cal.), consistent foe of the Dies-Rankin-Wood Committee: "What the bill really does is to classify as racketeering any effective effort by labor unions to insist that closed shop agreements which have been arrived at through years of collective bargaining shall not be destroyed by open shop competition from areas outside of the areas where these closed shop agreements are in effect."

Luther Patrick: (D., Ala.), who defeated Dies Committee member Starnes in 1944 with CIO support: "Every Congressman in speaking for the bill, states, 'We are not after labor at all.' Why do they protest so on that point?

"The chairman of the Judiciary Committee this afternoon was asked on the floor of Congress about this very sort of thing. He stood right over there at the majority table and answered that there is no telling what a judge will decide. Now, nobody knows that better than do the laborers in this country. The representatives of labor know how unfair judges, how unfair biased district attorneys can be."

Andrew Beimiller (D., Wis.), elected with CIO support: "Those of us who are opposed to the bill fear that a simple unfortunate altercation on a picket line may send a man to jail for 20 years or fine him $10,000. May I further point out, gentlemen, that that is double the penalty of the anti-trust laws. The law proposed for labor is much harsher than that applied to monopolists who are guilty of restraint of trade."

Vito Marcantonio (ALP., N. Y.), author of HR 7, the anti-poll tax bill: "Do not give us the argument: Are you for robbery or are you against robbery?

"If you want to invoke the domestic fascist pattern against American labor, if you want to follow what was done against the labor movement in Italy by Mussolini and in Germany by Hitler, go ahead and do it; but the American people will not follow you, because their sons have fought against fascism and they will not tolerate fascism in America, whether you attempt to do it through the Hobbs bill, or through the May-Arends bill or through any other anti-bill, including the proposal that was submitted in the President's message."

H. Street Baldwin (D., Md.): "I am against this amendment and I am for the passage of the bill."
The amendment was rejected.

Charles M. LaFollette (R., Ind.,) supported by labor: "I cannot vote for this legislation because the implications of its possible abuse by anti-labor district attorneys are to me so plain."

Charles A. Wolverton (R., N. J.,) elected with CIO support, inserted a speech in the appendix of the Record explaining why he planned to vote for the Hobbs bill.

MR. HOBBS, MEET MR. HOOK!

The House of Representatives adopted a rule Dec. 11 to bring up the Hobbs bill, HR 32. On Dec. 12 the bill passed. Sam Hobbs (Polltaxer, Ala.), author of the bill, said:

"If any man, woman or child in the whole wide world can show how this bill would affect in the slightest degree any honest member of organized labor I will offer an amendment to cure that defect or else I will vote against the bill."

Here's his record, according to Frank E. Hook (D., Mich.), who was supported by the CIO in 1944:

"He opposed the Natl. Labor Relations Act in its original enactment; he has supported every proposed amendment since then to weaken the act; he opposed the wage and hour law in its original enactment and he has supported every amendment to that law since that time which would in any way weaken it. He opposed the Social Security Act."

GOOD WAGES

Their Part in Making a Healthy National Economy

GROCER

WHOLESALER

TRUCKER

RAILROAD

FARMER

Good wages mean more money spent on food. That money, paid the grocer, keeps his business thriving, is set into circulation through the wholesaler, the trucker that delivers the food, railroads that haul it, the processors, and the farmers. Nor does the money flow stop there. Each worker or industry that receives a share, starts another similar series of exchanges of money for goods. The farmer, for example, puts his income into circulation again in purchases of additional machinery, cattle, seed, store goods. Each item is a link in the endless chain of trade, for in a modern industrial economy all industry and business are interdependent.

STORES

FARMER

RANCHER

Well-paid workers dress better. The result is greater prosperity for the entire clothing industry, from the retail store clerk and owner, or tailor, through textile mills, to farmers who raise cotton or ranchers who produce wool. Business is better all along the line of exchange, with resultant benefits of steady output, rapid turnover, full employment, ability to pay good wages.

BETTER HOMES

BUILDING TRADES

MILLS

FURNITURE

MINES

Given the means, the worker seeks a better home, spends more on furnishings. When construction booms, the building trades have employment—and money to spend on goods that help keep up the cycle that extends from high purchasing power to high consumption, to high employment, to high wages. The benefits spread, through building supplies and furnishings, into mills, factories, mines. Both employers and employes in the broad network of exchange prosper.

RECREATION

AUTOMOBILES SERVICE

RAILROADS

PLANES

Increased funds for recreation are provided by good wages. Leisure spent on travel has business boosting effects. Travel is an incentive for good roads. That means construction work.

Travel benefits the automobile, oil and gasoline, transportation and a multitude of related industries and services. Business is stimulated, with prosperity spreading to towns along routes of travel.

MOVIES

PHOTO SUPPLIES

Money spent on entertainment goes into a host of business channels, as does money for recreation accessories.

A HIGH national income to sustain and improve the standard of living is viewed by economists as the desirable goal of the postwar period. The national income is the total of the earnings, salaries and wages of the people that form the nation. Good wages help keep it high. And a high national income means increased domestic markets, full production, more jobs.

Good wages do not stop with the wage earner. They are transformed into consumer purchasing power. They are spent on commodities whose production, distribution, sale and consumption are the nation's economic life.

For example, when a wage earner, through his better pay, is enabled to buy additional furniture, he is sharing his prosperity on a broad business scale. The salesman gets a commission, the retailer and wholesaler a profit; jobs are provided in handling, business is provided in transportation from the factory. And far beyond the factory the purchase affects shipping, lumbermen and mills, steel and paint industries, tool makers, the countless businesses and industries serving the industries and trades more directly affected.

Consumer purchasing power sustained by good wages means a steady demand for industrial products. Demand for products in excess of production can lead to high prices, which decrease purchasing power derived from good wages.

But many economists and industrialists are agreed that American industry can meet the demands of the market. They believe that competition, together with mass production and rapid turnover of goods at a small profit per unit, but greater over-all profit, acts as a brake on inflationary trends.

HOTELS

RESTAURANTS

Hotels and restaurants are users of an immense variety of products. They increase that use when recreation travel increases business.

HEALTH

EDUCATION

NEW SCHOOLS

The family with good wages can afford more education for its children. Expanded school systems result, with work for teachers, maintenance and office employes; business for book dealers and makers, builders, and building supply dealers and producers. Better health among workers and their families also has been a noted outcome of good wages, because medical care ceases to be a luxury.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

A Christmas present for the Utility Workers and the CIO was the NLRB election held Dec. 13-14 among employees at the properties of the Consolidated-Edison Company in New York City. The vote was as follows: Production Employees: CIO 9,409; Independent, 3217; No Union, 260. Clerical Employes: CIO 3,765; Independent, 2,608; No Union, 191.

This victory is the culmination of an eight-year struggle. Some time ago the workers voted in a referendum conducted by the union itself to affiliate with the CIO. The Con.-Edison Company immediately abrogated the contract; stopped the check-off and refused to recognize the officials and committees of the Union. The case was filed with the WLB and the IBEW-AFL joined hands with the company in attempting to abrogate this agreement. The WLB failed to give practical and proper relief and suggested everyone seek relief through the NLRB. The Union members were incensed over this and finally compelled the company to recognize their Union and contract provisions and the union asked for a NLRB election. The AFL in the last few weeks, seeing they were defeated, pulled out of the election and threw its support to the so-called Independent Union with the above results.

Under the splendid leadership of President Joseph A. Fisher, Secretary Wm. Pachler, Patrick McGrath, aided by Director Harold J. Straub and other CIO representatives, the workers have demonstrated that powerful corporations like the Con.-Edison can, with determination, be brought into line and required to deal with proper, democratic unions and on a decent basis.

The Rev. John Monaghan and the Rev. Philip A. Carey addressed meetings in behalf of the CIO as did Vice-Pres. Martin Kyne, of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employees; Regional Director Frank Bender of Baltimore; CIO Sec. Treas. James B. Carey, and the writer.

The Consolidated-Edison victory definitely lays the foundation for the building of a powerful union of, by and for the Utility Workers, affiliated with the CIO.

Pres. Philip Murray gave every assistance to the Utility Workers and issued public statements supporting them, as did David J. McDonald, Sec.-Treas. USA-CIO.

The CIO compliments all the officers and members of this organization for their splendid support in accomplishing these results and assures them that they will have the full support of the CIO in presenting their issues to this corporation and in building their union throughout the Nation.

Oil Hearings Recess For Negotiations

HEARINGS on the wage demands of the CIO Oil Workers Union before the Government fact-finding panel for the oil industry recessed this week until Jan. 7, pending further negotiations between the union and the companies.

Postponement of the hearings was requested by the company and agreed to by the union, following the announcement by Dr. Frank Graham, panel chairman, of the policy to be followed in making wage recommendations.

The panel's statement declared that any wage increases recommended would be determined on either of two bases: (1) Those which can be paid without any increase in existing price ceilings, and (2) those which may be used as a basis for a price increase.

"If the panel finds it necessary, in its judgment, to inquire into the issue of ability to pay wage increases without securing price increases, then it is to inquire into the profits and earnings position of the employer," the statement declared.

It has been the union's position, since its wage demands were first announced several months ago, that the huge profits made by the oil industry during wartime put the oil companies in a position of being able to pay the wage raise asked by the oil workers, without a price increase, and that, therefore, an inquiry into profits and the company's ability to pay should be considered in determining a wage increase.

The issue on what basis the panel was going to make its wage recommendations was presented at the opening of the panel hearings, Dec. 17, by union attorneys.

Lindsay P. Walden, general counsel for the Oil Workers, and CIO Asst. General Counsel Eugene Cotton, argued that unless this was made clear, the findings of the panel would be "meaningless," as the companies could simply reply that without a price increase, they were unable to give the wage increases that the panel might recommend.

Any increase that may be recommended by the panel which is to be used as a basis for seeking price relief, the panel stated, "must receive the approval of the Wage Stabilization Board."

The oil panel's statement was issued Friday morning, the next day after President Truman's statement declaring that fact finding boards have the authority to examine the books of the employer, but had been prepared before the President's statement was issued, the panel's chairman said.

$6,000,000 Pay Hike For UE Women

Some 50,000 women workers employed by General Electric and Westinghouse Electric Cos., will get a $6 million yearly pay increase under a final order issued by the Natl. War Labor Board, announces the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The union had waged a long fight to stop those companies from discriminating against women by paying them lower rates than men, and had argued the case before the WLB for many months.

The Board also ordered the companies to set up a fund consisting of 2c per woman employe on women's jobs to be used to furthed narrow sex differentials. Allocation of the fund will be determined in negotiations between the union and the companies.

In addition to the $6 million annual increase, the 50,000 women will receive about $2,500,000 in back pay.

The union has sent telegrams to GE and Westinghouse officials calling upon them to comply at once with the WLB's final ruling.

Referring to the union's demand for a $2 a day general increase, the union stated this week that no further wage offer had been made since the 13½c hourly wage increase proposal which the union turned down.

A Smith-Connally strike vote conducted earlier this month among employes of GE, Westinghouse and the electrical division of General Motors showed 84% of the workers in favor of a strike to back up their wage demands.

Union Accepts Sinclair Offer

Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Union announced this week that an 18% wage offer made by Sinclair Oil had been accepted by the union. The wage boost, which in general is equivalent to 22½c an hour, breaks the Standard Oil 15% wage formula, Knight said.

In the 70-year history of its monopoly domination of the oil industry, Standard Oil has always set the wage pattern, the union stated. Standard Oil of New Jersey announced the 15% upward adjustment in basic scales last September and several major oil companies immediately followed suit.

The Oil Workers rejected the formula and conducted a nationwide strike for maintenance of take-home pay as the industry reverted from the 48-hour week to 40 hours.

The 18% increase will be incorporated in the Sinclair nationwide agreement running until May 31, 1946, together with a union responsibility clause barring strikes and providing machinery for handling violations.

New Name For Paper

The CIO Paper Workers Organizing Committee will become the United Paperworkers of America Jan. 1, the union announced this week. CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood is chairman of the Paperworkers; Frank Grasso is director, and Harry D. Sayre is secretary-treasurer.

CIO Union Convention's

URW Re-Elects Top Officials

Delegates to the annual convention of the CIO Rubber Workers, meeting this week in Grand Rapids, Mich., re-elected their three top officials and adopted a program which stressed political action and the union's demand for higher wages.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Vice-Pres. H. R. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Charles Lanning were all re-elected to serve another term.

In his keynote speech to the convention, Pres. Buckmaster reviewed the progress made during the union's ten-year history and the problems that lie ahead.

The CIO was represented at the convention by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, who brought greetings from CIO Pres. Philip Murray and told the delegates about the CIO's militant fight for wage increases and for improved legislation.

The need for increased political action was stressed by Tom Burns, assistant to PAC Chairman Sidney Hillman, who pointed out the poor record made by Congress on legislation sponsored by labor. Neither political party could be depended upon, he said.

Delegates adopted a resolution condemning all anti-labor bills now pending in Congress and urged the executive board to take steps to put on a publicity campaign through mass meetings and demonstrations to call attention to the dangers of anti-labor legislation.

The convention went on record in favor of an industry-wide 30-hour week, a 30% pay increase, 10c premium for night work, paid holidays, overtime pay for Saturday and Sunday work, and other standard union demands.

Resolutions recommending that anti-discrimination clauses be included in all contracts and condemning religious and racial discrimination were passed.

SKF Strike Is Settled

A two-and-a-half month strike at SKF Industries, Inc., in Philadelphia ended Dec. 15 when 3,000 workers represented by the CIO United Steelworkers approved a six-point settlement, reached after CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired SKF Pres. William L. Batt asking him to resume negotiations with the union.

Terms of the settlement included withdrawal of charges of unfair labor practices against the company; withdrawal by the company of a $2 million damage suit against the union, its officers and members; resumption of grievance procedure; and no discrimination against strikers. It was also agreed that on the fourth day after the workers return, negotiations will begin on an interim agreement, pending a new election to determine a collective

UAW Signs Up

A 30% wage increase and other gains are provided in a contract signed between the American Overseas Airlines, Inc., New York, and the CIO Auto Workers, announces Paul E. Miley, UAW regional director.

Pay raises include an overall 9c an hour increase retroactive to last Oct. 1, with an additional 20% to become effective Jan. 1; a 4c bonus for the afternoon shift and 6c for the midnight shift.

Oil Membership At Peak

To meet the need of its greatly increased membership now at an all-time high, delegates to the annual convention of the CIO Oil Workers Union, meeting in Fort Worth, Texas last week, voted to reshape the union's internal structure and authorize Pres. O. A. Knight to appoint seven district directors to take charge of service and organizing.

Sec. E. C. Conarty reported that the union's steady growth for the past 28 months and a big influx of new members during the recent strike, had brought an overall increase of 35% in membership. Dist. Three reported a 71% gain, and Dist. One 50%.

President Knight and Vice-Pres. A. R. Kinstley were nominated for re-election without opposition. Secretary Conarty and former Vice-Pres. E. Carl Mattern were nominated for secretary. Election will be by referendum.

Proposals for nation-wide bargaining with uniform contract termination dates, and the creation of research and education departments were advanced by Knight as union goals.

William B. Taylor, who was assigned to the OWIU by the National CIO during the organization drive, and has now been reassigned to other union work beginning Jan. 1, expressed to the convention his best wishes for the union's continued growth and further progress.

A strong political action program adopted by the convention called for liaison with the CIO-PAC and authorized machinery and finances for an intensive political campaign among the union's 200 locals.

Outside speakers included George Guernsey, Natl. CIO assistant director of Education, who appealed for renewed emphasis on union education, and Leo Perlis, director of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

Francisco Arechandieta and Carlos Silva attended the convention as fraternal delegates from the Mexican Oil Workers Union and the Latin American Confederation of Labor.

The convention sent greetings to the Colombian oil workers, on the verge of a strike against American-owned companies.

Tennessee CIO For Strong PAC

Full support to the National CIO's wage and legislative program was pledged by delegates to the one-day annual convention of the Tennessee CIO Council held in Nashville, Dec. 9. Pres. W. A. Copeland was re-elected to his third term as head of the council, and Paul Christopher was returned as secretary-treasurer without opposition.

Lawrence Marine, of the CIO Steelworkers, was elected first vice president, to succeed Matt Lynch, who is in the Navy.

The convention went on record in favor of full support to present strikes of CIO unions.

To strengthen political action work in the State, the convention recommended the establishment of a Tennessee CIO-PAC central office with a full-time executive secretary.

Need for better understanding between farmers and wage earners was stressed in a resolution pledging support to the Natl. Farmers Union in Tennessee.

This scene is the key to the story. No two in this picture can speak the same language, and yet they have endured the same misery, and together they are attempting a last-chance get-away from the Nazis. An escaped American prisoner of war gives a drop of whiskey to a Jugoslav workingman, while Italian orphaned children, an old Jewish tailor and his niece from Warsaw, a Dutch refugee and a German look on.

THE LAST CHANCE

ONE could call THE LAST CHANCE a thriller, but that would be a case of understatement, for so far it is undoubtedly the best picture to come out of the war. It is a gripping, moving story that tells the tragic flight of the refugee.

In this case the refugees are but a handful: an escaped American PW, Sgt. Braddock, an English lieutenant Halliday, an English major, a Jewish tailor from Warsaw and his little niece Channelle, bombed out Italian orphans, a widowed German refugee, one French woman, a Jewish workingman who can understand no one's language, and yet understands all, a Viennese professor, who weights himself down with his treatise on "European Minorities since 1815."

They can barly speak with one another. Some like the Jewish tailor have been running from the Nazis since 1939. With the setting of THE LAST CHANCE in the autumn of 1943, several weeks after Badoglio has taken over the government, the little tailor is still only one step ahead of the Nazis.

The Germans are retreating and in their wake they are leaving nothing. Prisoners are being deported northward, villages are being wiped out, the dread terror marches with the Nazi, and before them are the homeless ones.

THE LAST CHANCE, like Marie Louise, about a little French war orphan, is a Swiss film produced by the Swiss documentarist Lazar Wechsler. Metro Goldwyn Mayer has taken cognizance of its powerful drama, and is distributing it in this country through the first-run theatres.

Lazar Wechsler established his reputation in the 30's with Wings Over Ethiopia and China. He ranks with the Dutch documentarist Joris Ivens. However, THE LAST CHANCE is more than documentary. The story is poignant, the people grow real, the drama and acting is superb and convincing, the photography beautiful, while the message is stirring, an appeal to the common humanity in all of us.

Most of the actors portrayed their own story. They were non-professionals and were drawn into the film because they had experienceed what they were to portray. They do it well, even our own Sgt. Roy Regan from Laurel Springs, N. J., a flight engineer interned in Switzerland. When you leave the theatre you too have touched hands with the cast in common suffering, if for the brief two hours of the movie.

The American Sarg and the English Lieutenant escape from a bombed out PW train. They make for the woods, and head north; their only hope is to get to Switzerland fast.

In this film where so many people with so many different languages are suddenly hurtled together by war, the director has done a beautiful and sensible thing. Each speaks in his own language. To an English speaking audience this is no difficulty, and in fact helps to establish color and locale, and often the English translation on the film is completely unnecessary for the acting is so convincing that one understands the meaning and intent of the speaker.

This multilingual technique places the proper dignity upon the nationality portrayed, rather than the vulgarization of having them speak English with a foreign accent, an attempt that ruined A Bell for Adano, putting all the villagers of Adano in the category of comedians. Our two escaped prisoners of war help to carry the story to an American audience, because they speak English, and they being the prime movers in the drama, everything is said for their comprehension, and so through them to the American audience.

Our escaped prisoners reach the Lake and the American finds a boat. They plan to cross when the moon goes down, but they are warned by Tonina, an Italian girl, that the Germans have traps for them on the other side. She also tells them that Badoglio has signed an Armistice, that the war is over. Their hopes are shattered when they reach the village, for the Germans have come in just before them. However, with old clothes provided by Tonina's uncle they head north to the Alps.

From a crawling box car, they see male concentration camp victims shunted northward with the cattle. A wife tries to hurl herself in front of a moving train. The boys are deeply moved by this appalling spectacle. Lieut. Halliday yearns to help, but the train moves on.

His chance comes later, and the English boy does not forget his pledge, because the very same woman is among the refugees in the Italian Alpine village just across from Switzerland, where the local priest is conducting an underground railway for refugees into Switzerland.

This priest offers help to all. He is also harboring an English major. The boys decide to join up with the major when they meet him, and search for a partisan group, where they can continue the fight. They know that their usefullness is over once they are interned in Switzerland.

The boom of guns shatters these plans. Once again they must flee, for the Nazis have wiped out the partisans. The priest begs them for humanity's sake to take the refugees with them to the next village where a mountain guide, Guiseppe, lives. They promise to, and do, but when they get there the Nazis have done their work, and their guide is no more.

It is now up to the three soldiers either to leave their handful of refugees, old ones, and children, women and sick ones, ("jerks" to the American—words he soon wants to eat) and make for Switzerland alone, and fast, or guide them over the mountains, and so weight their chances for escape. Their decision, and the flight, and the wait in the cabin in the mountain with Nazis outside, and the talk that comes out of their suffering—these are the things that make the film one to be remembered.

Helen Kay.

Late Films

JOHNNIE IN THE CLOUDS (Two Cities Film). A tender story of two Johnnies, an English pilot and an American one. The English Johnnie was there first, taking it and dishing it out, and then he was "Johnnie dead." The American Johnnie, who came later, had it easier, with better equipment and a lot of brash, and he's soon "Johnnie dead" to even the score and end the war. A film about the RAF and our own Air Corps.

THEY WERE EXPENDABLE (MGM). A chronology of the PT boat and Captain Bulkley, played by Robert Bulkley as Lieutenant Binckley. MGM took no chances this time as De Mille did with The Story of Dr. Wassel, and they claim as "coincidental any similarity to persons living or dead." But it's the story I read in the papers, and it goes on and on and on, despite some very tender and moving moments.

THE LOST WEEKEND (Paramount). Some very fine acting goes into the story of an alcoholic and how he finally swears off. One reviewer says: "You'll either never touch another after you see this film, or dash right out for one or two more as a bracer."

THE SPANISH MAIN (a Frank Borzage Production). The less said the better. Robin Hood would have turned over in his grave.

Hobbs Bill Debunked

The Hobbs bill (HR 32) was put over as a means of clearing up racketeering in unions. Actually, it does nothing of the kind, but is rather aimed simply at robbing the union of many of its hard-won rights. The following excerpts from an anlysis of HR 32, prepared by the CIO Legal Dept., show up the pretensions of the sponsors of this anti-union measure which now awaits action in the U. S. Senate.

Supporters of the Hobbs bill in all public discussions seek to convey the impression that it outlaws the use of "force" or "violence" or prohibits something which the bill calls "robbery" and "extortion." The proponents of the bill thus seek to convey the impression that those who oppose the Hobbs bill are in some way protecting "force" or "violence" or "robbery" or "extortion."

The fact is that the prohibition of "force" or "violence" or the prohibition of what the Hobbs bill chooses to call "robbery" or "extortion" are not at all the changes which the Hobbs bill makes in the law. The Hobbs bill would not for the first time introduce into Federal legislation a prohibition on "force" or "robbery" or "corruption" as those are defined in the bill. All these are already prohibited by Federal law.

What are the changes which the Hobbs bill really offers in the present "anti-racketeering" law? Basically they come down to just one change—but very significant from the point of view of the direction in which the "anti-racketeering" law of 1934 might be turned. The present law specifically prohibits any attempt to direct its application against situations involving simply "the payment of wages by a bona fide employer to a bona fide employe." (Sec. 2a.) The present law specifically declares that:

"No court of the U. S. shall construe or apply any of the provisions of this act in such a manner as to impair, diminish, or in any manner affect the rights of bona fide labor organizations in lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof as such rights are expressed in existing statutes of the U. S."

These are the two provisions which the Hobbs bill would delete from the present "anti-racketeering" act. The deletion of these two provisions would constitute the full extent of the change which the Hobbs law would make in the existing "anti-racketeering" law.

Thus all that the Hobbs bill does is to remove from the present law the two provisions inserted to prevent any warped application of the law in derogation of the rights of labor. All that the Hobbs law does is to remove (1) the provision which prevents application of the "anti-racketeering" act to the payment of wages by a bona fide employer to a bona fide employee" and (2) the provision which prevents application of the law to impair the "right of bona fide labor organizations lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof."

The mere statement of this fact should be enough to demonstrate why organized labor is opposed to the Hobbs bill.

HOBBS BILL VOTE RECORD

THIS is the record vote on two of the main ainti-union issues now pending before Congress.

One, the May-Arends bill (HR 3937) was prevented from reaching the House floor by the defeat of a technical move of the House Rules Committee majority to bring it up. The defeat was a major gain for labor, but it should be remembered that the bill can come up again.

A "Yea" vote on the May-Arends bill rule is an anti-union vote, designated by a "W." A "Nay" vote was a vote for preserving union rights, and is designated by an "R."

The second vote was on the rule for the Hobbs bill (HR 32), which did reach the floor and which was passed by the House. A "Yea" vote on HR 32 was also an anti-union vote, and is designated by a "W." A "Nay" vote was a vote for preserving union rights, and is designated by an "R."

In both records, "NV" designates not voting.

Public Favors Profit Control

By more than 2-1, the public believes that big business profit margins should be set by government, the Natl. Opinion Research Center at the University of Denver reported this week.

A nationwide survey, the Center said, revealed that 57 per cent of the people believe that government should decide what is a fair profit for big business. Only 27 per cent thought that each business man should decide for himself.

For small business, 46 per cent favored government control, and 42 per cent would leave it up to individuals.

NEW PAMPHLETS

Higher Pay Road To Freedom

Although the newspapers are full of stories about labor's fight for higher wages, the truly sensation story of the day, which they have entirely ignored, is that industry has gone on strike, says the new CIO Political Action Committee pamphlet, "The Road to Freedom."

Issued as No. 5 in PAC's pamphlet-of-the-month series, the 24-page illustrated booklet discusses the wage crisis in America today, and tells what the CIO proposes must be done to cope with it, "for the good of America and humanity."

In explaining why industry can afford to strike, the pamphlet gives some U. S. Dept. of Commerce figures to show that in 55 months of war American corporations have accumulated $52 billion in profits after payment of taxes. Yet they are unwilling to share this with their workers.

Atoms And You

Because the subject of atomic energy and how it is to be controlled is of vital importance to every American, a 24-page illustrated pamphlet, "Atoms and You," has been issued by Pamphlet Press, 27 East 67th St., N. Y. 21, N. Y. Price is 10c a copy, with quantity orders at a discount.

The pamphlet describes simply what atomic power is, and what it means in terms of war and of peace. If we should get into another war, the Atomic War, it would be "so utterly frightful that the imagination balks at picturing it," says the pamphlet.

But, in peace, atomic power "will make our present coal-oil-and-water-power civilization look as crude as the caveman's muscle-power civilization looks to us now."

Warehouse Manuel

A handy manual for Warehouse Stewards has been issued by Local 6, CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, 591 Mission St., San Francisco. The booklet contains sections on shop leadership, duties, grievances, education and the Natl. Labor Relations Act.

Xmas Party For Strikers' Kids

A Christmas party for the 6,000 children of 25,000 textile workers on strike against the Erwin Cotton and Hadley Peoples mills in North Carolina, has been arranged by the CIO Textile Workers Union.

A union committee put on a drive for funds to buy toys and candy for the youngsters, to which many organizations and individuals contributed. The TWU is also feeding the children and their families at union commissaries.

Mrs. Roosevelt sent her best wishes to the Christmas party and regretted that she would be unable to accept an invitation to attend.

The textile workers have been on strike for two months in protest against the low wages and intolerable working conditions. The union charges that the Erwin mills made a profit of more than two and a half million in 1944.

Outlook On CIO's Ten Years

A review of the growth, aims, policies and gains of the CIO since its formation ten years ago is given in the current issue of the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Research & Education.

Since its formation in November, 1935, as a committee set up within the AFL to work for organization of mass production industries on an industrial basis, the CIO has grown tremendously in size, but has the same general ideals and uses the same methods, states the Outlook.

A chart giving the growth of the CIO's seven largest unions, shows that these unions in the auto, steel, electrical and radio, textile, shipbuilding, clothing and rubber industries has increased from around 318,000 in 1935 to nearly 4½ million in 1945. CIO's total membership is over six million.

"The success of the CIO outran the hopes even of its founders," says the Outlook, in recalling some of its early gains during the exciting days of the 1936 rubber strike, the 1937 auto sit-down strikes and the swing over of the company unions in steel to the CIO.

The Outlook points out that the CIO does not limit its policies to those of narrow business unionism but has a broad social program of benefit to all the American people, and "is eager to work with outside groups in solving common problems."

Two Timely Discussions

Job problems of Negoes, and refugees from war-torn countries who are adjusting themselves to American life, are discussed in two recent pamphlets issued by the Public Affairs Committee, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N. Y. 20, N. Y.

Although Negroes made substantial gains during the war both in quantity and quality of jobs held, they will bear the brunt of high unemployment during the reconversion period, states Herbert R. Northrup, in a pamphlet called "Will Negroes Get Jobs Now?"

"The Refugees Are Now Americans" by Maurice R. Davie and Samuel Koenig, which gives the results of a nation-wide study of recent immigration from Europe, discloses that fully half of these refugees have been granted citizenship and most of the others are in the process of getting it. The pamphlets may be ordered from the Committee at 10c each.

Red Caps Pay Case

The case of sub-standard wages among red caps, dining car employees and Pullman laundry workers is given in a recent pamphlet called "Congress! Close the Gap" issued by the CIO Transport Service Employes, 3451 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago 16, Ill.

The pamphlet is a reprint of a statement presented by the union's president, Willard S. Townsend, before the House Labor Committee in behalf of the proposed 65c minimum wage.

GAIN $60 MILLION IN CLOTHING PACT

SETTLEMENT "by good-faith collective bargaining" of a major CIO wage movement affecting hundreds of thousands of clothing workers was hailed this week by Pres. Sidney Hillman of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers and drew widespread favorable comment.

The clothing manufacturers' attitude was in sharp contrast to that of auto, steel and other big corporations which have rejected genuine collective bargaining and have created serious trouble in their industries.

The agreement reached between the ACW and the Clothing Manufacturers' Assn. grants wage increases ranging from 20 to 31%, aggregating $60,000,000 annually, to 150,000 clothing workers.

Added to earlier agreements covering cotton garment, laundry and other ACW workers, this means that 300,000 members of that organization will have received comparable substantial wage increases and other improvements.

The new contract provides for the continuation of payment of the following insurance benefits to union members, without cost to them:

A $500 death benefit; $8 and $12 weekly sick and accident benefits for 13 weeks in any one year for any single illness or accident; $5 a day hospitalization up to 31 days in any one year, plus $25 for incidental hospital expenses and a $50 maternity benefit.

In a statement issued following amicable conclusion of several months of negotiation, Hillman declared:

"The fear and insecurity of illness and accident, old-age and, finally, the loss of the breadwinner is being constantly mitigated by the broad social program initiated by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America and concurred in by management.

"Our latest experiment in the social welfare of our members, under the new contract, is the establishment of a retirement fund for those reaching 65, to augment the limited Government provisions toward the same end.

"An amount equal to 3% of the employers' weekly payroll will be devoted toward this end, and as soon as adequate reserves are built up old-age funds will be paid out to beneficiaries, as we are already doing with death, sickness, accident, hospitalization and maternity benefits."

IN THE HOUR OF TRIUMPH

Behind us lie 3½ years of deadly struggle in which, with God's help, we have prevailed.

For most of us, the outlook is a bright one. If we will simply use the brains, the will, the energy, the enterprise . . . the materials and resources . . . with which we won our war, we can't fail to win the peace and to make this the richest, happiest land the world has known.

For most of us, the years ahead are bright with promise. But for others of us—and, ironically enough, their part in bringing victory was a major one—the years to come must bear a different look.

In America today are hundreds of thousands of injured men. Men with neatly pinned up sleeves and trousers. Blinded men. Men with clever iron hooks instead of hands. Worst of all, men with hurt and darkened minds.

These men need our help. Helping them will cost a great deal of money. We can help them best by buying Victory Bonds. Far away from America today are millions of Americans. As we would be, they're on fire to get back — to their wives, to the children some of them have never seen, to their jobs.

These men need our help. Helping them will cost a great deal of money. And we can help them best by buying Victory Bonds.

Let's not forget them, in our just rejoicing. And the one way we can help most to care for our wounded . . . to bring our veterans home . . . to give them a fresh start in the country they fought for . . . to care for the families of those who died before the victory was won . . . is simply this:

Buy all the Bonds you can. Keep all the Bonds you buy.

VICTORY BONDS—to have and to hold

'PEACE BE WITH YOU'

By ROSE H. ALSCHULER

AT THIS TIME of the year we again say to one another, "Peace Be With You." Are the words an outworn shibboleth or can we once more give them substance and meaning? The war is over but peace is not yet come. In other dark and difficult times, men must have delved deep for the strength, courage and wisdom that brought them peace. The strength of our ancestors is our strength, the wisdom of the ages is ours for the seeking, the courage of countless generations is our heritage. What are we prepared to do with our heritage of strength, wisdom and courage so that our children may know that we have not failed them?

Peace will be with us again only when human beings like ourselves demand, create and cherish it. It will come not out of our distant longing but out of our immediate persistent striving. So long as we permit social and economic injustice and so long as we allow slanderous lies about our fellow citizens to go unprotested, just so long are we the silent allies of injustice and of lies. On the day that we become identified with the crucified of the world, we will protest injustice wherever we find it. Then will we begin to re-create peace. Then only can we begin to look forward to the time when once more men can greet one another honestly and say with meaning those words that through the ages have brought with them a sense of comfort and security: Peace Be With You.

Making Eating Count

CASE OF THE MISUSED VEGETABLE

THERE is the sad but actual case of a whole village of people in a far northern place who are starving on regular meals. The doctors who discovered their plight reported that, especially in the winter, they are dragged out, have colds, aches, sores, bad teeth and swollen gums. A simple change in cooking the food they are already eating could improve their health almost dramatically.

During the long winter months these people have only cabbage, turnips and potatoes as vegetables. The cabbage is cooked for several hours and the potatoes are peeled and cooked in the morning, then reheated at noon and at night. The cooking water is thrown away.

Why is it with sufficient food they are having so many troubles? Since they don't have much variety, the cabbage, turnips and potatoes are their only source of much-needed minerals and vitamins. As much as 90 per cent of the minerals and vitamins are hi-jacked through overcooking and "feeding the sink."

These are the facts the northern villagers are learning the hard way. We can all benefit from their sad experience and should take the safe road .

Cabbage and all other green vegetabes stand next to milk as protective foods. They are a good source of iron and vitamins A, B, C and G. If we eat enough of them, they help prevent many ills. But by overcooking, drowning, standing in air, or discarding cooking water all these substances are lost. A few tips:

1. The less you cook a vegetable the less color and nourishment you lose. Eating them raw gives you still more nourishment. Get used to liking your vegetables with some of their natural crispness. Five to seven minutes of steaming is enough time to cook sliced carrots, peas or chopped cabbage (10 to 15 minutes for quartered cabbage). Spinach and the tender greens are ready in 12 minutes. The tougher greens like kale take a little longer.

2. Cook potatoes in their skins. Nature made the skin a fine cover. It keeps the goodness in. For mashed potatoes cook in skins, then peel and mash. The wife who hates stained hands will welcome this change.

3. Cook vegetables in very little water. A few tablespoonfuls in the bottom of a tightly covered pan makes steam enough to cook. A tight cover helps keep out the air and uses less water.

4. Don't pare and cut or chop vegetables until you are ready to use them.

6. Keep vegetables as fresh as possible. Store them covered and in a cold place.

'WELCOME HOME' — LET'S MAKE IT REAL!

By ELEANOR FOWLER

Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Women's Auxiliaries

"WELCOME the boys home" is the theme song this Christmas. We all want to take part, too, but the question is, how can we best express our welcome?

One big newspaper that has consistenly fought wage increases, full employment and other legislation to benefit workers and veterans is offering a prize for the best home outdoor display welcoming the boys home.

Frankly it makes me sick. Congress takes the real guts out of the full employment bill and the industralists who urged them to do it hang up banners saying "Welcome back, boys." The 65c minimum wage bill is stalled in Congress and the reactionaries chant, "Welcome, GIs."

I wonder if General Motors has hung out the welcome banners, too. Maybe the company men couldn't get through the picket line to put them up.

Back in September, President Truman outlined the program which we should have adopted to give the boys a real welcome. He called for full employment legislation, increased unemployment compensation, increased and broadened social security, a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, an increased minimum wage, more adequate provisions for veterans, etc. And what has been done?

Well, they've amended the GI bill of rights to raise the veteran's educational subsistance allowance from $50 a month to $65 if he's single and from $75 to $90 if he has dependents. (CIO asked for $90 for the single veteran and $20 for each dependent.) They've increased the loan guarantee from $2,000 to $4,000 to keep up with the inflation in real estate values, and that's just about all.

How can we have the nerve to say "Welcome home" to our Negro GIs when all except three offices of the Fair Employment Practices Committee had to shut their doors Dec. 15? How can we face our disabled veterans when no provision whatever has yet been made for their dependents?

Signs and words are no kind of welcome for our fighting men. Action is called for.

CIO is in the midst of such action. The GM strike, the steel strike call, all of the other strike votes through which labor is demanding take-home pay that will feed the kids, and also assure American industry of a continuing market for American goods, are part of labor's welcome to our GIs.

CIO's legislative action program is another side of our welcome—and it's a side in which every member of every CIO family can take part this Christmas.

Our Congressmen are home now and they'll be home until the middle of January. This is the time to talk to them about the kind of real welcome we need for our boys.

1946 is beginning—election year. Congressmen will have their ears to the ground. Let's see that they hear in no uncertain terms the deep dissatisfaction of the people with what they have done since VE Day.

Xmas Recess Action

(Following is the text of CIO Legislative Director Nathan E. Cowan's letter to all CIO affiliates outlining a program of Christmas recess action.

(By the time you read this, your Congressman should be home. Call on him as soon as you can with this questionnaire and return it to CIO Legislative Dept., Washington 6, D. C.)

Dear Sir and Brother:

Congressmen and Senators are home for a Christmas recess that is expected to last until Jan. 14.

This is the time to tell them face to face why it has become necessary for organized labor to strike for wage increases; how the take-home pay has gone down, how the companies have refused to bargain collectively and in many cases have been holding up production until the excess profits tax is off.

This is the time to remind them that Congress itself is also responsible for the present crisis. List the bills that should have been passed long ago—unemployment compensation, a real full employment bill (not the fake that recently passed the House), the 65c minimum wage, a permanent FEPC.

We must begin now to prepare for the all-important Congressional elections of November 1946. As a test of your Congressmen and Senators ask them to go on record against the Norton-Ellender anti-strike bill requested by President Truman (HR 4908, S 1661).

Show them the harm it would do, and how it does nothing to solve the real problem of the weekly pay envelope.

Determining Our Attitude

The attitude the Congressmen show to our delegations on the issues confronting millions of American workers will determine our attitude toward them in the forthcoming election campaign.

It is no longer sufficient for a Congressman merely to vote right. We shall judge them also on their activities in the fight for the welfare of the American people.

It is particularly important at this time to arrange joint delegations with other organizations. Congressmen need to see that labor's wage demands are supported by other sections of the community.

That support can be obtained in most instances. Be sure to let your local newspapers and radio stations know by press releases that you are going to visit your Congressman. Let them know by press release the results of the interview.

Recently, in Washington, a national conference on jobs and security was attended by representatives of over 100 organizations, among them many CIO representatives of state and city councils.

Five Immediate Issues

The meeting decided that five issues demanded immediate joint action, and the first of these issues was support of wage increases generally, as well as the 65c minimum. The other four were:

1. Opposition to anti-labor bills.

2. Emergency housing for veterans.

3. The Helen Douglas resolution (HR 404) for Big Three agreement on control of atomic energy.

4. Permanent FEPC.

The record votes on accepting the rules on the May-Arends (HR 3937) and the Hobbs bills (HR 32) are enclosed for your information (see page 12).

The following score sheet lists some of the other issues on which you should tackle Congressmen and Senators.

Please return the score sheet so that we can help you get the maximum cooperation from your Congressman.

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Anti-strike (S 1661, HR 4908)	Carries out Truman message of Dec. 3 by setting up anti-srtike apparatus.	Hearings put over to mid-January in House and Senate Labor Committee after protest by Pres. Murray.	Tell Senators and Representatives to vote against when you see them in Xmas recess.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Prohibits normal union activity such as picketing, soliciting dues, membership, etc., under guise of "anti-racketeering."	Passed House (see page 12 for record vote). Now to Senate.	Tell Senators to oppose; check Representative's vote before you call on him this week.
May-Arends (HR 3937)	Outlaws union political action; sets jail, fines for strikes in "violation of contract."	Move to bring on House floor defeated last week, but can come up again.	Tell Senators and Representatives to oppose when you see them this week.
65c wage floor (S 1349, HR 3914)	Sets minimum wages at 65c first year, then 75c, extends coverage.	Sen. Ellender (D. La.) trying filibuster in Labor Committee.	Tell Senators to work for quick passage, no phoney "compromise."
FEPC (S 101, HR 2232)	Makes FEPC permanent U. S. Govt. agency. Present agencies being liquidated now.	Stalled in House Rules Committee. Discharge Petition 4 has 157 signatures, needs 218.	Tell your Representative to sign if he hasn't already.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Makes it possible to retire polltax Senators and Representatives.	Passed House, stalled in Senate.	Tell your Senators to push for early action, no amendment.

65c Doublecross

In a quick attempted doublecross, Sen. Ellender (D., La.) tried this week to extend already overloaded employer testimony against the 65-75c wage floor bill to the point of filibustering.

Violating the canons of Senate Committee executive hearings, Ellender told the press that the Labor Committee was going to call in at least three more employer witnesses and hear them in secret.

The three would represent lumber, canning and agricultural labor—all at the 40c an hour or less wage level. To add to the doublecross, Ellender himself would select two of the employer witnesses, with the third (representing farm employers) being chosen by Sen. Ball (R., Minn.).

CIO and the newly formed liberal committee for the bill, headed by Bishop Sheil, are protesting the new stall on the bill, pointing out that there are already 1,500 printed pages of testimony, that dozens of employers have been heard, and that if anyone has been denied sufficient chance to testify, it is labor.

Both CIO and the committee are also protesting strongly against hearing the 40c an hour gang of employers in secret session.

Labor's Man Of The Year

Philip Murray was picked by a jury of 50 top Washington newspaper correspondents as "America's top labor leader" in a poll conducted by Look magazine. "Labor looks to 1946 as a testing time to determine whether its wartime gains in wages, hours can be held, still considers Murray the leader in its battles," the magazine said.

Murray placed sixth in a field of 10 top men of the year that included President Truman, Henry Wallace, Generals Eisenhower and MacArthur, and others.

He was the only labor leader in the top 10 national figures chosen. "These will be America's top 10 men in 1946," Look said, "The year 1946 will be the most momentous in world history. Decisions to be made will affect the course of history for hundreds of years. . . . To determine the Americans most likely to shape these decisions, Look polled 50 Washington correspondents. Representing newspapers all over the United States, they are closer to our problems and our leaders than any other single group."

ONE WORLD AND LABOR

World Labor Asks Franco Break

PARIS, (ALN)—A declaration designed to rid Spain of the Franco dictatorship was demanded from the Big Three Foreign Ministers meeting in Moscow by the World Federation of Trade Unions here this week. In a message addressed to U. S. Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov and British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, WFTU general secretary Louis Saillant said:

"The WFTU, considering the resolution voted by the world trade union congress held in Paris last October, takes the liberty of expressing to your excellencies, on behalf of its 70,000,000 members, its opinion favoring a break of diplomatic relations by democratic governments with the Franco regime.

"Franco's participation in Axis policy and later in the war on Hitler's side, together with the total absence of trade union and civil liberties in Spain, place Franco among those responsible for the war and for violation of peoples' democratic liberties, perpetrated by fascism in Europe.

"The workers of the world would hail with great hope and joy a declaration by the three Foreign Ministers gathered in Moscow compelling the disappearance of Franco's government and dictatorship." At the Paris world labor congress, WFTU delegates from all parts of the world voted unanimously in favor of a break in diplomatic and economic relations with the Franco regime.

Note: In a letter sent Nov. 16 to President Truman, CIO President Philip Murray asked that the "U. S. immediately withdraw its support of the Franco regime in Spain and recognize a Spanish Republican government as a provisional authority for that country.

He added: "In 1937, Spain became the laboratory of fascism. Too many of us here in America refused to recognize the danger at the time, thought we could compromise with evil."

CIO Denounces Peron 'Raise'

The CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, this week denounced salary increases decreed by the Argentine government as a vote-buying maneuver and a device to replenish the campaign finances of pro-Nazi presidential candidate Col. Juan D. Peron.

The CIO committee stated that it had received information indicating that the pay raises, carefully timed to coincide with a high in electoral activity, will be cancelled soon after the elections. The Committee is headed by Jacob S. Potofsky, Secretary-Treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

The CIO Committee termed the government-ordered wage increase a "forced campaign contribution" eventually destined to show up in Peron's pocketbook. Through an ingenious interlocking mechanism, channels have been created to siphon off the working man's pay via Peron-installed union leadership and the government's "Secretariat of Labor and Social Welfare," in order to turn it over to Peron's campaign managers, the CIO Committee said.

WFTU Executive Board Meets

PARIS, (ALN)—The executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions today opened its first session since the organization's formation in October. WFTU president Sir Walter Citrine, who is also general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, is chairing the meetings. American labor is not represented at this session as Sidney Hillman, WFTU vice president and president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, cabled that he was unable to come and John Brophy, CIO director of organization, is not expected here till after the New Year to assume his permanent post as WFTU assistant secretary.

The following items will be discussed during the two-day sitting of the bureau: (1) report on the functioning of the WFTU, including standing orders and draft budget; (2) reconstitution of German labor unions, date of departure and route of the WFTU delegation to Germany and the character and extent of its mission;

(3) Relation of the WFTU to the United Nations Organization, implementation of decisions by the WFTU congress on labor representation in international bodies and organizations; (4) appointment of WFTU committees of inquiry on Greece, Japan and Iran; (5) negotiations with international trades secretaries for the creation of trade departments covering various industries within the WFTU.

Trainmen To Weigh World Unity

Cleveland, (FP)—Next convention of the Bro. of Railroad Trainmen (unaffiliated) will take up the question of joining the World Federation of Trade Unions on the recommendation of its national legislative representative, Martin Miller, who attended the WFTU Paris meeting.

An article on the WFTU in the December issue of The Railroad Trainmen, union magazine, predicted that organizations which stay outside the new world labor body "will become more and more isolated, more inevitably forced into patterns of reaction parallelling those of the nationalistically - minded groups which seek to impose a single state's power upon the rest of the world . . . Accepting this proposition, it then becomes imperative that all labor organizations support the WFTU."

British Outline Coal Plan

London, Dec. 21, (ALN)—The British Labor government announced today its plan for mine nationalization, which would give full powers of production and distribution to a nine-member National Coal Board. The bill, presented to Parliament by the Ministry of Fuel and Power, grants the Coal Board exclusive rights to mine coal in Britain and directs it "to secure the efficient development of the coal mining industry and to make supplies of coal available in quanities and at prices which seem best calculated to further the public interest."

The strike of some 4,000 workers of the Erwin textile mill chain in Cooleemee, Erwin and Durham, N. C., represented by the CIO Textile Workers Union has been going strong since Oct. 8. Morale of the strikers remains high as the fight for decent wages and working conditions goes on week after week. Here is Mrs. Bertha Wagstaff, a striker, getting her supply of groceries from Lois Lewis and Albert Pierce at the union's strike relief headquarters in Durham.

NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE

By PHILIP MURRAY
President, Congress of Industrial Organizations

The year 1946 will be a year of great decisions for the American people—decisions which will make or mar our future for many years to come.

It can be a year in which we lay a firm basis for a prosperous and expanding economy, for democratic progress and for lasting world peace.

Or it can be a year of domestic discontent and turmoil, of low wages and unemployment leading to general depression, a year of political reaction and international friction.

Organized labor, as represented by the Congress of Industrial Organizations, will do everything within its power to see that the right decisions are made to lead our country toward the goals desired by all public-spirited Americans.

The first decision that must be made is that America shall be a country of high wage standards, where the masses of the people have sufficient purchasing power to create a great domestic market for ever-expanding production.

If our country's wealth is to be used for the increasing welfare of all our people, industrial wages must be immediately and substantially raised to restore the workers' take-home pay and to put money into circulation in a fashion that will benefit the whole community.

Along with this economic decision must go the political decision that the powers of government shall not be used to destroy labor's rights, to break unions and to cater to the selfish few at the expense of the many.

If 1946 is to be year of progress, prosperity and peace, we must set our economic house in order and must see that our political leaders follow through to the goals of social justice, enlightened democracy and world unity set forth by President Roosevelt and endorsed by the American people in the last elections.

For the attainment of these constructive ends, the Congress of Industrial Organizations will greatly increase its industrial and political activities in 1946, in close cooperation and full harmony with all progressive Americans.

STRIKE OF 200,000 INEVITABLE, SAYS UE

A STRIKE by 200,000 employes of the General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors (electrical division) "is inevitable on the basis of conditions which exist at present," the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers announced this week.

The announcement was made at the union's Natl. headquarters in New York, following a meeting of the UE Coordinating Committee of General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors Conference boards. Final action on the strike will be taken up at a meeting of the union's general executive board Jan. 5 in New York.

The committee decided to advise all local unions "to complete immediately all their preparations for a strike and to be ready to put into effect a strike call on short notice."

James J. Matles, UE director of organization, made public a letter sent to GE Pres. Charles E. Wilson which said that "by denying the employes of your company fair wages and salaries the GE Company pits itself against the interests of all GE workers, veterans who are back in your plant, the servicemen who are on their way back, their families and the American people as a whole."

UE-CIO workers voted overwhelmingly for strike action to back up their $2 a day wage demands in an NLRB poll held Dec. 13.

In rejecting earlier an offer of "a conditional 10 per cent wage increase" made by General Electric, the union stated that it was "ready to resume negotiations immediately upon the decision of your company to make an unconditional and adequate offer for a cents-per-hour wage and salary increase."

Matles and other union officials conferred this week in Washington with Edgar L. Warren, director of the U. S. Conciliation Service, in a government-sponsored move to avert a possible strike. Representatives of Westinghouse and General Electric were also invited, but did not appear.

Warren announced later that General Electric had notified him that it would send representatives to confer with him on Jan. 2.

How Long, Mr. Truman,

In a letter to President Truman the strikers at the American Tobacco Company vigorously protested the President's industrial "cooling off" legislation. The letter, signed by Peg Kendig, Secretary of the Strike Committee, told the President that the workers in the plant had been "cooling our heels" from May, 1944, to October, 1945, while the Company refused to bargain with the Union, the Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, CIO.

"You know the American Tobacco Company is one of the richest corporations in the United States. We are not asking for the impossible. A 65c minimum wage is something which you, at one time, thought was little enough for an average family to try to exist on. We also want a 25c hourly increase to make up for loss of overtime after the first of the year and a union shop which we know is necessary in order to maintain any kind of fair and decent standards.

WHY RAISE BASIC PAY
7. Industry Can Afford It

Government studies show that industry can easily pay workers a 31% basic wage raise and still clear huge profits, more than double those of the pre-war (1936-39) years.

SELECTIVE SERVICE RULES AGAINST VETS' RIGHTS

CHARGING that the Selective Service System is usurping the functions of Federal district attorneys and courts under the Selective Service Act, Clinton S. Golden, chairman of the CIO Veterans Committee, this week issued a letter be sent to Major General Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service director.

Golden wrote that the CIO had received reports from Buffalo that a Selective Service official there has been advising employers not to give veterans vacation pay for the year in which they return to work.

This is not the first time that the CIO has been critical of Hershey, who has been under fire for repeated interpretations of the law aimed at giving the absolute right of a veteran to a job in the plant where he was formerly employed even though that would mean bumping another worker with greater seniority. Golden's letter follows:

"We have had reports from Buffalo, N. Y., that Lt. Col. Ray Wells of Selective Service has been advising employers not to pay vacation allowances to former employe veterans for the year in which they return to work.

ANSWER ASKED

"We wish to know whether this effort to deprive former service men of rights to which they have full legal and moral entitlement is being made with the knowledge and consent of your headquarters.

"It is difficult for us to understand why an officer of the Selective Service System would go out of his way to prevent an ex-GI from enjoying the joint benefits of a collective bargaining contract and the Selective Training and Service Act.

"We do not know by what authority Selective Service personnel have installed themselves as supreme arbiters on all matters affecting the employment of veterans. Certainly there is no sanction in law for such a practice—the Selective Training and Service Act vests full enforcement powers exclusively in the hands of the federal district attorneys and courts. The Selective Service staff, by training and temperment, are not qualified, with possible few exceptions, for such duties, and have no right to engage in them.

Congress established sound judicial machinery for the interpretation of its laws; and, labor unions and employers have established sound collective bargaining machinery for the interpretation of their agreements. The Selective Service System plays no part in either and ought not to interfere, especially when such interference serves to deny a veteran privileges which he would otherwise enjoy."

STEEL WORKERS FILE NLRB CHARGES AGAINST INLAND

SEC.-TREAS. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers this week filed charges of violations of the Natl. Labor Relations Act against Inland Steel Co., charging that the firm has canceled its contract after fabricating a story attempting to place the blame on the union.

McDonald wrote Chairman Paul Herzog of NLRB: "Ten years after the passage of the National Labor Relations Act, there are still employers in this country who are not prepared to recognize their obligations to bargain collectively under Federal law. The Inland Steel Company is one of those employers. In its desperate anxiety to weaken the Union by withholding from it maintenance of membership and checkoff, the company has repudiated a War Labor Board directive and a written signed contract embodying these provisions.

"Viewed in a broader perspective the action of the Inland Steel Company with respect both to its contract and the War Labor Board directive is symptomatic of an increasing disregard of the Act's bargaining mandate by powerful American industrialists, a disregard which is so signally responsible for the current national breakdown in labor relations."

McDonald pointed out that the American Iron and Steel Institute to which Inland Steel belongs is conducting a campaign to convince the public that the Steelworkers violated their contracts by taking a strike vote, although there is a clause stating that the agreements may be reopened if there is a change in the national wage policy.

"The Inland Steel Co.," McDonald continued, "has preferred a more direct approach. It has illegally robbed the employees of the fruits of both a War Labor Board directive and a contract." He warned that if the board does not act promptly "the entire steel industry will become the theater of wholesale illegality."

The Inland contract covers iron ore mines at Ironton and Iron River, Minn., and Ishpeming, Mich., and was negotiated Aug. 15 and 16, 1945, after the War Labor Board ordered on March 23 that the company should provide maintenance of membership and the check-off.

The company signed the contract Aug. 21, three days after a change in the national wage policy was announced. The union requested that the agreement be dated prior to the change in the wage policy so that it would not have to wait for another change to reopen the contract, McDonald said.

After a delay of more than two months the company's attorney agreed to the proposal, but the company subsequently wired the Steelworkers that it considered the contract void. The wire attempted to blame the union for the delay in signing the contract, and further added that it was no longer bound by War Labor Board directive because of the Japanese surrender.

"I am sure," McDonald wrote Herzog, "you will agree that this performance by the company which embraces not only a cynical repudiation of a signed contract, the consummation of, which was delayed only by the stalling conduct of the company, but also a barefaced disavowal of its obligations under a War Labor Board directive, violates the law."

GM QUITS GOVERNMENT FACT-FINDING PANEL

GENERAL Motors this week sent its scrub team to Washington to tell the GM fact-finding board that it was withdrawing from hearings before the board, but Chairman Lloyd Garrison of the board was not impressed.

He announced that the board was standing by its position that ability to pay is relevant in GM's dispute with the CIO Auto Workers, whose strike has entered its sixth week, and that the board would ask for the company's records if necessary.

GM did not deign to send any officials, being represented by Walter Gordon Merritt, lawyer, and his assistants who Pres. R. J. Thomas of UAW dubbed the scrub team. UAW was represented by Thomas, Vice. Pres. Walter Reuther, also head of the union's GM dept., and by its negotiating committee.

Merritt, in announcing GM's decision to withdraw, said that the union's position is "not a mere issue of wages, but a broad attack on American industry and free enterprise." He intimated that GM would see fit to return if the board should decide not to look into the books.

Reuther replied that GM "must accept full responsibility of its action in the eyes of the public. Answering GM's contention that free enterprise is endangered, Reuther said that such arguments are directed "at the fact finding board and the President of the United States.

The union was ready, as hearings continued after GM's withdrawal, to present its economic data to the board to prove that GM was able to meet the demand for 30% wage increase out of profits without increasing the price of cars.

Meanwhile, money to aid the strikers, was being received by UAW, the CIO Steelworkers contributing $100,000.

As it was agreed last week by UAW and GM after President Truman issued a statement saying that corporations should show their books to fact-finding committees, representatives of the union and the corporation met two days this week in Detroit.

The only accomplishment was that GM told Reuther that it would instruct local plant manager to meet UWA local officials to discuss secondary issues, such as shift preferences and elimination of pay incentives.

GM STRIKERS' MORALE SOARS AT YULETIDE

By PATRICIA BRONTE

THE holiday season found morale higher than ever among Detroit's thirty thousand GM strikers. Most families had trees, and ate good Christmas dinners. The traditional festive frills were provided by the locals. Children's parties, with candy, nuts, ice cream and cakes went on in union halls.

There were also Christmas trees in front of the picket line tents, as well as roaring outdoor fires, and group singing. Santa Clauses distributed grab bag gifts in the cold, new snow.

A few locals suspended picketing over the whole Christmas week end, and planned to lay off again over New Year's Day.

Strike welfare committees saw that the comparatively few strikers families who are in dire need received plenty of food, and toys and got their rent paid.

It is to be expected, of course, that the number of strikers receiving relief is increasing, but so far only 157 of the 30,000 Detroit area GM workers are on relief rolls, according to Daniel J. Ryan, superintendent of the Welfare Department.

Since the strike began 36 days ago, 587 strikers have applied for relief, Ryan said. The first application was not made, however, until 18 days after the strike began.

TWELVE TO FEED

Family size of those now getting relief ranges up to 12 persons. Only a few single strikers have been granted welfare.

Welfare aid ranges from supplemental assistance to a full relief budget. Largest amount now being paid is $70 every two weeks for a family of 12. Strikers are not entitled, under Michigan law, to unemployment compensation benefits.

So far, the largest check received from a non-striking local is $15,000 from UAW-CIO 155, the first installment of a $25,000 assessment. It was paid shortly before Christmas.

At this writing, the average striker is bedded down for the winter, not hopeful of an early settlement, but determined and steadfast.

PLENTY TO DO IN 1946

The New Year opens with wages uppermost in the minds of most CIO members.

Substantial wages increases must be won, not only for the immediate relief of the workers directly concerned, but also as the first step toward a sound and expanding postwar economy.

The current wage movements are therefore the No. 1 job of CIO unions and members, and every energy and effort must be devoted to building and solidifying the union strength necessary to win them.

But the CIO has never kidded itself into believing that there is such a thing as "pure and simple" union activity which can operate in a sort of social vacuum for the winning of labor's economic demands.

Government action, or inaction, for instance, can greatly help or hinder a wage movement. Anti-strike legislation, like that proposed by President Truman, can cut at the roots of labor's bargaining power. Broad popular support for labor's demands is also of the greatest importance.

Furthermore, even the winning of wage increases is by itself of little avail, if at the same time prices and living costs go up more than wages.

All of such considerations are of particular importance when wage movements involve so many millions of people in such basic industries as do those of the CIO today.

Legislative and political activity is therefore an essential part of labor's No. 1 job for 1946, to back up the straight organizing work, to mobilize popular support, to avert union-wrecking legislation, to make wage increases of real value, and to prevent the powers of government being used against labor's legitimate and constructive demands.

As the New Year begins, Congress is in a recess which is expected to last until January 14. The present therefore is an excellent time for all CIO members to contact their Congressmen and Senators, to tell them what labor wants and why.

"This is the time," says CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, "to tell them face to face why it has become necessary for organized labor to strike for wage increases; how the take-home pay has gone down, how the companies have refused to bargain collectively and in many cases have been holding up production until the excess profits tax is off."

Now is also the time, he points out, to ask them to go on record against the Norton-Ellender anti-strike bill requested by President Truman and against all other pending anti-labor legislation.

Other issues on which the CIO is asking all progressives to keep score on their representatives in Congress include: support for labor's demands for substantial wage increases and for the 65c minimum wage bill; support for OPA extension to keep down prices of food, rent and clothing; low-cost housing legislation and veterans' priority; emergency unemployment compensation; a permanent FEPC; Big Three unity on control of atomic energy; abolition of the un-American Rankin committee; support for the Wagner-Murray health bill; and repeal of the polltax.

With primaries this spring and the all-important Congressional elections in the fall, labor in 1946 will have to be active politically and on the industrial field as never before. It's all part of the same fight for economic welfare, democratic progress and national peace and prosperity.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

IT HAPPENED in those first few hours of the New Year, when the sirens have become silent but roisterers are still heard in the street, and when you toss and turn hardly knowing whether you're awake or asleep.

Before retiring, I took a notion to look through the bound volume of my paper for the past year.

As I leafed through its pages, I started to note 1946 dates appearing so often that there just couldn't be that many typographical errors.

Then I noticed that all the news was unfamiliar, and I suddenly realized that, miraculously, I had in my hands a volume of 1946 papers that hadn't even been published yet.

●

(N. B. Any resemblance between this story and the movie, "It Happened Tomorrow," is purely coincidental. That was about reading tomorrow's papers today—which, after all, anyone can do by buying the bulldog editions. This is about reading next year's news on New Year's Eve.).

●

Elated at being able to read the news of the future in this unbelievable fashion, I hastily checked through the headlines.

I read about CIO wage demands being won early in 1946; then about production booming, as workers' increased purchasing power added to the income of farmers and all other groups and created an ever-increasing demand for goods.

●

Instead of predicted inflation, I read about strict controls kept on rents and living costs until constantly increasing production began to result in lower prices.

The papers told of some big business groans at having to pay higher wages without getting higher prices, but then of profits rising again through greater volume of production.

Then I read about Congress turning over a new leaf in 1946—rejecting the Truman anti-strike bill and all other anti-labor legislation; passing the Full Employment bill in its original form; granting emergency unemployment compensation; raising the minimum wage to 65c; creating a permanent FEPC; abolishing the polltax.

International friction declined in 1946, I read, as the Bretton Woods agreement went into effect, expanding world trade; as the United Nations Organization began really to function; and as the hate-mongers became more and more discredited.

None of these things were to happen automatically, of course. They were the result, the 1946 stories revealed, of labor's unexampled solidarity and determination in its wage struggles, and of the building of CIO strength and membership to record heights.

I read of the effect on Congress of labor's increased alertness, independence and organization in political activity; of active PAC participation in the 1946 primaries, and of great progressive victories in the Congressional elections.

Finally, the papers told of the growing strength of the World Federation of Trade Unions operating against fascism and imperialism and for greater world unity and prosperity.

●

But these visions of a rosy future were rudely interrupted by one of those internal conflicts that sometimes follow New Year's Eve.

The marvelous volume slipped from my grasp as I groaned and tossed, and when I recaptured it, its whole contents seemed to have changed.

Now I saw 1946 headlines about anti-labor laws and union-busting campaigns breaking the workers' resistance and keeping wages down; about decreased purchasing power resulting in a growing slump in production; and about big business raising prices to maintain profits on reduced production.

Along with spreading unemployment and depression, I now saw 1946 stories of hunger marches, bonus marches, race riots, of fascist demagogues joining with reactionary "isolationists" in international hate-mongering and demands for imperialist adventures leading to another world war.

●

I woke in a cold sweat, with this New Year's thought to offer to one and all:

1946 is ours to make of it what we will. If we let labor fail, this year can lead us on the road to hell on earth. But if we organize and build and fight with all our might along the lines of CIO's program, 1946 can take us far along the road of progress, prosperity and peace.

November '46 looks pretty far ahead from January, but the time to start preparing for this crucial election is here and now.

With this in mind, The CIO News ends the old year by presenting the Election Timetable, 1946, listing registration perods, primary dates, polltax requirements, offices to be filled, and the vote in 1944, together with the potential vote based on the 1940 census.

HEALTH FO

Story by Fred Ross

ABOUT seven million of our 130 million citizens are so disabled daily by sickness or accident that they cannot work or go about their usual tasks. More than three million of these are wage earners, and more than half of them have been unable to work for six months, and many of them will remain d for two years, some rest of their lives.

The loss not only t but to the nation is four and five million days a year. Of this hu approximately nine-ten sult from illness a cidents not directly co with employment a covered by workmen' pensation laws.

How heavily this we the conscience of the n indicated by the fact th ing the 79th session gress more than health and related bill introduced. The la tehse is the Wagner Health Bill (S 1606).

CRITICS ANSWER

The heart of the W Murray bill is a sys compulsory health ins collected from employ worker under the Socia rity System. This prop bringing great cries of a from the American Assn., which is usin words as "socialism" in its attacks on the bi two years ago 13 outst physicians joined wi other leading health exp declaring:

6 Workers and farmers buying patent medicine at Mebane, N. C. Only aim of the salesman is to get their money. Under a national health program all could have preventive medicine.

7 Research doctors, unlike the patent medicine peddlers, are interested in humanity. S 1606 would promote research.

3 Without the benefit of medical care this mother is taking loving but unscientific care of her baby. Bills now in Congress would give her baby a better chance.

4 The Wagner-Murray Health bill and the Pepper Maternal and Child Care bill would makes clinics like this universally available. Children are worthy of such care.

"The American people are now spending for physicians' services and hospitalization enough to provide for all with only minor supplementation, if these payments were regularized instead of falling with disastrous uncertainty."

Other provisions of S1606 are:

More preventive and community-wide health services.

Greater maternal and child-health services.

More adequate medical care for needy persons.

Greater medical research and widening the opportunities for medical education in non-profit institutions.

All of these objectives would be provided through Federal grants.

Objective of the Pepper maternal and child care bill (S1318), introduced earlier, is also greater care for mothers and babies.

HEARINGS PLANNED

The CIO has been backing both S1606 and the Pepper bill, and representatives of the CIO and other progressive organizations will appear before the Senate Education and Labor Committee early in the New Year when hearings are held on the measures.

Vicious, lying attacks have been made and will continue to be made by selfish groups and individuals on the Wagner-Murray bill, and labor will have to fight for the nation's health just as it had to fight for the right to organize and for other worthwhile aims.

Anticipating these attacks, Senator Wagner (D. N. Y.) said when introducing the bill:

"Propagandists for some organized medical groups have criticized a national prepaid medical care plan on the ground that it involves 'regimentation of doctors and patients,' 'lowered standards,' 'political medicine' and 'socialized medicine' and so on. But prepaid medical care is not socialized medicine; it is not State medicine. These 'devil words' are all designed to confuse the issue.

PATIENT'S BILL PREPAID

"A system of prepaid medical care is simply a method of assuring a person ready access to the medical care that he or she needs by eliminating the financial barrier between the patient and the doctor or hospital.

"Since patients are guaranteed free choice of doctor, doctors are guaranteed the right to accept or reject patients, and hospitals are guaranteed freedom to manage their affairs, it should be obvious that the system does not involve regimentation of doctors, hospitals or patients.

"Neither do I believe that the doctors of this country will lower the standards of medical care simply because they are guaranteed payment for their services.

"There are many individuals honest and sincere in their desire for improved conditions, who nevertheless fear any change and distrust all new social legislation. Those of us who have sponsored social legislation have faced similar opposition against many proposals for social betterment, but we have persevered and succeeded, and we have seen these new programs accepted as part of the basic system of American freedom and democracy. . . .

"When we have succeeded in our struggle for a comprehensive health program for the entire country, we will be able to say about health insurance, too, that the present day apprehensions and misgivings were groundless."

1945 has been a momentous year! The forces of democracy defeated Nazism—the nation and the world suffered a tremendous shock and loss in the death of our late beloved president, Franklin D. Roosevelt. Undreamed of profits were made by industrialists and they want to hold on to them without giving any recognition to the services performed by labor. The CIO, through its president, Philip Murray, has given the real leadership to the workers of the nation in behalf of them and the nation, itself.

Let us make 1946 a bigger, better year. A HAPPY NEW YEAR TO EVERYONE!

CIO Unions Press Wage Fight on All Fronts

Wage negotiations, hearings, picketing and plans for further strikes in the CIO's determined drive for higher take-home pay were resumed this week after a short Christmas lull. Here are some of the outstanding developments:

GM DISPUTE: The Government fact-find board handling the case of the United Auto Workers demand for a 30% pay hike from General Motors was scheduled to resume hearings in Washington Friday, following brief conferences between company and union officials in Detroit. Walter Reuther, the UAW's GM director said that no progress was made in settling the general wage dispute at the conferences.

* * *

UE STRIKE: Date for the pending strike of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers against General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors electrical division to back up UE's demands for a $2 a day increase will be set at a meeting of the UE general board, Jan. 5.

* * *

USA-CIO: The United Steelworkers filed charges of violation of the Natl. Labor Relations Act against the Inland Steel Co. "In its desperate anxiety to weaken the union by withholding from it maintenance of membership and checkoff, the company has repudiated a War Labor Board directive and a written signed contract embodying these provisions," declared USA Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, in a letter sent to NLRB Chairman Paul Herzog.

The union previously set Jan. 14 for a strike in the steel industry.

OIL CONFERENCES: Negotiations between the Oil Workers Intl. Union and various oil companies are in progress, and settlements patterned after the 18% wage increase agreement negotiated recently with Sinclair are expected to result. If no settlement is reached by collective bargaining, hearings before the U. S. fact-finding panel have been scheduled to resume Jan. 7.

* * *

SHIPBUILDING DEADLOCK: After 11 days of fruitless negotiations, the national shipbuilding conference held this month in Colorado Springs, Colo., reached a complete deadlock, due to management's refusal to consider labor's demands for a raise due under written committments of the shipbuilding stabilizing program, and recessed to reconvene in Washington Jan. 1, reports the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

Pres. John Green headed the CIO union's delegation of six at the conference which was also attended by representatives from the AFL, industry and government. The CIO Shipbuilding Workers are demanding a 30% general increase, plus a 17½c cost-of-living boost in pay.

* * *

AMERICAN TOBACCO STRIKE: CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week pledged full support of the CIO to the strike of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers Union against plants of the American Tobacco Co. in Trenton, N. J., Philadelphia, Pa., and Charleston, S. C. The strike was called Oct. 15 in protest against the company's refusal to negotiate the union's demands for a 65c minimum wage, 25c hourly increase and a no discrimination clause.

These issues, Murray said in a letter to the union's president, Donald Henderson, "merit the complete support of every American concerned with the welfare of our nation."

PACKINGHOUSE DISPUTE: Officials of the United Packinghouse Workers were in Washington this week to confer with government officials on the union's prolonged dispute with the packing industry over demands for a 25c an hour increase.

Plans to call a national strike in the industry were laid at a meeting of the union's Natl. Strategy Committee held Dec. 19 in Chicago. Date set for the strike will not be announced until after the New Year.

Pres. Lewis J. Clark of the Packinghouse Workers said that negotiations between the Big Four packers—Swift, Armour, Wilson and Cudahy—so far had brought little progress. An offer of a 5½c an hour increase made by Swift & Co. was rejected by the union as "totally inadequate."

Sen. Aiken Backs CIO Program At Massachusetts Parley

Views in full accord with the CIO's program were expressed in an eloquent speech by George W. Aiken, Republican Senator from Vermont made at the recent Massachusetts CIO conference held in Boston.

The Senator stressed the vital need for the working farmer and the industrial worker to pull together to offset the malignant "forces of monopoly and exploitation"; praised the CIO membership for the remarkable war record made despite constant attacks by opponents of organized labor; and emphasized the need for immediate enactment of legislation to maintain full employment.

"We have learned in the past 15 years," he said, "that we can no longer permit chance to play havoc with the welfare of our people and the strength of the nation."

State CIO Pres. Joseph Salerno presided at the conference at which a number of resolutions were passed in coordination with the Natl. CIO policies. One resolution passed commended "the unfaltering leadership and the forthright action of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in exposing the designs and mechinations of those who would turn our country back to unemployment, poverty and chaos."

Raps Housing Plan for Vets

Sec. William G. Nicholas of the CIO and the UAW Housing Committees this week denounced the Administration's program for meeting the veterans' need for low cost housing and called for direct Government construction to "meet the needs of the returning veterans in line with their pocketbooks."

Nichols said that Civilian Production Administrator Small "promises that Government will see that a 'fair share' of the houses costing under $10,000 will be built. A 'fair share' from whose point of view—the returning GIs or the builders who obviously would rather build the more expensive homes? . . .

Meanwhile, the CIO Woodworkers charged that lumber producers are withholding their products for the best possible price.

Organizing The Utility Worker

By JOSEPH A. FISHER,
Pres., CIO Utility Workers Union of America

THE bringing of utility workers into the ranks of unionized labor has lagged behind organization of most other industries. While steel, motors, coal and mass manufacturing production were being welded into strong and effective national unions the utility field was being nibbled at piecemeal. So that today the great mass of workers in light, heat and power production and distribution are still to be organized.

Many of the 300,000 estimated to be in the power industry belong to unions of various kinds. Yet no single dominant voice speaks for this group with the same authority and effectiveness as do the CIO unions in such powerful national organizations as are found in the steel and motor industry.

The CIO Utility Workers' Union of America chartered in August 1945, appreciates not only the necessity, but the urgency of bringing utility workers into the National CIO.

Utilities operating under monopoly conditions and without the usual competitive restraints, have carefully guarded against organization of their employees. As among the most advanced industrialists in our economy, they have adopted the subtlest and most effective means for avoiding labor organization. This has involved using not only the goon methods of their cruder fellow-industrialists, but also a free employment of labor spies, discriminatory firings and threats of intimidation.

The more subtle methods, possible because of their larger resources, included in many cases a relatively higher wage scale and a host of paternalistic benefits, such as pension, liberal sick leave, hospitalization, group insurance, and even convalescent stays at company maintained farms.

As wage levels in other industries have increased, and in some cases overtaken those paid in the utility field, a recent upsurge has taken place among utility workers. It is now becoming clearer to them that they are no longer in a superior position so far as earnings or even job security is concerned.

The utility industry is in most instances more capable of paying higher wage scales than less favored industries. The operations of the utility worker are more vital and require a higher return to the same degree that the utility industry itself enjoys such an advantage by reason of its exclusive public function.

The Utility Workers' Union of America is resolved to bring home to all public utility workers the necessity for organization into a strong national union. We are also prepared to convince these workers that their fate in the economic structure of this country is inextricably tied into the fate of all other workers.

The heart of the industry is the Consolidated Edison System covering the New York area, representing 10% of the entire industry. This mammoth corporation has been met and overcome, every conceivable trick and strategem was employed to block real organization.

But, when the workers themselves were brought to the realization of where their best interests rested, they were quick to throw off the dominating influence of the companies' attitude and to emerge as unshackled men and women, freely selecting the CIO as their collective bargaining representative.

That selection was further confirmed by the overwhelming CIO vote of the Consolidated Edison Employees in the recent National Labor Relations Board elections.

ASK ALLOTMENT FOR VETS' CIVIES

THE Amalgamated Clothing Workers last week end called upon the Senate Military Affairs Committee to report out favorably the Guffey bill, S1275, introduced July 20 last, to provide honorably discharged veterans with $150 worth of civilian clothing at government expense, as well as priorities for purchasing the same at retail clothing stores.

The bill was introduced by eight United States Senators, upon the initiative of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, but no action upon it has been reported to date.

How The Senate Voted On Four Main Issues

Last week, The CIO News carried two main issues of interest to labor voted on in the House. This week, bringing the record up to date, we print the record of the Senate vote on four major issues. These are:

1. Amendment to the CIO-supported emergency unemployment compensation bill (S 1274), subject of repeated messages by President Truman. The amendment was an attempt by supporters of the original bill to reinsert the provision calling for up to $25 a week benefits for 26 weeks, after it had been deleted by the Senate Finance Committee. The amendment did not pass by 51 to 29, on Sept. 19, 1945. The bill is now lying in the House Ways and Means Committee.

A vote for the amendment is indicated by "R," against, "W." Throughout, "NV" stands for not voting.

2. Amendment to the jobs for all bill (S 380) aimed at making a mockery of the measure. The amendment would have required the U. S. Government to avoid "unnecessary restrictions" on "free enterprise" and "free competition" in enforcing the bill. The amendment did not pass by 44 to 35, on September 28, 1945. A completely useless bill has been passed by the House.

3. Amendment to an appropriation bill to delay return of the U. S. Employment Service to the states until June, 1946. Defeat of this amendment shows that a majority of the Senate was not concerned with the most efficient means of finding jobs for returning veterans, displaced war workers. Many Senators are counting on reactionary state USES control to drive workers into substandard wage jobs by threats to withhold unemployment benefits if they refuse. The amendment was defeated by 35 to 31. President Truman this week vetoed the bill. An attempt will be made to override his veto, which requires a two-thirds majority. Urge your Senators to vote for sustaining the veto.

4. Amendment to the bill ratifying the United Nations Organization which would have required Senate confirmation of America's representatives to the UNO Assembly. This was the last of several attempts to restrict and hamper U. S. participation in the UNO. The amendment was defeated by 31 to 27.

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION

Every child, even the most hale and hearty, should be examined by his doctor once every six months. Such periodic examinations may prevent days, possibly months of illness. The physician who knows your child when he's well can take more intelligent care of him when he's sick. Your doctor's advice both during health and illness will help you to guide your child wisely and maintain the kind of balanced viewpoint that will give him his best chance to operate as a healthy human being. Billy looks a bit anxious. With mother's assurance, he'll feel easier next time.

DOCTORS GUARD CHILDHOOD FOR CASH

This is the second of a series of articles by prominent physicians on health, this one dealing with the great advances that have been made in preventing childhood diseases.

By MARTHA WENDELL, M. D.

Member Executive Committee, Physicians Forum

CHILDREN today have a much better chance of living to adulthood than did those born a generation or two ago. This greater safety is due in large measure to the development of the science of immunization.

Science has given us remarkably effective weapons—vaccines and serums—with which to protect children from the ravages of contagious diseases that used to exact a heavy toll of young lives and leave many children with crippling after-effects.

Your child can be given complete protection against smallpox by vaccination. It should be done before the age of one.

Today diptheria treatment is far more effective than it used to be. There is no good reason why any child today should have the disease. The innoculations which will give immunity should be started when the child is six months old.

Preventive treatment against whooping cough should be started by the time the baby is seven months old. While the inoculations in this case do not give as complete protection as do the injections against diptheria, they are of sufficient value to warrant giving them to every child.

There is now available an "immune serum" which is proving to be of great value in affording relief after whooping cough has been contracted.

Measles is a serious disease in infancy because of complications, chiefly pneumonia. Most of the deaths from this disease occur in children under three. If a child's mother has had measles, the child is usually immune for the first six months. Unlike diptheria, there is no known method of acquiring permanent immunity against measles except by having an attack of the disease.

Temporary Immunity

It is possible, however, by the use of "immune globulin" or "gamma globulin," to give temporary immunity for a period of about three weeks. This procedure protects children who have been exposed to the ailment.

Preventive treatment against smallpox and diptheria are usually available at little or no cost in health centers and well-baby clinics conducted by the health departments in large cities. Whooping cough inoculations are provided by some, but not all, such health departments. Unfortunately, such services are lacking in many small towns and rural communities.

If modern preventive treatment were automatically available to everyone, without any necessity of paying for the service, many more children would be protected, and illness and death from these diseases would rapidly fall to a new low.

When and if Congress passes the Wagner-Murray Health Bill (S. 1060) we shall witness a new era of preventive medicine in this country. This bill will provide facilities for preventive services in every section of the country, no matter how remote. By setting up a nation-wide health insurance system, through which medical services will be paid for in advance by small regular contributions from all workers and employers, the measure would remove the money barrier that now stands between so many patients and the doctor.

Child Care Centers Now Cities' Jobs

By ELEANOR FOWLER

Secretary-Treasurer, CIO Women's Auxiliaries

WORKING mothers are worried as we move into 1946. Federal support for child care centers, which has been available under the Lanham Act, will stop March 1. But the need for these facilities won't stop then by a long shot.

In Grand Rapids, Mich., a survey revealed that over three-quarters of the children in the child care program are from homes in which the father has been killed or partly disabled in service. In Cleveland, Ohio, two-thirds of the mothers using the services were the sole wage earners in their families.

As a matter of fact the need for public facilities for care of children of working mothers existed long before the war. A Metropolitan Life Insurance study in 1940 showed 11 per cent of American children living in broken homes, three-quarters of them headed by women.

In other words 4,500,000 children at that time had lost their fathers through death or separation and looked to their mothers as head of the family. The study does not tell how many of these mothers had to work but probably it was a high proportion.

You can add to that group the mothers in our families with substandard incomes who must work to supplement the meager pay of their husbands. There were 10,000,000 Americans during our prosperous war years getting less than 65c an hour. In hundreds of thousands of cases families could not live on their pay.

Fortunately for mothers who have to work, a few communities are seeing the problem more closely. Denver is continuing centers through December 31, 1946. The Detroit Common Council has authorized up to $294,000 to keep 25 centers open through the school year. New Orleans has appropriated city funds.

But many cities have not yet acted. The next two months are crucial. Everyone who knows the Washington legislative picture agrees that there is no chance of more Federal funds in time for the March 1 deadline. State and local money must be obtained.

A new service has just been started which will be of great help in finding out what communities are doing and exchanging ideas. The National Committee on Group Care of Children, 119 W. 57, New York 19, N. Y., is issuing three bulletins on community planning. The first issue is out. The second, to be issued in January, will give practical suggestions on the local level.

WASHINGTON GUIDE

Tell Your Congressman

Last week, the Washington Guide carried a questionnaire to be submitted to your Congressman and to both Senators during the holiday recess.

This week, the Guide recommends another form of action that you can follow with profit when your delegations call on the homecoming Congressmen.

It concerns the problem of enlisting Congressional support on the wage issue. Legislatively, Congress does not work directly on industrial wages —except in such important matters as minimum wages, equal pay for equal work, unemployment benefits, Federal workers pay, etc—but your Congressmen nevertheless can be of great value to you and your union in current wage drives.

So, when your elected representative comes home, show him these simple economic facts of life in America today:

1. Tell him about cutbacks. Bring sample pay envelopes to his attention—for example, one from April, 1945, contrasted with one from August.

2. Tell him about 1945-46 food prices, compared with 1945-46 wages. A good way to do this is to get your wife and her CIO auxiliary to prepare comparative grocery price ads from the newspapers, showing food up well over 50% from 1941, with wages held to 15% by the Little Steel formula.

3. Enlist local merchants and farmers to go along with you to tell the Congressman about the effects of wage cuts on their business. Try to interest the editor of the local newspaper and local radio commentators in the same problem. They depend on advertising for their income, which in turn depends on what you take home every week.

4. Enlist religious, fraternal and women's organizations in your campaign. Such groups, particularly those representing organized women voters, have a profound educational effect on Congressmen.

5. When you've finished the educational part of the job, ask your Congressman and your Senators to:

Write President Truman urging him to press the corporations to bargain collectively in good faith on the wage issue.

Work and vote against all legislation hampering labor's right to organize, bargain and strike. This includes the Truman "cooling-off" bill (HR 4908, S 1661); the Hobbs bill (HR 32); the Ball-Hatch bill (S 1171).

Work and vote for bills that help labor and the nation in this economic crisis.

These include the 65-75c wage bill (S 1349, HR 3914); the equal pay for equal work bill (S 1178); and in preparation for June, 1946, to work and vote for retention of price control to stop inflation.

Hit 65c Stall

CIO protests at new sweatshopper plans to stall action on the 65-75c minimum wage bill (S 1349, HR 3914) were protested by Legislative Director Nathan Cowan in a letter to Senator James E. Murray, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee in charge of the bill.

Cowan's letter was aimed at Sen. Ellender (D., La.), who has been the bitter enemy of the bill in an effort to protect sweatshop wages. According to recent newspaper reports, Ellender announced that still further hearings would be "necessary" before action could be taken.

"It is our understanding that Sen. Ellender proposes to bring before your committee several witnesses representing trade associations opposed to S 1349.

"In view of the fact that at least a dozen of the larger CIO unions were unable to secure time to be heard in favor of the bill, we feel that it is utterly unfair and improper now to give time to hostile witnesses representing far fewer persons than those denied a hearing."

Fact is that a committment was made to end hearings some time ago, that more than 1,500 printed pages of testimony have already been taken, and that any further hearings are simply a stall.

Write to your Senators urging early action on the bill, and to Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) complimenting him for his work on it and urging him to resist delay.

The Old Dies

The old Dies Committee touch—which many a Congressman foreswore after Dies, Starnes and Costello were defeated in 1944—is out in the open in the newest strategy of the Wood-Rankin unAmerican Activities Committee, just announced.

Item: the Wood-Rankin Committee is about to "investigate" (read smear) Hollywood.

Note: California (in common with the rest of the country) is having an election in 1946. Labor political action was strong in California in 1944, several progressive Congressmen were elected.

Item: the Wood-Rankin Committee is going to "investigate" the Joint anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, which with others supports an anti-Franco regime for Spain.

Note: following CIO President Murray's letter (CIO NEWS, Nov. 19), urging Truman to break with Franco, U. S. policy has turned in that direction.

Item: the Wood-Rankin Committee is going to "investigate" radio commentators—with emphasis on liberal ones who criticize the committee.

Note: the Wood-Rankin unit has a bill (HR 4775) to gag radio, submit scripts to censorship.

But why go on? Best thing to do is to urge your Congressman to support Ellis Patterson's (D. Cal.) Discharge Petition 12 on a bill to dissolve the unAmerican Dies-Wood-Rankin group.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	ACTION
Anti-strike (S 1661, HR 4908)	Carries out Truman message of Dec. 3 by setting up anti-srtike apparatus.	Hearings put over to mid-January in House and Senate Labor Committee after protest by Pres. Murray.	Tell Senators and Representatives to vote against when you see them in Xmas recess.
Hobbs (HR 32)	Prohibits normal union activity such as picketing, soliciting dues, membership, etc., under guise of "anti-racketeering."	Passed House. Now to Senate.	Tell Senators to oppose; check Representative's vote before you call on him this week.
May-Arends (HR 3937)	Outlaws union political action; sets jail, fines for strikes in "violation of contract."	Move to bring on House floor defeated but can come up again.	Tell Senators and Representatives to oppose when you see them this week.
FEPC (S 101, HR 2232)	Makes FEPC permanent U. S. Govt. agency. Present agencies being liquidated now.	Stalled in House Rules Committee. Discharge Petition 4 nas 157 signatures, needs 218.	Tell your Representative to sign if he hasn't already.
Polltax repeal (HR 7)	Makes it possible to retire polltax Senators and Representatives.	Passed House, stalled in Senate.	Tell your Senators to push for early action, no amendment.

CONGRESS IS HOME FOR XMAS—MAKE YOUR VISIT COUNT

Coming Up On Capitol Hill

PREDICTIONS: around this time of year every Washington commentator worth his salt is supposed to predict what will happen as the New Year wears on—some of them even do it once a week.

Without sticking out too much of a neck for friendly critics to chop off, this column ventures a few on the 1946 Congressional year.

There's a catch to these predictions, however—and please don't cheat by looking for it at the bottom of the column now.

No. 1. President Truman's veto of the measure sending the U. S. Employment Service back to the states will be sustained. Keeping USES in Federal control will help veterans, displaced war workers to find jobs.

No. 2. The 65c-75c minimum wage bill will pass the Senate, not without a terrific fight against phoney plans for a "compromise" at lower minimum levels. House fight will be severe, especially in the sweatshopper-run Rules Committee.

No. 3. President Truman's anti-strike bill (HR 4908, S 1661) will have tough going in the Senate, less tough in the House. United labor opposition, led by CIO, will be effective.

No. 4. Other anti-labor bills such as Hobbs, Ball-Hatch, May-Arends, etc, will meet strong, united labor opposition, which will attract progressive support in Congress. Outcome depends much on rallying general liberal opposition to shackling unions.

No. 5. One of the stiffest fights of the year will be waged around price control. Pro-inflation gang will start its pressure for removing all controls early in the new session, build up strong bloc for June expiration date of OPA.

No. 6. UnAmerican Wood-Rankin Committee will meet opposition as the campaign months get closer and anti-liberal character of "investigations" becomes clear.

No. 7 et seq. taxes, with new attempts to take from the poor and give to the rich, will be a big issue. . . . Senate fight on polltax repeal, with attempted filibuster . . . housing, health, social security to be pressed, first in Senate. . .

THE CATCH: the good things "predicted" here will only come about if there's plenty of CIO legislative and political action . . . and by the same token, the bad things will be prevented from happening by precisely the same activity . . . a Happy and Highly Legislative New Year to You All . . .
